240 SHAKESPEARE (W.) Mr. William Shakespeare's Comedies, Histories, and Tragedies, published according to the True Original Copies, folio

_Lond._ printed by Isaac Jaggard and Ed. Blount, 1623 700 0 0

One of the tallest and finest copies in existence; completely sound and genuine throughout; in the same perfect condition in which it passed from the original publisher's binding into that of Bedford.

The first collected edition of the immortal Shakespeare's plays.

On the Title is the portrait of Shakespeare, by Martin Droeshout. Facing the portrait are the well-known lines by Ben Jonson. The Dedication to William, Earl of Pembroke, and Philip, Earl of Montgomery, is signed by John Heminge and Henry Condell, the editors, and two of the principal actors of Shakespeare's plays. At the end of the volume is:—"Printed at the Charges of W. Jaggard, Ed. Blount, I. Smithweke, and W. Aspley, 1623." "The Tragedy of Coriolanus," pp. 1-30, is placed immediately after "The Famous History of the Life of King Henry the Eighth, and before "The Lamentable Tragedy of Titus Andronicus;" "The Tragedie of Troynus and Cressida" between "The Life of Tymon of Athens" and "The Tragedie of Jovius Caesar;" p. 214, "The Taming of the Shrew," is not misprinted 212, neither is p. 237 numbered incorrectly, as in the copy referred to by Lowndes; but otherwise the collation is the same as the one supplied by that accurate bibliographer. The present is a remarkably clean and sound copy. Its size of page is 13½ inches in length, by a little over 8½ inches in width. The book is bound by F. Bedford, in a subdued red morocco, with bands, gilt edges, and rich Elizabethan gold ornamentation on its sides and back, and enclosed in an elegant brown morocco case, marked in golden letters "SHAKESPEARE—LONDON, 1623."

THE Publishers of "The Avon Shakespeare" are well aware of the many editions of Shakespeare that have already issued from the press of both England and America, but they have, nevertheless, been induced to undertake the publication of the present volume by the generally expressed desire for a book in large, clear type, the text of which should embody the latest revisions of the best Shakespearian scholars. As the readings of Messrs. Clark and Wright have been carefully followed, it is believed this result has been most fully achieved.

The graphically descriptive Life, by Dr. John S. Hart, is rich with new and varied information, gleaned by the accomplished hand of the author from the late discoveries made by Shakespearian antiquaries, who have been stimulated in their untiring researches after all relating to the great poet's life by the ever increasing, never flagging, public interest in one of whom his personal friend "Rare Ben Jonson" said, "Neither man nor muse can praise too much."

In the typographical arrangement of this work new features have been introduced,—each page being indexed at the page-head with the Scene and Act, while through the printed text, by means of the dark displayed type, the eye catches, without an effort, the main points or characters that appear on that page; an advantage the student cannot fail to heartily appreciate.

A Descriptive Analysis of the Plots of the Plays has been prepared with great care, and is presented as peculiar to this edition. By it the reader is enabled to gain, if so desired, a clear understanding of the story of the plot before reading the text of the play.

The Alphabetical Index to the Characters in Shakespeare's Plays, The Index to Familiar Passages, and the very complete Glossarial Index, are very valuable features, important or essential to the fullest understanding of Shakespeare's works by either the student or the general reader. The illustrations are from the sketches by Kenny Meadows, Frith, or other artists of nearly equal celebrity.

The publishers desire here to express their thanks to Mr. J. Parker Norris for much valuable information and assistance given during the progress of the work.

A SUMMARY OUTLINE
OF THE
LIFE OF SHAKESPEARE; WITH A
Description of His Most Authentic Portraits.

CHAPTER I.
MARVELLOUS IGNORANCE OF THE ENGLISH NATION IN REGARD TO THE PERSONAL HISTORY OF THEIR GREATEST AUTHOR—DICTUM OF STEEVES ON THE SUBJECT, 1773—RECENT AWARENEMENT TO THE IMPORTANCE OF THE INQUIRY—ORGANIZED EFFORTS IN THE LAST FIFTY YEARS TO RESCUE FROM OBLIVION WHATEVER IN THE LIFE OF SHAKESPEARE HAS NOT ABSOLUTELY PERISHED—SUCCESS OF THESE LABORS.

To the observer of our literary history, who stands at the head of King James's reign, and looks down the current towards the present time, the very first object in the foreground is one proudly eminent—an object not unlike the pyramid of Cheops, as seen by the traveller, which, whether you go up or down the Nile, whether you penetrate its rich valley from the east over the sand-hills of Arabia, or from the west across the trackless desert of Sahara, from whatever quarter of the horizon you approach, is the first object to strike, the last to fade from the vision. So is it here. Whether we approach the year 1660 travelling backwards from the names of Longfellow, Tennyson, Wordsworth, Coleridge, Byron, and Scott; or descend towards the same point from the author of Piers the Plowman, Chaucer, Wyatt, Surrey, Sidney, and Spenser, whether we cross the current of our literature by a transition from that of Germany, France, Spain, Italy, or the Orient, from whatever quarter of the literary horizon we direct our gaze towards the point indicated, one object stands proudly eminent, one name rises spontaneously on every tongue—the greatest name in all English, in all modern, perhaps, absolutely, in all literature. Shakespeare possibly may not be read as much, he certainly is not acted as much, as he once was. But he is studied more; he is better known; his fame is steadily in the ascendent. His star is confessedly higher and brighter now than it was at the beginning of the present century; it has risen perceptibly within the last twenty-five years; it is even yet far from having reached its meridian.

Steevens, one of the most famous of the Shakespearian editors, said, over one hundred years ago (1773): “All that is known with any degree of certainty of Shakespeare is, that he was born at Stratford-upon-Avon, married and had children there, went to London, where he commenced actor; wrote poems and plays; returned to Stratford, made his will, died, and was buried.”

This statement, at the time it was made, was substantially true. It is hardly an exaggeration to say that the English nation, at the end of a century and a half from the death of their greatest author, knew less of his life, if less were possible, than we now know of Homer’s, after the lapse of nearly thirty centuries. It is, in fact, in comparatively recent times only that the lives of men of letters have been counted as forming any important element in the history of a race. If a man fought a battle, or negotiated a treaty, or held a place at court, or was prominently connected in any way with the civil or military administration of the government, if he was even toady to some titted dowager, his life was thought to be of some public importance; he formed a noticeable integer in the sum total of the national history. But to write a play, or to make a discovery in science, was thought to concern mainly the obscure dwellers of the Grub Street of the day, even though the discoveries of the one might revolve within the whole fabric of human affairs, and the creations of the other might help to mould the thoughts and manners of the race until the ending doom. But a change has come over the thoughts of men in this matter. We have at last opened our eyes to the fact that the literature of a race contains in it that which has made the race what it is. Those great thoughts which, in the course of centuries, have been developed by its master minds, are the moving springs that have set the race onward in its career of civilization. The man of thought is father to the man of action. Great ideas precede and cause great achievements. The ideal Achilles made the real heroes of Marathon and the Granicus.
In the Anglo-Saxon race, from the days of Alfred until not, men have greatness originated. These successive generations, have given birth to ennobling thoughts, which continue to endure, and which are perpetuated, not only in the language, but in the race itself. We are what these great thinkers have made us.
Englishmen and Americans of to-day are living exponents of thoughts and truths elaborated by the illustrious dead. In the literal sense, indeed, no lineal descendant of Shakespeare remains. His blood desendants all died out within the generation that followed his own death. But in a higher and better sense, his true spiritual life-blood, "those thoughts that breathe and words that burn," pulsates at this day in the veins of more than a hundred millions of men, his blood-kin of the English-speaking race, whose diction and whose thoughts and impulses and whose actions, consciously or unconsciously, have perceptibly taken tone and color from the man who was born at Stratford-upon-Avon, a little more than three hundred years ago.

No wonder, then, that, under the quickening influence of this new method of estimating values in human history, the steadily growing fame of the great dramatist, and the still more popular interest in his work and his life, has made it very easy to satiate curiosity to learn something more of his personal story, to gather from the "ruins of time" some precious relics of that once noble edifice. The zeal and critical acumen displayed in this investigation have probably never been surpassed in any new literary dertaking. These labors, though late, have not been entirely without success. Many important facts relative to Shakespeare's life have been ascertained since the death of Stevens, some even within the last few years. The principal facts which have been thus exhumed, have been gathered from legal documents, from registers of births, deaths, marriages, baptisms;
from corporation records, wills, title-deeds, tax-lists, and the like. From such sources, vague statements, which before rested on mere tradition, have, in some cases, been definitely disposed of, in others, have been defined and established, while many facts entirely new have been rescued from oblivion. In this way a somewhat connected and consistent series of facts has been made out, constituting a skeleton for a biography. The filling out—the flesh and fulness—has been on this wise: wherever, in the whole range of contemporary literature, a passage has been found, describing the private life and manners of any one similarly situated, it has been eagerly seized as showing one of the possible ways in which Shakespeare may have spent his time. Shakespeare thus has ceased, on the one hand, to be a collection of absurd and contradictory traditions; and, on the other, has become something more than a mere tissue of dates and legal entries. He has become, indeed, to some reasonable extent, personally known.

THE date of Shakespeare's birth is not exactly known.
The nearest approach to it that we have is the day of his baptism, which is found in the parish register of Stratford. He was baptized April 26, 1564. As baptism in those days followed close upon birth, the probabilities are that Shakespeare was born within three or four days of the date of his baptism; and as the 23d of April is the day assigned to St. George, the tutelary saint of England, Englishmen have been not unwilling to assume that Shakespeare was born on that day. Moreover, unvarying tradition—which must be allowed its weight of authority where historic evidence is wanting—has uniformly assigned the 23d of April as the day on which the Great Poet was born; and accordingly that day is now, as it ever has been, celebrated as his natal day all over the world. Of Shakespeare's parentage we now know several important particulars,—important, because they contradict and set aside some of the absurd traditions respecting the poet himself. To the intelligent comprehension of the problem of Shakespeare's authorship, it is necessary to know something of his original condition in life,—whether he was of gentle blood or common origin; whether, in the technical sense of the word, he was educated or was merely self-taught, can make his writings neither worse nor better. But the circumstances of his birth and education, his manner of living and his means of knowledge, do affect materially the inferences which may be drawn from his writings.
They are essential conditions in the problem of his authorship.

John Shakespeare, the father of the poet, was origi-that many of them are able and do buy the lands of unthrifty gentlemen, and often settling their sons to the schools, to the universities, and to the Inns of Court, or to Stratford, before the year 1551, and engaged there in trade of some kind, made purchases of property, and continued to reside there during all the minority, at least, of his son William.

The name SHAKESPEARE was a familiar one in the county of Warwick, being found on record in that county in six different places in the fifteenth century, twenty-two places in the sixteenth century, and thirty-two places in the seventeenth century. The name has in itself evidence of the occupation of its original holders. Verstegan,* the antiquarian, in a work published in 1605, says: "Breakspear, Shakespear, and the like, have been surnames imposed upon the first bearers of them for valor and feats of arms." Camden, under the same date, 1605, says that many ancient families are named "from that which they commonly carried; as, Palmes, that is, Pilgrim, for that they the peregrinants carried from Jerusalem; Long-sword, Broad-spear, Forfescue (that is, Strong-shield), and in some such respect, Breakspear, Shake-speare, Shot-bolt, Wagstaff." Fuller, in his "Worthies of England," 1662, refers to the "warlike sound of his (the poet's) surname, whence," he says, "some may conjecture him of a military extraction.—Hants-evidens, or Shakes-pere's." Hall further records, in his "Chronicle," already quoted, that after the battle of Bosworth Field, 1485, which secured the kingdom to Henry VII., "the king began to remember his especial friends and factors, of whom some he advanced to honor and dignity, and some he enriched with possessions and goods, every man according to his desert and merit." This Bosworth field is only thirty miles from Stratford, and one of Shakespeare's ancestors, or an ancestor of William, seems to have been among those who fought in this battle, and who was thus enriched with possessions and goods. It is furthermore a matter of record that a grant of arms was made to "John Shakespeare, now of Stratford-upon-Avon, county of Warwick, gentleman," a grant first drafted in 1599, and afterwards confirmed in 1599, in which it is recited that "his great-grandfather, and late antecessor, for his faithful and approved service to the late most prudent Prince, Henry VII., of famous memory, was advanced and rewarded with lands and tenements, given to him in those parts of Warwickshire, where they have continued by some descents in good reputation and credit." The coat-of-arms thus granted to the family contains a gold spear, headed with silver, on a shield, and on a field, and also for its crest a falcon brandishing a spear. Spenser, in a passage generally believed to refer to Shakespeare, calls him Action, a name formed apparently from the Greek ακίνης, an eagle, and says, his muse doth, like himself, "heroically sound;" the poet's name, too, it is to be observed, was in that day sometimes printed as two words, connected by a hyphen, Shake-speare. The poet's mother was, in her own words, somewhat wealthy family, of the name of Arden. Arden is or two later. From these two facts a fertile imagination has woven a narrative somewhat after this wise:

Mary Arden! The very name breathes of poetry. But Mary is a mourner. Her father is dead, and she is now left without guidance, an heiress and an orphan. Mary lives, indeed, in a peaceful hamlet. But there are strange things around her,—things incomprehensible to a very young woman. When she goes to the parish church on Sunday, there are many things which she did not see there in her father's time. She sees the mass sung and sees the beads bidden. Once, certainly, within those walls she had heard a very different form of worship. She recollects that in her childhood the rich religious houses of the vicinity had been suppressed, their property confiscated, and their buildings torn down or defaced. Now there is apparently a new power trying to re-by his wisdom her doubts and perplexities about public affairs are kindly resolved. But ecclesiastical and agricultural affairs are not the only topics discussed under this lonely roof-tree; and so, in due season, and not far from the time when Mary, the Queen, was expiring, and with her the Catholic worship was again disappearing, as the established religion of England, Mary Arden and John Shakespeare were standing before the altar of the parish church of Aston Cantlow, and the house and lands of Asbies became thenceforth administered by one who took possession of the same by the right of the said Mary.

One thing at least is certain. The parents of Shakespeare were neither the ill-bred nor the ill-conditioned people they are generally reputed to have been. On the contrary, they were persons of substance, of reputable descent, and in comfortable circumstances, and their son had, without the shadow of a doubt, all the advantages of breeding and education usually derived from growing up in such a family and attending the village school. What the latter was we shall presently inquire.

John Shakespeare and Mary Arden were married probably in 1557, some time, at all events, between November 24, 1556, the date of Robert Arden's will, and September 15, 1558, the date of the baptism of their first child. This first child died in infancy. Their second died before it was a year old. Their third, William, as before stated, was baptized April 26, and is commonly reputed to have been born April 23, 1564. He was therefore the oldest of the family, excepting those that died in infancy.
CHAPTER III.

THE SHAKESPEARE HOUSE, ITS IDENTIFICATION AND HISTORY—EVIDENCE IT AFFORDS IN REGARD TO THE CIRCUMSTANCES OF SHAKESPEARE'S BOYHOOD—BAPTISMAL AND FAMILY—EVIDENCE IT GIVES IN REGARD TO THE COMPANIONSHIP OF THE BOY WILL SHAKESPEARE.

The house in which Shakespeare was born has been identified with sufficient certainty. It was situated in Henley Street, and was bought by John Shakespeare in 1556. He lived in this street, and most of the time in this house, from 1561, the time of his coming to Stratford, till 1601, the time of his death. The property passed, by inheritance or will, first to William Shakespeare, then to his eldest daughter, Susannah Hall, then to his granddaughter, Elizabeth Hall (afterwards Lady Barnard), and then to Thomas and George Hart, grandsons of Shakespeare's sister, Joan, who was married to William Hart, of Stratford. It remained in possession of the Hart family till about the year 1829, the last of that line who bore the name having been the seventh in descent in a direct line from Joan Shakespeare, the sister of William. By special contributions, in 1849 this house was made the property of the nation. It has been restored as nearly as possible to its original condition three hundred years ago, and is now filled with Shakespeare mementoes of every kind, and a fund has been set apart for the purpose of keeping it permanently in repair, and open to the inspection of visitors from all nations. Enough remains of the original structure to show that Shakespeare was born, and that he spent his boyhood and youth, in a home fully equal, in regard to the comforts and properties of life, to those common among the well-to-do burgher class of England in the sixteenth century.

No one who wishes to trace the circumstances which have influenced, for good or evil, the growth of a great intellect, will overlook the companionship of childhood. Who were the youthful companions of William Shakespeare? The parish register of Stratford, after the date of William's baptism, contains among others the following entries of the Shakespeare family: Gilbert, baptized October 13, 1566; Joan, baptized April 15, 1569; Richard, baptized March 11, 1574; Edmund, baptized May 3, 1580.

Putting these dates together, and calling imagination once more to our aid, we find that when William was two and a half years old, Gilbert came to be his playmate; when William was five years old, that most precious gift to a loving boy, a sister, was granted, to grow up with him, and to find in him at once a playmate and a protector; at ten, he had another brother to lead out into the green fields; and at sixteen, the youngest was born, "the baby," whom William probably never regarded in any other light than as a plaything.

These things may be accounted mere fancies. I think they contain a doctrine. Selfishness and gloom are apt to be engendered by a solitary childhood. The baptismal register shows, in the childhood of Shakespeare, no cause at least for the existence of such morbid affections, as his writings give no evidence that such feelings ever did exist in his healthy and cheerful mind.

Stratford-upon-Avon is a small town in Warwickshire, ninety-six miles north-west from London. Its population in the time of Shakespeare was about fifteen hundred. The municipal government consisted of a bailiff, aldermen, and burgesses. The bailiff, or chief alderman, once a fortnight held a court. There was also a court-leet, which appointed "ale-tasters," a class of officers to prevent fraud in the quality of that important element in an Englishman's comfort. The court-leet appointed also affeeors, whose duty it was to punish citizens for various minor offences for which there was no express provision in the statutes. Last, there was the constable, an officer of no little consideration in such a town. John Shakespeare, the father of William, held successively all these offices. He was on the jury of the court-leet in 1556, an ale-taster in 1557, a burgess in 1558, a constable in 1559, an affeeor in 1560 and again in 1561, an alderman in 1565, and high-bailiff or chief magistrate in 1568. William was in his fifth year when his father was at the height of his municipal distinction.

One thing is noticeable in regard to this gradual elevation of John Shakespeare in the social scale. In all the registers where his name occurs prior to 1571, he is recorded simply as John Shakespeare, in one place John Shakespeare, glover. But in a record on September 28, 1571, William being then in his eighth year, the father's name is entered as Magister Shakespeare; and ever after among his neighbors he is known, not as goodman Shakespeare, or plain John Shakespeare, but as Master Shakespeare. This title of Master or Mr. was then never used, as now that of M. D. is never used, except by virtue of some specific legal right.

This change of title in the history of John Shakespeare, as it can hardly be doubted, was in consequence of his increasing wealth and his position in the village. It shows incontestably that he was about this time a leading man in the town, and consequently that his son, the poet, could not have been the illiterate butcher's boy that the early biographers represented him to be. We are left free to admire his transcendent genius without being called upon to believe the absurd tales of his clownish ignorance.

As further bearing upon the circumstances of the poet's childhood, the following ascertained facts may be cited, showing the probable occupation and the worldly condition of John Shakespeare. In 1556 he acquired a tenement and garden adjacent, in Henley Street, and also a tenement with a garden and croft [small enclosed field] in Grenehyll Street, both in Stratford. In 1557 or 1558, he acquired by marriage the estate of Asbies, sixty acres of land and house, three miles from Stratford; also, by inheritance, some landed property at Snitterfield, three and a half miles from Stratford. In 1570, he held, as tenant under Sir William Clotpton, a meadow of fourteen acres, at an annual rent of £8 (≈ $200 then). The inference from these facts is unmistakable. John Shakespeare was at one period living upon his own land, and renting the land of others, and actively engaged in the business of cultivation, in an age when tillage was profitable. When, a little later in life, he came to the village and settled in Henley Street, he probably kept up his agricultural operations, and also kept a shop in his house, where he sold the products of his farm,—butcher’s meat, wool, hides, and other articles, such as gloves made from the skins of the animals slaughtered. Harrison says: “Men of great port and countenance are so far from suffering their farmers [tenants] to have any gain at all, that they become graziers, butchers, tanners, sheepmasters, woodmen, and denique quid non.” probably on this account, William was thrown upon his own resources somewhat earlier than he might otherwise have been. The boy evidently knew little either of a father’s care or of a father’s control after the age of fifteen.

CHAPTER IV.

SHAKESPEARE’S SCHOOL AND SCHOOLMASTERS—WHAT IS KNOWN OF HIS COURSE OF STUDY—HIS KNOWLEDGE OF LATIN AND GREEK—EVIDENCE IN HIS WRITINGS OF HIS BEING A CLASSICAL SCHOLAR.

STRAFORD-UPON-AVON was, as it still is, a quiet place, comparatively free from disturbance and excitement. Its ecclesiastical foundations were numerous and ample. With one of these, the Guild of the Holy Cross, was connected an endowed grammar school, known as the free Grammar School or “school of Edward IV.”

Grammar School Attended by Shakespeare, Stratford.

This explains the mystery of the apparently contradictory traditions in regard to the occupation of John Shakespeare. We see how he was a “butcher,” also a “wool-merchant,” also a “glover,” also a “farmer,” also a “yeoman;” how, finally, John Shakespeare, the woodman of Arden, sold timber to the corporation of Stratford.

The evidence is tolerably complete that John Shakespeare, in his later years, for some cause not ascertained, fell into pecuniary difficulties and embarrassments. He was evidently in straitened circumstances in 1579; was turned out of the aldermanship in 1586; was arrested for debt in 1587; and finally, in 1592, was reported by the authorities as absenting himself from church for fear of being arrested for debt. But as these things occurred chiefly after the formative period in the life of his son William, and as these difficulties, even when greatest, did not seem to affect the social status of the family, it is hardly necessary to pursue the subject further, except to remark that, considerable knowledge of the classics, and with equal certainty that he had in his youth attended the public grammar school where only in Stratford this knowledge could have been acquired by him. Now the course of studies in these old endowed grammar schools is a matter of public record. It included instruction always in Latin and Greek, often in French, and sometimes in Italian. The classics usually read were Cæsar, Sallust, Cicero, Terence, Virgil, Horace, and Ovid, in Latin; Lucian, Xenophon, Homer, and Aristophanes, in Greek. The pupil, furthermore, was obliged to read a goodly portion of this Latin and Greek. It is doubtful whether, in any public grammar school then existing in England, a boy could begin Greek without a familiar acquaintance with at least Cæsar, Cicero, Virgil, and Ovid; and after beginning Greek, the Latin, be it remembered, would be still continued; be it remembered too that the Greek itself was studied through the medium of the Latin, the only grammar and the only dictionary of the Greek at the pupil's command being written in Latin, as indeed it was done in my own school days. So far as the dictionary was concerned, Shakespeare then could not have had even the little Greek that the critical Ben was willing to allow him, without having known a good deal of Latin. In all probability he knew as much of both as would be learned by a bright boy who attended the grammar school until he was fifteen or sixteen, but who did not go thence to the university. There is nothing in his history, and still less in his writings, to make it necessary to suppose, as has been very generally done, that for his knowledge of Roman affairs he was dependent entirely upon the very imperfect translations then extant of the Roman writers. The signs, too, are unmistakable that in the use of words he was thoroughly at home in the classic element of the language, to an extent utterly unattainable by one who had never studied Latin and Greek.

There is perhaps no more decisive test of scholarship,—meaning by that term acquaintance with languages,—than the extent of a man's vocabulary. The number of different words that common uneducated people use is surprisingly small. A thousand or two, sometimes only a few hundred, are all the words at their command. Uneducated men of genius, like Buonarotti, have of course a larger vocabulary. But even in their ease the number of different words used by them is comparatively small. The words they do use are forcible and are used with great vigor, but the range is limited. Men acquire a wide range of words in two ways, namely, 1st, by becoming acquainted with numerous and varying subjects through study and observation, and, 2d, by the study of languages, and by the latter chiefly. Hence it is noticeable that writers who have studied foreign languages, ancient or modern, excel others in the range of their vocabulary. Milton, for instance, who was eminent as a scholar, uses in his poetical works no less than eight thousand different words. But Shakespeare, in his poetry, nearly doubles the amount, using more than fifteen thousand—a vocabulary larger, so far as known, than that of any other English writer. A more convincing proof of scholarship could not well be conceived.

It may not be amiss to dwell a moment longer upon this point, as it is an essential fact in any theory that undertakes to explain intelligibly the problem of Shakespeare's authorship. "A young author's first work," as Coleridge well observes, "almost always bespeaks his recent pursuits." The earliest productions of Shakespeare, accordingly, those written soon after he had left school, betray unmistakably the classical scholar. Compare them with those of any untaught genius, say Bunyan, and see the difference. Venus and Adonis, "the first heir of his invention," and The Rape of Lucrece, published only one year later, are both on classical subjects; and while treated with originality of conception, the author using freely old materials to construct an edifice of his own contrivance, are yet thoroughly and consistently classical in all their ideas and devices. They show a mind steeped and saturated with a knowledge of Greek and Latin fabule. Would a inexperienced village youth have ventured on such subjects, in addressing a nobleman like Southampton, distinguished alike for his own scholarship and for his patronage of scholars? All of Shakespeare's earlier plays, such as Love's Labour's Lost, The Comedy of Errors, and the three parts of Henry VI., abound in classical allusions, classical quotations, and Latinisms both of diction and construction, almost to the verge of pedantry;—not indeed the direct pedantry of his contemporaries, Marlowe, Greene, and Peele, who made open show of their learning, and who stole bodily from the ancients; Shakespeare, even in these earlier days of his authorship, when still fresh from his school studies, and infected to some extent with the spirit of his times, yet used his classical knowledge as a master, not as a servile copier. As he proceeded in his work, and acquired maturity of power and of art, his mind was in his less frequent use of classical allusions and in the wonderful nicety with which the allusions actually used are wrought into the substance of his own thought. In the Latin constructions sometimes used in these later plays, and in the Latin-English words which he sometimes coins, he shows not only singular facility of invention, but unfailing correctness. Milton himself does not walk with more assured tread than does Shakespeare, whenever lie has occasion to resort to classic lore. And then how wonderfully steeped with beauty are these classical words and ideas, after having passed through his subtle brain! How purely classical, yet with a grace how entirely his own, is that exquisite image in Hamlet:

Observe, too, the new use to which this master of language here puts the word "station"—a mode of standing—a use of the word how purely Latin, and yet how thoroughly Shakespearean. Perhaps, however, there is not in all his works a finer instance of his absolute dominion in the world of words than in that singular expression in Macbeth:

"This my hand will rather
The multitudinous seas incarnadine."

Not only by words and phrases, however, does he show knowledge of classical lore, but by the completeness with which he enters into the life of the ancients, as in the Roman plays, where he seems to be actually co-existent with Cæsar and Pompey, with Brutus and Cassius, with Antony and Cleopatra. It is not possible to believe that this intimate knowledge of the "very form and pressure of the time" in these old Roman days, came from copying extracts from school grammars and lexicons, and reading the wretched translations of Thomas Piaer and Arthur Golding. The foundation of this classical knowledge, assuredly, was laid in that public grammar school at Stratford, where, during all his boyhood, to the age beyond that at which youth then went to the universities, he had the continued instruction of a learned clergyman, himself a graduate of Cambridge. There and then, beyond question, Shakespeare became acquainted with the classical tongues, and with some of the masterpieces of classical composition; and this familiarity with the ancients, thus began in youth, was, there can be as little doubt, continued in later life, while seeking materials for his own great works. No other theory seems possible. No other satisfies the conditions of the problem of his authorship. Assuredly, he was an intelligent, educated artist, not an inspired idiot.

CHAPTER V.

OTHER EDUCATIONAL INFLUENCES ACTING UPON HIS YOUTHFUL MIND. — (a) RELIGIOUS TEACHING AND ASSOCIATIONS, THE QUESTION WHETHER JOHN SHAKESPEARE, THE FATHER, WAS A CATHOLIC, STRONGLY PROTESTANT CHARACTER OF THE STRATFORD PARISH CHURCH, LIST OF THE SERVICE BOOKS USED IN THAT CHURCH, CATECHISMS AND MANUALS OF RELIGIOUS INSTRUCTION IN WHICH SHAKESPEARE IN HIS BOYHOOD WAS DRILLED; (b) CHRONICLES AND LEGENDS WHICH FORMED A PART OF HIS YOUTHFUL READING, A LIST OF THESE BOOKS GIVEN; (c) LOCAL ASSOCIATIONS TO WHICH HIS YOUTHFUL MIND WAS SUBJECT, REMARKABLE SERIES OF FACTS ON THIS POINT.

But education is more than learning. Education is growth, and whatever contributes to the growth of a great intellect, whether it be the religious associations of church and home, the story books devoured, the local usages and traditions by which one is surrounded and inspired, whatever thus acts upon the growth of a great intellect, is a part of its means of education. Let us glance at some of these outside "schools and schoolmasters" of the boy Shakespeare.

And first of religious associations. On this point I propose to dwell a little, as the subject is one not so generally understood as it should be, and the facts that bear upon it are not matters of conjecture, but of record — clear, positive, and well defined; and they throw a strong light upon one of the most marked features of the author's works. More than a century and a half after his death, the theory was broached that John Shakespeare, the father of William, was a Catholic. The facts in regard to this matter are, briefly, as follows: The Hart who, in 1770, occupied the Shakespeare tenement in Henley Street, had the roof new tiled. The bricklayer employed for this purpose professed to have found between the rafters and the old tiling a manuscript, which on examination purported to be the confession of faith of John Shakespeare, and which contained ample avowals of his being a Roman Catholic. The authenticity of this document, like the notorious Ireland forgeries, is now entirely discarded by Shakespearean experts and critics. In Shakespeare was of course born... Catholic, as were the great body of other Englishmen born prior to the breach between Henry VIII. and the Pope, in 1531. But the fact that he held various civil offices in Stratford, and especially that of chief burgess or mayor, shows incontrovertibly that John Shakespeare was, outwardly at least, a Protestant during all the time of William's boyhood, for by the statute of Edward 1st, 1588-9, known as the oath of supremacy, every civil magistrate in the realm was bound under penalties of forfeiture and imprisonment to conform to the established reformed religion. John Shakespeare in his old age is indeed officially reported, among others of his neighbors, for "not coming monthly to the church," as required by statute, but at the same time it is significantly added that he was thought "to forbear church for debt or fear of process;" in other words, he stayed away from church to escape arrest for debt, not out of disaffection for the reformed religion.

Then we have the fact, from which there is no escaping, that William and all his brothers and sisters were regularly baptized in the Stratford parish church, which was not only Protestant but reformed. The year, Richard Bifield, being one of the most zealous of the Puritan divines. Shakespeare himself, his wife, his daughter, his son-in-law, all lie buried in the most conspicuous position in the chancel,—the strongest possible attestation that this Protestant church was the religious home of the Shakespeare family.

The services of that church, then, were, beyond question, among the educational influences under which the intellect of Shakespeare grew. Let us see for a moment what these services were, and how far they were of a kind likely to influence such a mind. The Psalter in use there, the only one in fact then known to the English church, was the hard, bald Doric of old Sternhold and Hopkins; these were the Psalms to which without doubt his boyish ears were attuned. Indeed, the Book of Common Prayer, adopted in the reign of Edward VI., 1549, and reaffirmed by Elizabeth, 1559, was then in use in all the churches, and was, with all its wealth of pure English, perfectly familiar to the youthful Shakespeare. The portions of Scripture which he heard from the Prayer-Book on the Sabbath were, as they still are, from Cranmer's version, 1540, known as The Great Bible, a huge folio for the use of the churches. But the household Bible of that day, the only one printed in small volume, was the Geneva version, executed by the Presbyterian refugees at Geneva, Switzerland, in 1560. This Geneva Bible, it can hardly be doubted, was the one used in the household of John Shakespeare and of his son William. It was indeed for half a century, that is, until the appearance of our present version, in 1611, the common household Bible of the great majority of the English people. That Shakespeare was familiar with this Geneva Bible is further proved by a critical examination of the Scripture words and phrases which he uses in such abundance, and which are clearly those of the Geneva version.

In this connection it is proper to notice certain manuals of religious instruction in which all young persons were then drilled. Shakespeare, in King John (I. i.), mentions one of these, the Prayer-Book. This Absey Book, so-called from A B C, is the Rhode Island of a little manual for the instruction of young children, put forth in the first year of the reign of Edward VI. It contains "the A B C, the Pater Noster, Ave, Creed, and Ten Commandments." It contained also, in some of the subsequent editions, a few short lessons for reading and spelling, and a brief catechism of religious instruction. Besides this Absey Book, were the Distaff, and, beyond the Prayer-Book, the new edition of the old English Primer, being a "short catechism of plain instruction, containing the sum of Christian learning." These two manuals, the Absey Book and the Primer, covering substantially the same ground as that occupied half a century later by the New England Primer put forth by the "great John Cotton" of Boston, were made obligatory. Every schoolmaster of the realm was required, by royal command, and under severe penalties, to teach these... manuals to his pupils. It is morally certain then that Shakespeare condescended and committed them to memory.

To recapitulate: From the plain old Psalter of Sternhold and Hopkins, in use in the parish church, from the weekly services of the Book of Common Prayer, from the daily use at his mother's knee of that most familiar household book, the Geneva Bible, from the careful training which good Master Hunt gave him in the Abbey Book and the Primer, it is easy to understand how a mind so susceptible to external influences as was that of Shakespeare became so imbued and saturated, as we find it, with Scripture language and doctrine.

Another educational influence needs to be mentioned. Shakespeare's plays show him to have been early familiar with the old English chronicles and other legendary lore which formed a part of the popular reading of that day. A mind such as his would naturally revel in this kind of reading, as did Walter Scott's in the old border ballads of Scotland. Some of the books of this kind at the command of the youthful Shakespeare, which he has used so largely in his works, and which evidently helped to mould and fashion his thoughts, it is worth while to mention. They were: "The books, the academicians." (Lord's Letter, IV. iii.) Shakespeare devoured them from his early draught nourishment, just as truly as it did from Master Hunt and Lily's grammar and the volume of Greek and Latin lore over which he pored in the famous Chapel Street grammar school. Among the books thus devoured by the imaginative boy we may reckon, with scarcely a possibility of mistake, the following:

1. The Palace of Pleasure, by William Painter, 1566. This was a collection of stories and novels, from various languages, translated into English. In this collection we find among others the pitiful Italian story of Romeo and Juliet, as translated from the French of Boistauet.

2. Fabyan's Chronicle of the old British history, 1516. This contains among its many wild legends the "story of Leir and his three daughters"—a story peculiarly interesting to a Warwickshire man, as "Leir" is reputed to have lived in or near the neighboring town of "Caerleir," now called Leicester.

3. Hall's Chronicle, 1548. This was devoted to a narrative of the wars of the houses of York and Lancaster, a large part of the battle-fields of which were within a day's walk of Stratford-upon-Avon. That this book had been studied by the youthful bard may be inferred from the fact that three-fourths of all his great historical plays were founded upon materials gathered from this field.

4. Holinshed's Chronicle of England, Scotland, and Ireland, 1577. This is another fascinating book of the same sort. Shakespeare follows it in all his plays on English history. He doubtless devoured it when a boy, just as Walter Scott devoured the old Scotch ballads and legends.

5. Gesta Romanorum, translated into English by Robinwa, 1519. This was a famous story book of those days. It was a vast storehouse of monkish and mediæval legends, full of fiction for an imaginative mind, and containing among other things the two stories which form the groundwork of the Merchant of Venice, also the story of the Emperor Theodosius and his three daughters, which is another form of the old fable of King Lear.

6. Regimund Scudder's Discovery of Witchcraft, 1584. This work, with its infinite details and wild stories of witches, fairies, holgoblins, and other uncanny folk, must have had a strange fascination for the mind that has given us the weird sisters of Macbeth, Ariel and Caliban of The Tempest, and all the long list of Puck, Peaseblossom, Titania, Queen Mab, and their fellows.

Many other books might be mentioned as forming very probably a part of the library of the boy Shakespeare. But of these six which have been named, Palace of Pleasure, Fabyan's Chronicle, Hall's Chronicle, Holinshed's Chronicle, Gesta Romanorum, and Regimund Scudder's Discovery of Witchcraft, we can no more doubt than we could if we saw the very books themselves with his autograph upon them, the very dog's-ears telling us where to turn for the well-thumbed passages which have formed the staple of so many of his most glorious creations.

We are considering, remember, the educational influences that gave shape and color to the character of this wonderful man. I have spoken thus far, first, of his school and the studies which he pursued there; secondly, of his church and his religious instruction and associations; thirdly, of the story books and legends which were within his reach, and with which his works show him to have been entirely familiar. All these things are strictly educational; by grouping them together thus in one view, we are able to realize to some extent the kind of atmosphere in which the mind of Shakespeare was immersed, and in which it received such a healthy development. But there was still one other educational influence, not inferior to any of these. I refer to the powerful influence of the local associations that were around him on every side, and on this point I shall make no apology for entering a little into particulars. The subject, you will find, is in the highest degree suggestive.

The childhood of Shakespeare, it can hardly be doubted, was one of great physical activity. The Stratford bust, which, with all its faults, as a work of art, is perhaps the best authenticated likeness of him, tells unmistakably the same story. In his writings, too, he displays a minute familiarity with out-door sports of every kind, an acquaintance with external nature and country scenes, such as is never gained except by those whose childhood and youth are spent largely in the open air, among the green fields and by the hedge-rows and lanes of the country. The free, tunny-scarfed boy never went far from his neighborly town, nor dwelt in places innumerable. In this, as in many other points, there is a striking resemblance between Shakespeare and Sir Walter Scott,—the same healthy robustness of thought, the same joyousness of temperament, the same fondness for out-door life and out-door sports, the same close observation of nature, the same love for legendary lore, written or unwritten. The story of Scott's early life fortunately is on record; and, by analogy, it tells us plainly how, in corresponding circumstances, the Stratford boy with his great exuberance of life deposed himself among the stirring associations by which he was surrounded. Let us look for a moment at some of these local transactions and associations, which were likely to act upon the imagination of a thoughtful boy in that spring-time of life when the thick-coming fancies of the brain are just beginning to take root.

We have all read Walter Scott's description of Kenilworth Castle, and of the gorgeous pageants exhibited there by the Earl of Leicester to Queen Elizabeth. All mid-England was there by thousands, three hundred and twenty heads of ale drank on the occasion testifying to the extent of the gathering. Is it likely, can we conceive it possible, that a boy of active habits and ardent imagination, then in the twelfth year of his age, and living only thirteen miles away, would be absent from such an exhibition? The dramatic cast of many parts of that superb entertainment must have been especially suggestive to the mind of the young village. When, on that occasion, the great Earl welcomed his sovereign with a more than regal magnificence, it is not hard to believe that his ambition looked higher than the part of favorite counsellor and minister. The Stratford boy would not be slow to take up the pleasing surprise, as it passed from mouth to mouth among the gaping multitude, nor would he soon forget the pageant itself, or the gay throngs surging in and out through the lordly portals. The only passage in the plays in which Shakespeare appears distinctly to allude to Queen Elizabeth is one the hint of which seems to have been caught on this occasion. Bear in mind that in these shows at Kenilworth, the mythology of lakes and seas abounds. "Arion appears sitting on a dolphin's back," "Triston, in likeness of a mermaid, comes towards her majesty." With these things in mind, let us see if we do not get some new light on the origin of that exquisite passage in the speech of Oberon, in A Midsummer-Night's Dream, already referred to (II. i.).

Obe. My gentle Puck, come hither. Thou rememberestSince once I sat upon a promontory,And heard a mermaid on a dolphin's backUttering such dulcet and harmonious breathThat the rude sea grew civil at her songAnd certain stars shot madly from their spheres,To hear the sea-maid's music: I remember.

Obe. That very time I saw, but thou couldst not,Flying between the cold moon and the earth,Cupid all arm'd: a certain aim he tookAt a fair vestal chaste, by the west,And loosed his love-shaft smiting from his bow,As it should pierce a hundred thousand hearts;But I might see young Cupid's fiery shaftQueenly'd in the chaste beams of the watery moon,And the imperial votaress passed on,In maiden meditation, fancy-free.

Let us look at some of the other local associations: Only ten miles from Stratford was Warwick Castle, the seat of the great Earl, the king-maker, with its huge piles of masonry and its rich historical associations. Many an old servitor of the house would be there, only too glad to pour into the ear of the curious boy the tales of tragic interest which had been enacted within and around its walls.

A mile from Warwick, at Blacklow-hill, was the scene of another startling tragedy. There, in 1312, the favorite of Edward II., Piers Gaveston, was beheaded by the barons. Conspicuous among the objects that would here rivet the attention was the ancient statue of Guy at Guy's Cliff, the famous "Black Dog of Arden," by whose hand the butchery was perpetrated.

Only twelve miles away was the scene of the great battle of Evesham, where, in 1265, Edward I. defeated the barons under Simon de Montfort. The tomb of King John was at Worcester, only twenty miles away. Coventry, eighteen miles away, was the seat of the famous Black Prince. There were the famous lists where, according to Shakespeare's own description (Richard II. I. iii), the quarrel first began between the houses of York and Lancaster. There, too, was something still more attractive to a young poet. The Coventry Mysteries, the most famous of their kind in England, were then in full activity, and the people of the rural counties were hardly less attracted to them than are the people of Germany now to the Passion Plays of the Oberammergau. All mid-England thronged to see these remarkable open air theatricals,—the germ from which in less than twenty years Shakespeare's own theatre was to spring.

A two days' walk would bring one from Stratford... to Shrewsbury, where the Hotspur Percy was slain, and the Scotch Earl Douglas taken, and minute touches in Shakespeare's description of the fight show that his eye was thoroughly familiar with the scenery of this great battle-field.

One day's walk down the Avon brings you to the scene of the great battle of Tewksbury,—the crowning struggle of a terrible sixteen years' war. In that battle, as Margaret so piteously says to Richard, "Thou sweetest Edward, my poor son, at Tewksbury." (Richard III., I. iii.).

The battle of Bosworth Field was fought within thirty miles of Stratford. Burton, writing in 1624, says the inhabitants then living around the plains of Bosworth Field, "in those eight pieces and passages [of the battle] yet fresh in memory, by reason that some persons thereabout, which saw the battle fought, were living within less than forty years." Forty years from Burton's date takes us back to the sixteenth year of William Shakespeare. Why should not he, the boy-dramatist, like Scott, the boy-novelist, have gathered knowledge and caught inspiration from the lips of these old narrators? The battle of Bosworth Field was Shakespeare's day, the first romance of English history. Burton again, in another place, speaking of this battle, identifies the spot "by a little mount cast up, where the common report is, that at the first beginning of the battle Henry Earl of Richmond made his panegyrical oration to his army (Richard III., V. iii.); [also] by divers pieces of armor, weapons, and other warlike accouterments, and by many arrow-heads now found, whereby about twenty years since [1644] great arrows were dug up, of which some I have now in my custody, being of a long, large, and big proportion, far greater than any now in use; as also by relation of the inhabitants, who have many occurances and passages yet fresh in memory." Let it be remembered in this connection that of the ten historical plays, no less than eight are associated in many of their battle-fields with the localities which have been named, and with which Shakespeare was from boyhood perfectly familiar. Of these plays, four, namely, Richard II., Henry IV., Part I., Henry IV., Part II., and Henry V., constitute a connected tetralogy, showing the rise of the House of Lancaster. The remaining four, namely, Henry VI., Part I., Henry VI., Part II., Henry VI., Part III., and Richard III., constitute a second tetralogy, showing the rise of the House of York. Bosworth Field lies in these eight pieces and passages of English history. Portland, in his Henry VI., Part II., well says (p. 169) that Shakespeare's history, like that of the play on the field, is "by the sword won, not by the pen." Shakespeare's knowledge of archery and other field sports often comes out in his writings. In the Venus and Adonis, for instance, the practiced huntsman appears as unmistakably as in Scott's Lady of the Lake. The painting of the hare-hunt, in the Venus and Adonis, is for minute accuracy unequalled in all English literature. So in the Merchant of Venice, he shows his familiarity with archery. (I.i.)

In my school-days, when I had lost one shaft, I shot his fellow of the self-same flight.
The self-same way with more advised watch,
To find the other forth, and by adventuring both I oft found both.

The ancient sport of archery was revived in England with much ceremony in 1580, Shakespeare being then sixteen years old. A short distance from Stratford, about a mile from the little village of Biford, was still standing twenty-five years ago an old crab-tree, known as Shakespeare's Crab-Tree, and celebrated partly by the tradition that he was one of a party who accepted a challenge from some Biford toppers to try which party could drink the most ale, but more certainly by the tradition that under this tree were many games of archery, in which Shakespeare and other Stratford boys took part.

CHAPTER VI.
THE STORY OF HIS DEER-STEALING, HOW FAR IT IS TO BE CREDITED.

THERE is another somewhat circumstantial tradition of Shakespeare's deer-stealing, which may be exaggerated in many of its details, and yet must have had some foundation in truth,—enough at least to add to the conviction that when a boy he was addicted to boisterous sports and boon companions. "He had," says Rowe, one of the earliest of the biographers, 1709, "by a misfortune common enough to young fellows, fallen into ill company, and amongst them, some that made a frequent practice of deer-stealing engaged him more than once in robbing a park that belonged to Sir Thomas Lucy of Charlecote near Stratford. For this he was prosecuted by that gentleman, as he thought, somewhat too severely; and, in order to avenge that ill usage, he made a ballad upon him; and though this, probably the first essay of his poetry, be lost, yet it is said to have been so very bitter that it redbilled the prosecution against him to that degree that he was required to have his business and his family in Warwickshire for some time, and shelter in London." Rowe speaks of the ballad as being lost, but some later antiquaries succeeded in gathering fragments of it from the lips of two or three extremely aged persons who had portions of it in memory. The first stanza, at least, has been clearly made out from two independent sources. The ballad may possibly not have been Shakespeare’s, but there is no doubt of its having come down to us by direct oral tradition, reaching—his marriage at Shakespeare’s day.

To understand the malicious poem upon Sir Thomas’s name, it should be remembered that in the language of heraldry the word luce (Lat. lucius, O. Fr. lus) meant a pike, a kind of fish, and that three white luces or pike, interlaced, were in the quarterings of the coat-of-arms of the Lucy family. The balladist, whoever he was, quibbles upon the rustic pronunciation of the word “loosie,” which was also sounded “lusee,” and thus brings out the provoking idea which so nettled the provincial dignitary. The stanza is as follows:

A Parliament member, a justice of peace,
At home a poor scare-crow, at London an ass;
If lousey is Lucy, as some volks miscall it,
Then Lucy is lousey, whatever befall it.
He thinks himself great,
Yet an ass in his state
We allow by his cars but with asses to mate.
If Lucy is lousey, as some volks miscall it,
Sing lousey Lucy, whatever befall it.

Shakespeare certainly at no period of his life was above this sort of quibble, and in his Merry Wives of Windsor (I. i.) he uses almost exactly the same expression, so that readers have very generally believed that Sir Thomas sat for the picture when the dramatist gave us his inimitable portrait of Justice Shallow:

Shall. All his ancestors that come after him
May give the dozen white luces in their coat.
Shall. It is an old coat.

Evans. The dozen white louses do become an old coat well;
It agrees well, passant; it is a familiar beast to man.

Charlecote, with its ample parks and its noble mansion and its worthy surroundings of every kind, was in the immediate vicinity of Stratford, and doubtless was one of the objects that helped to fill the mind of the young bard with images of beauty, whether the story of his youthful escapade there be true or not.

CHAPTER VII.

HIS MARRIAGE—PAINFUL SURMISES RAISED IN REGARD TO IT BY RECENT DISCOVERIES—QUESTIONABLE CHARACTER OF THE TRANSACTION—HAPPINESS OR UNHAPPINESS OF HIS MARRIED LIFE, THE ARGUMENTS PRO AND CON—THE ROMANCE CONNECTED WITH THE NAME AND MEMORY OF ANNE HATHAWAY.

I WHAT I have given thus far in regard to the personal history of Shakespeare is, I am constrained to say, though extremely probable, yet, with one single exception, devoid of absolute certainty. Truth to say, from the register of his baptism to his nineteenth year, we have not one fact strictly personal to himself which we can affirm on direct and positive evidence. The second fact of his life for which we have authentic documentary proof very nearly to Shakespeare’s day. The date of his marriage is involved in the same difficulty as the date of his birth. The reason of the uncertainty as to the exact date is that the marriage register has not been found. But not many years ago a legal document was brought to light which fixes the date within a day or two. In the year 1836, there was discovered in the Consistorial Court of Worcester, the county adjoining to Warwickshire, a document relating to Shakespeare, which on examination proved to be his marriage license. In this document, bonds are given by two of his neighbors to indemnify the Bishop for licensing the marriage with only once publishing the banns. This feature of the license seems to imply haste, and, taken in connection with some other circumstances, makes it certain that the marriage itself took place very soon after, distinctly in the same day. The marriage license is dated November 28, 1582, Shakespeare being then a little over eighteen years and seven months old.

Under head of May 26, 1582, two days less than six months, the parish register of Stratford contains this entry: Baptized, Susannah, daughter to William Shakespeare.

Connected with this marriage is another circumstance, also accredited by public documents, from which countless conjectures have been drawn, according to the teeming fancies of readers. The Stratford register says that Shakespeare’s wife was buried August 8, and her tombstone says that she died August 6, 1623, aged sixty-seven years. Now, had Shakespeare lived till August, 1623, he would have been aged but fifty-nine years, or nearly eight years younger than his wife. In other words, the passionate and imaginative boy of eighteen was married to one in the full and matured womanhood of twenty-six.

In connection with this we are reminded also that in Shakespeare’s will, which is very minute, mentioning and providing for all the other members of his family, and even some of his neighbors and of his dramatic associates, his wife’s name, in the original draft of the will, did not once occur, the one item in which it does occur being an interlineation, showing it to have been an afterthought, and bequeathing her merely his “second-best bed with the furniture.”

Nor is there in all his writings a line or a word which can be certainly affirmed to have been inspired by her, unless it be that significant thought in Twelfth Night (II. iv.):

Let still the woman take
An elder than herself; so were she to him,
So always she level in her husband’s heart.

—words of warning which some critics have been wicked enough to hint might have been suggested by his own bitter experience.

It is but just to say, before dropping this disagreeable part of the subject, that there are many plausible theories for mitigating and even reversing the ordinary judgment upon this transaction. The evidence is complete that the ceremony of Iland-fasting, or Troth-plight, duly made before competent witnesses, was then popularly considered as nearly, if not quite, equivalent to formal marriage; and parties thus betrothed lived together openly, and without scandal, as man and wife, before the formal marriage ceremony in church took place. Shakespeare himself, in Winter’s Tale, speaks of illicit intercourse before “Troth-plight” in the same manner as of illicit intercourse before marriage, putting the two on an equality. The charitable presumption, say those who admit this view, is that Shakespeare and Anne Hathaway were thus troth-plighted, and considered man and wife, months before their formal marriage. Certain it is that no breach of scandal on this account has reached us from the gossips of his own time. The marriage license that has been referred to, it is further to be noticed, is attested by the seal of Richard Hathaway, the father, showing his presence and assent to the transaction. There is, moreover, documentary evidence to show that this Richard Hathaway and John Shakespeare, the father of William, were personal friends, doing neighborly acts for each other in the way of business; that Richard Hathaway, Jr., the dramatist, two years senior of Shakespeare, and his associate in literary dramatic work, was in all probability Shakespeare.
brother-in-law; furthermore, Jack Sandells and John Richardson, Shakespeare's bondsman, on the marriage license, were neighbors and friends of the Hathaways; and finally, the Shakespeares and the Hathaways seem from various circumstances to have lived on the most neighborly terms.

As to the omissions of the will, it is to be remarked that the "best bed" in such a family was usually an heirloom, and went, according to English custom, to the heir-at-law; that the "second-best bed" was doubtless the one connected with the nuptial ceremony and the married life of the parties; and finally, that by English law the wife had her widow's portion, and was thus amply provided for without any special legacy in the will. Still, the one awkward fact remains, and the union, it is feared by many, was an ill-assorted one, and as such was a misfortune, even though not a crime.

In this connection, too, it must be added that a portion of the sonnets seem to reveal to us some dark passages in Shakespeare's London life, and from this the inference has been made that he was driven to seek in forbidden ways the companionship and solace that he did not find by his own hearthstone. That he did not, however, by the fascinations of the capital, become seriously alienated from his Stratford home is as clear as day, and is among the important facts bearing upon this vexed question. He never became a Londoner, as did Jonson and the other dramatists of the day. All the pet names given him by his contemporaries connect him with his country home. He is ever "the sweet swan of Avon," "the bard of Avon," not of the Thames. During his sojourn in London, he made his annual visit to Stratford. His children are baptized, married, and buried there. His earnings, year by year, are invested there. It has even come to light that among his investments was a purchase of land at Shottery, the seat of the Hathaway Cottage, which certainly does not look as though the place had become distasteful to him. Everything in fact that we certainly know of the history of the man shows that Stratford and its surroundings, the residence of his wife and the scene of his youthful love, continued to the last to be the home of his affections. Had there been any such indication as has been imputed, there would not have been on the part of the injured wife that strong desire, which we know her to have expressed, to be buried in the same grave with him.

Anne Hathaway, the name of the young woman who so early gained such an ascendency over the youthful poet, was, according to a very general tradition, possessed of great personal beauty. There is indeed no direct contemporary record to this effect. But the tradition is at least an innocent one, and is not contradicted by any adverse testimony.

Of the sonnets, there are two or three at least that are redolent of this springtime of life, and which I for one can hardly help believing were written by him before leaving Stratford, and were inspired by this Stratford beauty. One of these, in a half playful, half passionate vein, is a continued parody or pun on his own name of "Will.'

Whoever hath her wish, then haste thy 'Will,'
And 'Will' to boot, and 'Will' in overplus;
More than enough am I that vex thee still,
To thy sweet will making addition thus.
Wilt thou, whose will is large and spacious,
Not once vouchsafe to hide my will in thine?

Shall will in others seem right gracious,
And in my will no fair acceptance shine?
The sea, all water, yet receives rain still
And in abundance addeth to his store;
So thou, being rich in 'Will,' add to thy 'Will';
One will of mine, to make thy large 'Will' more.
Let no unkind, no far hearers kill;
Think all but one, and me in that one 'Will.'

Another sonnet, in like youthful vein, differing so widely from the deep tragedy that pervades others of his sonnets, is addressed to some one playing on the virginal, an instrument of music then in use, the keys, called "Jacks," being of wood.

How oft, when thou, my music, music play'st,
Upon that blessed wood whose motion sounds
With thy sweet fingers, when thou gently sway'st
The wavy concord that mine ear confounds,
Do I envy those jacks that nimble leap
To kiss the tender inward of thy hand,
Whilst my poor lips, which should that harvest reap,
At the wood's boldness by thee blush'ning stand!
To be so tickled need not change their state
And situation with those dancing chips,
O'er whom (which) thy fingers walk with gentle gait,
Making dead wood more blest than living lips,
Since saucy jacks so happy are in this,
Give them thy fingers, me thy lips to kiss.

THE LIFE OF SHAKESPEARE.
THE LIFE OF SHAKESPEARE.

This sonnet, whether addressed to Anne Hathaway or not, is at least a refutation of the theory that all the sonnets were inspired by a male friend. The sentiment here expressed are surely not those of man toward man, but of a man towards a woman.

Anne Hathaway’s cottage, at the little village of Shottery, a mile and a half across the green fields from Stratford, still remains, and in it the “second best bed with the furniture,” bequeathed by her husband. Nothing more picturesque is to be seen in all the country round.

The next entry in the Stratford register with which this story is concerned is the following: Baptized, February 2, 1585, Hamnet and Judith, son and daughter of William Shakespeare. Shakespeare’s wife bore him only these three children. Hamnet, the only son, died at the age of twelve. The daughters, Susannah and Judith, were both married. Judith was married to a Stratford man, Thomas Quiney, and had three sons, who however all died without issue. Susannah, the eldest daughter, and the chief inheritor, was married to Dr. Hall, an eminent physician of Stratford. She had one daughter, Elizabeth, who was twice married, the last time to Sir John Barnard, but she likewise died without issue. No lineal descendant of Shakespeare, therefore, now exists.

CHAPTER VIII.

WHAT LED SHAKESPEARE TO THE PLAYERS AND TO LONDON.

Many conjectures and surmises have been given as to the cause of Shakespeare’s leaving Stratford for the metropolis. The real cause I take to be that stated briefly by Aubrey, the earliest of all the biographers (1670). “This William,” says Aubrey, “being naturally inclined to poetry and acting, came to London.” Let us see if some light cannot be thrown upon this brief paragraph.

Among the fiscal accounts of Stratford have been several entries which may be serviceable in this matter. These entries are charges of public money expended by the authorities for certain theatrical performances at different times, from 1569 to 1580, that is, from the fifth to the seventeenth year of William Shakespeare. In 1569, when his father John Shakespeare was chief magistrate or Bailiff, there was a payment of 2s. to the Queen of Players, and of 12d. to the Earl of Worcester’s Players. In 1573, the Earl of Leicester’s Players received 5s. 8d. In 1576, my Lord of Warwick’s Players had a gratuity of 17s., and the Earl of Worcester’s Players one of 5s. 8d. In 1577, my Lord of Leicester’s Players received 15s., and my Lord of Worcester’s Players 3s. 4d. In 1579, my Lord Strange’s men, at the commandment of the Bailiff, 5s., and the Countess of Essex’s Players 14s. 6d. In 1580, the Earl of Derby’s Players, at the commandment of the Bailiff, 8s. 4d.

These entries are explained by the following passage in a book by R. Wiltes, 1639, who gives his own age at that time as seventy-five, and who must therefore have been born in the same year with Shakespeare. Wiltes is describing what he had seen in a country town near Stratford when he was a boy. His description, in connection with the foregoing entries, is almost as satisfactory as if it had been said in express terms that the same thing was seen by Will Shakespeare, another boy, in another town of merry England, “all in the olden time.” The title is:

"UPON A STAGE-PLAY WHICH I SAW WHEN I WAS A CHILD."

“In the city of Gloucester, the manner is (as I think it is in other like corporations) that when Players of Interludes come to town, they at first attend the Mayor to inform him what nobleman’s servants they are, and so to get license for their playing; and if the Mayor like the actors, or would show respect to their lord and master, he appoints them to play their first play before him, and the aldermen and common council of the city; and that is called the Mayor’s Play, when every one that will comes in without money, the Mayor giving the players a reward as he thinks fit, to show respect unto them. At such a play my father took me with him, and made me stand between his legs, as he sat upon one of the benches, where we saw and heard very well. The play was called ‘The Cradle of Security,’ wherein was personated a king or some great prince, with his courtiers of several kinds, amongst which three ladies were in special grace with him; and they, keeping him in delights and pleasures, drew him from his graver counsellors, hearing of sermons, and listening to good counsel and admonitions, that in the end they got him to lie down in a cradle upon the stage, where these three ladies, joining in a sweet song, rocked him asleep, that he snorted again, and in the mean time closely conveyed under the clothes wherewithal he was covered a vizard like unto a swine’s snout upon his face, with three wire chains fastened thereunto, the other end whereof being severally held by these three ladies, who fell to singing again, and then discovered his face, that the spectators might see that they had transformed him, going on with their singing. Whilst all this was acting, there came forth of man with his mask on, and the stage, two old men, the one in blue, with a sergeant of arms, his mace upon his shoulder, the other in red, with a drawn sword in his hand, and leaning with the other hand upon the other’s shoulder; and so they two went along in a soft pace, round about by the skirt of the stage, till at last they came to the cradle, when all the Court was in the greatest jollity; and then the foremost of men with his mask, at the further fearfull blow upon the cradle, whereas all the courtiers, with the three ladies and the vizard, all vanished; and the desolate prince, starting up barefaced, and finding himself thus sent for to judgment, made a lamentable complaint of his miserable case, and so was carried away by wicked spirits.

“This prince did persuade in the jest the wicked of the world; the three ladies, Pride, Covetousness, and Luxury; the two old men, the End of the World and the Last Judgment. This sight took such impression in me that when I came towards man’s estate, it was as fresh in my memory as if I had seen it newly acted.”

Now if R. Wiltes, born in 1654, saw a child’s play exhibition in the town of Gloucester, I do not find it at all difficult to believe that when, in 1569, John Shakespeare, Bailiff of Stratford-upon-Avon, ordered the payment of 9s. to the Queen’s Players for the exhibition of a Merry Interlude, his son Will, then five years old, stood in like manner between his father’s legs, as he sat upon one of the benches, and there saw a like notable jest; and that he continued to witness the other exhibitions of a like kind which occurred from time to time in his native town during the whole period of his boyhood.

The inference which these records suggest is strengthened by others of a later date. The first direct evidence that we have of Shakespeare’s being in London is a list of certain persons in that city, engaged as players and as proprietors of the Play House. In this company, of which Shakespeare is one, occur the names of several other actors from the same county of Warwick, and one other at least from Stratford itself.

Thus, then, it was. The great dramatist found, even in these rude exhibitions, something congenial. He found in these wandering and clumsy theatricals the elements of his own glorious day-dreams. His soul was touched, ruddy it may be, but on that chord which yielded its deepest and sweetest music. To join his fellow-townsmen who had already embarked in this business, and to seek by it in the great metropolis the means of living and of fame, was certainly one of the most natural and probable of all possible results. It was instructive. His leaving Stratford for London at the time he did needs no further explanation. It requires no tale of deer-stealing and prosecution, no interposition of paternal misfortunes, no fiction of domestic disquietudes and treasons. Shakespeare found himself among the players for the same reason that the birds in spring-time find themselves among the branches. He became a dramatist under a law as generic as that which draws sweetness from the Eolian harp when kissed by Zephyrus, or that which opens the throats of the feathered tribes when warm airs and genial skies warm them into melody. It was nature herself prompting her favorite son to his appropriate work. The strolling players and the merry interludes, at the little town of Stratford-upon-Avon, were to Shakespeare the mirror of Merlin, revealing to himself the secret of his own wonderful powers. The powers were there. They needed only an occasion to put them in motion.

CHAPTER IX.

ONE of the riddles of literature is that so little should be known of the man who is beyond question the greatest genius that literature has to boast of; and the riddle is all the more perplexing in that this man lived in the very focus of English civilization, at one of its most illustrious epochs, and that he has been dead only about two centuries and a half.

The exact date of Shakespeare's going to London is not known. The probability is that he went about the year 1588, four years after his marriage, he being then twenty-two years old, and his youngest child not yet two years old. He died in 1616, and the last four or five years of his life are known to have been spent in his native village, after his retirement from the metropolis. This would make his London career cover a period of about a quarter of a century.

The first notices we have of Shakespeare in London are in connection with the company of actors known, first as the Lord Chamberlain's men, and afterwards as the King's Players. Some account of this company therefore is the first thing in order. Strolling actors were at that time liable to be taken up as vagrants. To relieve them from this penalty the better class of actors attached themselves to the service of some nobleman, and, as his servants, they were by law free from arrest. One company, known as the Earl of Leicester's Players, early acquired special distinction, and in 1574, through his influence, obtained a special charter from the Queen. The leading proprietor in this company was James Burbage, a Warwickshire man. This James Burbage was, in Shakespeare's boyhood, the man of greatest mark in the theatrical world. He was the pioneer in the building of play-houses, the first house ever built in England specially erected for theatrical purposes being that put up by him in 1577, in Shoreditch, on ground formerly belonging to Ilyowell Priory. It was in the open fields on the north side of London, and just outside the city limits. This building was known simply as the Theatre. After occupying it more than twenty years as a play-house, Burbage pulled it down, carried the materials to the other side of London, on the south bank of the Thames, and there, in 1599, with these materials, built the play-house known as the Globe. He had also, some three or four years before, near the north bank of the Thames, opposite Southwark, erected still another play-house, known as the Blackfriars, being built upon a part of the foundation of the old monastery of the Black Friars, which had been demolished in the reign of Henry VIII.

This James Burbage had a son Richard, who was confessedly the greatest actor of his day, and one of the greatest of all time. He was about the same age as Shakespeare, and was the leading man in the company of players to which Shakespeare belonged. They played chiefly in the buildings just described, put up by the elder Burbage, namely, the Theatre, the Blackfriars, the Globe. The principal actors in this company were Richard Burbage, William Shakespeare, Lawrence Fletcher, Augustine Phillipps, John Heminge,

Chapter X.

Beginning of Shakespeare's Career, His Rank as an Actor — Very Recent Documents on this Subject — In what Manner His Career as a Dramatist Began — Social Humiliations of the Actors and the Dramatists at that Time — Evidences That Shakespeare Felt This keenly — His Social Habits — “Wit-Combats” Between Him and Ben Jonson, at the Mermaid — One Reason Why Such Obscurity Exists in regard to the Date of the Composition of the Different Plays — His Interest in Preventing the Publication of the Plays — Character of the Early Quartos — The True Editor Princeps.

The evidence is conclusive that Shakespeare began his theatrical career as an actor, and that he took parts both in his own plays and in others. Some of the parts taken by him, as that of the Ghost in his own Hamlet, and that of the old man Adam in As You Like It, are pretty well ascertained. It is also known that he played in Ben Jonson’s Every Man in His Humor.

The earliest authentic mention of Shakespeare as a player is in March, 1594, four years earlier than any authentic mention of him in this capacity heretofore supposed to exist. In the document just unearthed by Haliwell, and published in 1874, of the authenticity of which there has been thus far no question, Shakespeare is named as one of the Lord Chamberlain’s servants who acted two comedies before her Majesty Queen Elizabeth during the preceding Christmas season, that is, in December, 1593. This document, then, shows Shakespeare, at the end of seven years from the time of his supposed advent in London, to have already risen to such consideration in the theatrical world as to be one of the three most eminent actors of the day, specially invited to play before her majesty on that occasion. Kempe and Burbage, the two others associated with him, being the acknowledged sovereigns of the stage. The document is interesting also as showing the exact amount paid for their services, viz., £20 equal to £100, or $500 now. The whole entry is worth quoting. It is in these words: “To William Kempe, William Shakespeare, and Richard Burbage, servants to the Lord Chamberlain, upon the Council’s warrant, dated at Whitehall, 15 March, 1594, for two comedies or interludes showed by them before her Majesty in Christmas time last past, namely, upon St. Stephen’s day and Innocent’s day, £13 6s. 8d., and by way of her majesty’s reward £6 13s. 4d., in all £20.”

In regard to his ability as an actor, Chettle, writing while Shakespeare was still on the boards, 1592, testifies that “he is excellent in the quality which he professeth,” and Aubrey, writing half a century after Shakespeare’s death (1670), says “he did act exceedingly well.” If in this respect he did not come up to the consummate ability of his friend, the younger Burbage, who was indeed the Garrick of his day, he yet evidently was an actor of no mean ability, and his practical experience on the stage contributed largely, without doubt, to that masterly knowledge of stage-effect which is one of the most characteristic marks of his plays.巩固 himself by his performances.

There is a well-authenticated tradition that Taylor, one of the Blackfriars’ company, who acted Hamlet, was instructed in the part by Shakespeare himself; also, that Lowin, who acted Henry VIII. was likewise instructed in it by Shakespeare; and, finally, that Betterton, who, half a century later, became famous as a personator of these two parts, was aided therein by the stage traditions in regard to the manner of presenting them as prescribed by Shakespeare himself.

The evidence, furthermore, is conclusive that for many years Shakespeare was engaged both as a writer for the stage and as an actor. All his predecessors and most of his contemporaries were at once players and writers. Such was the case with Marlowe, Greene, Lodge, Peele, Nash, Munday, Wilson, Field, Heywood, Webster, and Ben Jonson. It was not until some three or four in the history of the drama that the business of author and actor became distinct. All the early dramatists were actors, and took part in acting their own plays.

It is further probable that Shakespeare began the business of dramatist in the same manner as his predecessors, namely, as a “playwright.” That is, he began, not by composing original plays, but by tinkering up and improving plays already extant. The drama, about the duties of the actor, began authorship, seems hardly to have been considered a part of literature. The person who prepared a play for the stage was not looked upon as an author. It was all-one to the audience whether that which pleased them was original or borrowed. The actor sometimes came in for a share of personal regard, but no one ever thought of the writer. It can hardly be doubted that Shakespeare, while enjoying his theatrical success, felt keenly the humiliating social position to which his profession at this time subjected him. It is absurd to suppose that such a genius as Shakespeare’s, did not know its own value.

Read the fifty-fifth sonnet:

Not marble, nor the gilded monuments
Of princes, shall outlive this powerful rhyme;
But you shall shine more bright in these contents
Than surelyilda beneath the stars is seen.
When wasteful war shall statues statues overturn,
The living record of your memory,
Gentle is this record, fair and honest enmity.
Shall not write your name nor blazon it so large
Even in the eyes of all posterity.
That wear this world out to the ending doom.

Bearing in mind this sublime consciousness of his own greatness and of the assured eternity of his lines, how infinitely touching is the pathos with which, in another sonnet (111th), he refers to the social humiliations to which his profession subjected him.

O, for my sake do you with Fortune chide,
Guiltless goddess of my harmful deeds,
That did not better for my life provide
Than public means which public manners breeds.
Thence comes it that my name receives a brand,
And almost thence my nature is subdued
To what it works in, like the dyer’s hand.

The feeling thus experienced, as he looked upon the great and noble who came to his play-house merely to be amused, is not at all in conflict with the fact that he enjoyed heartily his life, such as it was, though it did not give him social intercourse with the titled ones about him. We can well believe the traditions of the merry-making at the Falcon and the Mermaid, and of the wit-combats of which Fuller speaks, 1662, between Shakespeare and Ben Jonson. “Many,” says Fuller, “were the wit-combats betwixt him and Ben Jonson; which two I beheld like a Spanish great galleon and an English man-of-war.” Master Jonson, like the former, was built far higher in learning; solid, but slow in his performances. Shakespeare, with the early dramatists, prepared a piece for the stage purely as a matter of business. They took, or they made, whatever was likely to gain the end—to draw an audience. Shakespeare doubtless soon found that the less he took and the more he made, the more acceptable the preparation became to the public. Hence he engaged by a natural transition, which has been technically called a “playwright,” to a writer of original plays. Another thing also is probable, and indeed is evident from recorded facts, that his plays became gradually so important to the company to which he belonged, that he dropped entirely the office of actor, and confined his attention exclusively to writing. At what time precisely this change took place has not been ascertained. All that we know certainly is this, and age about part of his the dates, career he was an actor, afterwards he was both actor and writer, while for many years before his death he was connected with the stage only as a writer. The story of his having begun by holding the horses of those attending the theatre is now generally discredited. If the thing did occur, it must have been at the theatre, in Shoreditch, to which Shakespeare was first attached. As this theatre was not in the open fields, many of the playgoers coming from the city would reach the place on horse-back, and so the holding of the horses would become a considerable business.

The date of the composition of the several plays is involved in great obscurity. A discussion of the subject would involve many dry details quite unsuited to a sketch like this. One general remark, however, may be made, bearing upon this point. It is doubtful whether any one of the plays was published under the author’s own inspection and authority. It was to the interest of Shakespeare and his company to keep the plays in manuscript in the theatre, as the main part of their stock in trade. The printing of them for persons to read lessened their value as a means of attracting people to the play-house. The fact, therefore, of the plays not coming out during the author’s life, and under his own direction, is proof rather of his third, than of an original neglect on his part, of which it has been generally ascribed. In 1623, seven years after his death, two of his friends and fellow-actors published his plays in a large folio volume, from the original copies then in the theatre. This publication is regarded as the true Editio Princeps, and as the chief authority in determining the text. A considerable number of the plays were published separately during his life. These were printed in small 4to pamphlets, and are known as the Early Quartos. Their publication, however, is generally believed to have been surreptitious, without the supervision or consent of the author.

The fact that the plays were kept in the theatre as a part of the theatrical property has had the additional effect of making it next to impossible to fix a definite time for the composition of each. We know from a comparison of dates, as well as from contemporary records, that certain of the plays were written earlier, and others were written later. But even when a play had been once produced in the theatre, there is no proof that Shakespeare did not continue to alter and amend it from year to year. The proof indeed is just the other way, and the general conclusion now is, that all the plays were touched up from time to time, and that many of them, particularly these first written, were rewritten again and again.
CHAPTER XI.
RELATIONS OF SHAKESPEARE TO THE EARL OF SOUTHAMPTON—CHARACTER OF THIS NOBLEMAN—TRADITION OF THE GIFT OF £1,000—CONNECTION OF THE DAVENANTS WITH THE STORY—THEIR SPECIAL MEANS OF KNOWLEDGE ON THE SUBJECT.

THE first works of Shakespeare published, and the only ones certainly known to have been published under his own supervision and authority, were the "Venus and Adonis," 1593, and the "Lucrece," 1594. Shakespeare at this latter date being thirty years old. Both poems are dedicated to a youthful admirer of Shakespeare's, the young earl of Southampton, then in his twenty-first year. The earl is described by his contemporaries as a man of brilliant parts, possessed of great learning and accomplishments, and a munificent patron of letters. Testimonies to this effect in the shape of dedicatory odes and epistles are found scattered all through the literature of the period. The poets of the day looked up to him as the English Maccenas. Brathwayt, in the dedication of the Scholar's Medley, calls him "learning's best favorite." Florio, in his World of Words, speaks of him as one of those whose pay and patronage I have lived some years;" "To me and many more, the glorious and gracious sunshine of your honor hath infused light and life." The form of literature to which he was especially devoted was the drama. This we know from a contemporary record by Rowland Whyte, who says of Southampton and his companion Lord Rutland, "They pass away the time in London merly in going to plays every day." In connection with this, we may observe that his mother by a second marriage became the wife of Sir Thomas Henrage, Treasurer of the Chamber. This office brought Sir Thomas, and through him his step-son, the young earl, into intimate association with actors and dramatists. Some brief reference to the affection of this brilliant nobleman for men of letters seems necessary to explain the intimate relations which grew up between him and Shakespeare. In the dedication of the "Venus and Adonis," the language is that of distant but respectful compliment. The dedication of the "Lucrece," only a year later, speaks unbounded admiration and affection. This change in the tone of the two documents is remarkable, and is supposed to have been caused by an extraordinary act of generosity on the part of the young nobleman. The tradition is that the earl at one time made the poet a gift of £1,000 (equivalent to £5,000 now) to enable him to complete a "purchase which he had a mind to." There is no inherent impossibility, and no very great improbability, in such a piece of generosity, and the tradition is clear and precise. If this thing ever did take place, its occurrence in the interval between the publication of these two documents gives special meaning and emphasis to both—the first dedication being that which prompted the mind of the generous young nobleman to make the gift, the second being the natural outpouring of affection for so great an act of kindness.

All this, probable as it is, we must still remember is pure conjecture. The tradition is given by Rowe, and Rowe gives it on the authority of Sir William Davenant, 1670, about half a century after the young earl's death. Shakespeare was intimate with the Davenants, and was godfather to their son, William, the celebrated Sir William Davenant of the next generation. Shakespeare used to stop at their house, the Crown Inn, in Oxford, in his annual journeys between Stratford and London, the older Davenant, who was an innkeeper and vintner, being a great admirer and friend of the poet. These facts are expressly affirmed by Anthony A. Wood, the careful antiquarian of Oxford, who himself knew the Davenants personally. Wood says, the "mother [of Sir William] was a very beautiful woman, of a good wit and conversation;" "the father ... was a very good and discreet citizen, yet an admirer and lover of plays and playmakers, especially Shakespeare, who frequented his house in his journeys between Warwickshire and London." The poet's accounts must have been well acquainted with Shakespeare's affairs, and are competent witnesses to any important facts in his history. Rowe's statement is as follows: "There is one instance so singular in the munificence of this patron of Shakespeare's, that if I had not been assured that the story was handed down by Sir William Davenant, who was probably very well acquainted with his [Shakespeare's] affairs, I should not have ventured to have inserted; [to wit,] that my Lord Southampton at one time gave him a thousand pounds to enable him to go through with a purchase which he heard he had a mind to."

CHAPTER XII.
SHAKESPEARE'S GENIUS FULLY RECOGNIZED BY HIS CONTEMPORARIES—EVIDENCES ON THIS POINT: (a) EXTRAVAGANT NUMBER OF EDITIONS OF HIS WORKS PUBLISHED DURING HIS LIFE-TIME; (b) NUMBER AND EXTRAORDINARY CHARACTER OF NOTICES OF HIM BY CONTEMPORARY WRITERS—HOW THE CURRENT NOTION ORIGINATED ABOUT HIS NOT BEING KNOWN OR RECOGNIZED BY HIS CONTEMPORARIES.

It has been a common opinion that Shakespeare's genius was not recognized by his own generation; in fact, that he lived and died comparatively unknown. That his genius is now better understood and appreciated than it was two hundred and fifty years ago, I admit. It is also true that he is no longer thought to have been, as the wits of Queen Anne's day thought him, a sort of inspired idiot, abounding in genius, but wanting in art. Yet, while a broader criticism and a more extensive research have undoubtedly added to our knowledge of him, it would be a great mistake to suppose that he was not both well known and highly appreciated in his own day.

And, first, let us see what was done in the actual publication of his works while he was still living. From 1593, when the "Venus and Adonis" first appeared, to 1616, the time of his death, scarcely a year passed without the appearance in print of one or more of his works, some of them reaching as high as six editions within the space of a year. The number of editions of separate works, copies or records of which have come down to us, was at the time of his death no less than sixty-five. Now even in this day of cheap publications and of universal rushing into print, an author who, at fifty-two, notwithstanding studious and interested endeavors on his part to keep his chief works out of the hands of the printers, should yet find on the bookseller's catalogues more than sixty editions of one or another of them, might surely seem to be not altogether a stranger to the public. It is hardly an exaggeration to say that Tennyson and Longfellow are not better known to the book-trade than was Shakespeare, mutatis mutandis, at the time of his death.

Secondly, in the books of elegant extracts published at that time, and containing selections from standard poets, Shakespeare is even thus early quoted. Thus, England's Parnassus, or, The Choicest Flowers of our Modern Poets, 1600, has no less than ninety extracts from Shakespeare. Bel-VALUE, or Garden of the Muses, also in 1600, has several extracts from Shakespere. Love's Martyr, in a new edition, 1601, has an appendix of new poems, "done by the best and chiefest of our modern writers,"—the same being chiefly Chapman, Marston, Ben Jonson, and Shakespeare. England's Helicon, a Collection of Pastoral Poems (1614) contains three extracts from Shakespeare. This kind of incidental testimony it is impossible to gainsay. It is hard to conceive of a contemporary popularity more unmistakable.

Thirdly, although it was not the custom then, as it is now, for everybody to gossip on paper about authors, yet let us see whether Shakespeare and his works are not in point of fact mentioned in every variety of way by those who lived at the same time with him, who were conversant with his writings, and who knew the man himself personally. I will mention only a few of the very earliest, from 1591 to 1598.

The earliest of all is a passage in Spenser, not indeed naming Shakespeare, yet so evidently referring to him as to deserve citation. It is, I am aware, a matter of dispute whether the passage referred to was meant for Shakespeare, and many Shakespearians, those too of the very highest authority, reject the passage altogether. Yet, after considering carefully the arguments, for and against, I cannot resist the conviction that in penning these lines Spenser did have Shakespeare in his mind. The passage occurs in Spenser's poem, The Tears of the Muses, 1591, Shakespeare having then been five years in London. Spenser, who during that same period had been living at Kilcolman Castle, Ireland, came in 1590 to London to attend to the printing of the first three books of The Faerie Queene, and while there was likely to learn something of the new poet, and perhaps to make his acquaintance. Nothing certainly could be more probable than that Spenser, during this temporary sojourn in the metropolis, should embrace the opportunity of frequenting the play-house, where all the wits of the day and all his friends among the nobility made daily resort. Of his return to Ireland, this passage in the Tears of the Muses, was published, suggested apparently by what he had seen in London during his late visit, and bewailing what he considered the low estate of literature and the arts. In the poem, each of the Nine Muses in turn makes lament over the low condition of that particular art over which she presides. Among the rest, Thalia, the Muse of Comedy, bewails the degenerate state of her branch. In this lament occur the lines referred to:

And he, the man whom Nature self had made
To mock her selfe and Truth to imitate,
With kindly counter under Mimick shade,
Our pleasant Willy, ah! is dead of late;
While all the wits and jolly sight
Is also dead, and in dolefull drench.

After a few more lines, expressing her scorn for the baser sort of dramatists who were flooding the stage with their vile productions, she goes on to say:

But that same gentle spirit, from whose pen
Large streams of bonnie and sweet Nectar flowes, Soorming the boldness of such base born men,
Which dare their follies forth so rashly throwe,
This rather chooseth to sit in idle Caleb.
Than so himselfe to mockerie to sell.

Here Thalia speaks of some dramatic writer who had raised high the expectations of the public, but who is "dead of late," that is, who is so vexed at the secrility and ribaldry prevailing that he ceases writing for the stage, resolving to sit idle for the time, rather than be mixed up with such base-born men. As there was no other dramatic writer in 1591 to whom these lines could possibly apply, and as the phrase "our pleasant Willy" points so clearly to William Shakespeare, it is hard to resist the conclusion that Shakespeare was meant, that he had thus, as early even as his twenty-seventh year, won emphatic recognition from the author of this Faerie Queene. Among the plays known to have been written prior to 1591, are Love's Labour's Lost, Comedy of Errors, and Two Gentlemen of Verona, all in the comic vein, and all therefore suited to bring their author under the notice of Thalia, the Muse of Comedy.

Three years later, that is, in 1594, Spenser again visited London, and on returning to Ireland wrote another poem, Colin Clout's Come Home Again, celebrating in pastoral verse, and, as was his wont, under assumed names, the various persons he had met in and near the court. Astrophel is Sir Philip Sidney, the Shepherd of the Ocean is Sir Walter Raleigh, and so on. Among these descriptions is one generally supposed to refer to Shakespeare, though the reference is by no means so clear as in the former passage. The lines are the following:

And there, though last not least, is ACTION:
A gentler shepherd may no where be found,
Whose Muse, full of high thoughts invention,
Both like himselfe heroically sound.

Edward Spenser.

Poets have in all ages been regarded as genus irritabile,—a waspish race. All the accounts, however, which we have of Shakespeare, concur in representing him as, on the contrary, a man of amiable disposition and conciliatory manners. It is not a little remarkable that all his contemporaries and those of the age immediately following (except one little outpouring of spleen which I shall notice presently), speak of him, when they refer to him at all, in terms not merely of admiration, but of tender affection,—a man not only to be revered, but to be loved. Milton, whose epithets are never given at random, speaks of "our Shakespeare," and "my Shakespeare." Leonard Digges speaks of "our Shakespeare." His fellow-actors, Heminge and Condell, in bringing out the first Folio, speak of "our Shakespeare." Ben Jonson says "Sweet
Swo\n
Swan of Avon," "my Shakespeare," "my gentle Shake- parre." Spenser, in the passage first quoted, speaks of "our pleasant Willy," and "that same gentle spirit." So here, when in speaking of Aein, he says, a "gentler shepheard than mine," and implies, in a fashion (not to be found,) it seems but natural to infer that he means the same genial, love-inspiring spirit.

Another expression deserves notice. The Muse of Aexion, it is said, does "like himself heroically sound." This seems to carry a plain reference to Shakespeare’s "name," which in that day was often printed as two words joined by a hyphen. Shakespeare called it a "comparison," and played upon according to the fancy of his friends. Thus Ben Jonson translates the name into "Shake-a-Lance" and "Shake-a-Stage;" Greene calls him a "Shake-scene;" Fuller refers to the "warlike sound of his surname, whence some may conjecture him of a military extraction,—S|asti-vibrans, or Shake-scene;" and finally the coat-of-arms devised for him by the Herald’s office bears the crest of a falcon brandishing a spear. These things look certainly as if Spenser was aiming at the same mark when he speaks of a poet whose Muse does like himself heroically sound. Notice further the difference between the kind of praise now bestowed and that given three years before. Then the qualities spoken of were the "honey" and the "nectar," the "joy" and the "jolly merriment." Now, his Muse is "fall of high thoughts’ invention." This too is supposed to be explained by a comparison of dates. In 1591, Shakespeare had written little, if any thing, but comedy, with possibly the Venus and Adonis, and some of "his sugred sonnets among his friends." But now, in 1594, three at least of his great tragedies had been put upon the stage, namely, Richard II., Richard III., and Romeo and Juliet. Well then might Spenser speak of the heroic sound of his name and of his high thoughts’ invention.

Shakespeare’s own admiration for the poet-lau nate, found expression in a remarkable sonnet, pub lished in the Passionate Pilgrim, and addressed to a friend who was equally an admirer of Doveland, a famous English musician of that day:

If music and sweet poetry agree,
As they must needs, the sister and the brother,
Then must the love be great (twixt thee and me),
To live the one, and love the other.
Doveland to thee is dear, whose heavenly touch
Upon the lute doth ravish human sense;
Spenser, whose deep conceit is such
As, passing all conceit, needs no defence.
Then lovest to hear the sweet melodious sound
That Phoebus’ lute, the queen of music, makes;
And I in deep delight am chiefly drowned
When he is singing, sweet Obedience
One god is god of both, as poets folyt;
One knight loves both, and both in thee remain.

After Spenser, the next writer, chronologically, who refers to Shakespeare is Robert Greene. This occurs in a tract published in 1592. Greene was quite noto rious in his day. He wrote chiefly for the stage, and was charged with various excesses in private life. In a fit of repentance, near the close of life, he wrote a tract called A Great's Worth of Wit; Bought with a Million of Repenance. It was addressed to "those gentlemen his quodam acquaintance who spend their wits in writing plays, and more particularly to Marlowe, Lodge, and Peele." He urges these writers to cease writing for the stage; to take warning from his experience; and if nothing else would move them, he must be assured that the actors and the public were very unstable in their likes and their dislikes, and would soon abandon them for some new favorite. His words are: "Base-minded men, all three of you, if by my misery ye be not warned; for unto none of you, like [unto] me, sought those hurrs to cleare; those puppetts [the actors] I mean, that speak from our mouthes, and that in that fancy. It is not strange that I, to whom all have beene holding; is it not like that you, to whom they all have been beholding, shall (were ye in that case that I am now) be both at once of them forsaken? Yes, trust them not; for there is an upstart crow, beautified with our feathers, that with his Tyger’s heart ered in a Player’s side, supposes it well to Bombast out a blank verse, as the beautie of vs; colouring an absolute Johannes Factotum, is in his own conceit the only Shakescene in a country."

Here Greene is in ill temper with some young up start, who, at first only a player, has presumed to write also for the stage, and who is obviously supplant ing Marlowe, Lodge, and Peele. From the date, 1592, and from what we know of the other dramatic writers then living, the new "upstart" could have been none other than Shakespeare, and this inference derives additional strength from the epithet which Greene gives him, "the only Shake-scene in a country."

Thus the great dramatist, now only twenty-eight years old, and only six years in London, is already begin ning to supersede his predecessors and contemporaries, and to excite in consequence their jealousy and hatred. Thus we have the first hints of the cruel, satirical, and especially instructive — Johannes Factotum, literally, a John do-everything, or, in good English idiom, a Jack at-all-trades. Now the whole tenor of Shakespeare’s writings, as well as all the traditions concerning his life, go to establish the conclusion that he was remark able for his common sense and his practical talents. His transcendent genius did not prevent his attending to ordinary business in an ordinary way — did not hinder him from being shrewd at a bargain and thrifty in the management of affairs. It is easy to see that these qualities, in connection with his genius as a writer, would naturally give him in a short time the chief control of the theatre to which he was attached. The disparaging epithets of Greene mark the precise time (a critical point in the history of any rising man) when, from superior business as well as superior genius, the actual management of affairs had gone into his hands, but his superiority had not yet been fully recognized. He was still one who could be tainted by his declining rivals as an "upstart."—one who imagined himself able to write as good blank verse as any of his contemporaries — one who was "in his own conceit the only Shake-scene in a country"—one who thought he could be writer, player, manager, and what not — in fact, a very and "absolute Johannes Factotum."

Greene’s Groat’s Worth of Wit led incidentally this same year to a notice of Shakespeare by Henry Chettle, another dramatic writer of the period. Chettle had been instrumental in the publication of Greene’s pamphlet, and finding that injustice had been done therein to some of the parties attacked, he published a tract of his own, called Kind-Hart’s Dream, intended to make reparation. In it occurs the following passage, refer ring to Shakespeare: "Myself have seen his demeanor no less civil than he excellent in the quality [which] he professes; besides, divers of worship have reported his uprightness of dealing, which argues his honesty, and his facetious grace in writing, that approves his art. The character which Chettle here gives of Shake speare is especially as already suggested, namely, that he was a man of genius, possessed of good temper, thrift, and common sense. I have dwelt a little upon these four passages, Spenser 1591, Greene and Chettle 1592, and Spenser again 1594, because they are the first of all, and because, obscure as they are in some respects, they yet show how early Shakespeare became a man of mark. The other instances will be quoted more briefly.

This same Henry Chettle a few years later refers to Shakespeare again, under the name of Melibert, taking him to task for not sounding the praises of Elizabeth, at the time of her death.

Nor doth the silver-tongued Melibert
Drop from his honied muse one vable tear,
To mourn her death that grace'd his desert,
And to his lakes open'd her royal eyes:
Shepherd, remember our Elizabeth,
And sing her rake, done by that Tarquin, Death.

Henry Williboe, an Oxford man, in a volume called Williboe, His Aesis, published in 1594, the very year that the Lucrece was published, thus mentions the new poem:

Though Ostioline have dearly bought
To high renowne, a lasting life;
And found—that most in valne have sought
To have—a fair and constant wife,
Yet Tarquin pluck'd his glistering grape.
And Shake-scene paints poore Lucrece rape.

Gabriel Harvey, who figured largely in those days as a literary critic, and who was much mixed up with the affairs of Spenser and Sidney, published in 1592 four letters "especially touching Robert Greene and other parties by him abused." In the third letter is a paragraph addressed to one of the parties thus abused by Greene. The circumstances of the publication make it wellnigh certain that the person thus addressed was Shakespeare. The passage is so accepted by Dr. Ingleby, one of the most careful and exact of Shakespearean scholars. Harvey's words are: "Good sweete Oratour, be a devine poet indee; and use heavenly eloquence indee; and employ thy golden talent with amounting usance indee; and with heroicall cantoes honour right vertue, and have brave valour indee; as noble Sir Philip Sidney, and gentle Maister Spenser have done, with immortall Fame; and I will bestow more complements of rare amplifications upon thee then ever any bestowed upon them; or this Tongue ever affoord'd.

Six years later, 1598, Harvey wrote: "The younger sort take much delight in Shakespeare's Venus and Adonis; but his Lucrece, and his tragedy of Hamlet, Prince of Denmark, have it in them to please the wiser sort."

Drayton, in his Matilda, also of 1598, gives the following allusion to the new poem:

Lucrece, of whom proud Rome hath boasted long,
Lately reviv'd to live another age.
And here arriv'd to tell of Tarquin's wrong,
Her chaste denial, and the tyrant's rage.
Acting her passions on our stately stage.
She is remember'd, all forgetting me.
Yet as fair and chaste as ere she was.

In a work called Polimantia, 1595, the following expression occurs: "All praise the Lucrece of sweet Shakespeare."

The Return from Parnassus, a play acted by the students of Cambridge, 1606, contains remarks on several contemporary poets — Spenser, Constable, Lodge, Daniel, Watson, Drayton, Davis, Marston, Marlowe, Shakespeare, and Churchyard. Of Shakespeare the following is said:

Who loves Adonis' love or Lucrece' rape.
His sweeter verse contains heart-robbling life;
Could but a graver subject him content.
Without love's foolish, lazy languishment.

In the prose part of the play, the following dialogue occurs between the actors, Kemp and Burbage.

"Kemp, why here's our fellow Shakespeare puts them all downe — aye, and Ben Jonson, too. Of that Ben Jonson is a pestilent fellow; he brought up Horace, giving the poets a pill; but our fellow Shake-speare hath given him a purge that made him beray his credit.

"Burbage. It's a shrewd fellow, indeed."

John Weaver, in his Book of Epigrams, composed in 1595, has a sonnet addressed

Ad Gulkiteum Shakespeare.

Hone-tong'd Shakespeare, when I saw thine issue, I swore Apollo got them, and not the muse, Their rose-taimed features cloth'd in tissue.
Some heaven-born goddesse: said to be her mother. Rose-check't Adonis with his amber teases.
Faire fire-hot Venus charming her to love her; Chaste Lucinda, virgin-like her dress'd.
Proud lusty-string Tarquin, seeking still to prove her: Romeo, Richard, more whose names I know not, For thousands vowe to them subjective dulce.
They burn in love, thy child's Shakespeare hath this. Go, wo thy Muse! more Nymphish brood beget them.

These various extracts, I may remark in passing, are quoted, not for their value as poetry, but for their value as evidence, and in this respect there seems no possibility of gainsaying their force.

In 1598, Richard Barnfield writes:

"And Shakespeare, thou whose hony-flowing Valne (Feasing the world) thy praises doth obtaine,
Whose Venus and whose Lucrece (sweete and chaste)
Thy name in fame's immortal Books have plac't,
Live ever you, at least in Fame live ever;
Well may the body dye; but Fame dies never."

In this same year are other incidental notices, either of Shakespeare himself, or of some of his writings. But we must omit these notices in order to dwell more at length upon the most important of all, the testimony of Francis Meres. Meres was a clergyman "Master of Arts in both universities," an approved good scholar, and a compiler of school-books. His testimony is the more valuable both because of its fulness and explicitness, and because, from his very occupation as a compiler, he would be more likely than almost any other kind of writer to be a reflector and representative of public opinion. Meres's book, called Palladii Tanae, or Wits Treasury, was published in 1598. It was a text-book for schools, giving a brief sketch of the chief English poets, comparing them with the corresponding Greek, Latin, and Italian poets. In this work, after enumerating the great tragic poets of Greece and Rome, Meres says we have in English Marlowe, Peele, Watson, Kyd, Shakespeare, Drayton, Decker, Ben Jonson (the names are given in chronological order). Again, in like manner, our writers of comedy are given — Lilly, Lodge, Gascoyne, Greene, Shakespeare, Nash, Heywood, etc. After quoting the Greek and Latin poets who had the same lyric poetry, he says, the best among our lyric poets are Spenser, Daniel, Drayton, Shakespeare, etc. In like manner, those famous for elegy are Surrey, Wyatt, Sidney, Raleigh, Dyer, Spenser, Daniel, Drayton, Shakespeare, and so on. Referring to the exquisitum monumentum of Horace, he says, we have in English like enduring monuments in the works of Sidney, Daniel, Drayton, Shakespeare. He even quotes Shakespeare as one of those by whom the language had been improved: "The English tongue is mightily enriched and gorgeouslie invested in rare ornaments and resplendent (habiliments) by sir Philip Sidney, Spenser, Daniel, Drayton, Warner, Shakespeare, Marlow, and Chapman." Some of Meres's particular expressions are remarkable. "As the soule of Euphorbus was thought to live in Pythagoras, so the sweete, wittie souls of..."
Ovid lives in mellifluous and honey-tongued Shakespeare; witnes his Venus and Adonis, his Lucrece, his sacred Sonnets among his private friends, &c."

"As Eplius Stolo said, that the Muses would speak with Plautus' tongue, if they would speak Latin; so I say, that the Muses would speak with Shakespeare's fine-filed phrase, if they would speak English."

"As Plautus and Seneca are accounted the best for Comedy and Tragedy among the Latines, so Shakespeare among ye English is the most excellent in both kinds for the stage: for Comedy, witness his Cittizen of Verona, his Errors, his Love's labour's lost, his Love's labour's wonne, his Midsummer-nights dreame, and his Merchant of Venice; for Tragedy, his Richard the 2, Richard the 3, Henry the 4, King John, Titus Andronicus, and his Romeo and Juliet."11

Here, then, in 1598, we have Shakespeare, after a career of only twelve years in the metropolis, quoted publicly in a text-book as among the great English authors whose works alone are a monument of English genius, of which names placed conspicuously in four successive lists of writers who have distinguished themselves severally in Comic, Tragic, Lyric, and Elegiac poetry, and in still another list of those who by the did this Francis Meres in 1598? All this too, be it remembered, when he was, as it were, only at the beginning of his career, and only in the midst of his most productive and most conspicuous part of his life still before him. Was either Longfellow or Tennyson, with all the prestige of university honors and influence, and with all the machinery of modern book-making and advertising, better known or more fully recognized at the age of thirty-eight than was Shakespeare at that age? Could either of them at that age have been ranked as best of English writers either of or in the classes of Lyric, Elegiac, Comic, and Tragic verse?—or, in each of these styles, have been so safely placed in comparison with the greatest of Grecian and Roman writers? Ben Jonson, who was as competent to speak of Shakespeare as would be Longfellow to speak of Tennyson,—even more competent, for Jonson and Shakespeare were intimately acquainted personally, wrote for the same stage, lived in the same city, dined at the same tavern, where they had those famous "wit-combats" of which Fuller speaks—Jonson, in the lines prefixed to the first Folio, speaks of Shakespeare in terms, not only of the greatest affection, but of the most exalted eulogy,—speaks not only of his unparalleled genius, but of his consummate art; and extols him as surpassing, not only Chaucer, Spenser, Marlowe, and all other English writers, even the ancients whom Ben worshipped,—surpassing even Aristophanes, Terence, and Plautus in comedy, Eschylus, Euripides, and Sophocles in tragedy!

The strange hallucination that Shakespeare was unknown among his contemporaries may have come in this way. Soon after his death, all stage-plays were at a discount under the sway of the Puritans. On the overthrow of the Commonwealth and the incoming of the Stuarts, French notions of taste were in the ascendant. The stage was indeed revived, but it was that of France, not the good old English drama. Then again with William of Orange and Queen Anne came the reign of Classicism. And so, for one cause and another, for a full century after the close of the great Elizabethan period, Shakespeare, it is admitted, was under a cloud. Even so late as 1793, Steevens, one of the great Shakespearean editors of the last century, could write of the Sugared Sonnets, whose praises the men of Shakespeare's own day could never tire of sounding, that it was not within the omnipotence of an Act of Parliament to compel people to read them, and he actually refused to print them in his extended edition of Shakespeare's works, regarding those wonderful lyrics as so much worthless rubbish. "We have not reprinted the Sonnets, etc., because the strongest Act of Parliament that could be framed would fail to compel readers into their service."12

In his own day, however, Shakespeare was the acknowledged sun of the literary firmament. We of the present century have but revived and raised somewhat the estimate in which the English people held him two hundred and fifty years ago.

Before dismissing this topic, it is worth while to notice, in these many references to Shakespeare by his contemporaries, how uniformly he is mentioned in terms of affection. This would seem, as before observed, to indicate the possession on his part of an unchangeable and obliging disposition, and gives plausibility to the tradition handed down by Aubrey regarding the origin of the friendship between Shakespeare and Ben Jonson. His acquaintance with Ben Jonson," says Aubrey, "began with a remarkable piece of humanity and good nature. Mr. Jonson, who was at that time

altogether unknown to the world, had offer'd one of his plays to the players, in order to have it acted; and the persons into whose hands it was put, after having turn'd it carelessly and superciliously over, were just upon returning it to him with an ill-nature'd answer, that it would be of no service to their company, when Shakespeare luckily cast his eye upon it, and found something so well in it, as to engage him first to read it through, and afterwards to recommend Mr. Jonson and his writings to the publick."

We are longer "dazzed with faint praise," after the fashion of the time of Alex. Pope, nor give him half-hearted, patronizing commendations, after the fashion of the time of Dr. Sam. Johnson, but rather, like the renowned scholar and dramatist of Shakespeare's own day, look up to him with admiring, almost adoring wonder, as the most exalted of the Di Maiores of the dramatic art, the very Jupiter Olympus of the poetic pantheon, in whose presence the greatest even of the great Greek and Roman masters are content to stand at a respectful distance! Such was the trumpet-note of praise sounded by Rare Ben Jonson, in Shakespeare's own day, two centuries and a half ago. Have we even at this day gone much beyond it?

I have not thus far referred to the Shakespeare-Bacon theory. The whole question seems to me to be contained in a nutshell. Stripped of verbiage, it is simply this: could the Creator who gave the world Dante and Homer have made a man of equal or even greater genius in Stratford-upon-Avon? Granted the genius, and all the other conditions of the problem are easy enough. Whoever had the genius to conceive these plays, would, in Shakespeare's surroundings, have had all the needed opportunities for education and acquired knowledge exhibited in the plays. The advocates of the Bacon theory quietly assume, in the face of all the lately accumulated evidence to the contrary, that Shakespeare was without education and without the means of acquiring knowledge. They go back to the old exploded notion of Queen Anne's day, that Shakespeare was a man of clownish ignorance, and that the plays, if by him, were the product of an inspired idiot. I could understand the argument, if applied to a man in the condition of John Bunyan. But Shakespeare was a man of letters. He had ample means of being such, and he was accepted as such by the most educated people with whom he lived in familiar, daily intercourse. Besides, it is little less than monstrous to suppose that the greatest poetry of all time, and such an immense body of it, was the product of one whose acknowledged writings, enormous likewise in quantity, show no evidence of special poetic gifts. Bacon's genius lay in the domain of science and philosophy, not of song, the few poor specimens of verse he has given, only showing how much he was out of his element in that species of composition. We might as well suppose Aristotle capable of writing the Iliad, Wickeilife the Canterbury Tales, John Hampden the Paradise Lost, or John Stuart Mill the Idylls of the King, as suspect the author of the Novum Organum capable of the Midsummer-Night's Dream, Lear, Hamlet, Romeo and Juliet, and Macbeth. If there was not an exaltation of the Bard of Avon, assuredly they were not by the author of Instauratio Magna and De Augmentis Scientiarum.

CHAPTER XIII.

RELATIONS OF SHAKESPEARE AND HIS COMPANY TO QUEEN ELIZABETH AND KING JAMES.

The company to which Shakespeare belonged was under the patronage of Hunsdon, the Lord Chamberlain, a kinsman and favorite of Queen Elizabeth, who had given the Lord Chamberlain use of the splendid palace of Somerset House, in which palace, it can hardly be doubted, the Chamberlain's company often played for the amusement of the Court. Shakespeare's plays, and Shakespeare himself, were well known to Queen Elizabeth. Indeed, one of the best authenticated traditions in regard to him is that the comedy of the Merry Wives of Windsor was written at her express suggestion. The refining of Shakespeare from adulation, considering how grateful it was to the ears of the royal maids, speaks also trumpet-tongued for his manly independence. Blue eyes, blonde complexion, and golden hair, all predicable of Elizabeth herself, had become, by a sort of legal presumption, the only types of female loveliness. Yet in the face of this, the dramatist has the courage, perhaps, considering the imperious temper of the Queen, we might call it the audacity, to admire a regular brunette: He thus writes to some sweetheart:

Thine eyes I love, and they, as pitying me,
Knowing how they turn too tenderly to me,
Have put on black, and loving mourners be,
Looking with pretty ruth upon my pain.
And truly not the morning sun of heaven
Better becomes the grey cheeks of the East,
Nor that full star that shines in the even
Dias half that glory in the sober West.
As those two mourning eyes become thy face:
0, let it then as well become thy heart
To mourn for me, since mourning doth thee grace,
And suit thy play like in every part.
Then will I wear hennin of my black
And all they foul that thy complexion lack.

Sonnet CXXXII.

Spenser, or Sidney, or Raleigh, would as soon have cut off his right hand as to express admiration for such a woman.

Shakespeare, in this as in many other matters, was wiser than his time; he well knew that in the age to come his one delicate allusion to the Maidens Queen, in the passage in Midsummer-Night's Dream, already quoted, would be counted of greater worth than all the open flatteries poured out by his contemporaries with such lavish profusion.

Elizabeth was fond of theatrical exhibitions, and it was probably in consequence of this inclination of hers that the play-houses, which at different times, under the influence of the Puritan party, were ordered to be closed by the authorities of the city of London, were yet enabled to continue their performances, with little interruption, to the close of her reign.

On the accession of James, the Puritan party renewed their efforts to suppress the play-houses, and at first met with some success; but soon after reaching London, the new monarch changed his mind and took the Lord Chamberlain's Players (Shakespeare's company) under his own protection, allowing them henceforth to be called the King's Players, and giving them a royal license with special privileges. The date of this license is 1603, and the name of the players, as given in it, are Fletcher, Shakespeare, Burbage, Phillipps, Heminge, Condell, Sly, Armin, Cowley,—nine, Shakespeare being second on the list. We note also, that in a list of the comedians who represented the dramatis personæ at the performance of Ben Jonson's Every Man in His Humor, at the Blackfriars, in 1598, Shakespeare's name heads the list.

THE LIFE OF SHAKESPEARE.

The first occasion, apparently, on which this company played before King James was when the Earl of Pembroke, Dec. 24, 1603, gave, at his seat at Wilton, a great entertainment to the King. An entry of the fiscal accounts of that date show that £80 (≈£150) was paid on that occasion to John Heiminge "on behalf of his Majesty's Players of the Globe," to perform at the festival before the King; and we know from another source that both Pembroke, who gave the entertainment, and his brother, the Earl of Montgomery, were great admirers and favorers of Shakespeare.

Ben Jonson speaks expressly of the favor with which both Elizabeth and James regarded Shakespeare:

"Those flights upon the banks of Thames,
That so did take Eliza and our Jane."

There are two traditions on this subject which it may be well to notice here. The first is that on one occasion, during the progress of the play,* her Majesty purposely dropped her glove in such a way as to oblige the poet to stop his acting and pick it up,—which he did, saying (as a king, in character),

"And though now bent on this high embassy,
Yet stoop we to take up our cousin's glove."

The other tradition, pretty well authenticated, is that "King James I. was pleased with his own hand to write an amicable letter to Mr. Shakespeare." John Davies, of Hereford, a contemporary poet, seems to have thought the dramatist not unworthy of such royal companionship. In a poem, The Scourge of Folly, 1607, Davies says:

To our English Terence, Mr. Will. Shakespeare.

Some say, good Will, which I, in sport, do sing,
Hast thou not paid some kindy parts in sport? Thou hast bin a companion for a king,
And beene a king among the meaner sort;
Some others ralle; but, ralle as they think fit,
Thou hast no raying, but a meancing wit;
And honesty thou sow'st, which they do reap,
So, to increase their stocks, which they do keep.

CHAPTER XIV.

SHAKESPEARE'S PECUNIARY AFFAIRS — HIS EXTRAORDINARY BUSINESS THIEF — ACCUMULATION OF PROPERTY AT STRATFORD — AMBITION TO BE A RETIRED COUNTRY GENTLEMAN — EVIDENCES OF HIS TACT IN BUSINESS MANAGEMENT — EVIDENCES OF HIS KINDLY DISPOSITION AND CONCILIATORY MANNERS.

There are other evidences of Shakespeare's prosperity besides those drawn from the annals of the Blackfriars and the Globe. In 1596, John Shakespeare and wife recovered by law, evidently by the aid of money received from London, the estate of Ashby, the marriage portion of William's mother, which had been alienated during the period of the father's pecuniary misfortunes. In 1596, again, the grant of arms to John Shakespeare by the herald's office was consummated evidently through influence put forth in London.

In 1597, the poet bought the principal dwelling-house in Stratford, an old mansion formerly belonging to the Clopton family, and called the Great House. Shakespeare, on acquiring this property, fitted it up for his own residence, and changed its name to the New Place.

From a document dated 24 Jan., 1697-8, we learn that Shakespeare's influence by his Lordship as such behind the Stratford burgesses, to aid them in getting from the government some abatement of taxes, as well as a portion of the government grant for the relief of certain cities and towns that had suffered by the plague or by fire. From the same document we learn that "he is willing to disburse some money on some odd yard land or other at Shottery," the three private places and the Earl of Northampton.

In Feb., 1698, in an inventory of corn and malt in Stratford, taken in apprehension of scarcity, William Shakespeare is entered as possessing ten quarters, being the third largest holder in his ward. In this year also we find him selling a load of stone to the corporation of Stratford. In October of the same year he is assessed in the parish of St. Helen's, Bishopsgate, showing him to be a property holder in London, his rates being 13s. 4d. In this same month, too, Richard Quiney of Stratford, [father of the Quiney who afterwards married Shakespeare's youngest daughter], writes to his "loving good friend and countryman, Mr. William Shakespeare," asking the loan of £60,—showing that the poet was not only a property holder but a money-lender.

Five years later, in 1602, Shakespeare for and in consideration of the sum of £390 of current English money, purchased 107 acres of arable land in the parish of old Stratford, the negotiation being conducted by his brother Gilbert. Later in the same year he bought a house in Walker Street, near New Place, Stratford; and later still, for the sum of £60 (£150), "one messuage, two orchards, two gardens, and two tennis, with their appurtenances." Three years later, 1605, he made his largest purchase, buying the unexpired lease of a portion of the tithes of Stratford, Old Stratford, Bishopton, and Welcombe, for the sum of £440. Shakespeare's annual income from these tithes, as we learn from another document, was £120 (i.e. £300 now). Later still, 1612, he bought a house, with ground attached, near the Blackfriars Theatre, London, for the sum of £140. We find him also, 1604, bringing an action against Philip Rogers, in the Court of Stratford, for £1 15s. 10d. being the price of malt sold to him at different times; and, again, 1609, instituting process for £6 debt and 24s. damages and costs, against John Addenbrook of Stratford,—all these things showing clearly that "poetry and acting" did not make the man of genius negligent in matters of business.

Now, putting together these various facts, we find that the dramatist was steadily advancing in fortune as well as in fame, and that, at the end of twenty years from the time of his going to London, he had, by a steady pursuit of his profession, risen to be a man of mark in the theatrical world. Every step in his history, so far as we are able to trace it, shows that he retained his success not by sudden or capricious flights of genius, but by hard work and persevering industry. As his writings show him to have been one of the greatest of geniuses, so his life shows him to have been one of the most industrious and methodical of workers. He chose one profession; he pursued it without intermission for a period of thirty years; he pursued it in connection with the same company; he pursued it with the same passion; and, in consequence of some particular performance dashed off in a heat and a hurry, which is the vulgar idea of genius, but step by step, year by year, slowly, steadily, surely, triumphantly. He produced, in the twenty-five years devoted mainly to authorship, no less than thirty-seven great plays, or an average of one and a half plays a year, the latest plays ever the best, each succeeding year showing a higher style of workmanship, an ever-growing productive energy. He is another proof, if it were needed, that one would not go far astray in defining genius to be an enormous capacity for labor, or, as Longfellow puts it, "the infinite capacity of taking trouble."

CHAPTER XV.

PROBABLE PERIOD OF HIS WITHDRAWAL FROM THE STAGE AND FROM LONDON — STATE OF HIS AFFAIRS AND OF HIS FAMILY AT THE TIME OF HIS RETIREMENT.

It is not certainly known at what time Shakespeare ceased to appear on the stage as an actor. The year 1604, however, is generally regarded as the probable time. The growing importance and popularity of his plays and his continued increase in wealth make it improbable that he continued to act later than the date named. The last record of his name in the company of the King's Players is on April 9, 1604, when he stands second on the list, the only one above him being Burbage, who had for a long time stood at the head of his profession as an actor. The general belief is that Shakespeare ceased to appear as a player soon after this, in other words, when he was forty years old, and had been eighteen years in London. This may be considered as the culminating point in his personal history.

I have already expressed the opinion that Shakespeare possessed an unusual degree of common sense, that he was amiable, conciliatory, and prudent; in short, that he had that class of qualities which fit a man for business, while they are vulgarly thought to be incompatible with genius. This is a class of qualities which it is difficult to show. Of indiscretion the proofs are generally positive and tangible. But prudence and discretion in the management of affairs must be established by negative evidence. It is certainly, however, no unmeaning circumstance that during the whole period that Shakespeare exercised a controlling influence in the theatrical company, its affairs were managed not only with thrift, but without those quarrels and jars for which the profession in all ages has been notorious, and also without those causes of offence which the other theatres were perpetually giving to particular individuals or classes, civil, political, or religious. It is noticeable also that almost immediately after Shakespeare's withdrawal from the management, the company was beset with difficulties, and numerous complaints were lodged against them for offences against morals, manners, or taste. Thus, December, 1604, John Chamberlain writes of a certain tragedy by the King's Players, in which kings and princes are brought upon the stage, "I hear that some great counsellors are much displeased with it, and so it is thought shall be forbidden." Again, 1605, the Mayor of London complains that "Kempe, Arunyn, and others, at the Blackfriars, have not forborne to bring upon their stage one or more of the worshipful Aldermen of the City of London, to their great scandal, and the lessening of their authority." Again, in 1606, it is complained that they brought upon the stage the Queen of France in a manner very offensive to the French ambassador; also, "They brought forward their own king [James] and all his favorites in a very strange fashion; they made him curse and swear, because he had been robbed of a bird, and beat a gentleman because he had called off the hounds from the scent. They represent him as drunk every day." In consequence of these irregularities, three of the players were arrested, and the performances were prohibited. These indiscretions and difficulties among the King's Players, occurring in quick succession after Shakespeare had ceased to be of the company, speak trumpet-tongued of those which did not occur during the eighteen years that he was in the management.

After ceasing to be an actor, Shakespeare's connection with the stage was that only of a writer of plays, and this connection he continued to the end of his life. This, however, did not necessarily require his residence in London. Even while living in London, he was wont, according to Aubrey, "to go to his native county once a year." Various documents show that he early contemplated the project, which he finally executed, of retiring from London, to spend the close of life in his native village. We have already seen how regularly, from year to year, he invested in and around Stratford the money accumulated from his professional labors. At least seven years before he ceased being an actor, and fifteen years before retiring from London, he had become a property-holder in his native town. The village tradition, in the generation after his death, was that Shakespeare, "in his elder days, lived at Stratford, and supplied the stage with two plays every year, and for it had an allowance so large that he spent at the rate of £1,000 a year." This, doubtless, is an exaggeration, certainly as to the amount of money spent. At the same time, the tradition obviously had some foundation in truth. He had already, some years before, bought the largest and finest residence in Stratford, that built by Sir Hugh Clopton in the reign of Henry VII., and known as "The Great House," and afterwards as "The New Place;" and there is good reason for believing that his style of living there was that of a "fine old English gentleman, all of the olden time."

The time when Shakespeare retired entirely from London is not known. The most probable conjecture is that which places it in 1612, when he was forty-eight years old, and after a city life of twenty-six years. His father, mother, and two younger brothers were now dead. Gilbert, however, the brother next younger than William, was still living. His sister Joan had been married [to a Mr. Hart, of Stratford] and was also still living, as were also her husband and several children. His wife also, now fifty-six years old, was still living. His oldest daughter, Susanna, had been married some five years before to an eminent physician of Stratford, Dr. John Hall, and had one child four years old. His youngest daughter, not long after to be married to Thomas Quiney, vintner and wine merchant of Stratford, was still at home. It is not at all unlikely that both daughters, with the son-in-law and the grandchild, all lived together in the Great House, and that the other house belonging to him in the village was occupied by his brother Gilbert, who had looked after the poet’s property during his absence in London.

When, therefore, the great dramatist retired from the metropolis, crowned with honor and laden with wealth, he was not in the condition of most even successful adventurers, who after a life of distant toil and struggle seek to spend its close among the green fields which had gladdened their eyes in childhood. They return ordinarily too late, when their own faculties of enjoyment are exhausted, and most of the friends of childhood are gone. Shakespeare, in 1612, was still in the prime of life and in the full vigor of his faculties. He had about him a large family circle, and children and children’s children were around his hearth-stone. The popular tradition, minute documentary evidence, his recorded career, his whole character, go to show that his last days were eminently peaceful and serene. The thought contained in the 146th Sonnet, the nearest approach we have in any of his writings to an expression of his own personal feelings on the subject of religion, might well befit this period of his life, though written some years earlier:

Poor soul, the centre of my sinful earth,
Leaned on these shoulders that thee bear,
Why dost thou pine within, and suffer death,
Pining thy outward walls so closely shut?
Why so large cost, having so short a lease?
Dost thou upon thy fading mansion spend?
Shall worms, inheritors of this excess
Eat up thy charge? Is this thy body’s end?

CHAPTER XVI.

A SEREN小 SUNSET—THE PORTRAITS OF SHAKESPEARE.

SHAKESPEARE died, after a short illness, April 23, 1616, aged exactly fifty-two. During the quarter of a century that he had been embarked upon the great ocean of metropolitan life, he had no doubt often been vexed and agitated. His profession was one peculiarly fitted to produce disquiet and perturbation. But agitation, while it upturns and dislocates the feebile plant, makes the hardy to send its roots more deeply and firmly into the soil. The poet acquires only additional composure and self-possession from conflict. The conflict of life in which Shakespeare had been engaged had not only been eminently successful as to all external circumstances and relations, but had left him calm, contented, and peaceful within. From a meridian of intense activity and splendor, he went, like Chaucer before him, gracefully and composedly to his long repose in his stones.

Of the portraits of Shakespeare there are three at least which have good evidence of being taken from life. These are the Stratford bust, the Droeshout engraving, and the oil painting known as the Chandos portrait.

The bust was made apparently from a cast of the features taken after death, and was executed soon after that event; how soon we do not know, but certainly before 1623, for it is referred to in the First Folio, published in that year. Shakespeare is buried in the church of Stratford-upon-Avon, near the north end of the chancel, and there is a slab over his tomb, with the quaint inscription so often quoted, and said to have been written by Shakespeare himself:

Good friend, for Jesus sake forbear
To dig the dust enclosed here;
Blessed be he that spares these stones,
And cursed be he that moves my bones.

To the right and left of him in the chancel are the tombs of several other members of his family, his wife, his oldest daughter Susanna, his son-in-law, Dr. Hall, and Thomas Nash, who married his grand-daughter Elizabeth. On the north wall of the chancel, and facing these tombs, and at an elevation of a little more than five feet, is an ornamental niche or framework of stone, containing the bust already mentioned, nearly lifesize and extending down to the middle of the person. The poet is represented sitting, as if in the act of composition, his hands resting on a cushion, one holding a pen, the other a sheet of paper, while his eyes are looking, not at his work, but straight forward towards the spectator. The hands and face are of flesh color, the eyes a light hazel, the hair and beard auburn; the doublet or cloak was scarlet, and covered with a loose black gown without sleeves; the upper part of the cowl was green, the under part crimson, and the tassets gilt. This Stratford bust is of great value, as having been made so early, and as having in all probability been cut from some authentic likeness. As a work of art, however, it is open to obvious criticisms. The skull has the smoothness and roundness of a boy’s marble, and shows as much individuality of expression. The eyes and eyebrows are unduly contracted, the nose has evidently been shortened by an accident of the chisel, the cheeks are puffy and spirited, the moustaches are curled up in a manner never found except in some city手続き, the collar looks like two pieces of block-tin bent over, and finally the expression of the eyes, so far as they have any expression, is simply that of easy, well-conditioned good nature, not overlardled with sense or intellect.

In conjunction with this bust should be taken the picture lately discovered, and known as the Stratford portrait. It is the property of the town, and is exhibited among the other curiosities at the Shakespeare House. No one who has seen the bust can look upon the picture without being satisfied at the first glance that the two are connected. But was the picture made from the bust, or the bust from the picture? Stratford people strongly insist on the latter, believing firmly that the picture was taken from life, and was the original of the bust. Critics and scholars outside of Stratford take, for the most part, the opposite view. Whichever theory is true, the picture without doubt is of great value, and is worthily placed for perpetual keeping in the same town with the bust to which it is so closely connected.

Next to the Stratford bust, in the matter of authenticity as a portrait of Shakespeare, is the engraving by Martin Droeshout prefixed to the first folio edition of the plays, that of 1623, and generally known as the Droeshout portrait. What portrait was used by him in making this engraving of Shakespeare is entirely a matter of conjecture. The probability is that it was some coarse daub by the actor Burbage, who had some pretensions as a painter, and who would be very likely to make a picture of his distinguished fellow-actor. If such a picture were hanging somewhere about the theatre, nothing would be more natural than for the actors, Heminge and Condell, in bringing out an edition of their friend’s plays, to use for the engraving this picture with which they were familiar. All this, however, is pure conjecture.

What more concerns us is to know that Ben Jonson has testified in the strongest manner to the correctness of the likeness. His words, printed on the page facing the engraving, are as follows:

This Figure, that thou here seesst put, / It was for gentle Shakespeare cut; / Wherein the Grauer had a strife / With Nature, to out-do the life; / O, could he but have drawn his wit / As well in brasse, as he hath hit / His face; the Print would then surpass / All, that was ever writ in brasse. / But, since he cannot, Reader, look / Not on his Picture, but his Rooke.

That the original from which the engraving was made must have been poor and bald as a work of art is manifest on the slightest inspection. This, however, is by no means incompatible with its having been a truthful likeness. The work of the engraver corresponds in this respect to the work of the painter. The engraving is to the last degree hard and stiff; it evidently is the work of one whose aim was to make a likeness rather than a work of art.

In comparing the face and head thus presented with those of the bust, we observe that while there are great differences, both in detail and in the general impression, it is easy to see the same man underlying both. There is the great distance between the eyes and the amplitude of forehead, so noticeable in all the likenesses. The flesh of the face is not so full and puffy as in the bust. The nose, not chopped off as in the bust, is however as straight as a stick, instead of having that delicate aquiline formation observable in one portrait which I shall show you. The beard is shaven from the chin, but a few hairs are sprouting on the under lip, and there is a very light moustache. The forehead is high and bold, as in all the portraits, and the hair hangs in long, smooth locks over the ears and the back of the head. The costume is evidently some theatrical display put on for the occasion and smacking very much of the stage-tailor. There is a doublet buttoned up to the chin, and a plaited lawn ruff standing out all round in a most uncomfortable and ungraceful position, and apparently stiffened in the edges and elsewhere with wire. One feature, the most noticeable of all, is the projection of the forehead. In all the other likenesses, without exception, the forehead, with its noble expanse, recedes gradually and evenly. But in the Droeshout engraving, the forehead is like some jutting cliff, projecting over, almost overhanging, the brow, in a way that is hardly less than monstrous. This misshapen character of the forehead may without difficulty be accepted, not as a part of the likeness of the poet, but as a part of the unskilful etching of the engraver. It certainly looks not unlike a huge goitre transferred from the throat to the brow.

Of the painted likenesses of Shakespeare none ranks so high as that known as the Chandos portrait. The history of the picture is tolerably complete. It belonged originally to John Taylor, painter, brother of Joseph Taylor, a player in Shakespeare’s company. It was left by will by Taylor to Sir William Davenant. From Davenant it passed in 1668 to John Otway, from him to Betterton the actor, from Betterton to Mrs. Barry, from Mrs. Barry, through two other hands, to the Duke of Chandos from whom it takes its name. It was finally bought in 1848, at public sale, by the Earl of Ellesmere, and by him presented in 1856 to the Na-
The Life of Shakespeare.

The breadth of forehead, that is to be seen in the Droeshout, though the forehead is still ample and strikingly noble. There is more general softness than in any of the other portraits. The picture is decidedly artistic, and the artist apparently, to some extent, sacrificed literal likeness to artistic effect. The complexion is dark; there is a pinkishness of color about the eyelids; the lips are inclined to be full and sensuous; the ear that is visible is tricked out with a ring; the hair, a dark auburn, that in the Droeshout is plaited and smoothed down, hangs here in easy, unstudied profusion on the sides and back of the head, while most of the lower part of the face is covered with a soft beard of the same color. No lines of deep thought are in the face, no arrows on the brow. There is an equal show of softness, almost of effeminacy, in the costume. The dress, so far as it can be made out, is of black satin, and the collar is of fine plain lawn, folding over easily but simply.

The Droeshout Portrait.

At the first glance, on looking at the Chandos portrait and then at the Droeshout, one can hardly believe them to be representations of the same person. Yet, on placing them side by side, and deliberately tracing the lines of each, one after the other, the substantial identity of the two is clearly established.

In addition to the three portraits which I have named, to wit, the Stratford bust, the Droeshout engraving, and the Chandos painting, there are many others of varying authority and celebrity. Of these I shall mention but two, the Terra-Cotta bust, and the German Death-Mask.

In 1845, in tearing down an old tea-warehouse in London, the foundations were laid bare of the famous Duke's theatre, built by Sir William Davenant, in 1662, in Lincoln's Inn Fields. Among the curious articles thus brought to light was a beautiful terra-cotta bust, which on examination proved to be beyond question a likeness of Shakespeare, yet having a character of its own quite independent of all the other acknowledged likenesses, and carrying us back to within at least forty-six years from the time of his death. This bust, after having been for some years in possession of its finder, Mr. Clift and his distinguished son-in-law, xxxviii

Prof. Owen, of the British Museum, was finally bought by the Duke of Devonshire, and by him presented to the Garrick Club of London, in whose possession it now is. The work is highly artistic in its style, in the position of the head and person, and in the character and arrangement of the costume. It has the refinement of the Chandos painting without its effeminacy, is more intellectual than the Stratford bust, but not so massive or robust as the Droeshout engraving.

It remains to say a few words of the German Death-Mask. The history of its discovery, which is somewhat curious, will be given as briefly as possible.

Count Francois von Kesselstadt, who died at Mayence, in 1849, the last of his line, had a valuable collection of curiosities and works of art, which has been divided among several generations in possession of the family, and which at his death were sold at auction in Mayence. Among the articles thus sold was a small oil painting, which is known to have been in the possession of the family for more than a century, and which in the family traditions was invariably regarded and spoken of as a portrait of Shakespeare. It bore indeed an inscription to that effect, Den Traditionen nach, Shakespeare. The picture came, in 1847, into the possession of Ludwig Becker, court painter of Darmstadt, and after his death into the hands of his brother, the present possessor, Dr. Ernst Becker, private secretary of the Princess Alice of Darmstadt. It represents its subject as lying in state after death, on a bier, with a wreath round the head, covering in part the baldness of the crown, and with a candlestick, and the date 1637, dimly seen in the background. From certain peculiarities in its appearance, Mr. Becker and other artists and antiquarians who were consulted, came to the conclusion that it had been painted from a death-mask, and he accordingly set about making inquiries on the subject. He first found that a plaster of Paris cast of some kind had been in the possession of the Kesselstadt family, but that on account of its meagre appearance, it had received little consideration, and what had become of it no one seemed to know. After two years of fruitless search, he at length, in 1849, found the lost relic in a broker's shop in Mayence, among rags and articles of the meanc dig description. A comparison of this cast with the picture convinced Mr. Becker, on artistic grounds, that the two were related to each other, and were representations of the same person. On the back of the cast is an inscription, the letters and figures being in the style common two centuries and a half ago, and the inscription having in all respects the appearance of being contemporaneous with the cast. An examination of the cast, while in England, by experts at the British Museum, showed that the inscription had been cut at the time the cast was made. A microscopic examination by Prof. Owen showed also that the hairs still adhering in the plaster were human hairs. The inscription on the back of the cast, in deeply cut letters, is as follows:

† A² Dm 1616

The cross is the usual mark in such inscriptions to signify "died." The letters A² Dm are the familiar abbreviations for Anno Domini. It is then clearly a cast of some one who died in 1616, the year of Shakespeare's death; it is also, in the opinion of the Beckers, clearly connected with the Kesselstadt picture. This cast, then, of 1616, it is claimed, is the original from which was painted the picture of 1637, which picture is, according to the Kesselstadt tradition, a portrait of Shakespeare, and has in fact a very strong likeness to him.

Further, it is known that the Stratford bust, which gives unmistakable evidence of having been produced from a cast, was made in London, by a "tomb-maker," as he is called, by the name of Gerard Johnson, and that this Johnson was a Hollander, a native of Amsterdæm, who went to London about 1607.

Thus far we have terra firma under our feet. What follows takes us into the region of conjecture. The conjecture is that the tomb-maker, Johnson, having completed the bust, laid aside the cast upon his shelf among piles of similar disused materials, and that some acquaintance of his from the father-land, poking about among the rubbish, saw this striking effigy, and leaping its origin guessed or bought it, and carried it away with him into Germany, where, in course of time, it found a lodgment in the Kesselstadt family. Such was the theory put forth by Ludwig Becker on bringing the mask and the picture to England, in 1849. Mr. Becker, in 1850, sailed for Melbourne to join an Australian exploring expedition, and left the mask and picture, with the documents relating to them, in charge of Prof. Owen of the British Museum, where, in consequence of Mr. Becker's death in Australia, they remained for several years, and were then returned to the brother, Dr. Ernest Becker, of Darmstadt, in whose possession they now are.

Of the opinions expressed in regard to this matter by the many eminent men who investigated the question while the mask was in England, I quote only two, as given me by Prof. Owen. The late Baron Pollock, after examining the mask, and weighing carefully, as a man of his professional habits would do, the evidence by which its claims were supported, said: "If I were called upon to charge a jury in regard to this point, I would instruct them to bring in a verdict for the claimant." Lord Brougham did not seem disposed to go quite so far. He would neither acquit nor condemn, but, like a canny Scot, gave as his verdict, "non liquet."

The Kesselstadt picture, though its chief value lies in its connection with the mask, is yet not without some curious interest on general grounds. Artists and critics all agree in referring it to the age named in the inscription, 1637. It is in the style of the Vandyke school of art, then prevalent in England, and was, in all probability, the work of some pupil of Vandyke's. Besides the evidence of its age from the style and the date, there are equal testimonies in the costume,—the open work at the stem of the pillow-case, the folds of the white linen sheets, the cut and collar of the shirt,—all pointing to the age of Shakespeare,—nearly all to be seen of almost exactly the same fashion and pattern, at this very day, at Ann Hathaway's cottage, where the old-fashioned bedstead and its furniture are still preserved, just as they were two centuries and a half ago.

The mask or cast creates immediately in the mind of the beholder, even when nothing has been said to him in regard to its claims, the impression that it represents some remarkable man. The experiment has been frequently made, and uniformly with this result. It was exhibited, without a word of explanation, to Herman Grimm, the celebrated art critic of Berlin. "At the very first glance," says Grimm, "I thought to myself that I had never seen a nobler countenance." "What a noble, clean-cut, aquiline nose; what a wonderfully shaped brow! I felt that this must have been a man in whose brain dwelt noble thoughts. I inquired. I was told to look at the reverse of the mask. There, on the edge, cut in figures of the 17th century, stood A.D. 1616. I could think of no one else who had died in this year except one who was born in the year Michael Angelo died,—Shakespeare."

Another impression, that one can hardly fail to receive from the mask, is the absence of any marked nationality in the features. The same thing is true of the well-known mask of Dante, in Florence; there is nothing Italian about it. So there is nothing distinctively English in this cast which claims to be the death-mask of Shakespeare. It gives us, as do his writings, the idea of a generic man,—a representative of the human race rather than of any distinct nationality. Another characteristic of the mask, equally marked, is the exceeding fineness and delicacy of the lines which make up the countenance. Grimm notices this peculiarity. No one, in fact, can fail to observe it who looks upon the mask.

While the mask differs, in one respect or another, from every recognized likeness of Shakespeare, there is no marked feature in any one of them which cannot be found in the mask. The variation in each case being easily explainable by the personal peculiarity, caprice, or unskilfulness of the particular artist. Thus the bust represents a round, full-faced man, decidedly puffy in the cheeks, while in the mask the face is thin and spare, and wears a thoughtful and rather melancholy look. Now it is well known that the flesh after death always falls away, giving this character to the face. So universal is this result that artists, in moulding a bust or painting a picture, from a death-mask, always make allowance for the falling away of the flesh, and fill it out to the supposed fulness of life, either from conjecture, or from some photograph, or other evidence of the ordinary condition of the face in health. Gerard Johnson, in undertaking to supply this supposed falling off in the flesh, simply overlaid the matter, and gave us a portly, jovial Englishman, instead of the thoughtful author of Hamlet and Lear. Underlying the superabundant fullness of flesh, however, the eye can easily trace in the bust all the essential lines of grace and thought to be seen in the mask.

The bust, as compared with the mask, is noticeable for the shortness of the nose, and for the extraordinary distance (one and a quarter inches) between the nose and the mouth. John Bell, the sculptor, asserted on anatomical grounds, that the maker of the bust had met with an accident at the point of the nose, and then, instead of doing his work over again, he had cut away enough of the lower part of the nose to give the feature the requisite amount of nostril. The bust certainly has the appearance of having undergone some such manipulation.

Another point, in which the mask and the bust differ, is the distance between the eyes, and also between the eyebrows. The unoccupied space in the centre of the forehead, between the beginning of the ridge of hair on one side and the beginning on the other, is larger than I recollect to have seen in any human being. A corresponding width exists between the two eyes, the distance from the centre of one eye to the centre of the other being two and three-quarter inches. This feature gives to the face, as seen in the mask, an amplitude of forehead that is truly majestic, and one, when looking at it, cannot help feeling, that he understands better than he did before, where those great creations of genius came from, that have so long filled him with amazement.

The bust-maker, on the contrary, through inadvertence, or possibly mistaking certain accidental irregularities of the plaster for a continuation of the hair, has run the brows more closely together, and then, to maintain consistency, has in like manner brought the eyes more closely together, to make them correspond with the brows. The effect of the narrowing of the forehead is further heightened by the fulness and puffiness of the cheeks already described; and the result of the whole is to give us the impression of a merry, good-natured farmer, instead of the majestic thinker that looks at us from the mask. And yet we can see how, through inadvertence, misconception, and unskilfulness, the one might have grown out of the other.

The mask has met with a slight accident, the tip of the nose on one side having crumbled, or having been broken, marring a little the nostril on that side.

The features as revealed by the mask have a manly beauty, of the intellectual type, that is very noticeable, and that has called forth spontaneous admiration from all who have looked upon it. There is also an indescribable expression of sadness that no one fails to notice. Mrs. Kemble, on seeing it, burst into tears. Grimm suggests in this connection another idea, namely, that in the first moments after death the disguises of life disappear, and the real character comes out in the countenance. "Though life," he says, "may prove deceptive on this point, not so death. It is as if, in the first moments after death had laid his sovereign and soothing hand upon man, the features reassumed before our eyes, as final imprint, that which they enclosed as the actual gift of creative nature, namely, the very sum and substance of life. Strange resemblances, wonderful confirmations of character, reappear in these first moments after the last moments."

Some of the hairs of the moustache, eye-lashes, and beard are seen in the mask, having adhered to the original con cave shell and been thence transferred to the convex mask. These hairs, on examination with a glass, are found to be of a reddish brown, or auburn, corresponding in this respect with what we know historically to have been the actual color of Shakespeare's hair. If the mask be what is claimed for it, we have here literally a bit of Shakespeare himself.

The eyes are closed, and the left eye shows a slight defect from some cause. The moustache is rather full, and in the shape now frequently worn, the ends hanging down diagonally to the right and left, so as to cover the corners of the mouth. The "bust-maker," in the Stratford bust, has curled them up in a way which alters the whole expression of the face, giving it a gay and jaunty air. The rest of the beard is shaven, except a small tuft under the chin, of the cut now called an "imperial." The nose is thin, delicate, slightly aquiline, and the profile altogether is extraordinarily beautiful. The boldness of the outline, as one looks at the mask in profile, raises the expectation of a narrow face and head, instead of the broad, commanding face and forehead which meet the eye on turning the mask, and looking at it full in front.

The impression which these various likenesses make upon the mind of the observer, especially the impression made by the mask, is that of majesty and force: what a noble face this man had! how worthy of the noble thoughts to which he has given utterance! We feel instinctively like applying to him the words which he has himself put into the mouth of Hamlet, when addressing his father's portrait:
AN ANALYSIS
OF THE
PLOTS OF SHAKESPEARE'S PLAYS.

THE TEMPEST.

See Page 1.

In this comedy, Shakespeare is thought by able critics to have given us his most finished literary composition, and one in which the great poet has expressed his highest and serenest view of life. One of his latest productions, first published in 1623, no source of the story of the play can with any certainty be pointed out. Malone supposes it to have been written in the year 1611, and probably produced in the latter part of 1612 for the first time. Shakespeare, who was fond of music, makes admirable use of this art in The Tempest. Indeed, the serious parts of the drama are well suited for an opera.

SCENE.—The sea, with a ship, afterwards an uninhabited isle.

In a cave hewn out of the solid rock lived the aged Prospero and his good and beautiful daughter, Miranda. This home was on an island, and thither Miranda had come with her father when she was hardly three years old. The cave in which they resided was divided into several cells, one of which, serving as Prospero's study, was provided with a number of books on astrology and magic, the knowledge of which Prospero had made exceedingly useful since his arrival on this island, which had been enchanted by the witch, Sycorax, who died there shortly before his coming. Prospero by his art released many good spirits which the sorceress had imprisoned in the trunks of giant trees, because the spirits had refused to obey the wicked behets of the old enchantress. These liberated spirits were, after his coming, the instruments of the obedient will of Prospero. Ariel was the most prominent, who, gentle as he otherwise was, bore a deep-seated grudge towards the monster Caliban, the son of Sycorax. Caliban was found by Prospero during one of his excursions through the island, and was brought by him to the cave, where Caliban was taught to speak, but, owing to his perverted nature, little good and useful could he learn, and therefore was employed to do the more menial work, such as carrying wood and water. Ariel's duty was to compel the monster to perform these services. Ariel, invisible to all other eyes but those of Prospero, would often torment and harass Caliban. By the aid of these powerful spirits, Prospero ruled the winds and the waves of the sea. Thus he raised a violent storm, in the midst of which he showed his daughter a large ship, which he told her was full of human beings like themselves. Miranda begs her father to have mercy on their lives. The father soothes her agitation, and informs her that no person of the ship's company shall be hurt, that all transpiring would be done on behalf of his dear child.

He now relates to her the cause of their inhabiting this island. "I was Prince of Milan," said he, "and you a Princess and only heir. My younger brother, whose name was Antonio, I intrusted with all my affairs of state, and devoted myself in retirement to profound study. My brother, deeming himself the duke, with the aid of the King of Naples, a powerful prince and deeply foe of mine, effected my downfall. Knowing that they did not destroy us because of the strong love of my people, they carried us on board a ship, and when some leagues out at sea Antonio forced both of us into a small boat without sail or mast. But a faithful lord of my court, named Gonzalo, had secretly hidden water and provisions on board, and also some invaluable books. Our food lasted until we landed on this island, and ever since my pleasure has been to instruct my darling child. This tempest I have raised so that by this accident the King of Naples and your treacherous uncle might be brought to this shore."

Prospero having concluded his narrative touched Miranda with his magic wand, and she fell fast asleep. At this instant Ariel appears and gives a vivid account of the tempest to his master. Of the ship's crew not one soul has perished, and the vessel, invisible to them, is safely moored in the harbor. Meantime Ferdinand, the duke's son, reaching the island, meets Miranda. They mutually express surprise, and fall in love. Ariel, bidden by his master, now brings the king, Antonio, and the noble Gonzalo before Prospero, who embraces his brother and forgives him his past treachery. Prospero then dismisses Ariel from his service, buries his wand and books in the earth, vowing never henceforth to make use of the magic art. He then returns with the king, his brother, Gonzalo, Ferdinand, and Miranda to his native land, where, soon after their arrival, the nuptials of the hero and heroine, Ferdinand and Miranda, are celebrated, and "honor, riches, marriage-blessing" await them.

The characters in this play, while real and living, are conceived in a more abstract way, more as types, than in any other work of Shakespeare. Prospero is the embodiment of the highest wisdom and moral attainment; he is the great enchanter, and altogether the opposite of the vulgar magician. With the command over the elemental powers which study has brought to him, he possesses moral grandeur and command over himself. He sees through life, but does not refuse to take part in it. Gonzalo is human common sense incarnated. All that is meanest and most despicable appears in the wretched conspirators. Miranda is framed in the purest and simplest type of womanhood, while Ariel is a being of life and joy knowing no human affection; in Caliban is his opposite, a creature of the passions and appetites. There is a beautiful spirit of reconciliation and forgiveness presiding over all, like a providence.

THERE was no edition of this comedy until 1623, but according to Malone as well as Chalmers, it was written in 1595. Though this play furnishes fewer occasions for music than some others, yet musicians are employed in the plot as well as musical allusions. Shakespeare in this play introduces all the musical terms in use in his time, as a tune, a note, too sharp, too flat, harsh descent, the mean base, etc.

SCENE.—At times in the cities of Verona and Milan, or on the frontiers of Mantua.

Valentine and Proteus were two young gentlemen, who lived in the city of Verona, between whom a firm friendship subsisted. They pursued their studies together, and passed their leisure hours in each other's company, except when Proteus visited a lady whom he adored, and these visits to Julia and his passion for her were points on which the two gentlemen differed. Valentine, who was not in love, often wearied to keep his friend so insensibly talking of his Julia, and generally would taunt Proteus for his passion, and bring out of him his raptures to Proteus, and informed him that he must separate for a time, as he was going to Milan. Proteus, however, tried to induce his friend not to leave him; but without avail. The two friends parted with vows of unalterable friendship. After his companion had left, Proteus wrote a letter to Julia, which he inclosed, in her maid Lucetta to deliver to her mistress. Julia, though loving Proteus as much as he did her, acted coquettishly, refuses to accept the letter, and orders her maid to leave the room; but being curious to know the contents of the missive, calls Lucetta in again, and asks her how o'clock it is. Lucetta, who knew that her mistress rather desired to see the letter, without heeding the question, again presents the rejected epistle. Julia, incensed at this presumption on the part of her servant, tore the missive in pieces and threw them on the floor, ordering Lucetta out of the room.

When Julia found herself alone, she gathered the fragments up and began to piece them together, and made out the words, "love-wounded Proteus," but she could not make out the whole, and mortified at her own perversity in destroying such sweet and loving words, she pens a much kinder letter to Proteus than she had ever done before. While Proteus was in raptures over his letter, he was interrupted by the appearance of Antonio his father, who asks him what letter he was reading, and is told that it is one he received from his friend Valentine, at Milan. His father desires to read the news, but the son, greatly alarmed, assures him that there is nothing new, further than Valentine is well beloved by the Duke of Milan, who greatly benefits him with favors, and desires his friend Proteus to be the partner of his fortune. Antonio, deeming the advice of Valentine very worthy of attention, resolves to send the son at once to Milan, to spend some time there in the Duke of Milan's court. Proteus, knowing how peremptory was the will of his father, bid Julia a mournful farewell. They exchanged rings, and mutually promised to keep each other forever in remembrance. Proteus set out on his journey, and, arriving at Milan, found his friend Valentine really in favor with the duke; and moreover Valentine had become as ardent a lover as Proteus ever was. The lady of his love was Silvia, daughter of the duke, and his love was returned, though they concealed their affections from the duke, who intended his daughter should marry the courtier Thurio, whom Silvia despised. While these two rivals were, one day, on a visit to Silvia, the duke himself entered the room, and informed them of the arrival of Proteus, who soon thereafter made his entrance, and was introduced by his friend to the fair Silvia. Valentine imparted to him in confidence the whole history of his love, how carefully they had concealed it from the duke, and that, despairing of ever obtaining the lady's consent, he had urged Silvia to leave the palace that very night and go with him to Mantua. Then he showed Proteus a ladder of ropes, by help of which he intended to aid Silvia to get out of one of the windows at dark. Upon hearing this confidential recital, strange to say, Proteus resolved to go and disclose the plan to the duke. The duke, after hearing the intelligence, resolved to frustrate Valentine's intentions, and by artifice makes Valentine betray the secret himself, and after upbraiding him for his ingratitude, banished him from the court and city of Milan. While Proteus was thus treacherously betraying his friend, Julia, who is inconsolable over the absence of her lover, resolved to dress herself and her maid Lucetta in men's clothes, and thus set out for Milan. Here she was hired by Proteus as a page, who, not knowing that she was Julia, sent her by force to Silvia. Proteus went to Silvia—even sending her the very ring she gave him as a parting gift at Verona. Silvia, utterly amazed at this, rejects the suit of Proteus and refuses the ring, and Julia (disguised as the page Sebastian) praises Silvia and confesses to her that Proteus had a love in Verona, who, as she knew, fondly loved him. Valentine, who hardly knew which course to pursue after that she was Julia, sent her by force to Silvia, who prevailed on him to become their captain, threatening, if he refuses their offer, they would kill him. Valentine expected of them a promise never to outrage women or to rob the poor. Silvia, to avoid a marriage to Thurio, at last resolved to follow Valentine to Mantua, whence she presumed him to have fled, and in company with Eglamour, an old courtier, sets out on her journey, but on reaching the forest where Valentine and the banditti dwelt, was seized by one of the robbers, who intended to take her before their captain. Proteus, who had heard of Silvia's flight, pursues her to the forest, and still accompanied by Julia, his page in disguise, appears at this moment. While Proteus was rudely pressing Silvia to marry him, all were amazed by the sudden appearance of Valentine, who had not quitted the court. Julia, having thus proved, by her disguise of the page, the insincerity of her lover Proteus, produces in an affected mistake the rings he has made presents of to herself and Silvia, and at the same time discovering her sex, exposes his duplicity to his second mistress. Proteus, who now realizes that the page Sebastian is no other than Julia, and thrilled with this proof of her constancy and true love for him, took his leave and departed. The Duke of Milan promises to Silvia to Valentine, who so well deserved her. Proteus and Valentine while enjoying their happy reconciliation, were surprised by the appearance of the Duke of Milan and Thurio, who came there in pursuit of Silvia. Thurio, when sternly rejected by Silvia, drew back in trepidation, leaving Valentine, his rival, in full possession of lady Sylvia. The lovers and the duke return to Milan, where the nuptials are conducted with all due pomp and ceremony.

Shakespeare has in this play settled down in the field of Italian story, which is to be hereafter the scene of his greatest triumphs. The Two Gentlemen of Verona and its incidents were great favorites with Shake-
The Ploths of Shakespeares Plays.

The heroine of the drama is without doubt Julia; she suffers most, she loves most, and she says the best things. The hero Valentine is a most generous, frank fellow, with a touch of dulness withal, as he cannot understand, for instance, at love messages which she gives him back his own love-letter; Speed has to explain it to him. There seems a contradiction in Silvias character in her giving Proteus her picture; it looks like yielding to coquetry, but as Julia does not seem to feel it so, perhaps we cannot complain. Notice the quick Italian turn for intrigue in Proteus, and in the duke's instantly forming the plan to entrap Valentine.

See Page 32.

THIS is the only Shakespearian comedy which is entirely without serious characters and situations; nevertheless, it shows an earnest intention and demonstration—although jocosely carried out—to prove the sacredness of wedlock. Queen Elizabeth, whose ear was perpetually assailed by false panegyric, and who encouraged all sorts of silly shows, May games, and buffooneries, was not insensible to Shakespeare's talent; and having been much delighted with the character of Falstaff, as delineated in the first and second parts of Henry the Fourth, advised, or, perhaps we may rather say, commanded, the bard to portray the fat knight in love. Such is the tradition of the origin of the play, some incidents of which may have pleased the daughter of Henry VIII., although they are somewhat repulsive to modern taste and delicacy. According to Chalmers, this comedy was written in 1596, while Malone asserts 1601, as the proper date.

Scene.—At Windsor, or near to it.

Falstaff, the droll hero of the trilogy of Henry IV., and V., is unable, on account of his limited income, to defray the costs of his extravagant tastes. He hits upon the odd idea, which is doubly amusing from his age and physical defects, of trying his luck in love, and thus replenish his empty purse. He writes love-letters to Mrs. Ford and to Mrs. Page simultaneously. His followers, Nym and Pistol, angry at him, resolve to inform the husbands of this shameful conduct. Both ladies have received letters of the same import, show them to each other, and mutually agree to retaliate upon Falstaff. As a mediator, they choose their talented friend Mrs. Quickly, who informs Falstaff that both ladies accept his suit, and expect to see him. Page has implicit confidence in his wife's fidelity, but Ford does not trust his wife, and disguising himself, assumes the name of Brook, asking Falstaff's assistance in his designs upon Mrs. Ford. He learns from Falstaff that this lady had promised to meet him. Just as the knight is about to enjoy the company of Mrs. Ford, Mrs. Page informs him that the injured husband is on his way hither, having half the inhabitants of Windsor at his back. The unlucky lover is hastily thrown into a stone bath, and the miscreant is converted into a butt of fun and ridicule. He is brought before the judge, who fines him heavily for the easy and polluting liberty of dirty linen. He is carried to a brothel and there thrown into a shallow ditch. But, despite this involuntary bath, Falstaff is not yet the wiser, and runs again into the trap set for him. In Ford's house he is found again by the jealous husband. The ladies this time dress him up in the garb of an old woman, who is known as the disreputable sorceress, or old witch of Brentford. Ford, who had forbidden this bag to enter his threshold, drives Falstaff, after giving him a severe thrashing, from his abode. Mrs. Ford now imparts to her husband the whole affair, cures his jealousy, and, in company with Mrs. and Mr. Page, prepares the third practical joke at Falstaff's expense. A rendezvous is at night planned, under the mask of the fabulous hunter, Hotspur, according to a popular superstition, fairies and elves carry on their revels at midnight. Mrs. Ford and Mrs. Page, in pursuance of their plan to revenge on Falstaff his attempt on their chastity, decoy him, under pretence of an amorous meeting, into Windsor Park at midnight, where he is attacked by Evans and all the kin and kindred of the family. Ford and Page, who are disguised as goblets, torment him with torches and pinch him in various other ways. Falstaff is represented ludicrously disguised, having a buck's head forced on his head, and seated beneath the oak with his mistresses, who affect surprise at their being discovered. In juxtaposition, and yet distant from the story of seduction and deception, a case of elopement is enacted in the play, as a counterpart of the former in its subspecies, parturients, and final results. Mr. and Mrs. Page have a marriagable daughter, Anne Page, for whose hand and heart three lovers woo—Squire Fenton, whose love is good and true, is responded to by Anne; and Slender, the cousin of the country Justice Shallow, a duene with an annual rent of £200, who is the favorite of Anne's father, and last, the dandified French Doctor, Caius, who is favored by Mrs. Page. Under Herne's oak, where Anne is escorting the queen of the fairies, Slender, according to the father's plan, is to elope with the daughter; but the mother, having planned a like affair, wants her to elope with Dr. Caius. The shrewd Anne apparently accedes to each plan, but on her part plots and prepares with her lover a different understanding, in consequence of which Slender indeed elopes, according to the plan of the father, with a fairy dress in white, while Dr. Caius, after the plan of the mother, with one in a green garb; but neither of the two have Anne Page, nor even another girl, but only disguised boys. Fenton and Anne, however, gain their purpose, and reach the church, from which they return husband and wife. The parents yield, with great resignation and heartiness, to the inevitable, and after a general reconciliation, from which even the fat and guilty Falstaff is not excluded, the comedy closes.

In Falstaff, babbling over with humor combined with that consummate conceit which makes his character so ineffably droll, we have a picture that only Shakespeare could draw. Falstaff is the representative, in his idleness and self-indulgence, of the debauched professional soldier of the day. But this lewd court hanger-on, whose wit always mastered men, is outwitted and routed by the Windsor Wives: "Wives may be merry, and yet honest too," is the healthy moral. The play has no pathos about it: it is only merry; but, nevertheless, it is admirably constructed. The double plot works through it without a hitch: and the situations are comically first-rate, though we confess the tone is lower than in both Shakespeare's earlier and later works. There are no grandees in the play; it seems to have only one of the great and the grand, and yet it is an admirable slice of English middle-class life. The sweetness of "sweet Annie Page" runs all through it. She is the young English girl of Shakespeare's admiration—not seventeen, pretty, brown-haired, small-voiced, whose words are few, but whose presence is everywhere felt. True to her love, she is ragged-witted, and dutiful to her parents, only disobeying them for the higher law of love. Her real value is shown by the efforts of those three lovers to get her. Fenton is a gay, wild young fellow; he meant to marry for money, but is won from it by love. He is frank and resolute. Slender is a well worked-up character; and these are inimitable scenes with Annie Page. The adixture of the German, the Frenchman, and the Welshman, points to considerable freedom of intercourse in Queen Elizabeth’s day.

MEASURE FOR MEASURE.

See Page 56. A DRAMA deriving its name from an old adage, for the argument of the play is to show the triumph of grace and mercy over the punishment of justice, since no man is so secure against transgression as to set himself up as judge over his fellow-creatures. This comedy is founded upon George Whetstone’s The Historie of Promise and Cassandra, which appeared in print in 1578. Malone thinks it was written in 1603, while Chalmers thinks the date of its writing is 1604, when Shakespeare was in his fortieth year. Though this play has less music in it than some of Shakespeare’s productions, yet at the beginning of Act IV, a song from the poet’s own Passionate Pilgrim is sung.

SCENE.—City of Vienna.

Under the mild government of the Duke of Vienna, the laws had lost all their wonted vigor; intrigue and immoralty became general among the young people of the metropolis because these vices could be practised with impunity; especially was the marriage vow no longer kept sacred. At this juncture the duke resolves suddenly on a governmental change in the administration of the land from mildness to great severity, and, for the purpose of more thoroughly carrying out this plan, he determines to absent himself for awhile from his dukedom, meantime leaving the government in the hands of Angelo, Lord Deputy, during his absence. Angelo is instructed to watch over the execution of the laws with strictness. The duke, disguised as a monk, meanwhile secretly observes Angelo and his conduct from the neighborhood of the city. A young nobleman, named Claudio, is taken in custody on the charge of seducing a lady named Juliet, and sentenced to be beheaded under the severe laws of the new régime. Claudio’s sister, the beautiful and virtuous Isabella, a novice under probation, appears before the Lord Deputy and beseeches him to spare the life of her beloved brother; but in vain: the law must have its course; her suit is rejected. But it so happens, that the charming interceder, by her dazzling beauty as well as by her innocence and virtue, inflames the passions of Lord Angelo, and he demands, as the price of the forfeited life of her brother, the virtue of the sister, who of course with utter scorn rejects his advances. Isabella then visits her brother in prison, informs him of the ill success she has met with and of the baseness of Angelo. She admonishes him to fortify himself with courage and resignation to endure his approaching fate. But the terror of death overpowers the hitherto courageous Claudio, and he entreats his sister to yield to Angelo’s desire, to save her brother’s life. This cowardly request Isabella refuses with horror, and vehemently upbraids Claudio. Nevertheless, Isabella is induced, by the urgent entreaties of the duke (who, in the disguise of a Friar, is present), to seemingly promise Angelo, but in her heart, and at midnight, to send the former mistress of the Lord Deputy to him. This lady is Mariana, the betrothed of Angelo, and one who had been deserted by him on account of the loss of her marriage dowry (but who retained her old love for her truant lover). According to the customs in vogue at the time, those betrothed were considered very much as if wedded. Mariana takes no offense at this proposed midnight meeting, and when she departs from Angelo, who has mistaken her for Isabella, she reminds him of his promise by saying, “Remember now my brother!” Meanwhile, however, Lord Angelo, fearing an exposure hereafter from Claudio, had already given new orders for his execution. The unfortunate man is only saved from his doom by the intercession of the disguised duke himself, who persuaded the provost to put off the execution, and to deceive Angelo by sending him the head of a man who had died that morning in prison. Finally, the duke appears in his true character, forgiving, rewarding, and punishing. Angelo, who sincerely repents of his intended misdeeds, but which wickedness, without merit on his part, had been frustrated, receives forgiveness; but has to make atonement for his wrongs towards Mariana by marrying her. Claudio is induced to marry Juliet, the lady whom he had seduced. Isabella, the heroine, the true and good, does not re-enter the convent, but, the duke falling in love with her, is made the Duchess of Vienna; and bestowing happiness and blessing all around, henceforth shines by the duke’s side as his noble wife.

In the character of Isabella we have a beautiful portraiture of a noble Christian woman, steadfast and true, firm in strength and energy, and among the highest type of women Shakespeare has drawn—equal or superior to Portia, the wife of Brutus, Cordia, or Volimnia. The scene in court, and the trial, as it were, before the duke, and the exposure of Angelo, are graphically portrayed. There is a tone of deep and serious feeling running all through the play—its dealing with death and the future world, the weight of reflection, the analysis of Angelo’s character, the workings of conscience, the lovely saintliness of Isabella, although we must look on her as no hard, but as “Isabel, sweet Isabel! with cheeks of roses, gentle and fair.” She believed that the son of her heroic father was alive, like herself; and when she found he was willing to sacrifice her honor for his life, her indignant “take my defiance, die, perish,” was the fit answer to her brother’s base proposals, which brings the blood tingling in sympathy to the reader’s cheek. In Angelo we have a terrible analysis of character, a self-revelation to any man who has striven for purity, has fancied himself safe, and in the hour of trial has failed. Claudio is the type of the self-indulgent, life-enjoying man of the world, to whom death has the greatest terrors. His words on “after death” are among the most poetical in Shakespeare.

THE COMEDY OF ERRORS.

See Page 78. THE Menaechmi of Plautus have furnished our poet the matter for this lively, entertaining, and ingeniously executed play, which is so full of a witty spirit. It is one of his earliest dramatic efforts, and perhaps was written before the year 1593, though Malone fixes the date at 1596. In The Comedy of Errors music has no mention.

SCENE.—Ephesus.

Various and prolix disputes and contentions between the cities of Syracuse and Ephesus caused, in retalia-death, the mother's love and suffering, and the reuniting of the family at the end of the play. He also presented the beautiful element of the affection of Antipholus of Syracuse for Luciana—the first introduction of that serious and tender love which is never after absent in Shakespeare's plays. The sweetness of Luciana in dissuading her sister from jealousy, in her advice to Antipholus of Syracuse, her sister's supposed husband, in Scene 2 of Act III., before she consents to her suitor's love, is very beautiful in its tender thoughtfulness. Adriana, though jealous and shrewish, really does not mean to be, and truly urges that her love is the cause. The contrast between the two brothers of Syracuse and of Ephesus is finely marked. The Antipholus of Ephesus was a man without a father's or a mother's training, and with no purpose in life like his brother. He is a brave soldier, but has no true view of love and marriage; he has taken a wife, yet consorts with a courtesan. Antipholus of Syracuse, brought up under a father's watchful care, is a far better type of a man. The search for his lost twin brother has given him a purpose in life; and although his temper is somewhat too unrestrained and he beats his servant too often, yet he reverences women, and declines the opportunity to avail himself of the mistake of his unknown brother's wife. Of the two Dromios, the Syracusan seems to have been the better. He is more humorous and cool and takes his troubles better than his master. The noble and pathetic figure of Antipholus forms a fine background to the play, his long search for his wife appealing to all hearts. This drama forms a fine acting play, the humor being brought out most comically.

MUCH ADO ABOUT NOTHING.

See Page 92.

THE more serious parts of the material on which this comedy is founded, were known to the reading public of England, at the time of our poet, through various works, such as the episode of Ariodant and Genevra, in Ariosto's Gargantua, and therefore seeks refuge in a cloister, whose abbess, Emilia, charitably grants to him a place of refuge. Adriana, who presumed the fugitive to be her husband, complains to the duke of the conduct of the abbess, who refuses to give up the fugitive, who is deemed insane, before his cure is effected. One word draws another, until it becomes finally apparent that the jealous Adriana is the wife of the Ephesian Antipholus, whom she had often tortured with her silly suspicions. After confessing her behaviour to the abbess, the latter seriously expostulates with her. Meanwhile, evening comes and Antipholus is to be executed, when opportunely at this juncture the twin pairs, and those with whom they have been confounded, all meet in the vicinity of the convent.
The penetration of the duke at once solves this mystery of error. The true abbess is more than one, than Emilia, the long lost wife of Antipholus and the loving mother of the two Antipholus. The noble duke now pardons Antipholus, without the payment of ransom; Adriana is permanently cured of her jealous-ies, while Antipholus of Syracuse marries her sister the good and fair Luciana.

In the Comedy of Errors, which commentators believe to be either the first or the second written of the dramas of Shakespeare, he has exquisitely brought in the pathetic element in Antipholus's story and threatened

SCENE.—Messina.

Leonato, the Governor of Messina, has an only dughter, named Hero, who lives with his niece, Beatrice, in her father's palace. Beatrice is a lively, nirtifful, and witty girl, the very counterpart of the sedate Hero. Returning from a happily ended war, appear as the guests of Leonato, Don Pedro, Prince of Arna-gon, with his favorites, Claudio and Benedick, all old friends and acquaintances of the governor and his family. Claudio uses for the quiet Hero, with her love, and, through the mediation of the Prince, obtains the consent of her father. Benedick and Beatrice, both animated by a spirit of thoroughly inextinguishable

humor, begin a real contest of wits, incessantly teasing each other, and both to all appearances utterly forswearing love and matrimony. By an amusing plot, however, both, while deeming themselves unknown, are made witnesses to pre-arranged conversations, from the purport of which it is intended to convince them that Beatrice is inspired with love for Benedick, and Benedick is madly in love with Beatrice. Both are deceived by the trap set for them; but nothing novel is produced thereby; they only obtaining the knowledge how their affairs are situated. The Prince of Arragon had also brought with him to Messina his bastard brother, Don John, a man discontented with himself and all the world, full of venom and rancor, who seeks pleasure in making mischief. He slanders the pure, innocent, and chaste Hero, as being a common strumpet, and proposes to convince the Prince and Claudio of the truth of his assertion by ocular proof. In the course of the night preceding the nuptials, Margaret, Hero’s attending gentlewoman, clad in her mistress’s garments, is induced to hold an interview with her lover, Borachio, one of Don John’s followers, which might have been proof of Hero’s guilt, had it really been she who had conversed with him. Claudio, whom the cunning rascal has induced to be a witness to this midnight meeting, becomes naturally enraged, and with youthful impetuousity, without further investigation of the charges, resolves on a terrible revenge. The marriage of Claudio with Hero is about to be solemnized, but is prevented by the artifices of Don John. In the church, in the presence of all the nobility, Claudio discovers the innocent Hero as an impure woman, and charges her with unchastity. Hero faints at the terrible accusation, her father is distracted, and the bridal company breaks up in confusion.

But virtue finally is vindicated. Borachio, that follower of Don John who so vilely has assailed the character of the noble Hero to Claudio, relates the circumstance to his companion Courtez; his story is overheard by the watch, who rush forward and take them both, the rogues, into custody. They are taken by the watchman to prison, are examined by the inimitable Dogberry, and the Sexton, who is constable of the night. The testimony of the watchman proves their connivance in the plot with Don John against Hero. The miscreant, Don John, who has attempted to murder his own lady, is cast into prison as a well-deserved punishment. Hero, being supposed by Claudio to be dead (in consequence of the shock given at her intended wedding), had now her character fully cleared. Claudio, as an atonement for his error, agrees to marry Leonato’s niece, Beatrice. The lady is accordingly introduced, veiled, but proves to be Hero herself. The marriage of the two lovers, with that between Beatrice and Benedick, who continues her mirth to the very end, happily concludes the drama.

This play is radiant with the most brilliant wit and the richest humor, and sparkles throughout with the poet’s keen fun and raillery, reflected through Dogberry, and other characters, who are among the best passages between Beatrice and Benedick. We cannot help feeling acutely, though, the needless pain caused to Hero, which might have been so easily avoided or lessened, but “when the fun is fastest the sorrow must be darkest.” Claudio is a fine manly fellow, but a trifle too suspicious and too easily misled, without setting charges against his3 afflicted wife any more thoroughly. Beatrice is the sweetest, most piquant, sparkling, merry-girl that Shakespeare ever drew, and yet she is a loving, deep-natured, true woman, too. Sharp sayings flow from her with the humorous ones. Of course she says she don’t want a husband: what girl of her type ever acknowledges she does? What does she want with a husband? In this mood she meets Benedick, and, sharp as he is among men, he cannot stand up to her. She overwhelms him with her quick repartees. But when she really finds she loves, how changed she is. When sweet Hero is turned to the contrary wind, unable to defend herself, how grandly flashes out the true and noble nature of Beatrice, worthy daughter of the gallant old Antonio. She knows Hero’s pure heart. Evidence, so called! suspicion! what are they to her. “O, on my soul, my cousin is belied!” When she gives herself to her lover — witty as she is to the last — we know what a jewel the man has gained. The brightest and sunniest married life we see stretching before them, comfort in sorrow, doubling of joy.
THE PLOTS OF SHAKESPEARE'S PLAYS.

The sense and meaning of the whole. The finale of the comedy thus reverts back to the beginning.

The London wits of the day, with their assumed consequence and abounding conceit, naturally amused the Stratford-bred Shakespeare, and parts of to this first written play, were designed to give them a covert reproof, and to show them they could be beaten at their own weapons, by a country lad, too, and that all their city cleverness, on which they so much prided themselves, was as nothing beside good heart and work. The best speech in the play is, of course, Biron's, on the effect of love in opening men's eyes and making the world appear to them. How true this is every lover since can bear witness. But still there is a "chaffiness" about it very different from the humility and earnestness of the lovers who figure in most of Shakespeare's other plays, except, perhaps, that of the worthy Benedick. The fair Rosaline, too, in her witty passages, reminds us of Beatrice.

A MIDSUMMER-NIGHT'S DREAM.

See Page 133.

The comedy of Midsummer-Night's Dream is the most extravagant, yet the most artistic, the most amusing, and withal the most thoughtful, the most poetical, and nevertheless the liveliest, which the phantasy of a poet ever created for the glorification of phantasy itself. The greatness of the author's genius revells nowhere so much as here, where he gives his imagination full play, and raises his fancy to a flight above mankind, and beyond the limits of the visible world. Two songs alluded to in the last scene of this play are lost. Malone asserts that this drama was written in 1592, while Chalmers has reasons for stating 1598 as the date.

SCENE.—Athens, and a wood not far from it.

Oberon, king of the fairies, beseeches his wife, Titania, to grant to him her beautiful adopted boy as a page; and upon Titania refusing this request, he seeks to revenge himself by wetting her eyes with the sap of a flower while she is sleeping. This lotion has the magical power of causing her to become exceedingly enamored with the first being she beholds on awakening. The person whom her eyes first observe is a weaver of Athens, named Bottom, a rough and entirely illiterate man, and who has, at this time, come, with several other mechanics, to the grove, where Oberon and Titania were holding their fairy court. These artisans had entered the wood to have a rehearsal for the play of Pyramus and Thisbe, which they design to act at the nuptial festivities of Duke Thesaus of Athens, who was soon to be married to Hippolyta. But before Titania's awakening, Puck, a serving spirit to Oberon, who was ever ready for fun or frolic, had, by magic, adorned the weaver, Bottom, with the head of an ass. At the time this is taking place, a young pair, Lysander and Hermia, in love with each other, had likewise bided themselves in this enchanted grove, having fled from Athens on account of the cruelty of the father of Hermia, and the strictness of the laws of Athens, which forbade their union. They are overtaken at night by Demetrius, a lover, whose suit for Hermia the father of this lady favors, and by Helena, a youthful friend of Hermia, who loves Demetrius, but finds her love rejected. Oberon, the fairy king, feels pity for poor Helena, and commands Puck to wet the eyes of the heartless Demetrius with the same magic fluid which had already proved so efficacious on his queen, Titania. Puck, by some mistake, enchants instead Lysander, but finding out his error, also enchants Demetrius. The consequence is, that both Lysander and Demetrius, on awakening, fall in love with Helena, whom they both perceive at the same moment. As a result, Helena now thinks the declarations of both these suitors malicious mockery, while Hermia, who, meantime, had arrived upon the scene, is inconsolable to discover herself thus so suddenly deserted by the hitherto faithful Lysander. Meantime Titania has yielded to the wish of Oberon, and the latter, joyful over the reconciliation with his wife, removes the magic spells from Lysander and Bottom; only Demetrius' spell will not leave him, or rather the spell she supplied by the magic which the devoted fidelity of Helena imparts to him, whose love he now rewards in turn with his love. The Duke Thesaus, of Athens, whose marriage is also about to be celebrated, obtains the consent of Hermia's father to her union with Lysander, and thus it happens that three marriage ceremonies take place, on which occasion the artisans enact their very jovial and grotesque play of Pyramus and Thisbe, which they have so faithfully and amusingly rehearsed. Congratulations and fairy dances conclude the nuptial feasts and the drama.

The finest character in the play is undoubtedly Theseus, and in his noble words about the artisans' play, the true gentleman is shown. Theseus is Shakespeare's early ideal of a heroic warrior and man of action. His life is one of splendid achievement and joy; his love is a kind of happy victory; his marriage a triumph. But his wife's character is poor beside his. There is not much marked difference of character between the lovers Demetrius and Lysander, nor is there much distinction between Helena and Hermia, except that in person Helena is the taller of the two and the gentler in disposition. Though the story is Greek, yet the play is full of English life. It is Stratford that has given Shakespeare his out-door woodland life, his clowns' play, and the clowns themselves—Bottom, with his inimitable conceit, and his fellows, Snug, Quince, etc. It is Stratford that has given him all Puck's fairy lore—the pictures of the sweet country school-girls, seemingly parted and yet with a union in parturition. There is exquisite imagery running through the play—a wonderful admixture, though it be, of delicate and aerial fancy beside the broadest and coarsest comedy.

THE MERCHANT OF VENICE.

See Page 150.

In this play our bard celebrates the idea of a universal philanthropy, in the first place, as a Christian charity, but more especially in its tenderest and most gentle emanations, like friendship, conunial love, as well as grace and mercy, in opposition to the strict tenet of the law. George Chalimer fixes 1597 as the date of this comedy, while Malone reports 1598 as the exact time of its appearance. The musical elements of this interesting drama are beautiful, numerous, and celebrated. In it is found the initial of a well-known and now proverbial euphony on modulated sounds: "The man who has no music in his soul," etc.

SCENE.—Partly in Venice and at Belmont.

A rich and fair heiress named Portia, who lives at Belmont, near Venice, is, according to the last will of her father, prohibited from marrying, except the suitor who comes to woo should correctly choose one of three caskets — one of them gold, one of silver, and one of lead. The latter contains the portrait of the fair lady; and the suitor fortunate enough to choose the casket containing Portia's picture, is to be Portia's husband. Bassanio, a young nobleman of Venice, is so fortunate, and carries off the prize. But he is scarcely betrothed to his love, when he receives news from Venice telling him that his noble-hearted friend Antonio, whose generous means furnished him for his successful journey to Belmont, is completely ruined by the wreck of ships at sea, and that the bond which Antonio, in over-confidence, had given to the Jew Shylock on Bassanio's account for a sum of money, could not be met when due. Shylock now insists literally on the cruel penalty provided as a forfeit — a pound of Antonio's flesh to be cut from any part the Jew pleased to take it. Bassanio, supplied by his bride with ample means, and presented with a ring which he vowed to her he never would part with, hastens towards Venice to the rescue of his friend. Portia, his spirited lady love, meanwhile, procures for herself, by the aid of a renowned lawyer, who is a friend of her family, letters of introduction, and thus fortified, and in the disguise of a Doctor of Laws, is introduced to the Duke of Venice as a lawyer who would be able even in such a difficult case as that now pending between the merchant of Venice and the Jew Shylock, to decide in strict accord with the laws of Venice, and yet, withal, in the interest of human equity. By virtue of Portia's ingenious sagacity, Antonio, the unfortunate merchant who had become security for her husband Bassanio, is rescued from his cruel persecutor. In her disguise as an advocate of law, Portia refuses every offer of reward, but requests and finally obtains from the unwilling Bassanio that ring which he had given to him on his departure from her, under the most solemn vows never to part with it. The same scene is likewise enacted by her waiting-maid Nerissa, who is in the disguise of an attending clerk, and who is betrothed to Bassanio's friend and companion Gratiano. Portia and her waiting maid now hasten to their home. They arrive at Belmont before their husbands, whose embarrassment on account of their having parted with their rings, the pledges of their love, causes great railing and merriment, until finally the entire intrigue is explained. Through the play is interspersed the suit, elopement, and marriage of Jessica, the daughter of Shylock, who, converted to Christianity, becomes the wife of Lorenzo, a young Venetian for whom Portia, in her role as counsellor of law, obtains the legal right to inherit the fortune of her unwilling father-in-law, Shylock. Cruel and repulsive as the character of the latter appears in the story, the thoughtful reader cannot help but sometimes pity him as one of the persecuted Jewish race, a race often embittered and driven to desperation by the remorseless cruelty practised towards them by the peoples and laws of the Middle Ages.

To understand the plot of this play, which is complicated, by three points, we have, first the main point in the history of the forfeited bond; then a secondary plot, the affair of the three caskets, and, as a final episode, the elopement of Jessica and Lorenzo.

A true and noble woman the poet portrays in Portia. In the language of Jessica, 'the rude world has not her fellow,' and to all who have studied the play will agree, echoing the words of Mrs. Fanny Kemble, when she says, 'Shakespeare's Portia, then as now, is my ideal of a perfect woman.' She is one of those women that the poet shows us first in gloom and then brings into the sunshine of love. She is gloomy, naturally, at the momentous chance that her fate hangs on, until it gives her the man she loves. She has wit and humor, and good judgment, too. She is unselshless, for she allows her husband to leave her so soon to save his friend. Note her quick insight and wit; on the call for action, her self-reliance; the admirable handling of her case in court; the reserving of her power to the last, hoping to raise Shylock to the nobleness she would have him reach. See how the essence of all the virtues of woman is in her speech for mercy, which will echo through all time. In the trial scene she keeps her happy, Rogers humor, soothing her husband about giving her up, and insisting on his ring (this latter scene is remarkably effective on the stage). No words can praise Portia too highly. Jessica, 'the most beautiful pagan and most sweet Jew,' is romantic and impulsive. Love is her ruling passion, as greed is that of her father.

Antonio is a noble gentleman. There is a beautiful and touching unselshlessness about him, as note his message to Bassanio, who was a fine enough fellow, but far inferior as a character to the woman whose love he won. In Shylock, we have the embittered hate of ages of cruelty and oppression flaming up to strike when chance allowed it.

The material of this play the poet gleaned from the story entitled 'Rosalinde, Euphues Golden Legacie, etc.,' which its author, Thomas Lodge, wrote at sea, on a voyage to the Canary Islands. The drama was written in 1600, when Shakespeare was thirty-six years old. There are various remarks on music and several songs embodied in this comedy.

SCENE.—Is laid first near Oliver's house; afterwards in the usurper's court, and in the forest of Arden.

A French duke, who had been deposed and banished by his younger brother Frederick, withdrew with a few faithful followers to the forest of Arden, leaving his only daughter Rosalind at the court of the usurper as a companion of the latter's only daughter Celia: these ladies love each other like sisters. This affection which subsisted between them was not in the least interrupted by the disagreement between the fathers, and becomes not the less tender when Rosalind falls in love with the brave Orlando, who, in a wrestling match with a hitherto unexcellled athlete, wins the victory in the presence of the assembled court; but Orlando having learned from Adam, his father's aged steward, of the deadly enmity of his older brother Oliver, seeks safety in flight. Adam affectionately accompanies him, and proffers Orlando the money he has saved. But the faithful servant, through infirmity and fatigue, is unable to proceed far on the journey. Orlando cheers his drooping spirit and urges him to go forward. The older brother, Oliver, was charged by the usurping duke with having aided the flight of Orlando, and the duke ordered him to arrest and bring back the fugitives. Rosalind, having been banished from her uncle's court, left it clad in the disguise of a page, and chance led her towards the forest of Arden. Celia, the usurping duke's daughter, loving Rosalind tenderly, accompanied her in her flight in the garb of a shepherdess. More for the purpose of pastime and sport than for

THE TAMING OF THE SHREW.

See Page 100.

This comedy is founded on an old play, the author of which is unknown, although even the dialogue is partly kept intact in our poet's production. But the change Shakespeare wrought is so complete that the play must be acknowledged as only his. It originated in 1596, or possibly a few years earlier.

In The Taming of the Shrew, Shakespeare made use of music than to introduce minstrels at the wedding.

SCENE.—At times in Padua and in Petruchio's country-house.

The plot of the drama is as follows: A lord on his return from the chase finds a drunken tinker, named Sly, asleep on a bench before an ale-house. For the sake of sport, the lord orders him to carry to his own rooms, where Sly is dressed in costly garments and placed in one of his finest beds. When the drunken wench wakes he finds himself surrounded by the attending servants, who succeed in making him believe that he is a nobleman who had for many years suffered from insanity. Upon the introduction of a train of players, Sly becomes convinced that he is really a lord, and the lord is ordered to entertain him with the enactment of a comedy, the purport of which is about the following:

A rich gentleman of Padua, named Baptista, has two daughters, Katharina (Kate) and Bianca; but the father refuses to listen to the suitors of the younger daughter until Katharina, the older sister, is married. Katharina's fiery temper has caused her to be known as the Shrew, and her loud-tongued scolding frightened every suitor away. The woeas of Bianca, although, as rivals, much inclined to look at each other with unfavorable eyes, yet agree to make common cause, and that each endeavor to procure a husband for Katharina. In this they are fortunate in finding a gentleman named Petruchio, himself heir to rich estates, and who has come especially to Padua for the purpose of forming a suitable marriage. By virtue of his burlesquely-tender actions, he determined to break Kate's haughty temper, and by an affection of continued violence frightened her into submission to his will. Grumio, Petruchio's servant, comically assists him in this effort. Katharina, finding at last opposition vain, becomes the dutiful wife, and Petruchio, finding her obedient to his most absurdly assumed whims, procures his affection and drops the part of the tyrant.

Meanwhile Lucentio, a nobleman of Pisa, has succeeded, under the guise of a teacher, in gaining access to Bianca, and has used the hours ostensibly devoted to instruction for the purpose of exchanging declarations of love, while his servant, Tranio, assuming his master's name and address, attends to all further affairs which are necessary to forward the intentions of Lucentio. To make this certain, the presence of Lucentio's father, by the scheme of Tranio, is to be represented by a travelling schoolmaster; but at this critical moment the real father of Lucentio arrives quite unexpectedly at Padua, and meets on the street the servant of his son in the latter's dress. Tranio has the temerity not to recognize the father of his master as such, and is about to be taken to prison by an officer of the law, when Lucentio, who meanwhile had secretly married to Bianca, opportunely appears with his bride by his side, and effects a general reconciliation.

Grimestone, the oldest of Bianca's rejected suitors, is satisfied with receiving an invitation to be the guest at the festivities in honor of the wedding; Hortensio, the younger lover, seeks consolation by marrying a young widow, and takes formal lessons from Petruchio in the art of Taming the Shrew. Petruchio's young wife, the fiery Katharina, carries finally the prize away as the most submissive wife of the three, and, because of her amiability and goodness, receives from her father a largely increased dowry.

The fair Kate, the shrew, stands boldly out in marked individuality. She has been brought up a spoiled child, strong-willed, and overindulged by her father's weak-witted and gentle woman, the widow, Bertram, and the weak-willed, tenderly affectionate widow, Helena, admires the promise of the young Countess. The fair Kate, the shrew, has the nerve to overrule and attempt to control her. She is bewildered by his assurance and coolness, while conscious that she has forfeited, by her childish bad temper, a woman's right to chivalrous courtesy, and she feels she has no right to complain of her lover's roughness. As a woman, too, she likes the hardening course and desires to marry him, even has learned, by this time, to love him, as note how she cries when he comes late. Having got him, she is baulked of the wedding feast (embezzlement of all blows for a bride). Under the influence of the wedding, she is so tender, at first, that we almost regret that Petruochio had not taken advantage of this tenderness, and tried tameing by love; but then, if he had, we should have lost some of the very best scenes of the play. However, Kate decides to stand up for her rights, and how she is deceived and humbled, and finally gives up the effort, becoming the model wife, the story relates.

Petruchio really makes himself, for effect, worse than he is. He is one of those determined men that like the spice of temper in a woman, knowing the power in him to subdue. He teases and tantalizes Kate in such a pleasant, madcap fashion, that we like him, although, probably, he tries her too far and too severely. No doubt they proved a happy couple. Kate could obey Petruchio with a will, for he had fairly beaten her at her own game, and won her respect. Grumio is an excellent comic character, one of the best of the kind from Shakespeare's pen.

Encouraged by the countess, to whom she had confided her love, she journeys to Paris, and succeeds in inducing the king to confide in her method of curing him. She agrees to suffer condign punishment in case she shall not succeed in restoring the king's health; on the other hand, should she cure the monarch, he promises that she shall be married to the man of her choice, and besides receive a rich dowry. Under her ministering care the king recovers entirely, and chooses the young Count of Rousillon for her spouse, who, despite all unwillingness and resistance at first, finally yields to the behests of his sovereign, and is married to Helena. Bertram has no affinity for his young wife, and moreover considers their marriage a misalliance, flees from Helena soon after the marriage ceremony, and is over, and dies himself to Florence, where he enters the service as a soldier— meanwhile informing Helena by letter that she should never again see him in France, nor greet him as her husband, until she could wear on her finger the ring which he claims to have inherited from his ancestors as a family relic, and could nurture a child of his paternity on her breast. Despite these two seemingly impossible conditions, Helena does not despair in her hope and love. Without his knowledge, she follows her traitor lord, reaching Florence in disguise, where, with the assistance of the chaste daughter of an honest widow named Diana, she is soon in a condition to demand the fulfilment of her husband's strange conditions, and returns to France simultaneously with Bertram, where she has been announced as dead. As soon as the count is convinced of the truth of her assertions, he is thrilled with manly emotion at such enduring love, and, in rapture over her high-spirited devotion, clasps Helena in his arms, henceforth bestowing all his affection on her. The unmasking and punishment of a villain named Parolles, a follower of Bertram, forms a diverting entertainment and an embellishment to the scenes, an episode of which calls to mind some of the parts of Falstaff's experience.

In this play the object of Shakespeare was no doubt, covertly, to teach a lesson to the English people on the pride of birth, in the poor, lowly-born Helena, richest and highest born Bertram, and proving also how much true love could take a woman through unspotted and unsullied. Coleridge calls Helena "Shakespeare's loveliest character;" and Mrs. Jameson says: "There never was, perhaps, a more beautiful picture of a woman's love, cherished in secret, not self-consuming in silent languishment, not despising over its idol, but patient and hopeful, strong in its own intensity, and sustained by its own fond faith. Her love is like a religion—pure, holy, deep. The faith of her affection combining with the natural energy of her character, believing all things possible makes them so." Quick as she is to see through Parolles, she cannot see through Bertram, for love blinds her eyes. How beautiful is the confession of her love to Bertram's mother; and what a fool Bertram appears in leaving his sweet, unsullied young wife, and how his brutal letter only brings out by contrast her truth and nobleness. How earnestly she wants to save him. She knows the urgency of his "important blood," and takes advantage of it to work a lawful meaning in a lawful act, and so, without disgrace, fulfils the condition her husband's baseness has made precedent to her reunion with him. Shakespeare has, indeed; proved in the character of Bertram (one who prides himself on his noble birth) its worthlessness, unless beneath a noble name rested a noble soul. Bertram, to speak mildly, is a snob, a liar, and a sneak, and it requires all the love of the lower-born lady, of God’s own make, to lift him to a level that obtains any of our regard. He has physical courage, but of moral courage he has none, and is unable to judge men.

TWELFTH NIGHT; or, WHAT YOU WILL.

The sources which our poet made use of for this comedy are found in the novel entitled “Apollonus and Silla.” According to some, he is said to have probably used two Italian comedies of similar nature, namely, “Glingannani” and “Glinganmate.” Twelfth Night was written in 1599; but there is no edition of an earlier date than the first folio, in 1623. This comedy opens with a beautiful eulogium on music, which prevails throughout. The use of Etiroti, in the same manner as at present, seems to have been well known at this time, as appears in Act I.

SCENE.—Laid in a city in Illyria, and the sea-coast near it.

Sebastian and his sister Viola were twins of the most remarkable resemblance to one another. Having both escaped the danger of perishing by shipwreck, Viola is rescued by the captain and taken to the coast of Illyria. Through the aid of her benefactor, the maiden, dressed in male attire, enters into the service of Duke Orsino. Intimate acquaintance with this handsome and excellent man inflames the susceptible heart of Viola with the fire of a first love. But the duke loves Olivia, a rich and fair young countess. Viola, in her disguise as a page, introduces herself to Olivia, on behalf of her amanuensis, Orsino, who passionately loves Olivia, who is, however, in mourning for her brother; and, unable to return the duke’s affection, refuses at first even to listen to Viola’s message, but no sooner sees her than, ignorant of her sex, she falls in love with the page; forgetful of the vow of entire seclusion from the world, Olivia unveil’s herself before Viola (Cesario), confessing her feelings, which, of course, are not returned. Viola, now perceiving the danger of her disguise, hastens from the presence of Olivia, with the emphatic declaration that she would never love a woman. Meantime her brother, who too had been saved by the captain of a vessel, arrives likewise in Illyria. His benefactor, who had at a former time during a naval engagement inflict great damage on the Illyrians (had even caused the death of their duke), is of course in imminent peril among these people. His liberty, his property, yes, even his life, are in jeopardy, and nothing but the love for his protege could have caused him to land. A ruffian who courts Olivia, and is jealous of the supposed rival Cesario, whom he deems the favorite of the countess, attacks Viola, and Antonio, confounding her with Sebastian, hastens to her relief. Officers of the law appear upon the scene of the tumult, and, recognizing Antonio from his taking part in the naval combat, take him off to prison. After Viola’s departure from the scene of the trouble, Sebastian, who is in search of Antonio, appears, and is himself attacked by Viola’s adversary. The countess, who having now interceded with the duke, mistakes Sebastian for Orsino’s page, and as such loads him with caresses. Sebastian, astonished at his good fortune and struck with her beauty, falls in love at first sight. A priest at hand solemnizes their marriage, and they both lay. Viola, who makes herself known as Sebastian’s sister, by her womanly charm, spirit, and faithful love, wins the heart of the duke, and on the same day she is made the “mistress of her lord” and Illyria’s duchess.

Viola is the true heroine of the play. She is sad for her brother’s supposed death; but she is thankful for her own escape, and looks disaster full in the face, taking practical steps for her future life. The duke wants sympathy, and she gives it to him; she knows the duke loves music, and she gives it to him to cheer him in his love-born state. Note the real love that Viola describes, and the fancied love the duke feels for Olivia. That is a touching scene between Viola and the duke, where the duke says he would speak in so masterly a way of love; and where Viola, in answer to the duke’s fancied greatness of his love, gives him such hints of her own far greater affection for him, that no man not blinded by phantasm could have failed to catch the meaning of her words. Then comes that scene when the man she adores threatens her with death, and she will take it joyfully from him whom she declares then she loves more than life, and finally the reciprocation of her love by the duke. The duke has a fanciful nature; he is a dreamy, musical man. Still, he is not to be despised. His is a rich, beautiful, and artistic nature, fond of music and flowers, and his love once obtained makes him a husband tender and true. The comic characters of the play are Shakespeare’s own. The self-conceit of Malvolio is refreshing.

THE WINTER’S TALE.

The plot is taken from the “History of Dorastus and Fawnia,” by Thomas Green, and was written, according to Chalmers, in 1601, and according to Malone in 1604; and first appeared in the folio of 1623. Schlegel, the great German translator and Shakespearean scholar, says that the title of this comedy answers admirably to its subject. It is one of those histories which appear framed to delight the idleness of a long evening. There are two somewhat absurd scenes, some other musical illusions, and a pedlar’s song woven into this drama.

SCENE.—Sometimes in Sicilia and at times in Bohemia.

Polixenes, King of Bohemia (a country we must imagine in this play to extend to the sea-coast), is on a visit to the court of his lifelong friend Leontes, King of Sicilia, and after a sojourn of nine months at last resolves to depart. The urgency of Leontes to induce his friend to continue his visit somewhat longer being without avail, he requests his queen Hermione to try her fortune in accomplishing that end; and the queen really succeeds in persuading the guest to defer the return to his own country for another week. But suddenly in the king’s heart a suspicion now arose by reason of this success wrought by the persuasive eloquence of his wife, and he became at once inflamed by such a violent fit of jealousy that he even seeks to take his noble friend’s life. By an honorable confidential friend, whom he sought to employ as a tool to carry out his revenge, Polixenes is prevented from further designs upon the King of Bohemia. But Leontes is still jealous of his wife, and with Polixenes enters her apartment and demands the delivery of his own son, Mamillius. Hermione remonstrates, and is made the prisoner; while there she is delivered of a daughter, Perdita. The infant is brought by Paulina, wife of Antigonus, a lord of his court, to its father, but is ordered out of his sight. The oracle to whose decision the case is submitted, declares the queen innocent, and prophesies that Siciella's crown will remain without an heir until the abandoned child is found again. At the same time the death of the crown prince is announced, upon which news the queen faints and is taken away for dead. Thus ends the first three acts in the drama.

The fourth act is ushered in by a prologue, and is laid sixteen years later in Bohemia. The ship in which Antigonus, the Sicilian lord, carried the infant princess out to sea, had been driven by a storm upon the coast of Bohemia, where the child was left by him, dressed in rich clothes and jewels, with a paper pinned to its mantle with the name Perdita written thereon. Antigonus never returned to Sicily, for he was torn to pieces by a bear as he was going back to the vessel. The deserted baby was found by an old shepherd, who took it home to his wife, who nursed it carefully. Perdita, the banished infant of Leontes, brought up to womanhood as the shepherd's daughter, gains, the affections of Florizel, the son of the King of Bohemia. The king Polixenes attends the sheep-shearing (a rural festival) in disguise, at which the loving pair are both present, discovers himself, and forbids their intimacy.

Camillo, a courier of Sicily, who had been sojourning at Polixenes's court, proposes to Florizel and Perdita that they shall go with him to the Sicilian court. To this proposal they joyfully agreed, taking with them the old shepherd, the reputed father of Perdita, who has still preserved Perdita's jewels, baby-clothes, and the paper which he had found pinned to her garments. They all arrive at the court of Leontes in safety, who receives them with great cordiality. The king had bitterly repented of his former jealous frenzy, and is now entirely satisfied at having found his long-lost child. Polixenes, King of Bohemia, in pursuit of his son, arrives also in Sicily, and now everything that was obscure is cleared up, and Queen Hermione, believed to be dead, returns from her place of seclusion, and the play ends in transports of joy and happiness.

In the Winter's Tale, we see the contrast between town and country. The play is fragrant with Perdita, with her primroses and violets, so happy in the reconciliation of her father and mother, so bright with the sunshine of her and Florizel's young love. So long as men can think, Perdita shall brighten and sweeten their minds and lives. There is something so ineffably touching in the lost and injured daughter meeting the injuring father and forgiving him: Above all rises the figure of the noble, long-suffering wife, Hermione, forgiving the cruel and unjust, though now deeply repentant, husband who has so cruelly injured her. She is among the noblest and most magnanimous of Shakespeare's women; without a fault, she suffers, and for sixteen years, as though guilty of the greatest fault. If we contrast her noble defence of herself against the shameless imputation on her honor with that of other heroines in like cases—the swooning of Hero, the ill-starred sentences of Desdemona, the pathetic appeal, and yet submission of Imogen—we will see how splendidly Shakespeare developed this one of his finest creations. When Camillo's happy suggestion that Florizel should take Perdita to Sicily and Leontes has borne fruit, and Shakespeare brings the father and daughter together, and then brings both into unison before us with the mother, though so long dead, the climax of pathos and delight is reached; art can no further go. Paulina is a true lover of her mistress, and a lovely character in her earnestness and courage. Although the story is told of Sicily, we see all through that the great poet has English scenes in his mind's eye. The lovely country around Stratford is always before him as he writes.

THE PLOTS OF SHAKESPEARE'S PLAYS.

THE LIFE AND DEATH OF KING JOHN.

In more than one respect this tragedy is not only the prologue, but the basis of the entire drama of Shakespeare which treat upon the history of England. It appears to have been written in 1596, but not published till 1623. It was founded on the old play entitled The Troublesome Reign of King John. The action of this present tragedy occupies a space of about seventeen years, beginning at the thirty-fourth year of King John's life. There is no music in this play but trumpets and the din of war.

SCENE.—Sometimes in England and France.

After the demise of Richard, surnamed Oeur de Lion, John wrung the English crown from the weak hands of his nephew Arthur, whose claims were supported by King Philip of France. But in the hope of incorporating England with his kingdom by the plan, the French monarch is prevailed to sanction a marriage between the dauphin and a niece of King John, and is about to withdraw his aid from Arthur, when the arrival of the Cardinal Pandulph, the pope's legate, prevents him consummating the agreement, and the dogs of war are again unloosed. Constance, mother of Arthur, having in vain endeavored to interest the French king and the legate in behalf of her son's claim to the crown, appeals in paroxysms of despair to heaven, and denounces Arthur's uncle, John, the usurper of the throne and her son's rights.

Philip of France in a decisive engagement is defeated, and the captured Arthur is handed over by his uncle to the keeping of a certain Hubert, chamberlain to the king. John, feeling insecure from the superior claims of Arthur, orders Hubert to put out his eyes in prison. Hubert, moved to pity by the youth and innocence of the victim, spares him. But on quitting him, the prince, in dread of another attempt, leaps from the ramparts, and is found dead by Pombroke. A number of discontented barons resolve to free themselves from the yoke of the tyrant, and to this end invite the Dauphin of France to assume the English crown, with the sanction of the pope. On the arrival of the dauphin, John is compelled to yield an ignominious abdication by abjectly placing his royalty at the disposal of the cardinal, who then endeavors to stay the advance of the dauphin. His intercession proves, however, unsuccessful; and hostilities are about to be resumed, when the news of the loss of a French transport having a large number of troops on board, together with the news of the desertion of an English reserve force, causes the ardor of the French prince to cool, and inclines him to make peace. Meantime, King John is poisoned by a monk, and his son Prince Henry succeeds to the throne. The departures from history which Shakespeare in this play introduces, are all designed in the interest of dramatic art, and not with the pretext of adhering to strict historic truth.

The character which stands foremost in King John is Constance, with that most touching expression of grief for the son she has lost. Deserted and betrayed, she has a standing measure in her despair, amid desecrated scenes and ruthless enemies— an eagle wounded, but defiant.
THE PLOTS OF SHAKESPEARE'S PLAYS.

Considered as a dramatic picture, the grouping is wonderfully fine. On one hand, the vulture-like ambition of the mean-souled and cowardly tyrant John, on the other, the selfish, calculating policy of Philip, between them, balancing their passions in his hand, is Cardinal Pandolph, the cold, subtle, heartlesslegate; the fiery, reckless Faulconbridge; the princely Lewis; the still unconquered spirit of old Queen Elinor; the bridal loveliness and modesty of Blanch; the boyish grace and innocence of young Arthur; the noble Constance, helpless and yet desperate—form an assemblage of figures that, taken altogether, cannot be surpassed in variety, force, and splendor of dramatic and picturesque effect.

THE TRAGEDY OF KING RICHARD II.

See Page 295.

The principal source from which Shakespeare drew the argument of this play was Holinshed's History of England, and he has here adhered to this information. Without detriment to this its practical source, he has followed history literally, with an almost perfect fidelity. Inasmuch as the first edition of this tragedy appeared in 1597, there is good reason to believe that it was written in 1596. Here we have music in abundance. Military instruments are admirably described. All instruments played with the bow, in Shakespeare's time, were fretted except violins, and this is made obvious in this historical drama.

SCENE.—Dispersedly in England and Wales.

Henry Bolingbroke, Duke of Hereford, eldest son to John of Gaunt, the Duke of Lancaster, denounces Thomas Mowbray, Duke of Norfolk, as a traitor, and, among other accusations, charges him with abetting the murder of the Duke of Gloucester, the king's uncle. Norfolk, the accused duke, denies the charge, and offers to prove his innocence by single combat. The king consents to this, and orders the adversaries to appear on a certain day at Coventry. They arrive there punctually, ready for the encounter; but just at the moment of deposition mutual filing of pistols, which would be given, King Richard protests. Knowing that his own skirts are not clear of the taint of his uncle's death, hence afraid of the consequences of the duel, whatever the result of the latter may be, and also secretly dreading the adversaries, he banishes both nobles, having first assembled the lords of his realm and received their ascent. Thomas Mowbray, Duke of Norfolk, is sentenced to perpetual banishment, while the Duke of Hereford is exiled for ten years, which term the king reduces, out of regard for the aged John of Gaunt, to six years. The king also commands them while abroad never to have verbal intercourse with each other, as he is afraid of their mutual explanations. Soon after Bolingbroke's departure, his father, the Duke of Gaunt, dies, and the king perpetrates the injustice of the estate of the deceased duke, thus cheating the banished Henry Bolingbroke out of his inheritance. Enraged over this undeserved robbery, Bolingbroke awaits a good opportunity to return to England for the purpose of dethroning King Richard. He knew how to ingratiate himself with the army and the English people, being either related by blood with all the great families, or connected by the bonds of friendship with them. Richard meanwhile is living in great luxury, surrounded by worthless favorites, and influenced by them to tyrannize over his people, who grow bitterly discontented. Richard having gone to Ireland to avenge the death of the viceroy, Count Le Marche, who had been slain by the Irish during an insurrection, Bolingbroke makes good use of his absence, having heard that the name of Duke of Lancaster, returns to England, landing near Ravengburgh, in Yorkshire. The Duke of Northumberland and his valiant son Henry Percy (Hotspur), having been insulted by Richard, at once join Bolingbroke's forces. Discontented men pour in from all quarters, and soon swell the forces of Lancaster to an army of 66,000 soldiers. Even Langley, the bastard of York, who—like the leech of his camp—formerly in London, offers no resistance, being himself too weak, and, moreover, having been deceived by Bolingbroke, who represents that he had merely returned to have his banishment and the wrongful sequestration of his estates annulled. Bolingbroke, emboldened by continued additions to his army, now enters London at the head of his troops, where he is hailed by the people as their deliverer from a justly hated tyranny. Other cities follow the example of the metropolis. Richard, having heard of Bolingbroke's return from banishment and his attempt to usurp the crown, lands on the coast of Wales, from his Irish expedition, and receives the news of his rival's progress and the danger to which himself and his followers are now exposed. But he can learn nothing but misfortune; for his favorites, Bushy, Green, and Earl of Wiltshire, had all deserted him, and he has been elected King of the English. The Earl receives with umbrage, his own troops are weak and inclined to desert, the people embittered, and the regent, York, though thus far a neutral, "neither as friend nor foe," had gone over to Bolingbroke. In this desperate dilemma, Richard appeals to the victor, and invites him, through the agency of the Duke of Northumberland and the Archbishop of Canterbury, to visit him at Flint, near Chester. The duke receives Richard, who with humpd face appears. Seated upon two miscellaneously horses, Richard and Salisbury accompany Bolingbroke to London. Richard is dethroned and condemned to perpetual imprisonment. Bolingbroke ascends the throne under the name of King Henry IV. The old Duke of York becomes a firm friend to the king; the Duke of Aumerie, son of the Duke of York, continuing the firm friend of Richard, having nothing to gain by going to visit the old duke, his father, with a paper so carelessly concealed on his person, that York, doubting his loyalty to Bolingbroke, seizes it, and finds a treasonable plot to restore Richard to the throne. The father vows to immediately inform the king, but the son himself and his mother intercede and obtain the king's pardon. Richard dies in the fortress of Pomfret by the hands of assassins, whose leader, Sir Pierce of Exton, without equivocation, asserts that he had been induced by Henry IV. to commit the murder. This charge is afterwards denied by the king. Nevertheless, King Henry resolves, in atonement of the bloody deed, to take a pilgrimage to the Holy Land, and with this vow, uttered at the coffin of his predecessor, ends the tragedy.

No doubt one of the motives which induced the great poet—a sincere patriot, a lover of his country, and a keen observer of the times—to take up the role of the historical plays, of which Richard II. is one, was to point out the great dangers to the state, and to the sovereign, of unworthy favorites. The degenerate son of the Black Prince, the flower of warriors, is pictured by Shakespeare as a mere royal sham—a king in words only. A king, however, a man—His nobles quarrel in his very presence; and the contemptuous meanness of his nature is shown in his inability to take the reproof of the noble, dying Gaunt.
THE PLOTS OF SHAKESPEARE'S PLAYS.

It is not until his death that we feel any pity for the weak and dethroned king. In Bolingbroke, the poet has drawn the wily and astute leader, prompt to seize and turn to his own advantage the errors of his rivals.

THE FIRST PART OF KING HENRY IV.
See Page 310.

The author that Shakespeare follows in this historical drama is again the chronologist Holinshed. So far as the comical scenes with Falstaff and his followers go, the play was perhaps already known in 1598 as a favorite, though weak and rude popular play, under the title of The Famous Victories of Henry the Fifth. The tragedy, however, was written in 1597, entered in Stationers' Hall in February 25, 1597, and printed in quarto form in the following year. Falstaff furnishes the funniest music in this play.

SCENE. — Entirely in England.

The first part of the play covers a period of but ten months, viz., from the battle of Holmedon, on September 14, 1402, until that near Shrewsbury, which was fought July 21, 1403. After the deposition and death of the unfortunate Richard, we find Henry IV.'s attention drawn to the invasion of the Scots, who, under their heroic leader, Archibald, Earl of Douglas, threaten the borders of England, but are defeated and beat en back by the celebrated Henry Percy, surnamed Hotspur. The report of this victory has so severely reached the ears of the king, when he, despite all the customs and usages of the times, insists upon the delivery of some of the prisoners made by his victorious general, Percy, and especially insisted on having the body of the gallant Douglas. Enraged at this claim, Hotspur liberates all his captured prisoners without a ransom, and, in conjunction with his relations and followers, plans an insurrection against his new lord, whose ascent to the throne they had so recently effected. After a treaty with the Scotch and Welsh leaders, the insurgents march on Shrewsbury, where the king, leading his men in person, advances on them. A decisive battle ensues, in which Hotspur is slain by the hands of Prince Henry, and the insurgents suffer a total defeat, all their leaders being taken captive. Worcester and Vernon suffer execution; but Douglas is set free without ransom and permitted to return to Scotland. The earnest and tragic scenes of the play are in bright contrast with the comical parts, and these latter are interspersed on the following basis. Henry IV. is apprehensive of his son Henry, Prince of Wales, because the latter is a young man of remarkable talents; but the suspicion is entirely ill-founded, since the prince has never acted in conflict with the duties and love due from child to parent. The prince does not feel altogether at ease at court, and, perhaps for prudential reasons, seeks to avoid meeting his cold-hearted father. Desirous of becoming acquainted with the life and doings of the people, even of the lowest orders, he surrounds himself with a band of jovial, careless characters, who under the lead of their princely leader perpetrate the wildest tricks and follies, even going so far as to commit criminal acts. The principal escapagrace, both as to physical appearance and intellectual calibre in this company, is Sir John Falstaff, the most amusingly entertaining character that author has ever described. Among the funny scenes, Falstaff, having joined the royal army, in a skirmish with Douglas pretends to be beaten. Henry IV., however, recognizes his jolly companion seemingly among the dead, ludicrously avows his intention to have him embowelled, but is no sooner gone than the knight jumps to his feet, and, congratulating himself on his narrow escape, insures his safety by immediate flight.

In this drama we have the headlong valor of Hotspur, the wonderful wit of Falstaff, the noble rivalry of Henry Percy and Henry, Prince of Wales. Kings are driven for: rebels are subdued. Through every scene beats the full strong pulse of vigorous manhood and life. The whole play is instinct with action. Every character lives, and what magnificent creations they are. Hotspur, Glendower, Henry and his son Prince Hal, Douglas, Poins, Lady Percy, and Mrs. Quickly. In comic power, though, Shakespeare culminates in Falstaff, and who can say enough of him? He is the very incarnation of humor and lies, of wit and self-indulgence, of shrewdness and immorality, of self-possession and vice, without a spark of conscience or of reverence, without self-respect — an adventurous praying on the weaknesses of other men! Yet we all enjoy him, and so did Shakespeare himself. Falstaff's mostricking power is seen when that doughty knight is cornered. Look at the cases of Poins of Prince Hal's exposure of his robbery; of his false accusation of Mrs. Quickly; his behavior in the fight with Douglas, and his claiming to have killed Hotspur. His affrontery is inimitable. He is neither a coward nor courageous. Like a true soldier of fortune, he only asks which will pay best — fighting or running away — and acts accordingly. He evidently had a sort of reputation as a soldier, and was a professed one, obtaining a commission at the outbreak of the war.

The power of the barons was at that time too great, and turbulence consequently followed. But a strong king is now on the throne — no fine sentiments followed by nothingness, no piously weak moralizing with him. What Henry has won he will keep, let who will say nay. Henry acts generously, for he offers peace even to the arch-rebel Worcester, his bitterest foe. It is refused, and then having doffed his easy robes of peace, and crushed his old limbs in ungentle steel, he orders only Worcester and Vernon to execution. "Other offenders he will pause upon." His real character, his astuteness and foresight, are shown in his talk with Harry, when he contrasts himself with Richard the Second. No wonder such a king regretted the heir he feared to leave behind him, little then knowing the stuff his son was made of. This son, Prince Hal, Henry of Agincourt, is Shakespeare's hero in English history. See how he draws him by the mouth of his enemy Vernon; how modestly he makes him challenge Hotspur; how generously treat that rival when he dies; gives Douglas his freedom, and gives to Falstaff the credit of Hotspur's death. And Hotspur we cannot help liking, with all his head-strongness and petulance. But he believes too much in himself, and all must give way to his purposes. He is too aggressive.

THE SECOND PART OF KING HENRY IV.
See Page 330.

HOLINSHED'S Chronicles has also been the source from which the poet delineated this second part of Henry IV. The time covered by this historical drama extends over the last nine years of this king's reign. This part was probably written immediately after the first part of the play had been finished, that is in 1598. It was entered at Stationers' Hall, August 23, 1600.
THE PLOTS OF SHAKESPEARE'S PLAYS.

After the death of the ardent and heroic Percy (Hotspur), the insurgents lose all energy; and although Scroop, Archbishop of York, uses his clerical influence for the success of their cause and thus effect an increase of their numerical strength, yet all the leaders of the insurgents, with the exception of Mowbray, are more inclined to seek redress for their wrongs by peaceful methods, than to hazard further their fortunes in battle. On the other hand, the leaders of the king’s army, Prince John of Lancaster and the Earl of Westmoreland, do not incline to risk a decisive battle, and hence they invite the ringleaders of the insurgents, when both armies are confronting each other near Gnutree forest, to hold a conference. This leads to a compromise, according to which the insurgent vassals, by authority of the king, receive the assurance that their troubles shall be redressed, and at the same time a disbandment of the troops is stipulated for both sides. The royal troops, however, receive secret orders of a treacherous import, not only to keep together, but to pursue the disbanding insurgent army, and to annihilate it. This they do, and Archbishop Scroop and his fellow-conspirators are without delay led to execution.

Meantime the king’s strength is failing him, and even the news of the destruction of his enemies does not tend to restore him. Feeling the approach of death, Henry orders the crown to be placed on his pillow. Prince Henry, during one of the king’s fainting spells, supposing him dead, takes the crown to try it on; but the king recovers, and commands the diadem to be restored to its place, upbraiding the son for his precipitancy; although the dying king is so well satisfied with the innocence of his motives for the action, that he fully excuses the prince. The king soon after this incident died, and the son having succeeded to the throne, on his return from his coronation was rudely saluted by Falstaff, who presumed on the former vicious intimacy. Falstaff, however, was sternly reproved by the new monarch and discarded.

There is a quieter tone pervading this second part: it hardly has the freshness and vigor of the first. Indeed, it would be difficult to keep up the first impressions of Falstaff and the impetuous valor of Hotspur. Even Shallow cannot make up for them. The king leads, not at the head of his army, but in his quiet progress to the grave. The most striking speech in the play is that of Henry the Fourth’s on sleep. The lower rank of the people come more to the front in this play; and we have more prominence given than before to the low tavern life and the country squire and his servants. Though the hand of sickness is on the king, yet “Ready, aye ready,” is still his word; and as soon as Hotspur is beaten, another army marches against him, in which the archbishop and whose two separate rebellions Shakespeare has put into one. How strong is the wish of the old king for the redemption of his son, Prince Hal, from the slough in which he is wallowing. And in the king’s last speech to his gallant heir we see the man’s whole nature—wily to win, strong to hold, a purpose in all he did. For Prince Hal we have one unworthy scene, two creditable ones. The shadow of his father’s dubiety is on him, and he goes in half self-disgust to his old, loose companions; but there is not much enjoyment in his forced mirth; he feels ashamed of himself, and soon leaves Falstaff and his old life forever. He now deeply feels the degradation of being Falstaff’s friend. On hearing of the war again, the prince changes at a touch and is himself. The next time we see him in his true self is at his father’s sick bed, where again he wins to him his father’s heart. When Prince Hal becomes king, his treatment of his brothers, the Chief Justice, and Falstaff, is surely wise and right in all three cases. One does feel, though, for Falstaff; but certainly what he ought to have had, he got—the chance of reformation. What other reception could Henry, in the midst of his new state, give in public to the slovenly and debauched old rascal who thrust himself upon him, than the rebuke he so well administered. In the second part, Falstaff has his old wit and humor, and his slipperiness when caught; but we have him now as more of the sharper, the cheat, and the praycr on others. The scenes with Shallow and Silence, and the choice of soldiers, are beyond all praise. We cannot help noting the use the old rascal intended to make of his power over the young king. Justice now overtakes the rogues. Falstaff dies in obscurity and poverty; Nym and Bardolph are hung in France; Pistol is stripped of his braggart honor. Poins alone, the best of the set, vanishes silently, so that the whole wild set breaks up and disappears, leaving the world to laugh over them and their leader forever.

THE LIFE OF KING HENRY V.

See Page 641.

On the writings of the chronicler Holinshed this drama is also founded. Shakespeare truthfully celebrates this, his favorite hero, as the ideal king and warrior; and history itself grants to the master of dramatic art that in this opinion he is entirely justified. The year of the composition of this history is alluded to in the prologue to Act V of the play, viz., 1599. One cannot mention the year without the thought of that great contemporary of Shakespeare, Edmund Spenser, burnt out of the Irish house he has lovingly described, losing there one of his children, and dying miserably in a tavern in King Street, Westminster, on January 18, 1598, leaving behind him these last lines of his unfinished Faerie Queene as the subject of his last thoughts, as his last prayer on earth:—

“For all that moveth doth in Change delight: But thenceforth, all shall rest eternally
With Him that is the God of Sabaoth right.
O! that great Sabaoth God, grant me that Sabaoth’s right!”

Book VII. Canto VIII., stanza 11.

One likes to think of the two poets knowing, honoring, and loving one another, of Shakespeare’s following Spenser to his grave in the Abbey, near Chaucer. There is manifest allusion to the different parts of music in the first act.

SCENE.—In England and France.

The incidents represented in this drama reach from the first year of Henry V.’s ascension to the throne to his marriage with Katharine, and are spread over a period of six years. Henry had scarcely come into possession of the English crown, when he prepared ways and means to carry out and fulfill his dying father’s injunctions, and by conquests abroad seeks to obliterate the stain which tarnishes his title to the crown on account of his father’s usurpation. In pursuance of this plan, he reunites an old and outlawed claim to the crown of France, and, for the purpose of enforcing his right, makes preparation by gathering and equipping a large army. The French court, intimidated by such a claim and warlike demonstration, basely attempted the capture and assassination of the English monarch.
THE PLOTS OF SHAKESPEARE'S PLAYS.

through bribing three powerful noblemen who are intimately connected with Henry. This plot is discovered, and the conspirators are executed. Henry, having invaded France on her breach of treaty, marches with his troops to Harleur, summoning that city by herald to surrender, but being answered with contempt and defiance, he determines to take the town by storm, in which he succeeds. Afterwards, at the great battle of Agincourt, King Henry encounters the French army, which outnumbered him six to one, and gains a splendid victory, which breaks the power of the French, although the culmination was not really reached until the capture of Rouen, Jan. 16, 1419. The King of France is now compelled to yield to the severe conditions which the victor imposes, namely, to acknowledge Henry as heir to the French crown, and to give him his daughter, the Princess Katharine, for his wife. In this play Sir John Falstaff does not appear in action, but, according to Mrs. Quickly's description, meets a quiet and gentle death, after a prolonged illness.

There is but brief play of the tender passion in this drama, which is fairly resonant with the clash of contending armies, of fierce alarms, wounds, and death. There are some exceedingly fine scenes, as mark the touching picture of the dying York and Suffolk, and the humility with which King Henry after the battle of Agincourt, on bended knees, ascribes the credit of the victory alone to God.

Henry is the true warrior; Shakespeare's ideal king, evidently. See the good humor and self-control with which the king receives the dauphin's insolent message (sting him though it does), and his strong resolve to win or die; and see the devotion of all his thoughts and the humility with which King Henry after the battle of Agincourt, o

Meantime, the quarrels of the dukes of York and Somerset, disputing the claims of the rival houses of York and Lancaster, appeal to Warwick, Suffolk, and their followers, then present, in confirmation of their respective claims. The lords thus appealed to decline to answer, Plantagenet, Duke of York, bids those who agree with him to approve it by plucking a white rose. Beaufort, Earl of Somerset, adopts for the same purpose, as his emblem, the red rose, that the partisans of each might be known. These troubles form the embryof of that interminable series of fierce struggles in which the French kingdom was involved by the plot of Henry's son, John Talbot, near Bordeaux, with their little army of soldier, were by the united armies of the enemy overpowered and sacrificed to the personal jealousies of the English nobility, who failed to send reinforcements. The extraordinary success which attended the French armies under Joan of Arc, sur

SHAKESPEARE, in producing this work, was perhaps indebted only to the Holinshed Chronicles, which, however, was handled with poetical freedom, without binding himself to dates regarding the historical facts. It was written in 1597, as Malone informs us, but according to Chalmers in 1593. The play is ushered in with solemn music.

SCENE.—Partly in England and France.

The drama opens with the scene of Henry V.'s body lying in state previous to being solemnly buried at Westminster. The crown of England has safely been transferred from the head of the conqueror of France to that of his son, yet a tender child, when the French, animated by the spirited courage and valor of the mild Joan of Arc, seize the favorable opportunity to reconquer their old possessions and to take the oath of allegiance to Charles, their hereditary prince.

THE SECOND PART OF KING HENRY VI.

See Page 410.

SCENE.—In various parts of England.

The second part of this tragedy, considered by itself, comprises the period intervening between the marriage of the king to Margaret and the first battle of the St. Alban's, covering a period of ten years. Searcely have the nuptial ceremonies between King Henry and Margaret of Anjou been celebrated, when the new queen develops a plan to obtain unlimited control over her husband, and by the aid of several powerful nobles, especially by that of her lover Suffolk and of Cardinal Beaufort, Bishop of Winchester, to force the Duke of Gloucester from his position of Regent. Their first attack is aimed at the wife of Gloucester, the ambitious Eleanor Cobham, who is accused of witchcraft, sentenced to recant in public and to endure an imprisonment for life. Immediately upon this, the virtuous Duke of Gloucester himself is taken in custody, and charged with high treason. All this is done against the will and desire of the king, who entertains no suspicion against the Regent, whose accusers, becoming aware that their evidence of guilt is insufficient, cause the Regent's assassination, and on the day set for his trial he is found dead in his bed. The Duke of Suffolk is accused by the popular voice of having murdered the Regent, which obliges the king to send Suffolk into banishment. He was afterwards taken at sea by pirates, and in a little cockpit beheaded. Meantime, Salisbury and Warwick, who, from the first dispute in the Temple-garden, became convinced of Plantagenet's claim to the crown, having had first removed from him the "attaind of blood," and reinstated in the dukedom of York, now salute him as king. The scene of the terrible end of Cardinal Beaufort, uncle to Henry VI., is graphically delineated in the third act. A prey to the keenest remorse, the wretched prelate is represented on his death-bed. The king, with his nobles, pay him a visit; but the cardinal, disregarding all, raves incoherently about his crimes. At the moment of his death, the king demands a sign of his hope; but instead of giving it, he grins, gnashes his teeth, and expires, leaving Henry horror-struck. Meantime, the government of Ireland is intrusted to the Duke of York, who, before his departure, in order to test the feelings of the populace, induces an Irishman, a bold commoner, named Cade, to announce himself as a descendant of Edmund Mortimer, and to aspire to the latter's pretensions to the crown.

THE THIRD PART OF KING HENRY VI.

See Page 434.

SCENE.—During part of the Third Act in France; during the rest of the play in England.

The play begins with the Duke of York's triumphant entrance into the city of London, where he wretches from the weak Henry an acknowledgment of his inherent right to the throne, and between them the agreement is consummated that the duke, as Regent, shall rule over England with the fullest sway. Yet, when Henry VI. shall, during his lifetime, remain in undisturbed possession of the throne and royal dignity. The opposing factions, however, soon cause a breach of this contract. The Duke of York, defeated in a battle near Wakefield, in Yorkshire, and captured, is cruelly treated by the revengeful Queen Margaret, who places a paper crown upon his head and taunts him, and while offering a handkerchief dipped in the blood of his recently murdered son, asks the duke to dry his tears with it. Soon after this scene the Duke of York is murdered. The powerful assistance rendered by the Earl of Warwick, surnamed the "King-Maker," now gives the vanquished hosts of York strength to turn the tide of war and to defeat their adversaries near Towton, in Yorkshire, and Duke Edward is raised to the throne. King Henry flees to Scotland, but is afterwards captured and placed in the Tower. Queen Margaret and her son go to Paris to obtain possible aid from the King of France, whose willingness to aid them is much weakened by the presence of Warwick. The latter had received from his liege lord orders to sue for the hand of the Princess Bona, King Lewis's sister. Suddenly a messenger arrives from England, bearing the news of Edward's marriage to the beautiful widow, Lady Elizabeth Grey. Enraged at this insult, Warwick concludes a treaty with Margaret and Lewis, and dethrones Edward, who escapes to Burgundy. Here he obtains troops, which enable him soon to effect a landing at Ravenspurg. The people of England flock to the standard of King Edward,—who, from his social and kindly manners, has always been a favorite with the populace,—and look upon Warwick and his allies as favoring the cause of the nobles. The city of London, too, espouses the side of Edward, and furnishes men to swell his constantly increasing army. Finally, in the decisive battle of Barnet, Warwick suffers complete defeat, and dies on the field. Prince Edward and his mother, Queen Margaret, being taken prisoners in the still more conclusive battle of Tewksbury, where the remnant of the Lancastrian power is really annihilated, are brought before the victorious Edward, who roughly charges the prince with rebellion, but is so forcibly answered by the royal youth, that Gloucester, Clarence, and their followers assassinate the prince almost in the king's presence. The imprisoned king, Henry VI., is afterwards murdered in the Tower by the duchy of Gloucester (afterwards Richard III.), with an express of Gloucester's intended villainy upon the offspring of the king, and the banishment of Queen Margaret by Edward IV., the tragedy is concluded.

Those deep mines of historical wealth, the Chronicles of Hall and Holinshed, furnished Shake- speare with the data for this play, which was entered at Stationers' Hall, by Andrew Wise, October 20, 1597, and published in a quarto volume the same year, though it was probably written in 1593. The length of time comprised in this drama is about fourteen years, covering the last eight years of King Richard's life—beginning with Clarence's imprisonment, 1477, and ending with Richard's death at Bosworth Field, 1485.

SCENE.—England.

The threatened extinction of the house of Lancaster, as well as the failing health of King Edward, impel the ambitious Richard, Duke of Gloucester, to begin his struggle for the throne by thrusting aside the Duke of Clarence as his elder brother, whom he causes to be murdered in the Tower. King Edward died soon after this event, after having seemingly reconciled his blood-relations and followers with the brothers and cousins of his wife, the Queen Elizabeth, and having appointed his only living brother, Richard, Duke of York, as guardian over his minor children, first conferring on him, during the minority of the Prince of Wales, the office of Protector and Regent. Richard, however, upon the death of his royal brother, immediately takes the two young sons of Edward—the Prince of Wales and the Duke of York—away from the control of the relations on their mother's side, Rivers, Grey, and Vaughan, and has these unhappy noblemen, under the charge of high treason, executed. A like fate meets Lord Hastings, whom, having proved himself utterly averse to Gloucester's plans of usurpation, he denounces as guilty of treason and sorcery at the Council table, and procures an immediate condemnation and execution. Through the powerful assistance and connivance of the Duke of Buckingham, who insidiously spreads a report of the illegitimate birth of the late King Edward, as well as of his two sons, Richard succeeds in having the crown formally offered to him, which offer he accepts, and with hypocritical reluctance. The sons of Edward, having been placed in the Tower, are, soon after the coronation of Richard, and by his creatures, Deighton and Forrest, who execute their cruel task at midnight by suffocating the royal boys.

The king's next crime was the poisoning of his wife, so that he might be free to marry the oldest daughter of his brother Edward, Princess Elizabeth. Buckingham having opposed the murder of the sons of Edward, soon becomes a thorn in Richard's side, and he punishes that nobleman by a refusal to fulfill the promises that had been made him prior to Richard's ascending to the English throne. This duplicity on the part of the king causes Buckingham's defection, for which he is arrested and at last executed.

Richard III. is interrupted in his schemes of violence and murder. Henry, Duke of Richmond, lands with a large army near Milford-haven, and is marching towards London, when on the way thither he meets the army of Richard, who meets the death of a warrior in the battle of Bosworth Field. The crown now comes to the victor, who rules under the name of Henry VII., and by his marriage to Elizabeth, daughter of Edward IV., unites in firm and enduring amity the houses of York and Lancaster, and thenceforward settles the fierce quarrels and bloody conflicts between the rival races of the White and of the Red Rose.

It may be here stated that the ancestors of Shakespeare are said to have fought at the battle of Bosworth Field, and derived their warlike name from military services rendered to the cause of Richard III. in that famous action.

Shakespeare has most powerfully depicted the contending motives and feelings in the character of Richard III. His depressing and insulting his victims with the zest of grim humor, and his delight in gulling fools and in his own villany, are admirably and frequently brought out. Villain as he is, he has the villain's coolness, too. He never loses temper, except when his strikes the third messenger. Richard is a skilful general, looking to things himself, and prompt to take proper measures. He dies a soldier's death, and in the last and effective battle-scene, where, unhorsed, he so gallantly fights on, we almost admire him. The action of the play covers fourteen years—from Henry VI.'s murder, May 21, 1471, to Richard III.'s death, August 22, 1485.

THE LIFE OF KING HENRY VIII.

See Page 486.

Not published until 1643, when it appeared in folio form. It is the Epilogue to the historical cycle of the bard's dramas, and was probably written in 1601.

SCENE.—Chiefly in London and Westminster; once at Kimbolton.

This historical drama comprises a period of twelve years, commencing in the twelfth year of King Henry's reign (1521), and ending with the christening of Elizabeth in 1553. The Duke of Buckingham (son of the same duke who had been executed by order of the tyrant, Richard III.) becomes unfortunately entangled in personal disputes with Cardinal Wolsey, who, under the reign of Henry VII., had obtained great influence and power, and now finds means and ways to baffle several intimate attendants of his rival, and thus to convict the duke of treason. Soon after this, Henry meets, as a grand masquerade given by Wolsey, Lady Anne Boleyn, and, with her beauty, immediately singled her out from all the ladies present, and falls violently in love with her. Anne Boleyn's charms enhance the scruples he had long pretended to feel as to the legality of his marriage to Queen Katharine, his deceased brother's widow. Cardinal Wolsey fears the connection of his monarch with an Englishwoman, who is suspected, moreover, to favor the doctrines of the Reformation; considering this affair also as prejudicial to his own dignity and that of the Pope, he sends a message to the Pope, to whom Queen Katharine had appealed, to delay the decree of divorce. This letter, and a statement of the immense possessions and wealth of the Cardinal, by a singular mistake, fall into the hands of the king, who, enraged at this treachery, immediately divests Wolsey of all his worldly pomps and offices, and the fallen favorite is only saved from being found guilty of treason by his sudden death. The new queen, Anne Boleyn, is now crowned with great state and ceremony, while Queen Katharine dies heart-broken at her divorce from the king. Meantime, a conspiracy is planned against Archbishop Cranmer, to whom the king is indebted for the ecclesiastical consent to the divorce. Cranmer meets his royal master, to whom he had been accused by enemies who had been eagerly plotting his destruction for favoring the doctrines of the Reformation. The prelate, glad of the opportunity, kneels, pleads his cause, and so well satisfies the king of his innocence, that he raises him, and restores him to more than his former share of favor. The play closes with the ceremony of christening Princess Elizabeth, the afterwards famed Queen Elizabeth of England.

Written, as this play was, at a period treading close upon Shakespeare's life,—in the reign of the great, but at times irascible daughter of Henry VIII., Queen Elizabeth,—we can well understand how Shakespeare was obliged to temporize and sacrifice the opinions and unities largely to policy. The strongest sympathies which have been awakened in us by the play run opposite to the course of its action. Our sympathy is for the grief and goodness of Queen Katharine, while the course of the actor requires us to entertain, as a theme of joy and compensatory satisfaction, the coronation of Anne Boleyn, and the birth of her daughter, which are in fact a part of Katharine's injury, and would seem to amount to little less than the war — as extolled by Homer — in so far as its real issue was concerned, turned simply upon the recapturing of an adulterous woman who had eloped with her paramour, and whose immoral conduct can by no means be excused on account of Paris’ ideal beauty. In this play the moral is rendered prominent, that the kidnapping of Helen was not merely an act of cruelty to conciliate our second interest centres; and his soliloquy upon his downfall from power is among the finest the poet ever wrote. SCENE.—Troy, and the camp of the Greeks in front of that city.

Calchas, a Trojan priest, treacherously leaving the care of his country, is taking part with the Greeks, to whom he becomes of great service. As a reward for these services, he demands the exchange of an eminent Trojan, named Antenor, for his daughter Cressida, who lives under the protection of her uncle Pandarbus, in Troy, where her beauty and charms have made a deep impression on the heart of Prince Troilus, a son of Priam the king. Cressida has already accepted the suit of her lover, and was betrothed to him, when her happiness is interrupted by the arrival of Diomedes, who is ordered by her father to have her exchanged, and brought back to him. The lovers, on parting, swear eternal fidelity, and Troilus soon finds an opportunity to reach the camp of the Greeks. Here he learns the sad news of the unfaithfulness of his betrothed, who had already transferred her love to Diomedes, and convinces himself, by obvious proof, of her defection. Meantime, Andromache and Cassandra, the wife and sister of Hector, alarmed at the progrestives they have had of his fate, write, entreating him not to go to battle, Andromache making his infant join in their prayers to dissuade him. But affirming his vow to the gods, his honor, and his fame, he resists, rushes to combat, and is slain by Achilles. Troilus now vows to avenge the death of his brother Hector on the Greeks, and by such vengeance to stifle his grief. With a terrible curse against the pandering Pandarbus, the drama is concluded.

This is the most paradoxical and variously interpreted of all the dramas of Shakespeare. This heroic comedy, tragic-comedy, or parody, as some have termed it, is not merely written as a pleasant satire on ancient knightly and heroic life, but is perchance wrought out to serve a counterpart to Falstaffianism, with the intent of quieting or soothing the noble heroes of the 16th century with the dubious consolation that knighthood among the ancients was of no finer quality. The principal idea is rather intended to show the deeply founded and effective contrast existing between the spiritual and intellectual formation of the ancient Greeks, as compared with the modern aim of Christianity. The play points to the fact that the Trojan war — as extolled by Homer — in so far as its real issue was concerned, turned simply upon the recapturing of an adulterous woman who had eloped with her paramour, and whose immoral conduct can by no means be excused on account of Paris’ ideal beauty. CORIOLANUS.

See Page 536.

Shakespeare derived his material from Plintarch’s “Life of Coriolas,” which he read in North’s translation. This tragedy was neither entered at Stationers’ Hall nor printed till 1623, but probably written in 1609 or 1610.

SCENE.—In the city of Rome and the territories of the Volscians.

Caius Marcius, a scion of one of the oldest and noblest families of Rome, who, after his father’s early death, is educated by his mother, Volumnia, had already while a youth shown his valor as a warrior in the battles against banished Tarquin. Every war brought him fresh public acknowledgments of his merit and honor. Thus he had attained great dignity and renown, when a dispute between the senate and the people occurred, caused by the severe oppressions of the patricians and wealthy citizens, which the senate sustained. Owing to the humorous eloquence of Menenius Agrippa, however, the people were quieted, after granting them five tribunes and representatives in the senate-chamber. The people are now willing to serve as soldiers, a duty they had hitherto refused. But the patricians are at first discontented with the innovation, which is especially very violently opposed by Marcius. A war with the Volscians gives him occasion to renew his valorous deeds. The general, Cominius, who praises the greatness of his military exploits before the soldiers, gives him the name Cori-lanus, for the victories he attained near Coroli. Soon after this occurrence, he is a candidate for the Consulship, but, against all precedent, he imprudently, in a speech, derides the people, and they withdraw their votes from him. Highly incensed at this deflection, he assails the populace in an oration before the senate, demanding the abolishment of the tribunal. The people, embittered and enraged at this, threaten to throw him down from the Tarquin rock, but he is rescued by the patricians. Failing to conciliate the plebeian faction, he is banished from Rome, and, burning with rage, vows the destruction of the city. He joins the Volscian forces, and by their prince, Aufidius, is made commander-in-chief of their army, then about to be led against his own countrymen. His mother, urged by the imperilled Romans, is prevailed upon to go with her kinmen to the camp of the Volscians, to pacify, if possible, her son. Listening to her entreaties, Coriolanus resolves to retreat, and thus Rome is spared. But the Volscians, fired by Tullus, are now dispossessed with Coriolanus, and call him to account for his action. He is about to defend himself in public, when Tullus, fearing the impression of his eloquence, under the tumult of his followers, assassinates him. His corpse is buried by the Volscians with all the honors due his noble memory.

Coriolanus is among the finest of the group of Shakespeare's Roman plays. The hero lived in the early days of Rome, in those pure, old, austere times when the great city had driven Tarquin from his lustful throne; for it was against that monarch that Coriolanus had won his first garland of oak by overwhemingly defeating him. How nobly the pure white figure of Volumnia rises, clad in all the virtues that made the noble Roman lady. See how she overcomes her mother's righteons indignation against her townsman's injustice to her gallant son; and how with happy victory when she returns to Rome to give the proud city its life!

Coriolanus is in many respects a noble character and among the "flower of warriors;" but his pride is overweening, and that flaws and ruins the jewel of his renown. Treated with ingratitude, base and outrageous though in his case it was, he cannot put his country above himself. His grip is on her throat, when his wife, Virginia, stirs his mother to appeal to him, and in that scene in the Volscian camp, Coriolanus, who has thought himself above nature, cannot resist their appeals. His wife, mother, and boy prevail. Coriolanus is himself again, and takes death, as he should, at the hands of his country's foes.

TITUS ANDRONICUS.

See Page 564.

THIS play is the tragedy represented by human depravity in its most vindictive form—a thirst for revenge. Whence the poet gleaned the material for this play has not been accurately ascertained. It was one of his first attempts at a drama, and was written as early as 1587, though some say 1589, when Shakespeare was scarcely twenty-five years of age. A great many editors and critics have supposed his play spurious, for the color of style is wholly different from that of Shakespeare's other plays, but nevertheless the evidence is now strong in favor of its genuineness.

SCENE.—Rome and the adjoining country.

Titus Andronicus, a noble Roman general, victorious in the war against the Goths, returns, crowned with honors, to Rome, bringing back with him, as captives, Tamora, the queen of the Goths, with her sons, Alarbus, Chiron, and Demetrius. Of his own twenty-four sons, but four were left to him; the rest suffered death for their country on the battle-field. Through Andronicus's valor, Saturninus is raised to the vacant throne of the Empire. The emperor marries the captured queen of the Goths, and is by her goaded to bloody deeds of revenge against Titus, who had ordered the slaying of her son Alarbus as a sacrifice for the fallen sons of Rome. Tamora now instigates her wicked sons, Demetrius and Chiron, to murder Bassianns, brother to the emperor and husband of Lavinia, daughter of Titus Andronicus, whose dead body they remove; and still further urged on by diabolical deeds by Aaron, a Moor (who is beloved by Tamora), they deprive Lavinia of her chastity, cut off her tongue and both her hands. Thus mangled, the widowed Lavinia alarms her young nephew by following him and being unable to speak. The miscreants themselves report the cruel deed to the emperor, and charge two sons of Titus with the crime of having murdered Lavinia's husband. Titus, in the anxiety to save his sons, is insidiously advised by Aaron to cut off his own hand, which he sends as an expiatory sacrifice to the emperor. The latter returns his hand, accompanied by the heads of his already executed sons. The great afflictsions suffered by Titus weaken his reason. By means of a staff held in the stump of her arm, Lavinia writes the names of the murderers of her husband in the sand, and causes thus the forming of a plan of revenge between her father, her uncle Marcus, and her now only brother, Lucius. Meantime, the empress bears a child. This illegal issue of the Moor, Aaron, by the empress, is, to avoid detection by her husband, the emperor, sent by its mother to be murdered. Demetrius and Chiron, the rear instruments of her crime, profess immediate compliance, and draw their weapons to dispatch it, but Aaron snatches his infant from its nurse, and vows vengeance to any one that touches it. To further conceal the foul deed, the Moor kills the nurse, and hastens with his child to the Goths. This same course is taken by Lucius, who now, like a second Coriolanus, advances against Rome at the head of a Gothic army. The punishment overtakes Saturninus and Tamora, who are slain; the latter had, however, before her execution, a thyesteic meal set before her—that is, the flesh of her own slain sons were served up for the repast. Aaron is buried alive; Titus (a second Virginins) stabs his own outraged daughter, and is himself slain by the hands of Saturninus. Lucius, the son, and Marcus, the brother of Titus Andronicus, press a kiss of love upon the pale lips of the murdered hero. Lucius, the favorite of the people, is proclaimed Emperor of Rome, and rules wisely and well the lately terribly disturbed empire.

ROMEO AND JULIET.

See Page 584.

ONE of the earlier productions of our poet, and one of the most celebrated of his dramas, this play appeared first in print in 1597, and had, up to the year 1600, been published in four editions, each issue with improvements and additions. It was written, without doubt, in 1592.

SCENE.—For the greater portion of the play, in Verona; in the Fifth Act, once at Mantua.

Between two patrician houses of Verona, the Capulets and Montagues, existed from time immemorial a deadly feud. The family of Montague had an only son, named Romeo; that of Capulet but one daughter, named Juliet. Romeo's outward demeanor and education were the model of noble manhood, while Juliet's form and features were in unison with the purity of her mind, the ideal of noble womanhood. They did not know each other, when it happened that the old Capulet prepared a festival for his friends, and Romeo, the young heir of the Montagues, introduces himself, disguised, with some gay friends, his cousins Benvolio and Mercutio, who are also in disguise, to this grand entertainment of their enemies. Here obtaining a sight of Juliet, Romeo falls at once in love with her.
THE PLOTS OF SHAKESPEARE'S PLAYS.

An interesting dialogue takes place between the lovers, which is interrupted by Juliet's nurse. Tybalt, a fiery kinsman of Juliet's, has discovered Romeo, vows revenge on the intruder. The interlude, however, has succeeded in producing the most ardent passion between Romeo and Juliet, and the latter endeavors to secure the interest of her nurse, of whom she makes eager inquiries about her lover, but is tantalized by the nurse with the most provoking garrulity. The mutual impression the lovers have, is so ardent that already, on the following day, a secret marriage is the outcome. The Friar Laurence, deeply moved by the two events, is induced to officiate, because he hopes that by this marriage, sooner or later, a reconciliation between the two rival houses may be effected. Immediately after this ceremony, a duel is provoked by Tybalt, the fierce cousin of Juliet, with Mercutio, the gallant kinsman of Romeo. Mercutio is slain; and Romeo, who had endeavored to prevent this duel, allows himself, by his matter-of-fact manner, to be drawn into a conflict with Tybalt, in which he kills the latter. A tumult ensues, the heads of the Capulets and Montagues, with the prince, arrive at the scene, and the latter, not fully aware of the provocation, orders the banishment of Romeo. Romeo having ascended to Juliet's chamber window, holds a stolen interview, and swearing eternal constancy, prepares to depart by the way he came. During this scene between the lovers, the nurse calls Juliet, while the sect by Friar Laurence is continued, and the nurse must leave her lover. Romeo, by the advice of the good Friar Laurence, hies to Mantua. Juliet, inconsolable over this separation, weeps bitterly. Her parents think that the death of her cousin Tybalt is the cause of her tears, and resolve to marry her to the kinsman of the prince, Count Paris, who now sues for her hand. Juliet, to avoid marrying Count Paris, and to preserve her faithfulness to Romeo, swallows an opium furnishing her by Friar Laurence, the effect of which is to produce the temporary semblance of death, and is found by her nurse and others in this trance on the morning of the intended nuptials. Universal grief follows, and Friar Laurence, with a view to moderate it, and to prove his friendship for Romeo, recommends the immediate interment of Juliet's body. Meanwhile, the messenger sent by Friar Laurence is not admitted, because he had tarried; in a second attempt, he finds Romeo's home without seeing Romeo, while Balthasar, Romeo's servant, although enabled to communicate with his master, only informs him of Juliet's death and burial, not being aware of the rest. Romeo, in his despair, procures a deadly poison, returns to Verona, where he visits Juliet's tomb at midnight, unaunted, from the misdirection of the friar's note, with her reported death being but a trance. Count Paris, the intended husband selected by Juliet's parents, meets Romeo; they quarrel, fight, and Paris falls. Romeo takes a final leave of his seemingly dead mistress, and swallows the poison. At this moment, Friar Laurence arrives, to await Juliet's awakening. She, on learning the melancholy catastrophe, kills herself, and dies in the arms of Romeo. The friar previously requests her to follow him, a request, but is eluded by approaching footsteps. Juliet, imprinting an affectionate farewell kiss on the lips of the dead Romeo, takes his dagger and stabs herself. Meanwhile, Paris's page has summoned the guards, who, on seeing what had taken place, call the prince, the Capulets and the Montague families to the scene, while other attendants bring Laurence and Romeo's servant thither. The interview is prolonged and a convivial dinner is given, but is interrupted by the news of Juliet's death, and Balthasar is thus informed. His statement is corroborated by the page and Balthasar, and also by a letter from Romeo to his father. Over the bodies of their unhappy children, the deadly enmity of the Capulet and Montague families ceases, and they are finally and effectually reconciled by the great grief that has overwhelmed them.

This drama is among the most powerful of the great poet in strong delineation of passion and richness of fancy. In Juliet we have the first striking figure of Shakespeare's youthful conception of womanhood. The glorious figure of girlhood, clad in the beauty of the southern sun, is flitting out for scarce two days from the winter of her grand but loveless home into the sunshine and warmth of love, and then sinking back into the horrors of the charcoal-house and the grave, is one that ever haunts the student of Shakespeare. The deeper and richer note of love which the great bard has struck becomes deeper and richer still in Romeo and Juliet. Fierce Tybalt; gay, fiery Mercutio; gallant Benvolio; tender, chivalrous Romeo— we see them all in fancy as they move under the intense blue of the Italian sky. The day is hot; the Capulets are abroad; Mercutio's laugh rings down the street; his jewelled cap flames in the sunlight. Such sights and sounds as these crowd on the mind's eye as we read and think. "Passion lends the lovers power," as the old song says. It is the time of the affections and warm youthful blood. But these violent and gallant kinsmen and Juliet, "ill-divining soul," prepares us for the end that awaits the delicious, passionate love of the garden scene. Far above anything Shakespeare had yet written stands this and the lovers' subsequent meeting and parting. The character of Juliet, too, is the guiding star of the play—for above Romeo, whose sentimental weeping for Rosaline, and grief when he hears of the order for his banishment, call forth a well-deserved reproach from Friar Laurence. The Nurse, so thoroughly a character, is the first and only figure of the kind in Shakespeare (except, perhaps, Mrs. Quickly). The fussy, bustling, hot-tempered old Capulet is a capital figure, too. The play is "young" all through, not only in its passions, but in its conceits and its excess of fancy. The time of the action of the play is five and a half days. The day is on Sunday night; the lovers are married on Monday, and pass the night together. Juliet drinks the sleeping draught on Tuesday night, and on Wednesday, instead of marrying Paris, is found seemingly dead and entombed. She sleeps more than forty-two hours. On Thursday Romeo returns, and poisons himself before Juliet wakes before the dawn of Friday. She stabs herself, and the families are roused from their sleep to come to the tomb, as previously related.

TIMON OF ATHENS.

It has not yet been decided as conclusive whether Shakespeare obtained his basis for this tragedy from North's English translation of Plutarch, or from Paynter's older work, entitled "Palace of Pleasure," nor is the date of its composition stated as certain. It was probably written in 1605.

SCENE.—Athens and the contiguous woods.

Timon, a noble citizen of Athens, equally renowned for his patriotic love for the cause of his fatherland, on account of his immense wealth, is charitable beyond prudence, without aim or measure. Surrounded by a crowd of parasites, he is distributing to one of them a rich jewel, nearly the last remains of his wealth. His friend, Aemelianus, the cynical philosopher, warns him of the consequences of such prodigality, but his advice is not listened to. When reduced in fortune, he knocks at the door of his friends, who formerly had been his daily guests, but finds, as might be expected, closed doors and deaf ears. Filled with bitter rage, he once more invites these false friends for the last time, but places before them, in covered dishes, nothing but lukewarm water, a fitting symbol of their friendship, and, with terrible curses, throws the vessels at their heads. Abandoned and treated with the blackest ingratitude by those he had enriched and benefited, Timon spurns the hated city of his residence, and, renouncing human society, seeks the shelter of the forest, where he becomes an inveterate misanthrope. All invitations for a return to Athens he rejects; neither Flavius, his honest steward, who offers to divide his savings with him; nor Alcibiades, his general, who offers to revenge him; nor the senators of Athens, who offer him the highest office of honor, were able to change him. In this seclusion from the busy world, he draws from his bitter experience the motives of the people who come thus to meet him—not moved by pity or even curiosity, not for the purpose of consolation or atonement, but for the selfish and covetous reasons of thirst for gold, for it was rumored in Athens that, while digging roots, he had found a treasure which a miserly fellow had once buried. Still a prodigal with his gold, not for charitable purposes, but animated by evil intentions, Timon meets all who visit his retreat only to bribe and excite, and so to lead to the destruction of the hated human race. A warrior under Alcibiades at last finds Timon's grave, and reports the inscription, written by himself, witnessing to the loathing he felt for mankind until death.

JULIUS CESAR. See Page 627.

Among the materials used by Shakespeare in this play were North's translation of the biographies of Julius Caesar, Marcus Antonius, and Brutus, by Plutarch; perhaps Arifian and Dio Cassius were not unknown to him. It was probably written in 1602, soon after the completion of Hamlet.

The political moral of the tragedy is, that the most unstatesmanlike and politically immoral policy is that which is not in keeping with the strictest requirements of the laws of right and equity. A treacherous or cruel deed, even carried out from noble or patriotic motives, cannot escape the Nemesis of retribution.

Scene.—In the city of Rome; afterwards at Sardis, and near Philippi.

Julius Caesar, renowned for many gallant deeds, and for his brilliant victories loved by the Roman nobility as well as by the people, after vanquishing the younger Pompey in Spain, thought that the time had now come to carry out the ambitious desire, so long entertained, of making himself the absolute ruler of the Roman Empire. On his return to Rome, contention was caused by the display made of the vanquished prisoners—an ostentation which had not been previously attempted—and the magnificence of this triumphal march could not altogether drown the displeasure; nevertheless, the Romans vied in showing Caesar honors, which almost amounted to adoration. In fact, Caesar was already a monarch, and his admirers urged him now to assume the name and the crown of an emperor. As Caesar was now on the eve of his departure for the war against the Parthians, his partisans endeavored to spread the rumor that, according to a prophecy contained in the book of Sibyl, only a king or emperor could be victorious over that people. At the Lupercal festival, Antonius, approaching the sacrificial altar, offered a piece of flesh, which is three times rejected by Caesar, and, amid desecrating applause of the people, the crown is returned to the capitol. Caesar, however, in opposition to this act, displaces the two tribunes who had, in different parts of the city, deprived the columns erected in his honor of their royal mantle, and imprisoned several citizens who had called him king. This strange conduct at last awakened the anger and suspicion of some of the prominent Romans against Caesar's seeming ambition. At the instigation of Cassius, a conspiracy was formed. All was soon ready for execution, and it was resolved that Brutus should be the leader, because his mere presence would, so to say, sanctify and strengthen the justice of any action. Brutus was a true Roman in that luxurious and corrupt epoch of Roman history. Even the love of honor which Caesar exhibited in the poem he forgot, in his patriotic hope to redeem Rome, and by his leadership gained to the conspiracy many of the noblest Romans. Without any offering of sacrifice or vow, the sacred league was formed, that Caesar at the festival of the Ides of March (the 16th) should be slain. Of the Roman ladies, Portia, the wife of Brutus and Catō's spirited daughter, was the only one who had knowledge of the conspiracy. On the fatal day, the assassination of Caesar is enacted in the senate-chamber, Casca giving the first thrust. After having received twenty-three wounds, the last of which Brutus inflicted, Caesar falls. Cassius had urged that Mark Antony should also be slain, but the humane policy of Brutus saves him. Mark Antony weeps over Caesar's fall; and having obtained permission to make a funeral oration over the dead body, seizes the opportunity to so artfully work on the passions of his auditors, the turbulent Roman populace, as to cause a riot, leading at length to a civil war, in which he gains supreme power. His further attempts, however, to follow the example of Julius Caesar are frustrated, and he is compelled, against his will, to acknowledge Octavius Caesar and the influence Lepidus as triumvirs in the government, whose first act was to dissolve the conspirators, from which even Cicero the great orator is not exempted, but falls a victim. After being present at the execution of those of their enemies who had lingered in Rome, Octavius and Antonius embark for Macedonia to pursue Brutus and Cassius, who, after the news had been imparted to them that Portia had committed suicide by swallowing burning coals, venture, on the day of Cassius's birthday, the decisive battle of Philippi. Mark Antony seems on the point of gaining the last great battle against the conspirators, and dismay seizes them; Brutus, their great leader, to avoid falling into the victors' hands, and impressed with the fate denounced against him by Caesar's ghost, which had appeared to him the preceding night in his tent, commands his page Strato to let him fall on his sword, and thus dies. His corpse receives an honorable burial at the hands of his victorious enemies.

Julius Caesar is not the real hero of this play, but Brutus is; yet Caesar's spirit rules, as Cassius and Brutus before their deaths acknowledge. Caesar's murder is the centre and hinge of the play. The death of this man, who represents his baseness so much the more for though his bodily presence is weak, his spirit rises, arms his avengers, and his assassins proclaim his might.
Shakespeare has made the Caesar of his play not the brave and vigorous subduer of Britain and the Goths, but Caesar old, decaying, failing both in mind and body; his long success had ruined his character and tumultuous energies. It is one of the noblest of men the poet has drawn—if not the noblest. Brutus believes himself the man to set the times right; but as honor calls him he must act. He is no judge of men; he cannot see that Cassius is playing on him as on a pipe; he misjudges Antony, and allows him to make that most effective appeal at Caesar's funeral to the passions of the fierce Roman mob; he always takes the wrong steps in action; he has his faults, too, as seen his ungenerous upbraiding of Cassius about getting gold wrongfully, when he, Brutus, had previously asked for some of it; and how his vanity gives way to Cassius's appeal to him in the scene after Caesar's death. That is a glorious scene between Brutus and his wife—pure soul to soul; no thought of earthly dailying between them.

MACBETH.

See Page 647.

HOLINSHED'S Chronicles, formed on the "History of Scotland" by the Scotch chronologist, Hector Boethius, forms the basis to the plot of this tragedy, which was written in 1606.

SCENE.—Principally in Scotland. At the end of the Fourth Act, in England.

The throne of Duncan, king of Scotland, is threatened by one of his vassals, who is aided by the Norwegians. But this danger is averted by the lustrous valor of his counsels, Macbeth and Banquo, generals of the army. On their return from the last decisive victory, these officers meet, upon a lonesome heath, three witches; the first greets Macbeth as Thane of Glamis, the second as Thane of Cawdor, while the third hails him with the prophetic announcement: "All hail, king that shall be hereafter!" Nor does Banquo go away without a prophecy, for the witches say that his sons after him shall be kings in Scotland. The early fulfilment of the first two prophecies excite in Macbeth's breast the hope that the other will be fulfilled, and that he will ascend the throne of Scotland. Macbeth, without delay, had informed his wife of all that had happened, who is not only an ambitious woman, but withal an unfeeling and unscrupulous one, and consequently a person ever ready to do anything, however wrong, to accomplish her designs. Lady Macbeth is told by her husband that King Duncan is about to visit the castle, and she at once resolves to murder the king. Duncan, who on his journey is accompanied by Malcolm and Donalbain, his sons, and a numerous train of nobles and attendants, comes to honor, by his presence, the heroic Thane, is met en route by Macbeth, who has hastened to welcome him. The king's arrival causes great rejoicing; he makes valuable presents to the attendants and also to Lady Macbeth, his kind hostess, whom he presents with a valuable diamond. Being tired with his day's travels, Duncan retires early to sleep. At midnight the murderers lie to their terrible work. Macbeth wavers; but his wife knows how to banish all his scruples, and taunts him bitterly until he nerves himself for the bloody deed, and kills the sleeping king with the dagger of one of the king's officers on guard, in order to draw the suspicion on them. At morning dawn the bloody deed of the previous night is discovered. Although Macbeth and his lady are pretending the deepest sorrow and distress, and the former, in feigned rage, rushes to King Duncan's room and stabs the two officers on whom he endeavored to cast suspicion, all doubt who the real perpetrators are. Malcolm and Donalbain flee; Macbeth is crowned king, and thus the prediction of Cassius is literally fulfilled. Macbeth, after usurping the crown, to secure himself in the possession of it, caused Banquo to be assassinated by the hands of hired murderers, and celebrates his success by a grand banquet. He is alarmed in the midst of it by the appearance of Banquo's ghost! The queen and nobles, to whom the spectre is invisible, express amazement, and vainly strive to soothe him. Macduff, the Thane of Fife, has taken refuge in England with Malcolm; but Macbeth storms his castle and murders pitilessly Lady Macduff and her children. Remorse and the dangers that menace her husband's throne having thrown Lady Macbeth into a dangerous condition, rest becomes a stranger to her harrowed mind; she walks in her sleep, and in that state discloses the secret of the king's murder to her physician and her attendant, and at last kills herself. The entire country is in revolution; one after another desert Macbeth's fasting cause, and the weird sisters drive him finally, by their mischievous oracles, into a state bordering on insanity. They tell him he need not fear any harm to his person until Birnam wood should come to Dunnsane; nor could any one born of a woman cause danger to him. But in the attack upon Macbeth's stronghold the wood really advances to Macbeth's castle. The English soldiers, while on their march, passed through these woods of Birnam, and, in order to conceal their numbers, carried green boughs and twigs in leaf before them. This is the significance of the prediction of the weird sisters; and a foe not born of woman arises indeed against him—in Macduff, who was not born of woman, in the ordinary manner of man, but was prematurely taken from his mother. The finale is reached when Macbeth falls in a struggle with the avenging Macduff; and Duncan's oldest son, Malcolm, ascends the throne as legal heir and king of Scotland.

Macbeth is a play of conscience, though the workings of that conscience are seen far more in Lady Macbeth than in her husband. The play is designed to show, too, the separation from man as well as God, the miserable, trustless isolation that sin brings in its train. Before the play opens, there must have been consultations between the guilty pair on Duncan's murder, and when the play opens, the pall of fiendish witchcraft is over us from the first. The fall of the tempted is terribly sudden. Lady Macbeth has a finer and more delicate nature than Macbeth, but having fixed her eyes on the attainment of her husband of Duncan's throne, she accepts the inevitable means; yet she cannot strike the sleeping king, who resembles her father. She sustains her husband until her thread of life suddenly snaps under its load of remorse. The real climax of the play is in the second act rather than the fifth, and no repentance is mixed with the vengeance at its close. The only relief is the gallantry of Macbeth, the gratitude of Duncan, and the picture of Macbeth's castle, so pleasantly put into Duncan's and Banquo's mouths. Macbeth had the wrong nature for a murderer—he was too imaginative. The more blood he shed, which he thought would make him safe and hardened, did but increase his terrors. But he resolves to know the worst, and after his second visit to the witches, the courage of desperation takes the place of the feigning of the guilty soul, and finally he faces and meets his own death with a coolness almost admirable.

HAMLET, PRINCE OF DENMARK.
See Page 666.

MANY books and essays have been written concerning this tragedy of all the tragedies of Shakespeare; some of the critics, in their analysis of the play, vary materially, especially in the understanding of the principal character. According to the general acceptance of modern critics, Shakespeare designed to delineate his religious, moral, artistic, and dramatic acknowledgment of faith, and wrote this drama for the extaltation of the dramatic art upon the stage, as an educator as much entitled to serve the highest interests and aims of humanity as any other educational influence.

The source from which Shakespeare gathered his material, was probably the novel entitled the "Hystorie of Hamlet," by the Danish author, Saxo Grammaticus. This drama was written, according to Dr. Drake and Chalmers, in 1597, while Malone fixes the date in 1600, and it appeared first in print, in a quarto edition, in 1604.

SCENE.—Elisine, Denmark.

Prince Hamlet, the son of King Hamlet, of Denmark, after receiving the news of the sudden death of his father, leaves Wittenberg, where he had been in pursuit of learning, and returns to the residence at Elisine. In addition to the deep mourning caused by the great loss he had sustained in his father's death, he is, moreover, exceedingly affected by his mother's speedy remarriage. The queen, who had been loveliness and temperateness by King Hamlet during the thirty years of their married life, and who simulated, at the funeral of her husband, the most frantick grief, had, nevertheless, but a few brief weeks thereafter, celebrated her nuptials with Claudius, the brother of the late lamented king. Prince Hamlet's uncle, Claudius, was a prodigal and a hypocrite, who had also contrived to accomplish his election as king of Denmark. Of wetness, from this hasty and unequal marriage, and other scandalous incidents which had transpired at the court, had long suspected a secret crime, and over this he brooded in a melancholy which alarmed his friends. Hamlet, moreover, from Horatio, and some officers who were devoted to him, learned that the ghost of the departed king had appeared to them on the portico, before the palace, at midnight. Prince Hamlet, on hearing this report, accompanied the guard on the following night, and he, indeed, discerns in the apparition, which also appears to him at midnight, the spirit of his father, who informs him that his sire had not died a natural death, but had been stealthily poisoned by his brother Claudius, the new reigning king. The ghost asks Hamlet to revenge the murder, but to spare his mother, who had been induced to commit adultery by the ignoble usurper. Hamlet vows revenge, and at once resolves on a plan to carry out this intent. But his righteous revenge is delayed by difficulties, since he does not design to commit murder or any other crime, and, moreover, respects the injunction concerning his mother, whom he did not wish to harm.

Hamlet, closeted with his royal mother, upbraids her with her incestuous marriage to his uncle, and his father's murder. His father's ghost, at this moment, appears to him. The queen, to whom the spirit is invisible, seeing Hamlet gaze on and converse with empty air, thinks his mind is disordered, and displays the greatest consternation. During this interview Hamlet hears a noise behind the arras, and thinking it to be the king, thrusts his sword through the hangings, only to find he has killed Polonius, who was eavesdropping. Hamlet now resolves to act like one whose mental faculties had become clouded, and in this completely succeeds, to all others but his friend Horatio. In this affected aberration of mind, Hamlet leads the entire court at his will to carry out his purpose of judge and avenger; and he also finds in this affectation of insanity the means of advising his beloved Ophelia to remain single. By a theatrical performance before the court, he succeeds in convicting the king of his crime. Ophelia's mind, distracted with the sights of Hamlet and the death of her father, gives way, and in pursuit of her insane amusements she is drowned. Laertes, Ophelia's brother, is instigated by the usurping uncle to fight with Hamlet, and how this act of revenge not only causes the death of the criminal king, but also the poisoning of the queen, of Laertes, and Hamlet, the drama fully unfolds.

In judging of the character of Hamlet, we must get rid of the absurdity of supposing him a man of decision and action, whose hesitation was due only to want of conviction of his duty.

While we all admire his brilliant intellectual gifts of wit, sarcasm, reflection, his courage and his virtues, we must still find him infirm of purpose in his diseased view of God's earth and its inhabitants, and of life, with his shirkings of duty. But in his uneasinesses about the mysteries of death and of the future world Hamlet but typifies each one of us at some time or other in our lives. And this is the secret of the attraction of Hamlet over us. How powerfully drawn is the scene where Hamlet, rising to nobleness and strength, upbraids his mother for her disgraceful adultery and treason to his noble father's memory, which Hamlet has felt to his inmost soul, and against his mother and her sin all the magnificent indignation of his purity and virtue speak. We forget his bloodstained hands in the white heat intensity of his words. In his second interview with Ophelia, he turns to her at first with gentle words and affection, which are curdled into bitterness and brutality by her offer to return his gifts and by seeing her father behind the arras.

Horatio, with his fortitude, his self-possession, his strong equanimity, is a strong contrast to Hamlet; and Laertes, who takes violent measures at the shortest notice to revenge his father's murder, is another instance of contrast in a different way; but then Laertes is the young gallant of the period, and his capacity for action arises in part from the absence of those moral checks of which Hamlet is sensible. Polonius is owner of the shallow wisdom of this world, and exhibits this grotesquely while now, on the brink of dotage, he sees, but cannot see through, Hamlet's ironical mockery of Ophelia's sensitive and affectionate soul, the reverse of heroic. She fails Hamlet in his need, and then in her turn becoming the sufferer, gives way under her affections. We do not honor, we commiserate her.

But whatever vacillation shows in the character of Hamlet, his grand, over-mastering purpose of revenge for his murdered father never leaves him. Polonius, as he is encraniZed,桂花他妹妹, Ophelia, all whom he plots against him, are by him overthrown; and then comes the end—the erring queen dying by her guilty husband's means, and he shortly following her; Laertes reaping the due reward of treachery, though forgiven by Hamlet before dying, and then the death of "that man in Shakespeare we feel most pity for."

KING LEAR.
See Page 696.

The legend of King Lear and his three daughters existed in the medieval ages, in the Latin and French versions, and is also found in Holinshed's Chronicles of England, whence Shakespeare obtained the material for this drama, written in 1605.

SCENE.—The Kingdom of Britain.

Lear, King of Britain, having reached his eightieth year, concluded to resign his crown, and to divide his dominion between his three daughters—Goneril, wife of the Duke of Albany; Regan, the wife of the Duke of Cornwall; and Cordelia, for whose hand and heart the King of France and the Duke of Burgundy are wooing. The old king questions his daughters as to which of them has the greatest love for him, and while Goneril and Regan, in the most exaggerated terms express their affections, Cordelia, scorning the fulsome meanness and hypocrisy of her sisters, declares in clear and simple words her childish love for her father. Lear, who had always been a fiercely passionate man, feels so embittered at the seeming callousness of her reply, that he rejects and dishonors her formerly favorite daughter, and divides his realm between the two elder daughters equally. He reserves for himself merely the maintenance of his title as king, and a hundred knights as attendants. With each of his daughters he is to alternately live one month at a time with his knightly guard. The Earl of Kent, who naturally raises objections against this precipitate action of the king, is banished from the kingdom. Cordelia, although disinherited and spurned by her father, and now rejected by the Duke of Burgundy, is nevertheless chosen as the wife of the King of France, solely on account of her virtue, merits, and charms. But the real characters of Goneril and Regan soon manifest themselves. They begin to treat their aged father with coldness, and they not only suffer, but order, moreover, that the servants fail to show the respect due to the old king. These unnatural daughters furthermore demand the entire dismissal of his guard of one hundred faithful warriors. Lear dies from Goneril and Regan, but only as it were from one trouble to a greater, for each sister endeavors to vie with the other in mockery and derision. This is too hard for the weak old man to bear. In his despair he becomes insane, and leaves the court at night during a violent rainstorm, his daughters closing the door on him. But the faithful Kent, in the disguise of an attendant, and his fool, accompany Lear through the dismal darkness, until the Earl of Gloucester meets them, who had discarded his son Edgar on account of the slanderous accusations by Edmund, his bastard son. In a howl upon the field the earl found his son Edgar, in a disguise as poor Tom, and here the poor old king with his two faithful friends at last found refuge. Through the aid of Gloucester and Kent, King Lear is secretly brought to the town of Dover, where Cordelia lands with an army from France, for the purpose of reinstating her father upon the throne. Goneril and Regan, meantime, fall in love with Gloucester's bastard son Edmund, and Regan is poisoned in a fit of jealousy by her sister, while her husband, the villainous Cornwall (who had deprived the Earl of Gloucester of his eyes, for the latter's intercession for the aged king), dies by the hand of one of his own servants. Goneril ends her accursed career by committing suicide. Cordelia's army is outnumbered and defeated by Edmund's soldiers, and Cordelia and her father are captured. After Cordelia had been strangled by an assassin hired by Edmund, the latter meets his well-deserved fate in a duel with Edgar. Lear dies while tenderly clasping in his arms the corpse of Cordelia, but Edgar, Kent, and the Duke of Albany remain to again firmly establish the much harassed kingdom of Britain.

Lear is especially the play of the breach of family ties—the play of horrors, the unnatural cruelty to fathers, brothers, and sisters of those who should have loved them dearest. Lear, as he is first presented to us, is so self-indulgent and unrestrained, so fooled to the top of his bent, so terribly unjust, not only to Cordelia, but to Kent, that we feel that hardly any punishment is too bad for him. Stripped of power by his own rash folly, his own fool teaches him what a fool he has been. When he has come to himself, cut off the flatterers who surrounded him, and realizes the consequences of his own folly, our sympathy for him melts into tender pity. The pathos of his recognition of Cordelia, his submission to her, and seeking her blessing, his lamentation over her corpse, are exceeded by nothing in Shakespeare. Note the wonderful power of this last scene—the poor old king, bending with piteous lamentations over the dead body of his murdered daughter, trying to raise her to life, and, failing, relapsing into the dread torpor of despairing insanity. Cordelia is the sun above the depths shown in the natures of her sisters Goneril and Regan. The noble and long-suffering Kent is a fine character. Edgar and Edmund are a contrasted pair; both are men of penetration, energy, and skill—Edgar on the side of good, Edmund on the side of evil.

OTHELLO, THE MOOR OF VENICE.
See Page 722.

Based upon a romance contained in the Italian collection of "I Leucotomiti," by Giraldi Cinthio, this tragedy was written in 1612 and first entered at Stationers' Hall, Oct. 6th, 1621, being printed in the following year.

SCENE.—During the First Act in Venice; during the rest of the drama at a seaport town in Cyprus.

Othello, a courageous Moor, and able commander-in-chief in the service of the republic of Venice, wins the love of Desdemona, a noble Venetian lady, and only daughter of the Senator Brabantio. The marriage secretly concluded between them is not acknowledged by the father, who deems the affinity of his daughter for a Moor, celebrated though he might be, as inexplicable and unnatural, and that only by spells and witchcraft could the fair Desdemona have been seduced to marry Othello, without the consent of her parent. At this juncture the services of the gallant Moor are needed by the republic of Venice to repel the invasion by the Turks of the island of Cyprus. Othello, accompanied by Desdemona, his wife, Cassio, his lieutenant, and Iago, his ensign, with Iago's wife, Emília (the latter acting as attendant to Desdemona), accompanies the party. A storm scattered the Turkish fleet; but another tempest is rising against the peace of Othello, stirred up by a devil in the form of a human being. Iago entertains a deadly hatred against Othello, partly because he accuses him of having had in the past an illicit connection with his wife Emília, and partly because Othello had preferred Cassio and had appointed him to a vacancy of a higher rank; whereas Iago believes he, from his bravery and knowledge, was fairly entitled to that place. Iago therefore plans a terrible revenge whereby he wishes to destroy the Moor, Desdemona, and several others. During a festival he induces Cassio, who happened to be officer of the guard, to partake of wine. A quarrel is thus cunningly contrived, Cassio giving great offence, and even using his drawn sword. The alarm-bell is sounded, which brings the general to the scene, and Cassio loses his lieutenant. The unfortunate officer, brought to despair by the loss of his position, his unhappiness still further enhanced by the displeasure of his general, applies to Desdemona, who, through her womanly sympathy, becomes his warm defender and intercessor, the more because he during her courtship had acted as the bearer of the missives between herself and Othello. Cassio, while beseeching his high-spirited patroness to intercede for his reinstatement, at the approach of the Moor quickly withdraws from her presence; Iago cunningly uses the fatal movement by ingeniously devised hints, which awaken the jealous feelings of Othello; and in further explanation of this conduct beguiles Othello, by telling him that a woman who had deceived her old father in such a clever way, could also be easily induced to betray her husband. Desdemona having received from Othello a handkerchief, the gift of the Moor's mother to her son, is asked for it by Othello. This handkerchief had been stolen from her for the purpose of exciting her husband's jealousy. Immediately Othello had lost it, he told Desdemona apologetically; but Othello, believing this to be but a confirmation of Iago's charges against his wife's chastity, becomes enraged, and quits her with fierce injunctions to seek the handkerchief immediately and bring it to him. Wild with jealous frenzy, and resolved on her death for her supposed infidelity, Othello enters his wife's chamber at midnight, awakens her, charges her with having loved Cassio, and, notwithstanding Desdemona's protestations of innocence, smoothes her while entreating for mercy. Immediately upon this tragedy Desdemona's innocence is brought to light, by the explanations of Iago's wife Emilia, for which her husband fatally stabs her. Othello's anguish on realizing that he was the murderer of his innocent and trusting wife, who had ever been tenderly faithful to him, was so great that he fell upon his sword, pressing a last parting kiss on the lips of his dead wife.

The magnificent third act of this play is thought by many commentators to be Shakespeare's masterpiece. Othello has a free and noble nature, naturally trustful, with a kind of grand innocence, retaining some of his simplicity of soul amid the subtle and astute Venetian politicians. All that he tells of himself wins our hearts, like Desdemona's, to him. Of regal descent, no boaster, but a doer, he has no self-distrust when dealing with men. He commands like a full soldier. Although he tells a "round unvarnished tale," yet we see in it proof of that imaginative power which, imposed on him by the satanic Iago, was the cause of all his sorrow. There is no character in Shakespeare's plays so full of serpentine power and serpentine poison as Iago — "honest Iago." Othello has every manly virtue, and his love is so devoted that he can give up war for it. The first note of coming discord is struck by Iago's "I like not that," and the first real suspicion is in Othello's "By heaven, he echoes me." But when, to Iago's insinuations, Othello has once taken hold of Othello's mind — he only knowing till then woman's nature through the followers of the camp — imagination works with terrible rapidity. The light of love which lit his face when he before met Desdemona, when he yielded to her first entreaties for Cassio, leaves him never to return. Desdemona's ill-starred answers, coupled with Iago's cunning prompting, hurry on poor Desdemona's death. Then comes the disclosure of the dupe he has been; and the kiss with which he dies, shows where his love still was, and pleads for him. A noble nature "perplexed in the extreme." Cassio, notwithstanding his moral weaknesses, has a chivalrous nature, and has an enthusiastic admiration for his great general and the beautiful lady, his wife. Emilia may be compared to Paulina, in the Winter's Tale.

Cymbeline.

See Page 775.

Cymbeline, the king from whom the play takes its title, began his reign, according to Holinshed, in the nineteenth year of the reign of Augustus Caesar, and the scene of the tragedy commences about the twenty-fourth year of Cymbeline's reign in Britain, i.e., in the sixteenth year of the Christian era. This play was written, according to Malone, in 1605, and, according to Chalmer, in 1600.

Scene.—In Britain and in Italy.

Cymbeline's first wife died when his three children (two sons and a daughter) were very young. Imogen, the eldest of these children, was brought up in her father's court, but the two sons were stolen out of their nursery during their infancy, and no trace of what had become of them, nor by whom they had been abducted, could be discovered. Cymbeline was again married. His second spouse was a wicked, plotting woman, and extremely cruel to her stepchild Imogen, and yet, despite this hatred, desired her to marry Cloten, a son of her own by a former husband; since by this means she hoped, at the death of her husband, to place the crown of Britain upon the head of Cloten, her own offspring. She was aware that if the lost children were not found, the princess Imogen would be the sole heir of the king. But this design was spoiled by Imogen herself, who married, without the consent or even knowledge of her father or the queen, an accomplished gentleman named Posthumus, whose father had died a soldier's death in the wars for Cymbeline, and his mother soon after his birth. He also grieved at the loss of his husband. Imogen and Posthumus grew up at court, and were playfellows from their infancy. When Cymbeline heard of this marriage, he banished Posthumus from his native land forever. The queen, who pretended to pity Imogen for the grief she suffered at losing her husband, offered to procure them a private meeting before Posthumus set out on his journey to Rome, whence he intended to go. The young couple took a most affectionate leave of each other. Imogen gave her husband a diamond ring, which had been her mother's, and Posthumus promised never to part with this ring; he also fastened a bracelet on the arm of his wife, which he prayed she would preserve carefully as a token of his love, and both vowed eternal love and fidelity.

Imogen remained a solitary and sad lady in her father's palace, and Posthumus left for Rome, where he fell into company with some gay young men of different nations, each one of them praising the ladies of his own country, and his own love. Posthumus, who praised his own dear Imogen as the most virtuous and constant woman in the world, offended by this speech a gentleman named Iachimo, who felt aggrieved that a lady of Britain should be so praised above the refined Roman ladies, his countrywomen. Posthumus, having wagered with Iachimo his ring against a sum of gold, that the chastity of his wife Imogen was invulnerable, the artful Italian, who had journeyed to Cymbeline's palace in Britain, contrives to hide himself in her bed-chamber, and thus furnishes himself with particulars in describing her person and her apartment, and, as a further evidence, by stealing her bracelet, in order to induce Posthumus to give him the ring. Re-appearing with the head of Cloten, he has stolen, Iachimo claims from Posthumus the forfeit of his wife's infidelity. Posthumus at first doubts, as does his friend Philario, but Iachimo's proofs are so strong, that he at length yields to their force, gives him indignantly the ring, and vows vengeance on Imogen. Posthumus, now convinced of his wife's inconstancy, employs his servant Pisanio to repair to Britain for the purpose of murdering her; but Pisanio, in the full belief of Imogen's innocence, advises her to disguise and absent herself for a time from her father's court, and wait till her truth can be made apparent. Wandering in pursuit of this advice, she became very tired, and a kind Providence strangely directed her steps to the dwelling of her long-lost brothers, stolen in infancy by Belarius, a former lord in the court of Cymbeline. Belarius, banished for alleged treason, has taken up in a forest, where he lived concealed in a cave. At this cave it was Imogen's fortune to arrive, and she entered at once. On looking about, she discovered some meat, which she began to eat. Her two brothers, who had been hunting with their reputed father, Belarius, by this time had returned home, and discovering the fair wanderer, imagined there was an angel in the cave, so beautiful did Imogen look. The brothers now addressed them, and begged pardon for their intrusion, offering money for what she had eaten, which

PERICLES, PRINCE OF TYRE.

See Page 603.

The story on which this play is formed is of great antiquity. Shakespeare probably gleaned it from Lawrence Twine's novel, entitled "The Pattern of Painful Adventures," published in 1607. That he also knew the treatise based on the same matter, viz., "Confessio Amantis," by Gower, appears already from the rôle of the chorus, which Shakespeare conveys to this ancient English poet for the elucidation of the plot and the connection of the various scenes. The English poet Dryden, in the prologue to his tragedy, 'Circe' (1677), calls 'Pericles the first work born to Shakespeare's muse.' This tragedy was entered at Stationers' Hall, May 2, 1605, by Edward Blount, one of the printers of the first folio edition of Shakespeare's works; but it did not appear in print until the following year, and then it was published not by Blount, but by Henry Gossen.

SCENE.—In various countries.

Antiochus, king of Antioch, desirous of having his daughter remain unmarried, and thus in his own keeping at the palace of his court, causes her suitors to be slain if they are unable to solve a riddle which he submits to them. In this way the great beauty of the young princess, who is presumed to be a virgin, becomes a fatal snare to the lives of numerous wooers, who, while burning with ardent love for her, rashly undertake the great task of trying to untangle the puzzle. At last the enigma is solved by Pericles, Prince of Tyre, who at once resigns all his claims on the fair girl, since he has learned with horror, from the solution of the riddle, that king and princess—father and daughter—lived together in incest. Notwithstanding this refusal to marry the princess, Pericles is invited by Antioch to remain as a visitor at his court for some time. But the Prince of Tyre concluded not to stay, since it had been intended to him that this invitation was merely extended to consummate his murder, Antiochus fearing the circulation of the report of his nefarious conduct and that of his unchaste daughter. Pericles hastened away to Tyre, but even in that city he does not feel secure against the persecution of Antioch, and, fearing that his presence at home might embroil the people of his country in war, resolves to go abroad for pleasure, not renouncing, on intrusting his government to the care of Helicamus, a lord of his court and one of his most faithful advisers, Pericles goes to Tarsus, where he soon becomes beloved, and moreover ingratiates himself with the people by rendering them aid in a terrible famine, by supplying them with stores of provisions for their relief. Cleon, the governor of Tarsus, prevails on Pericles to settle in his country, but Pericles declines, and on resuming his travels he is driven by a storm at sea to the coast of Pentapolis, where he, as victor in a tournament, wins the hand of the fair Princess Thaisa, daughter of King Simonides. After staying a year at the court of his father-in-law, Pericles starts on his return home, having previously heard the news of Antiochus's demise. The sea, never a friend to Pericles, treated him badly, for suddenly had the vessel set sail when another gale nearly wrecked the ship. The young wife of Pericles, who accompanied him, was terribly frightened by the fierceness of the tempest, and during its prevalence was confined and delivered of a daughter, who, being born at sea, received the name Marina—that is, "the sea-born." Thaisa while in childbed is afflicted with spasms and convulsions, and in this state, taken for dead, is placed in a well-sealed casket.
and thrown in the sea, because the storm, which was still raging with unabated violence, worked on the superstitious sailors, who did not think the sea would become calm again so long as a dead body was on board. The waves drifted the casket towards the shores of Ephesus, where Cerimon, a noble physician of great renown, soon succeeded, by means of his science and art, in reviving the apparently dead Thaisa, and restoring her again to life and vigor. Thaisa now enters the temple of Diana as a priestess to serve that goddess. Meantime, her husband, Pericles, filled with a consuming melancholy, had intrusted his daughter to the care of Cleon and his wife Dionyza, and left Tarsus for his home in Tyre. Marina grew up at the palace of her foster-parents, and when she had reached her fourteenth year, by her matchless beauty and unequaled mental gifts, provokes the jealousy and envy of her foster-mother, whose daughter, Philotea, was entirely obscured by the brilliant charms of Marina. Dionyza, determined to rid herself of such a rival, hires an assassin, who is just in the act of murdering the fair Marina when he is deprived of his victim by the sudden interference of some pirates, who wrest Marina from his clutches and escape with their fair prize to Mitylene, where they sell her to the keeper of a brothel. But the virtuous Marina knows not only how to keep herself pure and undefiled in the house of lust and sin, but also how to so impress her vicious tempters that they desist from their immoral practices. Through the intercession of the governor of Mitylene, Marina obtains her liberty, and by virtue of her many talents is enabled to maintain herself until she is found by her father, who, driven by melancholy and despair, had again set out on his travels, and by a strange chance reached Mitylene, whence father and daughter embark for Ephesus. Here, visiting the temple of Diana, father and daughter have the inexpressible joy of finding in the high-priestess the long-lost wife and mother.

The drama concludes with Pericles and Thaisa blessing the nuptials of their daughter and Lysimachus, the governor of Mitylene, and giving the crown of Tyrus as a wedding-gift to the happy couple. Cleon and Dionyza, the wicked foster-mother of Thaisa, met with a sad but deserved fate at the hands of their own outraged people, who, enraged at their ingratitude towards Pericles—the friend of the citizens in their great extremity—set fire to the palace, which was burned with all its occupants in one general funeral pyre.

SHAKESPEARE'S POEMS.

See Page 822.

BESIDES the thirty-seven plays contained in this edition, Shakespeare wrote the following poems, which were at first published separately. In Venus and Adonis, entered in the Stationers’ register, and printed in 1593, we have the same luxuriance of fancy, the same intensity of passion as in Romeo and Juliet, unlawful as the indulgence in that passion is. From whatever source came the impulse to take from Ovid the heated story of the fierce lust of the heathen goddesses, we cannot forbear noticing how, through this stifling atmosphere, the great poet has blown the fresh breezes of English meadows and woodlands. No play has fuller evidence of Shakespeare’s intimate knowledge and intense delight in country scenes and sights. This poem was printed six times during Shakespeare’s life, and was dedicated by Shakespeare, when twenty-nine years of age, to the young Earl of Southampton. The Rape of Lucrece followed, 1594, and was also dedicated to Southampton, as “the first heir of my invention,” who, according to Sir William d’Avenant’s statement, presented the poet with the sum of £1000, so he might make some purchase. If the incident is accepted as a fact, it is honorable to the liberality as well as the cultivated taste of the Earl of Southampton, and shows that the “poor Warwickshire lad” met with a munificent patron at an early stage of his literary career. The Passionate Pilgrim was printed in 1599; A Lover’s Complaint, not dated; and a collection of Sonnets appeared in 1609. That some of these sonnets existed in 1598 we now know. They are so evidently intensely autobiographical and self-revealing, so one with the spirit and inner meaning of Shakespeare’s growth and life, that we cannot take them in any other way than as the records of his loves and fears. Shakespeare admirers are so anxious to remove any seeming stain from the character of their ideal, that they deny that these sonnets are life pictures, forgetting how great is the difference between our times and those of Queen Elizabeth, and that an intimacy now thought criminal was then, in certain circles, nearly as common as hand-shaking is with us. “There are some men who love for ‘love’s sake,’ and loving once love always; and of these was Shakespeare,” says a distinguished author. “They do not lightly give their love, but once given, their faith is incorporate with their being.”
In which the Plays of Shakespeare are supposed to have been written, according to the arrangements of

CHALMERS, MALONE, AND DR. DRAKE.

Chalmers and Malone reject Titus Andronicus and Pericles as spurious. Dr. Drake does not notice the former play, but, on the authority of Dryden, admits the latter as genuine, and supposes it to have been produced in 1600. The dates which they severally ascribe to the remaining plays are as follows:

SCENE—a ship at sea: an island.

[For an Analysis of the Plot of this Play, see page xlv.]

ACT I.

Re-enter Boatswain.

Boats. Down with the topmast! yare! lower, lower! Bring her to try with main-course. [A cry within.] A plague upon this howling! they are louder than the weather or our office.

Re-enter Sebastian, Antonio, and Gonzalo.

Yet again! what do you here? Shall we give o'er and drown? Have you a mind to sink? Sch. A pox o' your throat, you bawling, blasphemous, incharitable dog!

Boats. Work you then.
Ant. Hang, eur! hang, you whoreson, insolent noisemaker! We are less afraid to be drowned than you art.

Gon. I'll warrant him for drowning: though the ship were no stronger than a nutshell and as leaky as an unstanched wench.

Boats. Lay her a-hold, a-hold! set her two courses off to sea again; lay her off.

Enter Mariner's vessel.

Mariners. All lost! to prayers, to prayers! all lost! Boats. What, must our mouths be cold? Gon. The king and prince at prayers! let's assist
For our case is as theirs. [They, Sch. I'm out of patience.
Ant. We are merely cheated of our lives by drunkards:
This wide-chapp'd rascal—would thou mightst lie drowning
The washing of ten tides!

Gon. He'll be hang'd yet, Though every drop of water swear against it And gape at widest to glunt him.

[Confused noise within: 'Mercy on us!'—'We split, we split!'—'Farewell my wife and children!']

'Farewell, brother!'—'We split, we split, we
Ant. Let's all sink with the king.
Seb. Let's take leave of him.

[Exeunt Ant. and Seb.]

Gon. Now would I give a thousand furlongs of sea for an acre of barren ground, long heath, brown furze, any thing. The wills above be done! but I would fain die a dry death.

[Exeunt.]
SCENE II.—The island. Before Prospero's cell.

Enter Prospero and Miranda.

Mir. If by your art, my dearest father, you have put the wild waters in this roar, allay them.

The sky, it seems, would pour down stinking pitch, but that the sea, mounting to the welkin's cheek, blushes the fire out. O, I have suffered much. With those that I saw suffer: a brave vessel, which had no doubt, some noble creature in her, Dash'd all to pieces. O, the cry did knock against my very heart. Poor souls, they perish'd. If I had been any god of power, I would have sunk the sea within the earth or crepe it. Should the good ship so have swallowed and the fraughting souls within her.

Pros. Be collected: No more amazement: tell your piteous heart There's no harm done.

Mir. O, woe the day!

Pros. No harm.

Mir. I have done nothing but in care of thee,

Of thee, my dear one, thee, my daughter, who

Art ignorant of what thou art, nought knowing

Of whence I am, nor that I am more better

Than Prospero, master of a full poor cell,

And thy no greater father.

Pros. More to know

Mmir. Didst never meddle with my thoughts.

Pros. 'Tis time I should inform thee farther. Lend thy hand, And pluck my magic garment from me. So:

Lie there, my art. Wipe thon thine eyes; have comfort.

The direful spectacle of the wreck, which touch'd

The very virtue of compassion in thee,

I have with such provision in mine art

So safety order'd that there is no soul —

No, not so much perdition as an hair

Betid to any creature in the vessel

Which thou heard'st cry, which thou saw'st sink.

Sit down;

For thou must now know farther.

Mir. You have often Begun to tell me what I am, but stopp'd

And left me to a bootless inquisition,

Concluding 'Stay: not yet.'

Pros. The hour's now come; the very minute bids thee out of thy car:

Obey and be attentive. Canst thou remember

A time before we came unto this cell?

I do not think thou canst, for then thou wast not

Out three years old.

Mir. Certainly, sir, I can.

Pros. By what? by any other house or person?

Of any thing the image tell me that

Hath kept with thy remembrance.

Mir. 'Tis far off

And rather like a dream than an assurance

That my remembrance warrants. Had I not

Four or five women once in one scene? [is it

Pros. Thou hastad, and more, Miranda. But how

That this lives in thy mind? What seest thou else

In the dark backward and abysm of time?

If thou remember'st aught ere thou camest here,

How thou camest here thou mayst.

Mir. Twelve year since, Miranda, twelve year

Thy father was the Duke of Milan and [since,

A prince of power.

Pros. Thy mother was a piece of virtue, and Shall I say wast my daughter; and thy father

Was Duke of Milan; and thou his only heir.

Mir. And princess no worse issued.

Pros. O the heavens!

What foul play had we, that we came from thence? Or blessed was't we did?

Mir. Both, both, my girl: By foul play, as thou say'st, we were weaved thence, But blessedly holp bither.

Pros. To think o' the teen that I have turn'd you to, Which from my remembrance! Please you, farther.

Mir. My brother and thy uncle, call'd Antonio —

I pray thee, mark me—that a brother should

Be so peridious!—he whom next thyself

Of all the world I loved and to him put

The manage of my state; as at that time

Through all the signories it was the first

And Prospero the prince, begg'd so reputed

In dignity, and for the liberal arts
Without a parallel; those being all my study,

The government I cast upon my brother

And to my state grew stranger, being transported

And rapt in secret studies. Thy false uncle —

Dost thou attend me?

Pros. Sir, most heedfully.

Pros. Being once perfected how to grant suits,

How to deny them, who to advance and who

To trash for over-topping, new created

The creaturcs that were mine, I say, or chang'd em,

Or else new form'd them; having both the key

Of officer and office, set all hearts to the state

To what time pleas'd his car; that now he was

The ivy which had bid my princely trunk, [not.

And snick'd my verdure out on't. Thou attendst

Mir. O, good sir, I do.

Pros. I pray thee, mark me.

I, thus neglecting worldly ends, all dedicated

To closeness and the bettering of my mind
With that which, but by being so retir'd,

O'er-prized all popular rate, in my false brother

Awaked an evil nature; and my trust,

Like a good parent, did begot of him

A falsehood in its contrary as great
As my trust was; which had indeed no limit,

A confidence sans bound. He being thus lorded,

Not only with what my revenue yielded,

But what my power might else exact, like one

Who having into truth, by telling of it,

Made such a sinner of his memory,

To credit his own lie, he did believe

He was indeed the duke; out o' the substitution,

And executing the outward face of royalty,

With all prerogative: hence his ambition growing

Dost thou hear? —

Mir. Your tale, sir, would cure deafness.

Pros. To have no screen between this part he

And him he play'd it for, he needs will be [they'd

Absolute Milan. Me, poor man, my library

Was dukedom large enough: of temporal royalties

He thinks me now incapable: confederates:—

So dry he was for sway — wi' the King of Naples

To give him annual tribute, do him homage,

Subject his coronet to his crown and bend

The dukedom yet unbowed — alas, poor Milan!

To most ignoble stooping.

Mir. O the heavens!

Pros. Mark his condition and the event; then tell

If this might be a brother. [me

Mir. I should sin

To think but nobly of my grandmother:

Good worms have borne bad sons.

Pros. My father,

Now the condition.

This King of Naples, being an enemy

To me inveterate, heartens my brother's suit;

Which was, that he, in lieu o' the premises

Of homage and I know not how much tribute,

Should provide and paid, and

Out of the dukedom and confer fair Milan

With all the honours on my brother: whereon,

A treacherous army levied, one midnight
Fated to the purpose did Antonio open
The gates of Milan; and, 't was the end of darkness,
The ministers for the purpose hurried hence
Me and thy crying self.
Mir. Alack, for pity!
I, not remembering how I cried out then,
Will cry it o'er again: it is a hint
That wrings mine eyes to 't.

Pros. And then I'll bring thee to the present business
Which now's upon's; without the which this story
Was most impertinent.
Mir. Wherefore did they not
That hour destroy us?
Pros. Well demanded, wench:
My tale provokes that question. Dear, they durst not,
So dear the love my people bore me, nor set
A mark so bloody on the business, but
With colours fairer painted their foul ends.
In few, they hurried us aboard a bark,
Bore us some leagues to sea; where they prepared
A rotten carcase of a boat, not rigg'd,
Nor tackle, sail, nor mast; the very rats
Instinctively had quit it: there they hoist us,
To try to the sea that road'd to us, to sigh
To the winds whose pity, sighing back again,
Did us but loving wrong.
Mir. Was I then to you!
Ace. Alack, what trouble
Thou wast that did preserve me. Thou didst smile,
Infused with a fortitude from heaven,
When I have deck'd the sea with drops full salt,
Under my burthen groan'd; which raised in me
An under going stomach, to bear up
Against what should ensue.
Mir. How came we a-shore?
Pros. By providence divine
Some food we had and some fresh water that
A noble Neapolitan, Gonzalo,
Out of his charity, being then appointed
Master of this design, did give us, with Rich garments, linens, stuffs and necessaries, [ness,
Which since have steamed much; so, of his gentle-
Knowing I loved my books, he furnish'd me
From mine own library with volumes that
I prize above my dukedom.
Pros. Would I might
But ever see that man?
Pros. Arise: [Resumes his mantle.
Sit still, and hear the last of our sea-sorrow.
Here in this island we arrived; and here
Have I, thy schoolmaster, made thee more profit
Than other princesses can that have more time
For vainer hours and tutors not so careful. [you, sir,
Mir. Heavens thank you for'r! And now, I pray
For still 'tis beating in my mind, your reason
For raising this sea-storm?
Pros. Know thus far forth.
By accident most strange, bountiful Fortune,
Now my dear lady, hath mine enemies
Brought to this shore; and by my presence
I find my zenith doth depend upon
A most auspicious star, whose influence
If now I court not but omit, my fortunes
Will ever after droop. Here cease more questions:
Thou art inclined to sleep; 't is a good dulness,
And give it way; I know thou canst not choose.

Pros. Thine own sleep. [Miranda sleeps.

Ariel, come away, servant, come. I am ready now.
Approach, my Ariel, come.

Enter Ariel.

Ari. All hail, great master! grave sir, hail! I come
To answer thy best pleasure; be 't to fly,
To swim, to dive into the fire, to ride
On the curl'd clouds, to thy strong bidding task.
Act i. the tempest.

Scene ii.

To run upon the sharp wind of the north, To do me business in the veins o’ the earth When it is baked with frost.

Ari. I do not, sir. [forgot
Pros. Thou liest, malignant thing! Hast thou The foul witch Sychorax, who with age and envy Was grown into a hoop? hast thou forgot her? Ari. No, sir. [speak; tell me Pros. Thou hast. Where was she born?
Ari. Sir, in Argier.

Pros. O, was she so? I must Once in a month recount what thou hast been, Which thou forgot’st. This damm’d witch Sychorax, For mischiefs manifold and sorceries terrible To enter human hearing, from Argier, Thou knowest, was banish’d: for one thing she did They would not take her life. Is not this true?

Ari. Ay, sir. [with child
Pros. This blue-eyed Hag was hither brought And here was left by the sailors. Thou, my slave, As thou report’st thyself, wast then her servant; And, for thy want a spirit too delicate To act her earthly and abhor’d commands, Refusing her grand hesit, she did confine thee, By help of her more potent ministers And in her most unmitigable rage, Into a grove pine: within which, If imprison’d thou diest painfully remain A dozen years; within which space she died And left thee there; where thou diest vest thy groans As fast as mill-wheels strike. Then was this island—Save for the son that she did litter here, A free-kned wheed Hag-born—no honour’d with A human shape.

Ari.

Yes, Caliban her son.

Pros. Dull thing, I say so; he, that Caliban Whom now I keep in service. Thou best know’st What torment I did find thee in; thy groans Did make wolves howl and penetrate the breasts Of ever angry bears: it was a torment To lay upon the damm’d, which Sychorax Could not again undo: it was mine art, When I arrived and heard thee, that made gape When line and let thee out.

Ari. I thank thee, master.

Pr. If thou more murmur’st, I will rend an oak And peg thee in his knotty entrails till Thou hast howl’d away twelve winters.

Ari. I will be correspondent to command And do my spiriting gently.

Pros. Do so, and after two days I will discharge thee.

Ari. That’s my noble master!

What shall I do? say what? what shall I do?

Pros. Go make thyself like a nymph o’ the sea; be To no sight but thine and mine, invisible [subject To every eyelid else. Go take this shape And hisher come in’t: go, hence with diligence! [Exit Ariel.

Awake, dear heart, awake! thou hast slept well;

Awake!

Mir. The strangeness of your story put Heavyness in me.

Pros. Shake it off. Come on;

We’ll visit Caliban my slave, who never Yielded us kind answer.

Mir. ’Tis a villain, sir;

I do not love to look on.

Pros. But, as ’tis, We cannot miss him: he does make our fire, Fetch in our wood and serves in offices That profit us. What, ho! slave! Caliban! Thou earth, thou! speak.

Cal. [Within] There’s wood enough within.

Pros. Come forth, I say! there’s other business Come, thou torture! when? [for thee:

Re-enter Ariel like a water-nymph.

Fine apparition! My quaint Ariel, Hark in thine ear.

Pros. My lord, it shall be done. [Exit.

Pros. Thou poisonous slave, got by the devil him— Upon thy wicked dam, come forth! [self Enter Caliban.

Cal. As wicked dew as e’er my mother brush’d With raven’s feather from unwholesome fen Drop on you both! a south-west blow on ye And blister you all e’er! [cramps.

Pros. For this, be sure, to-night thou shalt have Side-stitches that shall pen thy breath up; urchins Shall, for that vast of night that they may work, All exercise on thee; thou shalt be pinch’d As thick as honeycomb, each pinch more stinging Than bees that made ‘em.

Cal. I must eat my dinner.

This island’s mine, by Sychorax my mother, Which thou takest from me. When thou camest first, Thou strokest me and madest much of me, wouldst Water with berries in’t, and teach me how [give me To name the bigger light, and how the less, That burn by day and night: and then I loved thee And show’d thee all the qualities o’ the isle, The fresh springs, prime-pils, barren place and fere- Passed I that did so! All the charms [file: Of Sychorax, toads, beetles, bats, light on you! For I am all the subjects that you have, Which first was mine own king: and here you stye me In this hard rock, whiles you do keep from me The rest o’ the island.

Pros. Thou most lying slave, [thee, Whom stripes may move, not kindness! I have used Filth as thou art, with human care, and lodged thee in mine own cell, till thou didst seek to violate The honour of my child.

Cal. O ho, O ho! would’st thou had been done! Thou didst prevent me; I had peopled else This isle with Calibans.

Pros. Abhorred slave, Which any print of goodness wilt not take, Being capable of all ill! I pilled thee, Took pains to make thee speak, taught thee each hour One thing or other: when thou didst not, savage, Know thin ye own meaning, but wouldst gabble like A thing most brutish, I endow’d thy purposes With words that made them known. But thy vile race, [ networking Though thou didst learn, had that in’t which good Could not abide to be with; therefore wast thou Deservedly confined into this rock, Who hast deserved more than a prison.

Cal. You taught me language; and my profit on’t Is, I know how to curse. The red plague rid you For learning me your language!

Pros. Hag-seed, hence! Fetch us in fuel; and be quick, thou’rt best, To answer other business. Shrugst thou, malice? If thou neglect’st or dost unwillingly, What I command, I’ll rack thee with old cramps, Fill all thy bones with aches, make thee roar That beasts shall tremble at thy din.

Cal. No, pray thee.

[Aside] I must obey: his art is of such power, It would control my dam’s god, Soro, And make a vassal of him.

Pros. So, slave; hence! [Exit Caliban.

Re-enter Ariel, invoice, playing and singing; Ferdi- nand following.

Ariel’s song.

Come unto these yellow sands, And then take hands; Courtsi’d when you have and kiss’d! The wild waves whist,
Foot it feathly here and there;
And, sweet sprites, the burthen bear.
Burthen [dispersly]. Hark, hark!

The watch-dogs bark: Bow-wow.

Ari. Hark! hark! I hear them. — Ding-dong, bell.

Per. Where should this music be? 'tis the air or the
It sounds no more; and, sure, it waits upon [earth?]
Some god o' the island. Sitting on a bank,
Wre菅ing again the king my father's wreck,
This music crept by me upon the waters,
Allaying both their fury and my passion
With its sweet air: thence I have follow'd it,
Or it hath drawn me rather. But 'tis gone.
No, it begins again.

Ariel sings.

Full fathom five thy father lies;
Of his bones are coral made;
Those are pearls that were his eyes:
Nothing of him that doth fade
But doth suffer a sea-change
Into something rich and strange.
Sea-nymphs hourly ring his knell:
Burthen. Ding-dong.

Ari. Hark! now I hear them,—Ding-dong, bell.

Per. The ditty does remember my drown'd father.
This is no mortal business, nor no sound
That the earth owes. I hear it now above me.
Pros. The fringed curtains of thine eye advance
And say what thou seest yond.

Mir. What is 't? a spirit? Lord, how it looks about! Believe me, sir,
It carries a brave form. But 'tis a spirit. [senses

Pros. No, wench; it eats and sleeps and hath such
As we have, such. This gallant which thou seest
Was in the wreck; and, but he's something stain'd
With grief that's beauty's canker, thou might'st
A goodly person: he hath lost his fellows [call him
And strays about to find 'em.

Mir. I might call him
A thing divine, for nothing natural
I ever saw so noble.

Pros. [Aside] It goes on, I see, [free thee
As my soul prompts it. Spirit, fine spirit! I'll Within two days for this.

Per. Most sure, the goddess
On whom these airs attend! Vouchsafe my prayer
May know if you remain upon this island;
And that you will some good instruction give
How I may bear me here: my prime request,
Which I do last pronounce, is, O you wonder!
If you be maid or no?

Mir. No wonder, sir;
But certainly a maid.

Per. My language! heavens! I Am the best of them that speak this speech,
Were I but where 'tis spoken.

Pros. How? the best?
What wert thou, if the King of Naples heard thee?
Per. A single thing, as I am now, that wonders
To hear thee speak of Naples. He does hear me;
And that he does me weep: myself am Naples,
Who with mine eyes, never since at ebb, beheld
The king my father's wreck'd.

Mir. Yes, faith, and all his lords; the Duke of
And his brave son being twin. [Milan
Pros. The Duke of Milan
And his more braver daughter could control thee,
If now 't were fit to do 't. At the first sight
They have changed eyes. Delicate Ariel, [sir;
I'll set thee free for this. [To Per.] A word, good
I fear you have done yourself some wrong: a word.

Mir. Why speaks my father so ungently? This Is the third man that e'er I saw, the first
That e'er I sigh'd for: pity move my father
To be inclined my way!

Per. O, if a virgin,
And your affection not gone forth, I'll make you
The queen of Naples.

Pros. Soft, sir! one word more.
[Aside They are both in either's powers; but this swift business
I must uneasy make, lest too light winning
Make the prize light. [To Per.] One word more; I charge thee
That thou attend me: thou dost here usurp
The name thou owest not; and hast put thyself
Upon this island as a spy, to win it
From me, the lord on 't.

Per. No, as I am a man.

Mir. There's nothing ill can dwell in such a
If the ill spirit have so fair a house. [tempel:
Good things will strive to dwell with 't.

Pros. Follow me.

Speak not you for him: he's a traitor. Come;
I'll manage thy neck and feet together;
Sea-water shalt thou drink; thy food shall be
The fresh-brook muscles, wither'd roots and husks
Wherein the acorn cradled. Follow.

Per. No;
I will resist such entertainment till
Mine enemy has more power.

[Draws, and is charmed from moving.

Mir. O dear father,
Make not too rash a trial of him, for
He's gentle and not fearful.

My foot my tutor? Put thy sword up, traitor;
Who makes a show but darest not strike, thy conscience
Is so possess'd with guilt: come from thy ward,
For I can here disarm thee with this stick
And make thy weapon drop.

Mir. Beseech you, father.
Pros. Hence! hang not on my garments.

Sir, have pity;
I'll be his surety.

Pros. Silence! one word more Shall make me chide thee, if not hate thee. What!
I am an advocate for an impostor! Ilush!
Thou think'st there is no more such shapes as he Having seen but him and Caliban: foolish wench!
To the most of men this is a Caliban
And they to him are angels.

Mir. My affections
Are then most humble; I have no ambition
To see a goodlier man.

Pros. Come on; obey:
Thy nerves are in their infancy again
And have no vigour in them.

Per. So they are;
My spirits, as in a dream, are all bound up.
My father's loss, the weakness which I feel,
The wreck of all my friends, nor this man's threats,
To whom I am sublewed, are but light to me,
Might I but through my prison once a day
Behold this maid: all corners else o' the earth
Let liberty make use of; space enough
Have I in such a prison.

Pros. [Aside] It works. [To Per.] Come on.
Thou hast done well, fine Ariel! [To Per.] Follow
[To Ari.] Hark what thou else shalt do me. [me.

Mir. Be of comfort;
My father's a of a better nature, sir,
Than he appears by speech: this is unwonted
Which now came from him.

Pros. Thou shalt be as free
As mountain winds: but then exactly do
All points of my command.

Ari. To the syllable.

ACT I.

THE TEMPEST.

SCENE II.
ACT II.

SCENE I. — Another part of the island.

Enter Alonso, Sebastian, Antonio, Gonzalo, Adrian, Francisco, and others.

Gon. Beseech you, sir, be merry; you have cause.

So have we all, of joy; for our escape
Is much beyond our loss. Our lilt of woe
Is common; every day some sailor's wife,
The mate of some merchant and the merchant
Have just our theme of woe; but for the miracle,
I mean our preservation, few in millions
Can speak like us: then wisely, good sir, weigh
Our sorrow with our comfort.

Alon. Peace, Prithie, peace.

Seb. He receives comfort like cold porridge.

Ant. The visitor will not give him o'er so.

Seb. Look, he's winding up the watch of his wit;

Gon. Sir,— [by and by it will strike.

Seb. One: tell! [offer'd,

Gon. When every grief is entertain'd that's Comes to the entertainer—

Seb. A dollar. [spoken truer than you purposed.

Gon. Dour! comest thou, indeed: you have
Seb. You have taken it wiser than I meant

Gon. Therefore, my lord,— [you should.
Ant. That what a spendthrift is he of his tongue!

Alon. I pritchie, spare.

Gon. Well, I have done: but yet.—

Seb. He will be talking. [first begins to crow?

Ant. Which, of he or Adrian, for a good wager,

Seb. The old cock.

Ant. The coekerel, then.

Seb. Done. The wager?

Ant. A laughter.

Seb. A match!

Adr. Though this island seem to be desert,—

Seb. Ha, ha, ha! So, you're paid.

Adr. Uninhabitable and almost inaccessible;

Seb. Yet,—

Adr. Yet.—

Ant. He could not miss 't. [cute temperance.

Adr. It must needs be of subtle, tender and deli-

Ant. Temperance was a delicate wrench. [livered.

Seb. Ay, and a subtle; as he most learnedly de-

Adr. The air breathes upon us here most sweetly.

Seb. As if it had lungs and rotten ones.

Ant. Or as 't were perfumed by a fen.

Gon. Here is everything advantageous to life.

Ant. Those things prove to habit.

Seb. Of that there's none, or little. [green! how

Gon. How lush and lusty the grass looks! how

Ant. The ground indeed is tawny.

Seb. With an eye of green in 't.

Ant. He misses not much.

Seb. No; he doth but mistake the truth totally.

Gon. But the rarity of it is,—which is indeed almost beyond credit—

Seb. As many vouch'd rarities are.

Gon. That our garments, being, as they were, drenched in the sea, hold notwithstanding their freshness and gloses, being rather new-dyed than stained with salt water. [It not say he lies?

Ant. If but one of his pockets could speak, would
Seb. Ay, or very falsely pocket up his report.

Gon. Methinks our garments are now as fresh as when we put them on first In Acrie, at the marriage of the king's fair daughter Claribel to the King of Tunis, [well in our return.

Seb. 'T was a sweet marriage, and we prosper

Adr. Tunis was never graced before with such a paragon to their queen.

Gon. Not since widow Dido's time.

Ant. Widow! a pex o' that! How came that widow in? widow Dido!
ACT II.

THE TEMPEST.

SCENE I.

Seb. 'Scape being drunk for want of wine.

Gon. If the commonwealth I would by contraries Execute our dull purposes; and would, without name of magistrate; Letters should not be known: riches, poverty, And use of service, none; contract, succession, Bourn, bound of land, tillth, vineyard, none; No use of metal, corn, or wine, or oil; No occupation; all men idle, all; And women too, but innocent and pure; No sovereignty; —

Seb. Yet he would be king on't.

Ant. The latter end of his commonwealth forgets the beginning.

Seb. No marrying 'mong his subjects?

Ant. None, man: all idle: whores and knaves.

Gon. I would with such perfection govern, sir, To excel the golden age.

Seb. God save his majesty!

Ant. Long live Gonzalo!

Gon. Who? or, — do you mark me, sir?

Ant. Prithee, no more: thou dost talk nothing to me.

Gon. I do well believe your highness; and did it to minister occasion to these gentlemen, who are of such sensible and nimble lungs that they always use to laugh at nothing.

Ant. 'Twas you we laughed at.

Gon. Who in this kind of merry fooling am nothing to you: so you may continue and laugh at nothing.

Ant. What a blow was there given! [Still.

Seb. An it had not fallen flat-long.

Gon. You are gentlemen of brave mettle: you would lift the moon out of her sphere, if she would continue in it five weeks without changing.

Enter Ariel, invisible, playing solemn music.

Seb. We would so; and then go a bat-fowling.

Ant. Nay, good my lord, be not angry.

Gon. No, I warrant you; I will not adventure my discretion so weakly. Will you laugh me asleep, for Ant. Go sleep, and hear us. [I am very heavy.

Seb. [All sleep except Alon., Seb., and Ant.]

Alon. What, all so soon asleep! I wish mine eyes Would, with themselves, shut up my thoughts: I find They are inclined to do so. Please you, sir, Do not omit the heavy offer of it: It seldom visits sorrow; when it doth, It is a comforter.

Ant. We two, my lord, Will guard your person while you take your rest, And watch your safety.

Alon. Thank you. Wondrous heavy.

Seb. What a strange drowsiness possesses them! Ant. It is the quality o' the climate. Seb. Why Doth it not then our eyelids sink? I find not Myself disposed to sleep.

Ant. Nor I; my spirits are nimble. They fell together all, as by consent; They dropt, as by a thunder-stroke. What might, Worthy Sebastian? Or what delight? — No more: — And yet me thinks I see it in thy face, What thou shouldst be: the occasion speaks thee, and My strong imagination sees a crown Dropping upon thy head.

Seb. What, art thou waking?

Ant. Do you not hear me speak?

Seb. I do; and surely It is a sleepy language and thou speak'st Out of thy sleep. What is it thou didst say? This is a strange repose, to be asleep With eyes wide open: standing, speaking, moving, And yet so fast asleep.

Ant. Noble Sebastian, Thou let'st thy fortune sleep — die, rather; wink'st Whereas thou art waking.

Seb. Thou dost more distinctly; There's meaning in thy snores.

Ant. I am more serious than my custom: you Must be so too, if heed me; which to do

Seb. Do so: to ebb Trebles thee o'er.

Ant. Well, I am standing water.

Seb. I'll teach you how to flow.

Seb. Hereditary sloth instructs me.

Ant. O, If you but knew how you the purpose cherish Whiles thus you mock! how, in stripping it, You more invest it! Ebbing men, indeed, Most often do so near the bottom run By their own fear or sloth.

Seb. Prithee, say on:

Ant. The setting of thine eye and cheek proclaim A matter from thee, and a birth indeed Which throses thee much to yield.

Ant. Thus, sir: Although this lord of weak remembrance, this, Who shall be of as little memory When he is earth'd, hath here almost persuaded, — For he's a spirit of persuasion, only Professes to persuade, — the king his son's alive, 'Tis as impossible that he's undrown'd As he that sleeps here swims.

Seb. I have no hope That he's undrown'd.

Ant. O, out of that 'no hope' What great hope have you! no hope that way is Another way so high a hope that even Ambition cannot pierce a winkle beyond, But doubt discovery there. Will you grant with me That Ferdinand is drown'd?

Seb. He's gone.

Ant. Who's the next heir of Naples?

Seb. Claribel.

Ant. She that is queen of Tunis; she that dwells Ten leagues beyond man's life; she that from Naples Can have no note, unless the sun were post The man i' the moon's too slow — all new-born chins Be rough and razeable; she that — from whom? We all were sea-swallow'd, though some cast again, And by that destiny to perform an act Whereof what's past is prologue, what to come In yours and my discharge.

Seb. What stuff is this! how say you? 'T is true, my brother's daughter's queen of Tunis; So is she heir of Naples; 'tis which regions There is some space.

Ant. A space whose every cubit Seems to cry out, 'How shall that Claribel Measure us back to Naples? Keep in Tunis, And let Sebastian wake.' Say, this were death That now hath seized them; why, they were no worse Than now they are. There be that can rule Naples As well as he that sleeps; lords that can prate As amply and unnecessarily As this Gonzalo; I myself could make A chorus of as deep chat. O, that you bore The mind that I do! what a sleep were this For your advancement! Do you understand me?

Seb. Methinks I do.

Ant. And how does your content Tender your own good fortune? I remember You did supplant your brother Prospero.
ACT II.

THE TEMPEST.

SCENE II.

Ant.
And look how well my garments sit upon me;
Much feater than before: my brother's servants
Were then my fellows: now they are my men.

Seb. But for your conscience?

Ant. Ay, sir; where lies that? if 'twere a kibe,
'I would put me to my slipper: but I feel not
This deity in my bosom: twenty consciences.
That stand 'twixt me and Milan, cadged be they
And melt ere they molest! Here lies your brother,
No better than the earth he lies upon,
If he were that which now he's like, that's dead;
Whom I, with this obedient steel, three inches of it,
Can lay to bed for ever;What ails you, doing thus,
To the perpetual wain for aye might put
This ancient nornel, this Sir Prudence, who Should not earth our course. For all the rest,
They'll take suggestion as a cat laps milk;
They'll tell the clock to any business that
We say betis the hour.

Seb. Thy case, dear friend,
Shall be my precedent: as thou go'st to Milan,
I'll come by Naples. Draw thy sword: one stroke
Shall free thee from the tribute which thou payest;
And I the king shall love thee.

Ant. Draw together;
And when I rear my hand, do you the like,
To fall it on Gonzalo.

Seb. O, but one word. [They talk apart.

Re-enter Ariel, invisible.

Ari. My master through his art foresees the danger
That you, his friend, are in; and sends me forth—
For else his project dies—to keep them living.

[Songs in Gonzalo's ear.

While you here do sorrowing lie,
Open-eyed conspiracy
His time doth take.
If of life you keep a care,
Snake off slumber, and beware:
Awake, awake!

Ant. Then let us both be sudden.

Gon. Now, good angels
Preserve the king. [They wake.

Alon. Why, how now? ho, awake! Why are Wherefore this ghastly looking? [you drawn?

Gon. What's the matter?

Seb. While we stood here securing your repose,
Even now, we heard a hollow burst of bellowing
Like bulls, or rather lions: did 't not wake you?
It struck mine ear most terribly.

Alon. I heard nothing.

Ant. O, 'twas a din to frighten a monster's ear,
To make an earthquake! sure, it was the roar
Of a whole herd of lions.

Alon. Heard you this, Gonzalo?

Gon. Upon mine honour, sir, I heard a humming,
And that a strange one too, which did awake me:
I shaked you, sir, and cried: as mine eyes open'd,
I saw their weapons drawn: there was a noise,
That's verily, 'tis best we stand upon our guard,
Or that we quit this place: let's draw on our weapons.

Alon. Lead off this ground; and let's make fur
For my poor son. [Their search

Seb. But, for your conscience keep him from these beasts!
For he is, sure, 'tis the island.

Alon. Lead away. [done.

Ari. Prospero my lord shall know what I have
So, king, go safely on to seek thy son. [Exeunt.

SCENE II.—Another part of the island.

Enter Caliban with a burden of wood. A noise of thunder heard.

Cal. All the infections that the sun suck'd up
From bogs, fens, flats, on Prosper fall and make him
By inch-meal a disease! His spirits hear me
And yet I needs must curse. But they'll nor pinch,
Fright me with urchin-shows, pitch me i' the mire.
Nor lead me, like a firebrand, in the dark
Out of my way, unless he bid 'em; but
For every trible are they set upon me;
Some time it was a sport, they would mock me
And after bite me, then like hedgehogs which Lie tumbling in my barefoot way and mount
Their pricks at my footfall; sometime am I
All wound with adders who with cloven tongues
Do hiss me into madness.

Enter Trinculo.

Trin. Lo, now, lo!
Here comes a spirit of his, and to torment me
For bringing wood in slowly. I 'll fall flat;
Perchance he will not mind me.

Trin. Here's neither bush nor shrub, to bear off any weather at all, and another storm brewing; I hear it sing i' the wind; yond same black cloud, yond huge one, looks like a foul bombard that would shed his liquor. If it should thunder as it did before,
I know not where to hide my head: yond same cloud cannot choose but fall by palfuts. What have we here? a man or a fish? dead or alive? A fish: he smells like a fish: a very ancient and fish-like smell of kind of not doing Poor John.
A strange fish! Were I in England now, as once I was, and had but this fish painted, not a holiday fear there but would give a piece of silver: there would this monster make a man; any strange beast there makes a man: when they will not give a doit to relieve a man beeggar, they will lay ten to see a dead Indian. Legged like a man! and his fins like arms! Warm o' my troth! I do now let loose my opinion; hold it no longer: this is no fish, but an islander, that hath lately suffered by a thunder-bolt. [Thunder.] Alas, the storm is come again! my best way is to creep under his gabardine; there is no other shelter hereabout: misery acquaints a man with strange bed-fellows. I will here shroud till the dregs of the storm be past.

Enter Stephano, singing: a battle in his hand.

Ste. I shall no more to sea, to sea,
Here shall I die ashoare—

This is a very seurvy tune to sing at a man's funeral: well, here's my comfort. [Drinks.

Sings.

The master, the swabber, the boatswain and I,
The gummer and his mate
Loved Mall, Meg and Marian and Margery,
But none of us cared for Kate;
For she had a tongue with a tang,
Would cry to a sailor, Go hang!
She loved not the savour of tar nor pitch,
Yet a tailor might scratch her where'er she did
Then to sea, boys, and let her go hang! [itch:

This is a seurvy tune too: but here's my comfort.
[Drinks.

Cal. Do not torment me: Oh!

Ste. What's the matter? Have we devils here?
Do you put tricks upon us with savages and men of Ind, ha? I have not scared drowning to be afraid now of your four legs; for it hath been said, as proper a man as ever went on four legs cannot make him give ground; and it shall be said so again while Stephano breathes at his nostrils.

Cal. The spirit torments me! Oh!

This is some monster of the isle with four legs, who hath got, as I take it, an ague. Where the devil should he learn our language? I will give him some relief, if it be but for that. If I can recover him and keep him tame and get to Naples with him, he's a present for any emperor that ever trod on noble weather.

Cal. Do not torment me, prithee; I'll bring my wood home faster.
ACT III.

THE TEMPEST.

SCENE I.

Some thousands of these logs and pile them up.
Upon a sore injunction: my sweet mistress [ress
Weeps when she sees me work, and says, such base-
Had never like executor. I forget:
But these sweet though do even refresh my labours.
Most busy lest, when I do it.

Enter Miranda; and Prospero at a distance, unseen.

Mir. Alas, now, pray you,
Work not so hard: I would that lightning had Burnt up those logs that you are enjoin'd to pile!
Pray, set it down and rest you: when this burns,
I will weep for having wearied you. My father
Is hard at study; pray now, rest yourself;
He's safe for these three hours,
The sun will set before I shall discharge
What I must strive to do.

Mir.
If you'll sit down,
I'll bear your logs the while: pray, give me that;
I'll carry it to the pile.

Fer.
No, precious creature,
I had rather crack my sinews, break my back,
Than you should such dishonour undergo,
While I sit lazy by.

Mir.
It would become me
As well as it does you: and I should do it
With much more ease: for my good will is to it,
And yours it is against.

Pros.
Poor worm, thou art infected!
This visitation shows it.

Mir.
You look wearily, [me

Fer.
No, noble mistress; 'tis fresh morning with
When you are by at night. I do beseech you—
Chiefly that I might set it in my prayers—
What is your name?

Mir.
Miranda.—O my father,
I have broke your hest to say so!

Fer.
Admired Miranda!
Indeed the top of admiration! worth
What's dearest to the world! Full many a lady
I have eyed with best regard and many a time
The harmony of their tongues hath into bondage
Brought my too diligent ear: for several virtues
Have I liked several women: never many
With so full soul, but some defect in her
Did quarrel with the noblest grace she owed
And put it to the foil: but you, O you,
So perfect and so peerless, are created
Of every creature's best!

I do not know
One of my sex; no woman's face remember,
Save, from my glass, mine own; nor have I seen
More that I may call men than you, good friend,
And my dear father: how features are abroad,
I am skillless of: but, by my modesty,
The jewel in my dower, I would not wish
Any companion in the world but you,
Nor can imagination form a shape,
Besides yourself, to like of. But I prattle
Something too wildly and my father's precepts
I therein do forget.

Fer.
I am in my condition
A prince, Miranda; I do think, a king;
I would, not so!—and would no more endure
This wooden slavery than to suffer
The flesh-fly blow my mouth. Hear my soul speak:
The very instant that I saw you, did
My heart fly to your service: there resides,
To make me slave to it: and for your sake
Am I this patient log-man.

Mir.
Do you love me?

Fer.
O heaven, O earth, bear witness to this sound
And crown what I profess with kind event
If I speak true! if I boldly, invert
What best is boded me to mischief! I
Beyond all limit of what else i the world
Do love, prize, honour you.

Mir.
A fool
To weep at what I am glad of.

Pros.
A fair encounter
Of two most rare affections! Heavens rain grace
On that which breeds between 'em!

Fer.
Wherefore weep you?

Mir.
At mine unworthiness that dare not offer
What desire to give, and much less take
What I shall die to want. To this it is trilling;
And all the more it seeks to hide itself,
The bigger bulk it shows. Hence, bashful cunning!
And prompt me, plain and holy innocence!

I am your wife, if you will marry me;
If not, I'll die your maid: to be your fellow
You may marry me; or be my servant,
Whether you will or no.

Fer.
My mistress, dearest;
And I thus humble ever.

Mir.
My husband, then?

Fer. Ay, with a heart a willing
As bondage e'er of freedom, here's my hand.

Mir. And mine, with my heart in't: and now
Till half an hour hence. [farewell

Fer. A thousand thousand!

Pros. So glad of that, as they I cannot be,
Who are surprised with it; but my rejoicing
At nothing can be more. I'll to my book,
For yet ere supper-time must I perform
Much business appertaining.

[Exit.

SCENE II.—Another part of the island.

Enter Caliban, Stephano, and Trinculo.

Ste. Tell not me; when the butt is out, we will drink water; not a drop before: therefore bear up, and board 'em. Servant-monster, drink to me.

Trin. Servant-monster! the folly of this island!
They say there's but live upon this isle: we are three of them; if th' other two be trained like us, the state totters.

Ste. Drink, servant-monster, when I bid thee:
thy eyes are almost set in thy head.

Trin. Where should they be set else? he were a brave monster indeed, if they were set in his tall.

Ste. My man-monster hath droun'd his tongue in sack: for my part, the sea cannot droun me; I swam, ere I could recover the shore, five and thirty leagues off and on. By this light, thou shalt be my lieutenant, monster, or my standard. [ard.

Trin. Your Lieutenant, if you list; he's no stand-
Ste. We'll not run, Monsieur Monster.

Trin. Nor go neither; but you'll lie like dogs and yet say nothing neither.

Ste. Moon-calf, speak once in thy life, if thou beest a good moon-calf.

Cal. How does thy honour? Let me lick thy I'll not serve him; he's not valiant.

Trin. Thou liest, most ignorant monster: I am in case to justle a constable. Why, thou deboshed fish, thou, was there ever man a coward that hath drunk so much sack as I today? Will thou tell a monstrous lie, being but half a fish and half a monster?

[my lord?

Cal. Lo, how he mocks me! wilt thou let him, Trin. 'Lord' quothe he! That a monster should be such a natural!

Cal. Lo, lo, again! bite him to death, I prithee.
Ste. Trinculo, keep a good tongue in your head:
if you prove a mutineer,—the next tree! The poor monster's my subject and he shall not suffer dignity.

Cal. I thank my noble lord. Will thou be pleased to hearken me again to the suit I made to thee?

Ste. Marry, will I: kneel and repeat it; I will stand, and so shall Trinculo.

Enter Ariel, invisible.

Cal. As I told thee before, I am subject to a tyrrant, a sorcerer, that by his cunning hath cheated
Ari. Thou liest. [me of the island.

Cal. Thou liest, thou jesting monkey, thou;
I would my valiant master would destroy thee!
I do not lie.

Ste. Trinculo, if you trouble him any more in his tale, by this hand, I will supplant some of your

Ste. Mmm, then, and no more. Proceed.

Cal. I say, by sorcery he got this isle;
ACT III.

THE TEMPEST.

Scene III.

From me he got it. If thy greatness will Revenge it on him,—for I know thou dar'st,
But this thing day by day.

Stu. That's most certain.

Col. Thou shalt have it and I'll serve thee.

Ste. How now shall this be compassed? Canst thou bring me to the party?

Col. Yea, yea, my lord: I'll yield him thee asleep,
When thou mayst knock a nail into his head.

Ari. Thou liest; thou canst not.

[Exit Col.]

Stu. What a pied ninny's this! Thou scurvy
I do beseech thy greatness, give him blows
And take his bottle from him: when that's gone
He shall drink nought but brine; for I'll not show
Where the quick freshes are.

[Exit Stu.]

Trin. Trinculo, run into no further danger: interrupt the monster one word further, and, by this hand, I'll turn my mercy out o' doors and make a stock-fish of thee.

Trin. Why, what did I? I did nothing. I'll go farther off.

Ste. Didst thou not say he lied?

Ari. Thou liest.

Ste. So do I? take thou that. [Beats Trin.] As you like this, give me the lie another time.

Trin. I did not give the lie. Out o' your wits
And hearing too? A pox o' your bottle! this can sack and drinking do. A murrain on your monster, and the devil take your fingers!

Col. Ha, ha, ha!

[Exit Col.]

Ste. Now, forward with your tale. Prithee, stand
Best him enough: after a little time
I'll beat him too.

Col. Why, as I told thee, 'tis a custom with him,
1st afternoon to sleep: there thou mayst brain him,
Having first seized his books, or with a log
Batter his skull, or pack him in with a stake,
Or cut his wizard with thy knife. Remembrer
First to possess his books; for without them
He's but a slut, as I am, nor hath not
One spirit to command: they all do hate him
As rootedly as I. Burn but his books.
He has brave utensils,—for so he calls them,—
Which, when he has a house, he'll deck withal.
And that most deeply to consider
The beauty of his daughter; himself
Calls her a nonpareil: I never saw a woman,
But only Sycorax my dam and she;
But she as far surpasseth Sycorax
As great doth least.

Stu. Is it so brave a bass? a

Col. Ay, lord; she will become thy bed, I warrant.
And bring thee forth brave brood.

Ste. Monster, I will kill this man: his daughter
And I will be king and queen,—save our graces! — and Trinculo and thyself be viceroy. Dest thou like the plot, Trinculo?

Trin. Excellent.

Ste. Give me thy hand: I am sorry I beat thee;
but, while thou livest, keep a good tongue in thy head.

Col. Within this half hour will he be asleep:
Wilt thou destroy him then?

Stu. Ay, on mine honour.

Ari. This will I tell my master. [Exit Ari.]

Col. Thou makest me merry; I am full of pleas-
Let us be jovial: wilt thou catch the
You taught me but while yere?

Stu. At thy request, monster, I will do reason, any reason. Come on, Trinculo, let us sing. [Sings]

Flout 'em and scout 'em

And scout 'em and flout 'em; Thou galls is free.

Col. That's not the tune.

[Exeunt]

Ste. What is this same?
ACT IV.

THE TEMPEST.

SCENE I.

Their manners are more gentle-kind than of
Our human generation you shall find Many, nay, almost any.

Pros. [Aside] Honest lord,
Thou hast said well; for some of you there present
Are worse than devils.

Alon. I cannot too much muse
Such shapes, such gesture and such sound, expressing,
Although they want the use of tongue, a kind
Of excellent dumb discourse.

Pros. [Aside] Praise in departing.
Pros. They vanish'd strangely.

Set. No matter, since
They have left their viands behind; for we have Stomachs.

Will I please you taste of what is here?

Alon. Not I.

Gon. Faith, sir, you need not fear. When we were boys
Who would believe that there were mountaineers
Dew-lapped like bulls, whose throats had hanging at 'em
Wallets of flesh? or that there were such men Whose heads stood in their breasts? which now we End of one of five for one will bring us [find Good warrant of.

Alon. I will stand to and feel,
Although my last; no matter, since I feel
The best is past. Brother, my lord the duke,
Stand to and do as we.

Thunder and lightning. Enter Ariel, like a harpy; claps his wings upon the table; and, with a quaint device, the banquet vanishes.

Ari. You are three men of sin, whom Destiny,
That hath to instrument this lower world
And what is 't, the never-surfeted sea
Hath caused to belch up you; and on this island
Where man doth not inhabit; you 'mongst men
Being most unfit to live. I have made you mad;
And even with such-like valour men hang and
Their proper selves: [drown

[Alon., Setb., &c. draw their swords.
You fools! I and my fellows
Are ministers of Fate: the elements,
Of whom your swords are temper'd, may as well
Wound the loud winds, or with bemonk'd-at stabs
Kill the still-closing waters, as diminish
One drop that's in my plume: my fellow-ministers
Are like INVULNERABLE. If you could hurt,
Your swords are now too massy for your strengths

And will not be uplifted. But remember—
For that 'tis my business to you—that you three
From Milan did supplant good Prospero; [work
Exposed unto the sea, which hath requit it,
Him and his innocent child: for which foul deed
The powers, delaying, not forgetting, have Incensed the seas and shores, ye, all the creatures,
Against your peace. Thine of thy son, Alonso,
They have bereft; and no pronounce by me:
Linger ing perdition, worse than any death
Can be at once, shall step by step attend [from—
You and your ways; whose wrath to guard you.
Which here, in this most desolate isle, else falls
Up on your heads—is nothing but heart-sorrow
And a clear life ensuing.

He vanishes in thunder; then, to soft music, enter the Ships again, and dance, with mock and muses, and carrying out the table.

Pros. Bravely the figure of this harpy hast thou Perform'd, my Ariel; a grace it had, deserving:
Of my instruction hast thou nothing lated
In what thou hadst to say: so, with good life
And observation strange, my meaning ministers
Their several kinds have done. My high charms
And these long-seated enemies all knap up:
In their distractions; they now are in my power;
And in these fits I leave them, while I visit
Young Ferdinand, whom they suppose is drown'd,
And his and mine loved darling. [Exit above.

Gon. I the name of something holy, sir, why stand
In this strange stare? [you

Alon. O, it is monstrous, monstrous! Methought the billows spoke and told me of it;
The winds did sing it to me, and the thunder,
That deep and dreadful organ-pipe, pronounced
The name of Prosper: it did lass my tresspass.
Therefore my son! the oze is bestial, and I'll seek him deeper than e'er plummet sounded
And with him there lie muddled. [Exit above.

Ant. But one fiend at a time,
I'll fright their legions o'er.

Ari. I'll be thy second.

[Exeunt Setb. and Ant.

Gon. All three of them are desperate: their great guilt.
Like poison given to work a great time after,
Now 'gins to bite the spirits. I do beseech you
That are of superular joints, follow them swiftly
And hinder them from what this ecstasy
May now provoke them to.

Afr. Follow, I pray you. [Exeunt.

ACT IV.

SCENE I. — Before Prospero's cell.

Enter Prospero, Ferdinand, and Miranda.

Pros. If I have too an sternely punish'd you,
Your compensation makes amends, for I
Have given you here a third of mine own life,
Or that for which I live: who once again
I tender to thy hand: all thy vexations
Were but my trials of thy love, and thou
Hast strangely stood the test: here, afore Heaven,
I ratify this my rich gift. O Ferdinand,
Do not smile at me that I boast her off,
For thou shalt find she will outstrip all praise
And make it halt behind her.

Fer. I do believe it
Against an oracle.

Pros. Then, as my gift and thine own acquisition Worthily purchased, take my daughter: but

If thou dost break her virgin-knot before
All sanctimonious ceremonies may
With full and holy rites be minister'd,
No sweet aspersions shall the heavens let fall
To make this contract grow; but barren hate,
Sour-eyed disdain and discord shall bestrew
The union of your bed with weeds so loathly
That you shall hate it both: therefore take heed,
As Hymen's lamps shall light you.

Fer. As I hope
For quiet days, fair issue and long life,
With such love as 'tis now, the nurkiest deu;
The most opportune place, the strongest suggestion
Our worser genius can, shall never melt
Mine honour into lust, to take away
The edge of that day's celebration
When I shall think, or Phebus' steeds are found'er'd, or Night kept claim'd below.

Pros. Fairly spoke.
ACT IV.

THE TEMPEST.

SCENE I.

Sith then and talk with her: she is thine own.
What, Ariel! my industrious servant, Ariel!

Enter Ariel.

Ari. What would my potent master? here I am.

Pros. Thou and thy meaner fellows your last service worthily performed; and I must use you [vice In such another trick. Go bring the nubic. O'er whom I give thee power, here to this place.
Incite them to quick motion: for I must Bestow upon the eyes of this young couple Some vanity of mine art: it is my promise, And they expect it from me.

Ari. Presently?

Pros. Ay, with a twinkle.

Ari. Before you can say 'come' and 'go,' And breathe twice and cry 'so, so,' Each one, tripping on his toe, Will be here with mop and snow. Do you love me, master? no?

Pros. Dearly, my delicate Ariel. Do not approach Till thou dost hear me call.

Ari. Well, I conceive. [Exit.

Pros. Look thou be true; do not give dalliance Too much the rein: the strongest oxen are straw To the fire: the blood: be more abstemious, Or else, good-night your vow!

Fer. I warrant you, sir; The white cold virgin snow upon my heart Abates the anour of my liver.

Pros. Fer. Well.

Now come, my Ariel! bring a corolla, Rather than want a spirit: appear, and pertly! No tongue! all eyes! be silent. [Soft music.

Enter Iris.

Iris. Ceres, most bounteous lady, thy rich leas Of wheat, yre, barley, vetches, oats and pease; Thy thurfy mountains, where live nibbling sheep, And flat meads thatch'd with stover, them to keep; Thy banks with plowed and twilled brims, Which spongy April at thy hest betrims, [groves, To make cold nymphs chaste crown: and thy broom, Whose shadow the dismissed bachelor loves, Being lass-lorn: thy pole-clitp vineyard; And thy sea-margin, sterile and rocky-hard, Where thou thyself dost air; —the queen o'the sky, Whose watery arch and messenger am I, Bids thee leave these, and with her sovereign grace, Here on this grass-plot, in this very place, To come and sport: her peacocks fly amain: Approach, rich Ceres, her to entertain.

Enter Ceres.

Cer. Hail, many-colourd messenger, that ne'er Doest disobey the wife of Jupiter; Who with thy saffron wings upon my flowers Diffusest honey-drops, refreshing showers, And with each end of thy blue bawd dost crown My bosky acres and my unshrubld down, Rich scarf to my proud earth: why hath thy queen Summon'd me hither, to this short-grass'd green?

Iris. A contract of true love to celebrate; And some donation freely to estate On the blest lovers.

Cer. Tell me, heavenly bow, If Venus or her son, as thou dost know, Do now attend the queen? Since they did plot The means that dusky Dis my daughter got, Her and her blind boy's scandal'd company I have forswn.

Iris. Of her society Be not afraid: I met her deily Cutting the clouds towards Paphos and her son Dove-drawn with her. Here thought they to have Some wanton charm upon this man and maid, [done Whose vows are, that no bed-right shall be paid Till Hymen's torch be lighted; but in vain; Mars's hot minion is returned again; Her waspish-headed son has broke his arrows, Swears he will shoot no more but play with sparrows And be a boy right out.

Cer. * High'st queen of state, Great Juno, comes; I know her by her gait.

Enter Juno.

Juno. How does my bounteous sister? Go with me To bless this twain, that they may prosperous be And honour'd in their issue. [They sing:

Juno. Honour, riches, marriage-blessing, Long continuance, and increasing, Hourly joys be still upon you! Juno sings her blessings on you.

Cer. Earth's increase, foison plenty, Barns and garners never empty, Vines with clustering buncches growing, Plants with goody burthen bowing; Spring come to you at the farthest In the very end of harvest! Scarcity and want shall slum you; Ceres' blessing so is on you.

Fer. This is a most majestic vision, and Harmonious charmingly. May I be bold To think these spirits?

Pros. Spirits, which by mine art I have from their confines call'd to enact My present fancies. Let me live here ever; So rare a wonder'd father and a wife Makes this place Paradise.

Juno and Ceres whisper, and send Iris on employment.

Juno. Sweet, now, silence! Juno and Ceres whisper seriously; There's something else to do: hush, and be mute, Or else our spell is marred. [brooks, Iris. You nymphs, call'd Naiads, of the wondring With your sedged crowns and ever-harmless looks, Leave your crisp channels and on this green land Answer your summons; Juno does command: Come, temperate nymphs, and help to celebrate A contract of true love; be not too late.

Enter certain Nymphs.

You sunburnt sicklemen, of August weary, Come hither from the furrow and be merry: Make holiday; your rye-straw hats put on And these fresh nymphs encounter every one In country footing.

Enter certain Reapers, properly habited: they join with the Nymphs in a graceful dance; towards the end whereof Prospero starts suddenly, and speaks; after which, to a strange, hollow, and confused noise, they heavily vanish.

Pros. [Aside] I had forgot that foul conspiracy Of the beast Caliban and his confederates Against my life: the minute of their plot [no more! Is almost come. [To the Spirits.] Well done! avoid; Fer. This is strange: your father's in some passion That works him strongly.

Never till this day
Saw I him touch'd with anger so distemper'd.

Pros. You do look, my son, in a moved sort, As if you were dismay'd: be cheerful, sir. Our revels now are ended. These our actors, As I foretold you, were all spirits and Are melted into air, into thin air: And, like the baseless fabric of this vision, The cloud-capp'd towers, the gorgeous palaces, The solemn temples, the great globe itself, Yea, all which it inherit, shall dissolve And, like this insubstantial pageant faded, Leave not a rack behind. We are such stuff
As dreams are made on, and our little life
Is rounded with a sleep. Sir, I am vex'd;
Betrothed to my weakness; my old brain is troubled:
Be not disturb'd with my infirmity;
If you be pleased, retire into my cell
And there repose: a turn or two I'll walk,
To still my beating mind.

Fer.

Pros.

Enter Ariel.

Ari. Thy thoughts I cleave to. What 'a thy pleas.

Pros.

Spirit, [ure?]

We must prepare to meet with Caliban.

Ari. Ay, my command'ry: when I presented Ceres,
I thought to have told thee of it, but I fear'd
Lest I might anger thee.

Pros. Say again, where didst thou leave these var-

Ari. I told you, sir, they were red-hot with drink.
So full of valour that they smote the air [ing?
For breathing in their faces; beat the ground
For for kissing of their feet; yet always bending
Towards their project. Then I beat my labor;
At which, like unack'd'ed salts, they prick'd their ears,
Advancing their eyeballs, lifting up their noses
As they smelt music: so I charm'd their ears
That call-like they my lowing follow'd through Tooth'd briers, sharp furzes, prickling goss and thorns,
Which entered their frail shins: at last I left them
I the filly-mantled pool beyond your cell,
There dancing up to the chim's, that the foul lake
O'erstunk their feet.

Pros.

This was well done, my bird.
Thy shape invisible retain thou still:
The trumpey in my house, go bring it hither,
For stile to catch these thieves.

Ari. I go, I go. [Exit.

Pros. A devil, a born devil, on whose nature
Nurture can never stick; on whom my pains,
Humanely taken, all, all lost, quite lost;
And as with age his body fuller grows,
So his mind cancers. I will plague them all,
Even to roaring.

Re-enter Ariel, laden with glistening apparel, &c.

Come, hang them on this line.

Prospero and Ariel remain, invisible. Enter Calib'an, Stephano, and Trinculo, all wet.

Cal. Pray you, tread softly, that the blind mole may not Hear a foot fall: we now are near his cell.

Ste. Monster, your fairy, which you say is a harmless fairy, has done little better than played the Jack with us.

Trin. Monster, I do smell all horse-piss; at which my nose is in great indignation.

Ste. So is mine. Do you hear, monster? If I should take a displeasure against you, look you,—

Trin. Thou wert but a lost monster.

Cal. Good my lord, give me thy fav'rence still.
Be patient, for the prize I'll bring thee to [softly.
Shall hoodwink this mischance: therefore speak
All 's hush'd as midnight yet.

Trin. Ay, but to lose our bottles in the pool.—

Ste. There is not only disgrace and dishonour in that, monster, but an infinite loss.

Trin. That's more to me than my wetting: yet this is your harmless fairy, monster.

Ste. I will fetch off my bottle, though I be o'er care for my grace.

Cal. Prithie, my king, be quit. See'st thou here,
This is the mouth o' the cell: no noise, and enter.

Do that good mischief which may make this island
Thine own for ever, and I, thy Caliban,
For aye thy foot-licker.

Ste. Give me thy hand, I do begin to have bloody

Trin. O king Stephano! O peer! O worthy Stephano! look what a wardrobe here is for thee!

Cal. Let it alone, thou fool! it is but trash.

Trin. O, ho, monster! we know what belongs to a frippery. O king Stephano!

Ste. Put off that gown, Trinculo; by this hand,
I'll have that gown.

Trin. Thy grace shall have it.

Cal. The drosys drown this fool! what do you mean
To dote thus on such luggage? Let's alone
And do the murder first: if he awake,
From toe to head I'll fill our skins with pinches,
Make us strange stuff.

Ste. Be you quiet, monster. Mistress line, is not this my jeckin? Now is the jekin under the line:
Now, jekin, you are like to lose your hair and prove a bald jekin. [your grace.

Trin. Do, do: we steal by line and level, an't like

Ste. I thank thee for that jest: here's a garment for't: wit shall not go unrewarded while I am king of this country. 'Steal by line and level' is an excellent pass of pate; there's another garment for t'.

Ste. Monster, come, put some line upon your fingers, and away with the rest.

Cal. I will have none on't: we shall lose our time,
And all be turn'd to barnacles, or to apes
With foreheads villainous low.

Ste. Monster, lay-to your fingers: help to bear this away where my hoghead of wine is, or I'll turn you out of my kingdom: go to, carry this.

Trin. And this.

Ste. Ay, and this.

A noise of hunters heard. Enter divers Spirits, in shape of dogs and hounds, and hunt them about.

Prospero and Ariel setting them on.

Pros. Hey, Mountain, hey!

Ari. Silver! there it goes, Silver!

Pros. Fury, Fury! there, Tyrant, there! hark! hark!

[Cal., Ste., and Trin. are driven out.

Go change my goblins that they grind their joints
With dry convulsions, shorten up their sinews
With aged cramps, and more pinch-spotted make
Than pard or cat o' mountain. [them

Ste. Hark, they roar!

Pros. Let them be hunted soundly. At this hour
Lie at my mercy all mine enemies:
Shortly shall all my labours end, and thou Shalt have the air at freedom: for a little
Follow, and do me service.

[Exeunt.
In the line-grave which weather seeks your cell; They cannot lodge but in your face till your release. The king, His brother and yours, abide all three distracted And the remainder mourning over them, Brimful of sorrow and dismay; but chiefly [zalo; I him that you term’d, sir, The good old lord. Gonz. His tears run down his beard, like winter’s drops From eaves of reeds. Your charm so strangely works That if you now beheld them, your affections I’em Would become tender. Prs. Dost thou think so, spirit? Ari. Mine would, sir, were I human. Prs. And mine shall. Haste, thou, which art but air, a touch of feeling Of their affections, and shall not myself, One of their kind, that relish all as sharply, Passion as they, be kindlier moved than thou art? Though with their high wrongs I am struck to the Yet with my nobler reason against my fury [quick, Do I take part: the rarer action is In virtue than in vengeance: they being penitent, The sole drift of my purpose doth extend Not a frown further. Go release them, Ariel: My charms I’ll break, their senses I’ll restore, And they shall be themselves.  [Exit. Prs. Ye elves of hills, brooks, standing lades And groves, And ye that on the sands with printless foot Do chase the ebbing Neptune and do fly him When he comes back; you demi-puppets that By moonshine do the green sour ringlets make, Whereof the ewe not bites, and you whose pastime Is to make midnight mushrooms, that rejoice To hear the solemn curfew; by whose aid, Weak masters though ye be, I have bedim’d The noontide sun, call’d forth the mutinous winds, And do assault the pale moon’salf of heaven Set roaring water: to the dread rattling thunder Have I given fire and rifled Jove’s stout oak With his own bolt; the strong-based promontory Have I made shake and by the spurs pluck’d up The pine and cedar: graves at my command Have waked their sleepers, o’er, and let ’em forth By my so potent art. But this rough magic I here abjure, and, when I have required Some heavenly music, which even now I do, To work mine end upon their senses that; This airy charm is for, I’ll break my staff, Burn my uncertain faults in the earth, And deeper than did ever plummet sound I’ll drown my book. [Solemn music. Re-enter Ariel: then Alonso, with a frantic gesture, attended by Gonzalo; Sebastian and Antonio in like manner, attended by Adrian and Francisco: they all enter the circle which Prospero had made, and there stand charmed; which Prospero observing, speaks: A solemn air and the best comforter To an unsatified fancy cure thy brains, Now use not such vain thy skull! There stand, For you are spell-stopp’d. 1° Gonzalo, honourable man, Mine eyes, even sociable to the show of thine, Fall fellowly drops. The charm dissolves space, And as the morning steels upon the night, Melt Steele’s thick beams; so all of them, and requite My dukedom of thee, which perferee, I know, Thou must restore. Alon. If thou be’st Prospero, Give us particulars of thy preservation; How thou hast met us here, who three hours since Were wrecked in this shore; where I have lost— How sharp the point of this remembrance is!— My dear son Ferdinand. Prs. I am woé for ’t, sir.
Alon. Irreparable is the loss, and patience
Says it is past her cure.
Pros. I rather think
You have not sought her help, of whose soft grace
For the like loss I have her sovereign aid
And rest myself content.
Alon. P'th' As great to me as late; and, supportable
To make the dear loss, have I means much weaker
Than you may call to comfort you, for I
Have lost my daughter.
Alon. A daughter? O heaven, that they were living both in Naples,
The king and queen there! that they were, I wish
Myself were muddied in that oozy bed [ter?]
Where my son lies. When did you lose your daugh-
Pros. In this last tempest. I perceive, these lords
At this encounter do so much admire
That they devour their reason and scarce think
Their eyes do offices of truth, their words
Are natural breath: but, howsoever you have Been justled from your senses, know for certain
That I am Prospero and that very duke
Which was thrust forth of Milan, who most strangely
Upon this shore, where you were wreck'd, was landed,
To be the lord on 't. No more yet of this;
For 't is a chronicle of day by day,
Not a relation for a breakfast nor Besitting this first meeting. Welcome, sir;
This cell's my court: here have I few attendant
And subjects none abroad: pray you, look in.
My dukedom since you have given me again,
I will require you with as good a thing:
At least bring forth a wonder, to content ye
As much as me my dukedom.

Here Prospero discovers Ferdinand and Miranda playing at chess.
Mir. Sweet lord, you play me false.
Fer. No, my dear'st love, I would not for the world. [wrangle
Mir. Yes, for a score of kingdoms you should
And you call it fair play.
Alon. If this prove
A vision of the Island, one dear son
Shall I twice lose.
Seb. A most high miracle!
Fer. Though the seas threaten, they are merciful;
I have not cease them without cause. [Kneels.
Alon. Now all the blessings
Of a glad father compass thee about!
Arise, and say how thou camest here.
Mir. O, wonder!
How many goodly creatures are there here!
How beauteous mankind is! O brave new world,
That has such people in 't!
Pros. 'T is new to thee.
Alon. What is this maid with whom thou wast
At play?
Your old acquaintance cannot be three hours:
Is she the goddess that hath sever'd us,
And brought us thus together?
Fer. Sir, she is mortal;
But by immortal Providence she's mine:
I chose her when I could not ask my father
For his advice, nor thought I had one. She Is daughter to this famous Duke of Milan,
Of whom so often I have heard renown,
But never saw before; of whom I have Received a second life; and second father
This lady makes him to me.
Alon. But, O, how oddly will it sound that I Must ask my child forgiveness!

Scene I.

Gon. I have inly wept, [gods,
Or should have spoke ere this. Look down, you
And on this couple drop a blessed crown;
For it is you that have chalk'd forth the way
Which brought us hither.
Alon. I say, Amen, Gonzalo!
Gon. Was Milan thrust from Milan, that his issue
Should become kings of Naples? O, rejoice
Beyond a common joy, and set it down
With gold on lasting pillars: In one voyage
Did Claribel her husband find at Tunis,
And Ferdinand, her brother, found a wife
Where he himself was lost, Prospero his dukedom
In a poor isle and all of us ourselves
When no man was his own. [To Fer. and Mir.] Give me your hands:
Let grief and sorrow still embrace his heart
That doth not wish you joy!
Gon. Be it so! Amen!

Re-enter Ariel, with the Master and Boatswain amazedly following.
O, look, sir, look, sir! here is more of us:
I prophesied, if a gallowe were on land;
This fellow'st'd, d' not deceive. Now, blasphemy,
That swear'st grace o'erboard, not an oath on shore?
Hast thou no mouth by land? What is the news?
Boats. The best news is, that we have safely found
Our king and company; the next, our ship—
Which, but three glasses since, we gave out split—
Is tight and care and bravely rigg'd as when
We first put out to sea.
Ari. [Aside to Pros.] Sir, all this service
Have I done since I went.
Pros. [Aside to Ari.] My tricksy spirit! [strengthen Alon. These are not natural events: they
From strange to stranger. Say, how came you hither?
Boats. If I did think, sir, I were well awake,
I'd strive to tell you. We were dead of sleep,
And—how we know not—al clapp'd under hatches;
Where but even now with strange and several noises
Of roaring, shrieking, howling, jingling chains,
And more diversity of sounds, all horrible,
We were awaked; straightway, at liberty;
Where we, in all her trim, freshly beheld
Our royal, good and gallant ship, our master
Capering to eye her: on a truce, so please you,
Even in a dream, were we divided from them
And were:[Aside to Pros.] Was it well done?

Ari. [Aside to Ari.] Bravely, my diligence.
Thou shalt be free.
Alon. This is as strange a maze as e'r men trod;
And there is in this business more than nature
Was ever conduct of: some oracle
Must rectify our knowledge.

Pros. Sir, my liege,
Do not infest your mind with beating on
The strangeness of this business: at pick'd leisure
Which shall be shortly, single I'll resolve you,
Which to you shall seem probable, of every
These happen'd accidents: till then, be cheerful
And think of each thing well. [Aside to Ari.] Come hither, spirit:
Set Caliban and his companions free;
[slir? Untie the spell. [Exit Ari.] How farts my gracious
There are yet missing of your company
Some few odd lads that you remember not.

Re-enter Ariel, driving in Caliban, Stephano and Trinculo, in their stolen apparel
Ste. Every man shift for all the rest, and let no man take care for himself; for all is but fortune.
Coragio, bully-monster, coragio!
Trin. If these be true spies which I wear in my head, here's a goodly sight.
Cat. O Setebos, these be brave spirits indeed!
ACT V.

THE TEMPEST.

SCENE I.

How fine my master is! I am afraid
He will chastise me.

Seb. Ha, ha!

What things are these, my lord Antonio?
Will money buy 'em?

Ant. Very like; one of them
Is a plain fish, and, no doubt, marketable.

Pros. Mark but the badges of these men, my lords,
Then say if they be true. This mis-shapen knave,
His mother was a witch, and one so strong
That could control the moon, make tides and ebbs,
And deal in her command without her power.
These three have robb'd me; and this demi-devil—
For he's a bastard one—had plotted with them
To take my life. Two of these fellows you Must know and own; this thing of darkness I Acknowledge mine.

Cal. I shall be pinch'd to death.

Alon. Is not this Stephano, my drunken butler?

Seb. He is drunk now; where had he wine?

Alon. And Trinculo is reeling ripe: where should Find this grand liquor that hath gilded 'em? [they

Trin. I have been in such a pickle since I saw you last that, I fear me, will never out of my bones: I shall not fear fly-blowing.

Seb. Why, how now, Stephano! [cramp.

Ste. O, touch me not; I am not Stephano, but a
Pros. You 'd be king o' the isle, sirrah?

Seb. I should have been a sore one then.

Alon. This is a strange thing as e'er I look'd

Pros. He is as disproportion'd in his manners
As in his shape. Go, sirrah, to my cell;

Take with you your companions; as you look
To have my pardon, trim it handsomely.

Cal. Ay, that I will: and I'll be wise hereafter
And seek for grace. What a thrice-double ass
Was I, to take this drunkard for a god
And worship this dull fool!

Pros. Go to; away!

Alon. Hence, and bestow your luggage where you

Seb. Or stole it, rather. [found it.

[Exeunt Cal., Ste., and Trin.

Pros. Sir, I invite your highness and your train

To my poor cell, where you shall take your rest
For this one night; which, part of it, I'll waste
With such discourse as, I not doubt, shall make it
Go quick away; the story of my life
And the particular accidents gone by Since I came to this isle: and in the morn
I'll bring you to your ship and so to Naples,
Where I have hope to see the nuptial
Of these our dear-beloved solemnized;
And hence retire me to my Mikado, where Every third thought shall be my grave.

Alon. I long

To hear the story of your life, which must Take the ear strangely.

Pros. I'll deliver all;

And promise you calm seas, auspicious gales
And sail so expeditious that shall catch [chick,
Your royal fleet far off. [Aside to Ari.] My Ariel,
That is thy charge: then to the elements
Be free, and fare thou well! Please you, draw near.

EPilogue.

Spoken by Prospero.

Now my charms are all o'erthrown,
And what strength I have's mine own,
Which is most faint: now, 't is true,
I must be here confined by you,
Or sent to Naples. Let me not,
Since I have my dukedom got
And pardon'd the deceiver, dwell
In this bare island by your spell;
But release me from my bands
With the help of your good hands:
Gentle breath of yours my sails
Must fill, or else my project fails,
Which was to please. Now I want
Spirits to enforce, art to enchant,
And my ending is despair,
Unless I be relieved by prayer,
Which pieces so that it assaults
Mercy itself and frees all faults.
As you from crimes would pardon'd be,
Let your indulgence set me free.

ACT I.

SCENE I.—Verona. An open place.

Enter Valentine and Proteus.

Val. Cease to persuade, my loving Proteus: Home-keeping youth have ever homely wits. Were 't not affection chains thy tender days To the sweet glances of thy honour'd love, I rather would entreat thy company To see the wonders of the world abroad Than, living dully sluggishd at home, Wear out thy youth with shapeless idleness. But since thou lovest, love still and thrive therein, Even as I would when I to love begin.

Pro. Wilt thou be gone? Sweet Valentine, adieu! Think on thy Proteus, when thou haply seest Some rare note-worthy object in thy travel: Wish me partaker in thy happiness When thou dost meet good hap; and in thy danger, If ever danger do environ thee, Command thy grievance to my holy prayers, For I will be thy beadsman, Valentine.

Pro. That's a deep story of a deeper love; For he was more than over shoes in love.

Val. 'Tis true: for you are over boots in love, And yet you never swim the Hellespont.

Pro. Over the boots? nay, give me not the boots. Val. No, I will not, for it boots thee not.

Pro. What? Val. To be in love, where scorn is bought with groans; men's mirth Cov looks with heart-sore sighs: one fading morn With twenty watchful, weary, tedious nights: If haply won, perhaps a hapless gain; If lost, why then a grievous labour won; However, but a folly bought with wit, Or else a wit by folly vanquished.

Pro. So, by your circumstance, you call me fool. Val. So, by your circumstance, I fear you'll prove. Pro. 'Tis love you cavil at: I am not Love.

Val. Love is your master, for he masters you: And he that is so yoked by a fool, Methinks, not be chronicled for wise.

Pro. Yet writers say, as in the sweetest bud The eating canker dwells, so eating love Inhabits in the finest wits of all.

Val. And writers say, as the most forward bud Is eaten by the canker ere it blow,

Even so by love the young and tender wit Is turn'd to folly, blasting in the bud,

Losing his verdure even in the prime
And all the fair effects of future hopes.
But wherefore waste I time to counsel thee That art a votary to fond desire?

Once more adieu! my father at the road

Expect my coming, there to see me shipp'd.

Pro. And thither will I bring thee, Valentine.

Val. Sweet Proteus, no; now let us take our leave. To Milan let me hear from thee by letters Of thy success in love and what news else Betideth here in absence of thy friend; And I likewise will visit thee with mine.

Pro. All happiness bechance to thee in Milan! Val. As much to you at home! and so, fare-well.

[Exit.]

Pro. He after honour hunts, I after love; He leaves his friends to dignify them more; I leave myself, my friends and all, for love. Thou, Julia, thou hast metamorphosed me, Made me neglect my studies, lose my time, War with good counsel, set the world at nought: Made wit with nussing weak, heart sick with thought.

Enter Speed.

Speed. Sir Proteus, save you! saw you my master?

Pro. But now he parted hence, to embark for Milan.

Speed. Twenty to one then he is shipp'd already; And I have play'd the sheep in losing him.

Pro. Indeed, a sheep doth very often stray, An if the shepherd be a while away.

Speed. You conclude that my master is a sheep- herd then and I a sheep?

Pro. I do.

Speed. Why then, my horns are his horns, whether I wake or sleep.

Pro. A silly answer and fitting well a sheep.

Speed. This proves me still a sheep.

Pro. True; and thy master a shepherd.

Speed. Nay, that I can deny by a circumstance.

Pro. It shall go hard but I'll prove it by another.

Speed. The shepherd seeks the sheep, and not the sheep the shepherd; but I seek my master, and my master seeks not me: therefore I am no sheep.

Pro. The sheep for fodder follow the shepherd; the shepherd for food follows not the sheep: thou Act I.  The Two Gentlemen of Verona. Scene II.

for wages followst thy master; thy master for wages follows not thee: therefore thou art a sheep.

Sped. Such another proof will make me cry 'baa.'

Pro. But, dost thou hear? gavest thou my letter to Julia?

Sped. Ay, sir: I, a lost mutton, gave your letter to her, a laced mutton, and she, a laced mutton, gave me, a lost mutton, nothing for my labour.

Pro. Here's too small a pasture for such store of muttons.

Sped. If the ground be overcharged, you were best to nurse your own.

[Exit Sped.]

Pro. Nay: in that you are astray, 'twere best you ask nothing but the word 'noddy' for my pains.

Sped. That you should give so much to her.

Pro. Nay, sir: I, a lost mutton, gave your letter to her, a laced mutton, and she, a laced mutton, gave me, a lost mutton, nothing for my labour.

Pro. Here's too small a pasture for such store of muttons.

Sped. If the ground be overcharged, you were best to nurse your own.

[Exit Sped.]

Pro. Why, sir, how do you bear with me?

Sped. Marry, sir, the letter, very orderly; having nothing but the word 'noddy' for my pains.

Pro. Beshrew me, but you have a quick wit.

Sped. And yet it cannot overtake your slow purse.

Pro. Come, come, open the matter in brief: what said she?

Sped. Open your purse, that the money and the matter may be both at once delivered.

Pro. Well, sir, here is for your pains. What said she?

Sped. Truly, sir, I think you'll hardly win her.

Pro. Why, couldst thou perceive so much from her?

Sped. Sir, I could perceive nothing at all from her; no, not so much as a ducat for delivering your letter; and being so hard to me that brought your mind, I fear she'll prove as hard to you in telling your mind. Give her no token but stones; for she's as hard as stone.

Pro. What said she? nothing?

Sped. No, not so much as 'Take this for thy pains.' To testify your bounty, I thank you, you have testerned me; in requital whereof, henceforth carry your letters yourself: and so, sir, I'll commend you to my master.

Pro. Go, go, be gone, to save your ship from wreck.

Which cannot perish having thee aboard.

Being destined to a drier death on shore. [Exit Sped.]

I must go send some better messenger:

I fear my Julia would not deign my lines,

Receiving them from such a worthless post. [Exit.]

Scene II.—The same. Garden of Julia's house.

Enter Julia and Lucetta.

Jul. But say, Lucetta, now we are alone.

Wouldst thou then counsel me to fall in love?

Luc. Ay, madam, so you stumble not unheedfully.

Jul. Of all the fair resort of gentlemen

That every day with parle encounter me,

In thy opinion which is worthiest love? [mind

Luc. Please you repeat their names, I'll show my account of your skill.

Jul. What think'st thou of the fair Sir Eglamour?

Luc. As of a knight well-spoken, neat and fine;

But, were I you, he never should be mine.

Jul. What think'st thou of the rich Mercatio?

Luc. Well of his wealth; but of himself, so so.

Jul. What think'st thou of the gentle Proteus?

Luc. Lord, Lord! to see what folly reigns in us!

Jul. How now! what means this passion at his name?

Luc. Pardon, dear madam: 'tis a passing shame

That I, an unworthy body as I am,

Should censure thus on lovely gentlemen.

Jul. Why not on Proteus, as of all the rest?

Luc. Then thus: of many good I think him best.

Jul. Your reason?

Luc. I have no other but a woman's reason;

I think him so because I think him so. [him

Jul. And wouldst thou have me cast my love on

Luc. Ay, if you thought your love not cast away.

Jul. Why he, of all the rest, hath never moved me.

Luc. Yet he, of all the rest, I think, best loves ye.

Jul. His little speaking shows his love but small.

Luc. Fire that's closest kept burns most of all.

Jul. They do not love that do not show their love.

Luc. O; they love least that let men know their love.

Jul. I would I knew his mind.

Luc. Peruse this paper, madam.

Jul. 'Tis to Julia. Say, from whom?

Luc. That the contents will show.

Jul. Say, say, who gave it thee?

[Proteus.]

Luc. Sir Valentine's page; and sent, I think, from

He would have given it you; but I, being in the way,

Did in your name receive it: pardon the fault, I pray.

Jul. Now, by my modesty, a godly broker!

Dare you presume to be so familiar with lines?

To whisper and conspire against my youth?

Now, trust me, 'tis an office of great worth

And you an officer fit for the place.

There, take the paper: see it be return'd;

Or else return no more into my sight.

Luc. To plead for love deserves more fece than hate.

Jul. Will ye be gone?

Luc. That you may ruminate. [Exit Lucetta.

Jul. And yet I would I had o'erlooked the letter:

It were a shame to call her back again

And pray her to a fault for which I chid her.

What a fool is she, that knows I am a maid,

And would not force the letter to my view!

Since maids, in modesty, say 'no' to that

Which they would have the proférer construe 'ay.'

Fie, fie, how wayward is this foolish love

That, like a wayward bale, will scratch the nurse

And presently all humbled kiss the rod!

How churlishly I chid Lucetta hence,

When willingly I would have had her here!

How angrily I taught my brow to frown,

When inward joy enforced my heart to smile!

My penance is to call Lucetta back

And ask restitution for my folly past.

What ho! Lucetta!

Re-enter Lucetta.

Luc. What would your ladyship?

Jul. Is't near dinner-time?

Luc. I would it were,

That you might kill your stomach on your meat

And not upon your maid.

Jul. What is 't that you took up so gingerly?

Luc. Nothing.

Jul. Why didst thou stop, then?

Luc. To take a paper up that I let fall.

Jul. And is that paper nothing?

Luc. Nothing concerning me.

Jul. Then let it lie for those that it concerns.

Luc. Madam, it will not he where it concerns,

Unless it have a false interpreter.

Jul. Since love of yours both wish to you in rhyme.

Luc. That I might sing it, madam, to a tone.

Give me a note: your ladyship can set.

Jul. As little by such toys as may be possible.

Best sing it to the tune of 'Light o' love.'
ACT I.

THE TWO GENTLEMEN OF VERONA. SCENE III.

Luc. It is too heavy for so light a tune.

Jul. Heavy! belike it hath some burden then?

Luc. Ay, and melodious were it, would you sing it.

Jul. And why not you?

Luc. I cannot reach so high.

Jul. Let’s see your song. How now, minion!

Luc. Keep me there still, so you will sing it out:
And yet methinks I do not like this tune.

Jul. You do not?

Luc. No, madam; it is too sharp.

Jul. You, minion, are too saucy.

Luc. Nay, now you are too flat
And mar the compass by your unruly bass.
There wanteth a mean to fill your song.

Jul. The mean is drown’d with your unruly bass.

Luc. Indeed, I bid the base for Proteus.

Jul. This babble shall not henceforth trouble me.
Here is a coil with protestation: [Tears the letter.] Go get you gone, and let the papers lie:
You would be fingering them, to anger me.

Luc. She makes it strange; but she would be best pleased
To be so anger’d with another letter. [Exit.]

Jul. Nay, would I were so saucy with the same! O hateful hands, to tear up such lovely words!
Injurious waps, to feed on such sweet honey
And kill the bees that yield it with your stings!
I’ll kiss each several paper for amends.

Look, here is writ ‘kind Julia.’ Unkind Julia! As in revenge of thy ingratitude,
I think of this, my soul against the bruising stones,
Trampling contemptuously on thy disdain.
And here is writ ‘love-wounden Proteus,’
Poor wounded name! my bosom as a bed
Shall lodge thee till thy wound be thoroughly heal’d;
And thus I seek it with a sovereign kiss.

But twice or thrice was ‘Proteus’ written down.
Be calm, good wind, blow not a word away
Till I have found each letter in the letter,
Except mine own name: that some whirlwind bear
Unto a ragged fearful-hanging rock
And throw it hence into the raging sea!
Le, here in one line is his name twice writ,
‘Poor forlorn Proteus, passionate Proteus,
To the sweet Julia:’ that I’ll tear away.
And yet I will not, sith so prettily
He copies it to his complaining names.
Thus will I fold them one upon another:
Now kiss, embrace, contend, do what you will.

Re-enter Lucetta.

Luc. Madam, dinner is ready, and your father stays.

Jul. Well, let us go.

Luc. What, shall these papers lie like tell-tales here?

Jul. If you respect them, best to take them up.

Luc. Nay, I was taken up for laying them down:
Yet here they shall not lie, for catching cold.

Jul. I see you have a lot to do with them.

Luc. Ay, madam, you may say what sights you see;
I see things too, although you judge I wink.

Jul. Come, come; will’t please you go? [Exeunt.

SCENE III.—The same. Antonio’s house.

Enter Antonio and Panthino.

Ant. Tell me, Panthino, what sad talk was that Wherewith my brother held you in the closet?

Pan. ’Twas of his nephew Proteus, your son.

Ant. Why, what of him?

Pan. He wonder’d that your lordship
Would suffer him to spend his youth at home,
While other men, of slender reputation,
Put forth their sons to seek preferment out:
Some to the wars, to try their fortune there;
Some to discover islands far away;
Some to the studious universities.
For any or for all these exercises
He said that Proteus your son was meet,
And did request me to importune you
To let him spend his time no more at home,
Which would be great impeachment to his age,
In having him no true rule or guide.

Ant. Nor need’st thou much importance to that,
Whereon this month I have been hammering.
I have consider’d well his loss of time
And how he cannot be a perfect man,
Not being tried and tutor’d in the world;
Experience is by industry achieved
And perfected by the swift course of time.
Then tell me, whither were I best to send him?

Pan. I think your lordship is not ignorant
How his companion, youthful Valentine,
Attends the emperor in his royal court.

Ant. I know it well.

Pan. ’Twere good, I think, your lordship sent him thither:
There shall be practise tilts and tournaments,
Hear sweet discourse, converse with noblemen,
And be in eye of every exercise:
Worthy like his youth and beauty of birth.

Ant. I like thy counsel; well hast thou advised:
And that thou mayst perceive how well I like it
The execution of it shall make known.
Even with the speediest expedition
I will dispatch him to the emperor’s court.

Pan. To-morrow, may it please you, Don Alphonso,
With other gentlemen of good esteem,
Are journeying; to salute the emperor
And to commend their service to his will.

Ant. Good company; with them shall Proteus go:
And, in good time! now will we break with him.

Enter Proteus.

Pro. Sweet love! sweet lines! sweet life!
Here is her hand, the agent of her heart;
Here is her oath for love, her honour’s pawn.
O, that our fathers would applaud our loves,
To seal our happiness with their consents!
O heavenly Julia!

Ant. How now! what letter are you reading there?

Pro. May ’t please your lordship, ’tis a word or
Of commendations sent from Valentine, [two Deliver’d by a friend that came from him.]

Ant. Let me see the letter; let me see what news.

Pro. There is no news, my lord, but that he writes
How happily he lives, how well beloved
And daily grace by the emperor;
Wishing me with him, partner of his fortune.

Ant. And how stand you affected to his wish?

Pro. As one relying on your lordship’s will
And not depending on his friendly wish.

Ant. My will is something sorted with his wish.
Muse not that I thus suddenly proceed;
For what I will, I will, and there an end.
I am resolved that thou shalt see and know some time
With Valentinus in the emperor’s court:
What maintenance he from his friends receives,
Like exhibition thou shalt have from me.

To-morrow be in readiness to go:
Exuse it not, for I am peremptory.

Pro. My lord, I cannot be so soon provided:
Please you, deliver a day or two. [Thee.

Ant. Look, what thou want’st shall be sent after
No more of stay! to-morrow thou must go.

Come on, Panthino: you shall be employ’d
To hasten on his expedition.

[Exeunt Ant. and Pan.]

Pro. Thus have I shunn’d the fire for fear of burning,
And drench’d me in the sea, where I am drown’d.
I fear to show my father Julia’s letter,
Lest he should take exceptions to my love;
ACT II.

Enter Valentine and Speed.

Val. Sir, your glove.

Speed. Not mine; my gloves are on.

Val. Why, then, this may be yours, for this is but one.

Speed. Ah! let me see: ay, give it me, it’s mine:
Sweet ornament that deck a thing divine!
Ah, Silvia, Silvia!

Val. Madam Silvia! Madam Silvia!

Val. How now, sirrah?

Val. She is not within hearing, sir.

Speed. Your worship, sir; or else I mistook.

Val. Well, you’ll still be too long a time.

[slow.

Speed. And yet I was last chidden for being too

Val. Go to, sir; tell me, do you know Madam

Speed. She that your worship loves? [Silvia?

Val. Why, how know you that I am in love?

Speed. Marry, by these special marks: first, you have learned, like Sir Proteus, to wreathe your arms, like a malecontent; to relia a love-song, like a robin-redbreast; to walk alone, like one that had the pestilence; to sigh, like a school-boy that had lost his A B C; to weep, like a young wench that had buried her grandam; to fast, like one that takes diet; to watch, like one that fears robbing; to speak pulling, like a beggar at Hallowmas. You were wont, when you laughed, to crow like a cock; when you walked, to walk like one of the lions; when you fasted, it was presently after dinner; when you looked sadly, it was for want of money: and now you are metamorphosed with a mistress, that, when I look on you, I can hardly think you my master.

Val. Are all these things perceived in me?

Speed. They are all perceived without ye.

Val. Without me? they cannot.

Speed. Without you? nay, that’s certain, for, without you were so simple, none else would: but you are so without these follies, that these follies are within you and shine through you like the water in an urinal, that not an eye that sees you but is a physician to comment on your madacy.

Val. But tell me, dost thou know my lady Silvia?

Speed. She that you gaze on so as she sits at supper?

Val. Hast thou observed that? even she, I mean.

Speed. Why, sir, I know her not.

Val. Hast thou know her by my gazing on her, and yet knowest her not?

Speed. Is she not hard-favoured, sir?

Val. Not so fair, boy, as well-favoured.

Speed. Sir, I know that well enough.

Val. What dost thou know? [favoured.

Speed. That she is not so fair as, of you, well-
Val. I mean that her beauty is exquisite, but her favour infinite.

Speed. That’s because the one is painted and the other out of all count.

Val. How painted? and how out of count?

Speed. Marry, sir, so painted, to make her fair, that no man counts of her beauty.

Val. How esteemeest thou me? I account of her

Speed. You never saw her since she was deformed.

Val. How long hath she been deformed?

Speed. Ever since you loved her.

Val. This, why is it? my heart accords thereto, And yet a thousand times it answers: no.' [Exeunt.

ACT II.

Re-enter Panthino.

Pan. Sir Proteus, your father calls for you:
He is in haste: therefore, I pray you, go.

Pro. Why, this it is: my heart accords thereto,
ACT II.  THE TWO GENTLEMEN OF VERONA.  SCENE IV.

But I will none of them; they are for you; I would have had them writ more movingly.

Val.  Please you, I’ll write your ladyship another.
Sil.  And when it’s writ, for my sake read it over; and if it please you, so; if not, why, so.
Val.  If it please me, madam, what then? Sil.  Why, if it please you, take it for your labour: And so, good-morrow, servant.

[Exit.]

Speed.  O jest unseen, inscrutable, invisible!
As a nose on a man’s face, or a weathercock on a stable!—[soutur, My master sue to her, and she hath taught her He being her pupil, to become her tutor.
O excellent device! was there ever heard a better, That my master, being scribe, to himself should write the letter?

Val.  How now, sir? what are you reasoning with yourself?

Speed.  Nay, I was rhyming: ’tis you that have the reason.

Val.  To do what?
Speed.  To be a spokesman for Madam Silvia.

Val.  To whom?

Speed.  ’To yourself: why, she wooes you by a Val.  What figure? [figure.
Speed.  By a letter, I should say.

Val.  Why, she hath not writ to me?

Speed.  If she hath not, when she hath made you write to yourself? Why, do you not perceive the Val.  No, believe me. [jest?

Speed.  No believing you, indeed, sir. But did you perceive her earnest?

Val.  She gave me none, except an angry word.

Speed.  Why, she hath given you a letter.

Val.  That’s the letter I writ to her friend.

Speed.  And that letter hath she delivered, and there an end.

Val.  I would it were no worse.

Speed.  I’ll warrant you, ’tis as well: For often have you writ to her, and she, in modesty, Or else for want of idle time, could not again reply; Or fearing else some messenger that might her mind discover, [her lover. Herself hath taught her love himself to write unto All this I speak in print, for in print I found it. Why muse you, sir? ’tis dinner-time.

Val.  I have dined.

Speed.  Ay, but hearken, sir; though the chamelleon Love can feed on the air, I am one that am nourished by my victuals and would fain have meat. 0, be not like your mistress; be moved, be moved.

[Exit.]

Val.  What, gone without a word?

Ay, so true love should do: it cannot speak; For truth hath better deeds than words to grace it.
ACT II.  THE TWO GENTLEMEN OF VERONA.  SCENE IV.

Speed. Master, Sir Thurio frowns on you. Val. Ay, boy, it's for love. Speed. Not of you. Val. Of my mistress, then. [Exit. Speed. 'T were good you knocked him. [Exit.

Sil. Servant, you are sad. Val. Indeed, madam, I seem so. Thru. Seem you that you are not? Val. Haply I do. Thru. So do counterfeits. Val. So do you. Thru. What seem I that I am not? Val. Why, sir. Thru. What instance of the contrary? Val. Your folly. Thru. And how quote you my folly? Val. I quote it in your jerkin. Thru. My jerkin is a doublet. Val. Well, then, I'll double your folly. [colour! Sil. What, angry, Sir Thurio! do you change Val. Give him leave, madam; he is a kind of chameleon. Thru. That hath more mind to feed on your blood than live in your air. Val. You have said, sir. Thru. Ay, sir, and done too, for this time. [begin. Val. I know it well, sir; you always end ere you Sil. A fine volley of words, gentlemen, and quickly shall show it. Val. 'Tis indeed, madam; we thank the giver. Sil. Who is that, servant? Val. Yourself, sweet lady; for you gave the fire. Sir Thurio borrows his wit from your ladyship's looks, and spends what he borrows kindly in your company. Thru. Sir, if you spend word for word with me, I shall make your wit bankrupt. Val. I know it well, sir; you have an exchequer of words, and, I think, no other treasure to give your followers, for it appears, by their bare liversies, that they live by your bare words. [father. Sil. No more, gentlemen, no more: here comes my Enter Duke.

Duke. Now, daughter Silvia, you are hard beset. Sir Valentine, your father's in good health; What say you to a letter from your friends Of such good news? Val. My lord, I will be thankful To any happy messenger from thence. Duke. Know ye Don Antonio, your countryman? Val. Ay, my good lord, I know the gentleman To be of worth and worthy estimation And not without desert so well reputed. Duke. Hath he not a son? Val. Ay, my good lord; a son that well deserves The honour and regard of such a father. Duke. You know him well? Val. I know him as myself; for from our infancy We have conversed and spent our hours together: And though myself have been an idle truant, Omitting the sweet benefit of timeTo clothe mine age with angel-like perfection, Yet hath Sir Proteus, for that's his name, Made use and fair advantage of his days; His years but young, but his experience old; His head unmellow'd, but his judgment ripe; And, in a word, for far behind his worth Comes all the praises that I now bestow, He is complete in feature and in mind With all good grace to grace a gentleman. Duke. Beshrew you, sir, but if he make this good, He is as worthy for an empress' love As meet to be an emperor's counsellor. Well, sir, this gentleman is come to me, With commendation from great potentates; And here he means to spend his time awhile: I think 'tis no unwelcome news to you. Val. Should I have wish'd a thing, it had been he. Duke. Welcome him then according to his worth. Silvia, I speak to you, and you, Sir Thurio; For Valentine I need not cite him to it: I'll send him hither to you consequently. [Exit. Val. This is the gentleman I told you ladyship Had come along with me, but that his mistress Did hold his eyes lock'd in her crystal looks. Sil. Belike that now she hath enchafed them Upon some other pawn for city. [still. Val. Nay, sure, I think she holds them prisoners Sil. Nay, then he should be blind; and, being blind, How could he see his way to seek out you? Val. Why, lady, Love hath twenty pair of eyes. Thru. They say that Love hath not an eye at all. Val. To see such lovers, Thurio, as yourself: Upon a lonely object Love can wink. [leman. Sil. Have done, have done; here comes the gen-

Val. Welcome, dear Proteus! Mistress, I beseech Confirm his welcome with some special favour. [you, Sil. His work is warrant for his welcome hither; If this be he you oft have wish'd to hear from. Val. Mistress, it is: sweet lady, entertain him To be my fellow-servant to your ladyship. Sil. Too low a mistress for so high a servant. Pro. Not so, sweet lady: but too mean a servant To have a look of such a worthy mistress. Val. Leave off discourse of disability: Sweet lady, entertain him for your servant. Pro. My duty will I boast of: nothing else. Sil. And duty never yet did want his meed: Servant, you are welcome to a worthless mistress. Pro. I'll die on him that says so but yourself. Sil. That you are welcome? Pro. That you are worthless.

Re-enter Thurio.

Thru. Madam, my lord your father would speak with you. Sil. I wait upon his pleasure. Come, Sir Thurio, Go with me. Once more, new servant, welcome: I'll leave you to confer of home affairs; When you have done, we look to hear from you. Pro. We'll both attend upon your ladyship. [Exeunt Silvia and Thurio.

Val. Now, tell me, how do all from whence you came? [commanded. Pro. Your friends are well and have them much Val. And how do yours? Pro. I left them all in health. Val. How does your lady? and how thrives your love? Pro. My tales of love were wont to weary you; I know you joy not in a love-discourse. Val. Ay, Proteus, but that life is alter'd now: I have done penance for contending Love, Whose high imperious thoughts have punish'd me With bitter fates, with penitential groans, With nightly tears and daily heart-sore sighs; For in revenge of my contempt of love, Love hath chased sleep from my enthralled eyes And made them watchers of mine own heart's sorrows. 0 gentle Proteus, Love's a mighty lord And hath so humbled me and Masterless There is no woe to his correction Nor to his service no such joy on earth. Now no discourse, except it be of love; Now can I break my fast, dine, sup and sleep, Upon the very naked name of love. Pro. Enough! I read your crime in your eye. Was this the idol that you worship so? Val. Even she; and is she not a heavenly saint? Pro. No; but she is an earthly paragon.
ACT II.
THE TWO GENTLEMEN OF VERONA.  SCENE VI.

Val. Call her divine.
Pro. I will not flatter her.
Val. O, flatter me; for love delights in praises.
Pro. When I was sick, you gave me bitter pills,
And I must minister the like to you.
Val. Then speak the truth by her; if not divine,
Yet let her be a principality,
Sovereign to all the creatures on the earth.
Pro. Except my mistress.
Val. Sweet, except not any;
Except thou wilt except against my love.
Pro. Have I not reason to prefer mine own?
Val. And I will help thee to prefer her too:
She shall be dignified with the high honours—
To bear my lady's train, lest the base earth
Should from her vesture chance to steal a kiss;
And, of so great a favour growing proud,
Disdain to root the summer-swelling flower
And make rough winter everlasting.
Pro. Why, Valentine, what bragging is this?
Val. Pardon me, Proteus: all I can is nothing
To her whose worth makes other worthies nothing;
She is alone.
Pro. Then let her alone.  [own,
Val. Not for the world: why, man, she is mine
And I as rich in having such a jewel
As twenty seas, if all their sand were pearl,
The water nectar and the rocks pure gold,
Forgive me that I do not dream on thee,
Because thou seest me dote upon my love.
My foolish rival, that her father likes
Only for his possessing so huge,
Is gone with her along, and I must after.
For love, thou know'st, is full of jealousy.
Pro. But she loves you?  [marriage-hour,
Val. Ay, and we are betroth'd: nyay, more, our
With all the cunning manner of our light
Determined of; how I must climb her window,
The ladder made of cords, and all the means
Plotted and 'greed on for my happiness.
Good Proteus, go with me to my chamber,
In these affairs to aid me with thy counsel.
Pro. Go on before: I shall inquire you forth:
I must unto the road, to disembark
Some necessaries that I needs must use,
And then I'll presently attend you.
Val. Will you make haste?
Pro. I will.  [Exit Valentine.

Enter Speed and Launce severally.
Speed. Launce! by mine honesty, welcome to Milan!

Launce. Forswear not thyself, sweet youth, for
If I were not welcome, I reckon this always, that a man is never undone till he be hanged, nor never welcome to a place till some certain shot be paid and the hostess say 'Welcome!'

Speed. Come on, you madcap, I'll to the alehouse with you presently; where, for one shot of five pence, there shall have five thousand welcomes. But, sirrah, how did thy master part with Madam Julia?

Launce. Marry, after they closed in earnest, they parted very fairly in jest.

Speed. But shall she marry him?

Launce. No.

Speed. And then shall she marry her?

Launce. No, neither.

Speed. What, are they broken?

Launce. No, they are both as whole as a fish. [them?

Speed. Why, then, how stands the matter with Launce. Marry, thus: when it stands well with him, it stands well with her.

[not.

Speed. What an ass art thou! I understand thee

Launce. What a block art thou, that thou canst not! My staff understands me.

Speed. What thou sayest?

Launce. Ay, and what I do too: look thee, I'll but leen, and my staff understands me.

Speed. It stands under thee, indeed.  [one.

Launce. Why, stand-under and under-stand is all

Speed. But tell me true, will 't be a match?

Launce. Ask my dog: if he say ay, it will; if he say no, it will: if he shake his tail and say nothing, it will.

Speed. The conclusion is then that it will.

Launce. Thou shalt never get such a secret from me but by a parable.

Speed. 'T is well that I get it so. But, Launce, how sayest thou, that my master is become a notable

Launce. I never knew him otherwise.  [lover?

Speed. Than how?  [to be.

Launce. A notable lubber, as thou reportest him

Speed. Why, thou whoreson ass, thou mistakest me.

Launce. Thy master.

Speed. Why, fool, I meant not thee; I meant

Launce. Why, I tell thee, I care not though he burn himself in love. If thou wilt, go with me to the alehouse: if not, thou art an Hebrew, a Jew, and not worth the name of a Christian.

Speed. Why?

Launce. Because thou hast not so much charity in thee as to go to the ale with a Christian. Wilt thou go?

Speed. At thy service.  [Exeunt.
ACT III.

THE TWO GENTLEMEN OF VERONA.

SCENE I.

For Valentine myself, for Julia Silvia.
I to myself am dearer than a friend,
For love is still most precious in itself;
And Silvia—witness Heaven, that made her fair!—
Shows Julia but a swarthy Ethelope.
I will forget that Julia is a girl,
Remembering that my love to her is dead;
And Valentine I'll hold an enemy,
Aiming at Silvia as a sweeter friend.
I cannot now prove constant to myself,
Without some treachery used to Valentine.
This may be made with a ladder and window
To climb celestial Silvia's chamber-window,
Myself in counsel, his competitor.
Now presently I'll give her father notice
Of their disguising and pretended flight;
Who, all enraged, will banish Valentine;
For Thurio, he intends, shall wed his daughter;
But, Valentine being gone, I'll quickly cross
By some sly trick blunt Thurio's dull proceeding.
Love, lend me wings to make my purpose swift,
As thou hast lent me wit to plot this drift! [Exit.

SENE VII.—Verona. Julia's house.

Enter Julia and Lucetta.

Jul. Counsel, Lucetta; gentle girl, assist me;
And even in kind love I do conjure thee,
Who art the table wherein all my thoughts
Are visibly character'd and exhibited,
To lesson me and tell me some good mean
How, with my honour, I may undertake
A journey to my loving Proteus.

Luc. Alas, the way is wearisome and long!
Jul. A true-devoted pilgrim is not weary
To measure kingdoms with his feeble steps;
Much less shall she that hath Love's wings to fly,
And when the flight is made to one so dear,
Of such divine perfection, as Sir Proteus.

Luc. Better forbear till Proteus make return.
Jul. O, know'st thou not his looks are my soul's
Pity the dearth that I have pined in. [fool?
By longing for that food so long a time.
Didst thou but know the inly touch of love,
Thou wouldest as soon go kindle fire with snow
As seek to quench the fire of love with words.

Luc. I do not seek to quench your love's hot fire,
But qualify the fire's extreme rage,
Lest it should burn above the bounds of reason.

Jul. The more thou dost'st it up, the more it
The current that with gentle murmurs glides;[burns.
Thou know'st, being stopp'd, impatiently doth rage;
But when his fair course is not hindered,
He makes sweet music with the enamell'd stones,
Giving a gentle kiss to every sedge.
He overtooketh in his pilgrimage,
And so by many winding nooks he strays
With willing sport to the wild ocean.
Then let me go and hinder not my course:
I'll be as patient as a gentle stream
And make a pastime of each weary step,
Till the last step have brought me to my love;
And there I'll rest, as after much turmoil
A blessed soul doth in Elysium.

Luc. But, do you think what will you go along?

Jul. Not like a woman; for I would prevent
The loose encounters of lascivious men:
Gentle Lucetta, fit me with such weeds
As may besmeар some well-reputed page.

Luc. Why, then, your ladyship must cut your hair.

Jul. No, go not. God hold thee, thy silken string
With twenty odd-conceited true-love knots
To be fantastic may become a youth
Of greater time than I shall show to be. [breeches?
Luc. What fashion, madam, shall I make your

Jul. That fits as well as 'Tell me, good my lord,
What compass will you wear your farthingale?'
Why even what fashion thou best likest, Lucetta.

Luc. You must needs have them with a codpiece, madam.

Jul. Out, out, Lucetta! that will be ill-favour'd.

Luc. A round hose, madam, now's not worth a
Unless you have a codpiece to stick pins on. [pin,
Jul. Lucetta, as thou lovest me, let me have
What thou think'st meet and is most mannerly.
But tell me, wench, how will the world repute me
For undertaking so unlaid a journey?
I fear me, it will make me scandalized.

Luc. If you will go so, let your stay at home and go not.

Jul. Nay, that I will not.

Luc. Then never dream on infamy, but go.
If Proteus like your journey when you come,
No matter who's displeas'd when you are gone:
I fear me, he will scarce be pleas'd withal.
Jul. That is the least, Lucetta, of my fear:
A thousand oaths, an ocean of his tears
And instances of infinite love
Warrant me welcome to my Proteus.

Luc. All these are servants to deceitful men.

Jul. Base men, that use them to so base effect!
But true stars did govern Proteus' birth;
His words are bonds, his oaths are oracles,
His love sincere, his thoughts immaculate,
His tears pure messengers sent from his heart,
His heart as far from fraud as heaven from earth.

Luc. Pray heaven he prove so, when you come to quote him! [Wrong

Jul. Now, as thou lovest me, do him not that
To bear a hard opinion of his truth:
Only deserve my love by loving him;
And presently go with me to my chamber,
To take a note of what I stand in need of,
To furnish me upon my longing journey.
All that is mine I leave at thy dispose,
My goods, my lands, my reputation;
Only, in lieu thereof, dispatch me hence.
Come, answer not, but to it presently!
I am impatient of my tardance.

[Exeunt.}

ACT III.

Enter Duke, Thurio, and Proteus.

Duke. Sir Thurio, give us leave, I pray, awhile; We have some secrets to confer about. [Exit Thu.

Not tell me, Proteus, what's your will with me.

Pro. My gracious lord, that which I would discourse to you,
The law of friendship bids me to conceal: [cover
But when I call to mind your gracious favours Done to me, undeserving as I am,
My duty pricks me on to utter that
Which else no worldly good should draw from me.

Know, worthy prince, Sir Valentine, my friend, This night intends to steal away your daughter: Myself am one made privy to the plot. I know you have determined to bestow her On Thurio, whom your gentle daughter hates; And should she thus be stolen away from you, It would be much vexation to your age.

Thus, for my duty's sake, I rather chose To cross my friend in his intended drift Than, by concealing it, heap on your head A pack of sorrows which would press you down, Being unprevented, to your timeless grave.
Duke. Proteus, I thank thee for thine honest care;
Which to requite, command me while I live,
This love of thine doth not a slave let.
Haply when they have judged me fast asleep,
And oftentimes have purposed to forbid
Sir Valentine her company and my court:
But hearing lest my jealous aim might err
And so unworthily disgrace the man,
A resolution I ever made, I even said,
I gave him gentle looks, thereby to find
That which thyself hast now disclosed to me.
And, that thou mayst perceive my fear of this,
Knowing that tender youth is soon suggested,
I nightly lodge her in an upper tower,
The key whereof my self have ever kept;
And thence she cannot be convey'd away.

Pro. Know, noble lord, they have devised a mean
How he her chamber-window will ascend
And with a corded ladder fetch her down;
For which the youthful lover now is gone
And this way comes he with it presently;
Where, if it please you, you may intercept him.
But, good my Lord, do it so cunningly
That my discovery be not aimed at;
For love of you, not hate unto my friend,
Hath made that passion of this present action.
Duke. Upon mine honour, he shall never know
That I had any light from thee of this.

Pro. Adieu, my Lord; Sir Valentine is coming.

[Exit Valentine.]

Duke. Sir Valentine, whither away so fast?
Val. Please it your grace, there is a messenger
That stays to bear my letters to my friends,
And I am going to deliver them.
Duke. Be they of much import?
Val. The tenour of them doth but signify
My heart and my beholding at your court.
Duke. Nay then, no matter; stay with me awhile;
I am to break with thee of some affairs
That touch me near, wherein thou must be secret.
'Tis not unknown to thee that I have sought
To match my friend Sir Thurio to my daughter.
Val. I know it well, my Lord; and, sure, the match
Was rich and honourable; besides, the gentleman
Is full of virtue, bounty, worth and qualities
Beseeching such a wife as your fair daughter:
Cannot your Grace win her to fancy him? [ward,
My heart and my beholding at your court,
Duke. Nay then, no matter; stay with me awhile;
I am to break with thee of some affairs
That touch me near, wherein thou must be secret.
'Tis not unknown to thee that I have sought
To match my friend Sir Thurio to my daughter.
Val. I know it well, my Lord; and, sure, the match
Was rich and honourable; besides, the gentleman
Is full of virtue, bounty, worth and qualities
Beseeching such a wife as your fair daughter:

Val. The tenour of them doth but signify
My heart and my beholding at your court.
Duke. Nay then, no matter; stay with me awhile;
I am to break with thee of some affairs
That touch me near, wherein thou must be secret.
'Tis not unknown to thee that I have sought
To match my friend Sir Thurio to my daughter.
Val. I know it well, my Lord; and, sure, the match
Was rich and honourable; besides, the gentleman
Is full of virtue, bounty, worth and qualities
Beseeching such a wife as your fair daughter:
Cannot your Grace win her to fancy him?

Val. When would you use it? pray, sir, tell me.
Duke. This very night; for Love is like a child,
That longs for everything that he can come by.
Val. By seven o'clock I'll get you such a ladder.
Duke. Nay, there shall be more.
Val. How shall I best convey the ladder thither?
Duke. Nay; it will be light, my lord, that you may bear it
Under a cloak that is of any length.
Duke. A cloak as long as thine will serve the turn?
Val. Ay, my good lord.
Duke. Then let me see thy cloak:
I'll get me one of such another length.
Val. Why, any cloak will serve the turn, my lord.
Duke. How shall I fashion me to wear a cloak?
I pray thee, let me feel thy cloak upon me.
What letter is this same? What's here? 'To Silvia!'

[Enter Sir Talbot, with a chair.]

Duke. Sir Talbot, what news?
Val. They say that you have received
Instructions from your liege lord, your King,
To ride forth upon a secret mission with him.
Duke. It seems so; and here's the ladder for the purpose.
Val. Which, Prince— for he is so,
Will thou aspire to guide the heavenly car
And with thy daring folly burn the world?
Wilt thou reach stars, because they shine on thee?
Go, base intruder! overweening slave!
Bestow thy fawning smiles on equal mates.
And think thy patience more than desert.
It is privilege for thy departure hence:
Thank me for this more than for all the favours
Which all too much I have bestow'd on thee.
But if thou linger in my territories
And dawdlest in swiftest expedition
Will give the time to have the royal court,
Be gone! I will not hear thy vain excuse;
But, as thou lovest thy life, make speed from hence. [Exit.]

Val. And why not death rather than living torrTo die is to put an end to the shadow of life; [ment? And Silvia is myself: banish’d from her Is self from self: a deadly banishment! What light is light, if Silvia be not seen? What joy is joy, if Silvia be not by? Unless it be to think that she is by And die that the shadow of perfection. Except I be by Silvia in the night. There is no music in the nightingale; Unless I look on Silvia in the day, There is no day for me to look upon; She is my essence, and I leave to be, If I do not see her fair influence. Foster’d, illumined, cherish’d, kept alive. I fly not death, to fly his deadly doom: Tarry I here, I but attend on death: But, fly I hence, I fly away from life.

Enter Proteus and Launce.

Pro. Villain, forbear. Launce. Why, sir, I’ll strike nothing: I pray you,— [a word. Sirrah, I say, forbear. Friend Valentine, Val. My ears are stop’d and cannot hear good news, So much of bad already hath possess’d them. Pro. Then in dumb silence will I bury mine, For they are harsh, unthoughtful and bad. Val. Is Silvia dead? Pro. No, Valentine. Val. No Valentine, indeed, for sacred Silvia Hath she forsworn me?

Pro. No, Valentine. Val. No Valentine, if Silvia have forsworn me. What is your news?

Launce. Sir, there is a proclamation that you are banish’d. [news— Pro. That thou art banish’d—O, that’s the From hence, from Silvia and from me thy friend. Val. O, I have fed upon this woe already, And now excess of it will make me surfeit. Doth Silvia know that I am banish’d? Pro. Ay, ay; and she hath offer’d to the doom—which, unrevoc’d, stands in effectual force—a sea of melting pearl, which some call tears; Those at her father’s churlish feet she tender’d; With them, upon her knees, her humble self; Wringing her hands, whose whiteness so became As if but now they waxed pale for woe: [them But neither bended knees, pure hands held up, Sad sighs, deep groans, nor silver-shedding tears, Could penetrate her uncompassionate sire; But Valentine, if he be ta’en, must die. Besides her intercession cha’d him so, When she for her repentance was suppli’d, That to close prison he commanded her, With many bitter threats of biding there. [speak’d Val. No more; unless the next word that thou Have some malignant power upon my life: If so, I pray thee, breathe it in mine ear, As ending anthem of my endless dole.

Pro. Cease to lament for that thou canst not help, And study help for that which thou lament’st. Time is the nurse and breeder of all good. Here if thou stay, so may slip thy love; Besides, thy staying will abridge thy life. Hope is a lover’s staff: walk hence with that And manage it against despairing thoughts. Thy letters may be here, though thou art hence; Which, being writ to me, shall be deliver’d Even in the milk-white bosom of thy love. The time now serves not to expostulate: Come, I’ll convey thee through the city-gate; And, ere I part with thee, confer at large Of all that may concern thy love-affairs. As thou lovest Silvia, though not for thyself, I heard thy dançar, and along with me! [boy, Pro. I pray thee, Launce, an if thou seest my Bid him make haste and meet me at the North-gate. Pro. Go, sirrah, find him out. Come, Valentine. Val. O my dear Silvia! Heartless Valentine! [Exeunt Val. and Pro.

Launce. I am but a fool, look you; and yet I have the wit to think my master is a kind of a knave: but that’s all one, if he be but one knave. He lives not now that knows me to be in love; yet I am in love; but a team of horse shall not pluck that from me; nor who ’t is I love; and yet ’t is a woman; but what woman, I will not tell myself; and yet ’t is a milksop: yea, and ’t is not a maid, for she hath had gossips; yet ’t is a maid, for she is her master’s maid, and serves for wages. She hath more qualities than a water-spaniel; which is much in a bare Christian. [Pulling out a paper.] Here is the catechism of her condition. ’Imprimis: She can fetch and carry. ‘Why, a horse can do no more: nay, a horse cannot fetch, but only carry; therefore is she better than a jade. ‘Item: She can milk? look you, a sweet virtue in a maid with clean hands.

Enter Speed.

Speed. How now, Signior Launce! what news with your mastership? [sea. Launce. With my master’s ship? why, it is at Speed. Well, your old vice still: mistake the word. What news, then, in your paper? Launce. The blackest news that ever thou heardest. Speed. Why, man, how black? Launce. Why, as black as ink. Speed. Let me read them, [read. Launce. Pie on thee, joll-head! thou canst not Speed. Thou lullaby, I can: [thee? Launce. I will try thee. Tell me this: who beget Speed. Marry, the son of my grandfather. Launce. Oh illiterate loiterer! it was the son of thy grandmother: this proves that thou canst not read. Speed. Come, fool, come: try me in thy paper. Launce. There: and Saint Nicholas be thy speed! Speed. [Reads] ‘Imprimis: She can milk.’ Speed. Ay, that she can. Speed. ‘Item: She brews good ale.’ Launce. And thereof comes the proverb: ‘Blessing of your heart, you brew good ale.’ Speed. ‘Item: She can sew.’ Launce. ‘That’s as much as to say, Can she so? Speed. ‘Item: She can knit.’ Launce. ‘What need a man care for a stock with a wench, when she can knit him a stock? Speed. ‘Item: She can wash and scour.’ Launce. ‘A special virtue; for then she need not be washed and scour’d. Speed. ‘Item: She can spin.’ Launce. Then may I set the world on wheels, when she can spin for her living. Speed. ‘Item: She hath many nameless virtues.’ Launce. That’s as much as to say, bastard vir-
A little time will melt her frozen thoughts And worthless Valentine shall be forgot.

Enter Proteus.

How now, Sir Proteus! Is your countryman According to our proclamation gone?

Pro. Gone, my good lord.

Duke. My daughter takes his going grievously.

Pro. A little time, my lord, will kill that grief.

Duke. So I believe; but Thurio thinks not so.

Pro. Proteus, the good conceit I hold of thee.

For thou hast shewn some sign of good desert — Makes me the better to confer with thee.

Pro. Longer than I prove loyal to your grace Let me not live to look upon your grace.

Duke. Thou know'st how willingly I would effect The match between Sir Thurio and my daughter.

Pro. I do, my lord.

Duke. And also, I think, thou art not ignorant How she opposes him against my will.

Pro. She did, my lord, when Valentine was here.

Duke. Ay, and perversely she perseveres so.

What might we do to make the girl forget

The love of Valentine? Sir Thurio.

Pro. The best way is to slander Valentine With falsehood, cowardice and poor descent,

Three things that women highly hold in hate.

Duke. Ay, but she 'll think that it is spoke in hate.

Pro. And as if his enemy had told his doings Therefore it must with circumstance be spoken

By one whom she esteemeth as his friend.

Duke. Then you must undertake to slander him.

Pro. And that, my lord, I shall be loath to do: 'Tis an ill office for a gentleman, Especially against his very friend.

Duke. Where your good word cannot advantage Your slander never can endanger him;

Therefore the office is indifferent, Being entrusted to it by your friend.

Pro. You have prevail'd, my lord: If I can do it By cogitations that I can speak in his dispatch,

She shall not long continue love to him.

But say this weed her love from Valentine, It follows not that she will love Sir Thurio.

Thou. Therefore, as you unwind her love from him, Lest it should ravish and be good to none,

That more you must provide to such it may not Which must be done by praising me as much As you in worth dispaise Sir Valentine.

Duke. And, Proteus, we dare trust you in this Because we know, on Valentine's report, You are already Love's firm votary And cannot soon revolt and change your mind.

Upon this warrant shall you have access Where you with Silvia may confer at large; For she is lumpish, heavy, melancholy, And, for your friend's sake, will be glad of you; Where you may temper her by your persuasion To hate young Valentine and love my friend.

Pro. As much as I can do, I will effect: But you, Sir Thurio, are not sharp enough; You must lay time to tangle her desires By wallsom sonnets, whose composed rhymes Should be full-fragant with serviceable vows.

Duke. Ay.

Much is the force of heaven-bred poesy.

Pro. Say that upon the altar of her beauty You sacrifice your tears, your sighs, your heart: Write till your ink be dry, and with your tears Moist it again, and frame some feeling line That may discover such love's strange ways. For Orpheus' lute was string with poets' sinewes, Those golden touch could sorten steel and stones, Make tigers tame and huge leviathans Forsake unsounded deeps to dance on sands. After your dire-lamenting elegies, Visit by night your lady's chamber-window.
ACT IV.

THE TWO GENTLEMEN OF VERONA. SCENE I.

With some sweet concert; to their instruments
Tune a deploring dump; the night’s dead silence
Will well become such sweet-complaining grievance.
This, or else nothing, will inherit her. [Love.

Duke. This discipline shows thou hast been in
Thu. And thy advice this night I’ll put in practice.
Therefore, sweet Proteus, my direction-giver,
Let us into the city presently

To sort some gentlemen well skill’d in music.
I have a sonnet that will serve the turn
To give the onset to thy good advice.

Duke. About it, gentlemen!

Pro. We’ll wait upon your grace till after supper,
And afterward determine our proceedings.

Duke. Even now about it! I will pardon you.

[Exeunt.

ACT IV.

SCENE I.— The frontiers of Mantua. A forest.

Enter certain Outlaws.

First Out. Fellows, stand fast! I see a passenger.

Sec. Out. If there be ten, shrink not, but down with’t.

Enter Valentine and Speed.

Third Out. Stand, sir, and throw us that you have about ye:
If not, we’ll make you sit and rifle you.

Speed. Sir, we are undone; these are the villains
That all the travellers do fear so much.

Val. My friends,—

First Out. That’s not so, sir: we are your enemies.

Sec. Out. Peace! we’ll hear him.

Third Out. Ay, by my beard, will we, for he’s a proper man.

Val. Then know that I have little wealth to lose:
A man I am cross’d with adversity;
My riches are these poor habiliments,
Of which if you should here disturb me,
You take the sum and substance that I have.

Sec. Out. Whither travel you?

Val. To Verona.

First Out. Whence came you?

Val. From Milan.

Third Out. Have you long sojourned there?

Val. Some sixteen months, and longer might have
If crooked fortune had not thwarted me. [stay’d,

First Out. What, were you banish’d thence?

Val. I was.

Sec. Out. For what offence? [hear’s: Val. For that which now torments me to re-
I kill’d a man, whose death I much repent;
But yet I slew him manfully in flight,
Without false vantage or base treachery.

First Out. Why, ne’er repent it, if it was done so.
But were you banish’d for so small a fault?

Val. I was, and held me glad of such a doom.

Sec. Out. Have you the tongues?

Val. My youthful travel therein made me happy,
Or else I often had been miserable. [friar,

Third Out. By the bare scalp of Robin Hood’s fat
This fellow were a king for our wild faction!

First Out. We’ll have him. Sirs, a word.

Speed. Master, be one of them; it’s an honourable kind of thievish.

Val. Peace, villain! [to?

Sec. Out. Tell us this: have you any thing to take Third Out. Know, then, that some of us are gen-

Such as the fury of ungovern’d youth
Thrust from the company of awful men:
Myself was from Verona banish’d
For practising to steal away a lady,
An heir, and near allied unto the duke.

That they may hold excus’d our lawless lives;
And partly, seeing you are befatuled

With goodly shape and by your own report
A linguist and a man of such perfection
As we do in our quality much want —

Sec. Out. Indeed, because you are a banish’d man,
Therefore, above the rest, we parley to you:
Are you content to be our general?
To make a virtue of necessity
And live, as we do, in this wilderness? [consort?

Val. I take your offer and will live with you,
Provided that you do no outrages
On silly women or poor passengers.

Third Out. No, we detest such vile base practices.
Come, go with us, we’ll bring thee to our crews,
And show thee all the treasure we have got;
Which, with ourselves, all rest at thy dispose.

[Exeunt.

SCENE II.— Milan. Outside the Duke’s palace, under Silvia’s chamber.

Enter Proteus.

Pro. Already have I been false to Valentine
And now I must be as unjust to Thurio,
Under the colour of commending him,
I have access my own love to prefer:
But Silvia is too fair, too true, too holy,
To be corrupted with my worthless gifts.
When I protest true loyalty to her,
She twits me with my falsehood to my friend;
When to her beauty I commend my vows,
She bids me think how I have been forsworn
In breaking faith with Julia whom I loved;
And notwithstanding all her sudden quips,
The least whereof would quell a lover’s hope,
Yet, spaniel-like, the more she spurns my love,
The more it grows and fawneth on her still.
But here comes Thurio: now must we to her win,
And give some evening music to her ear. [dow,

Enter Thurio and Musicians.

Thu. How now, Sir Proteus, are you crept before us?

Pro. Ay, gentle Thurio: for you know that love
Will creep in service where it cannot go.

Thu. Ay, but I hope, sir, that you love not here.

Pro. Sir, but I do; or else I would be hence.

Thu. Who? Silvia?

Pro. Ay, Silvia; for your sake.

Thu. I thank you for your own. Now, gentlemen,
Let’s tune, and to it lustily awhile.

Enter, at a distance, Host, and Julia in boy’s clothes.

Host. Now, my young guest, methinks you’re allycholy: I pray you, why is it?

Jul. Marry, mine host, because I cannot be merry.

Host. Come, we’ll have you merry: I’ll bring you where you shall hear music and see the gentleman that you asked for.

Jul. But shall I hear him speak?

Host. Ay, that you shall.

Jul. That will be music.

[Music plays.]

Host. Hark, hark!

Jul. Is he among these?

Host. Ay: but, peace! let 's hear 'em.

SONG.

Who is Silvia? What is she?
That all our swains commend her?
Holy, fair and wise is she:
The heaven such grace did lend her,
That she might admired be.

Is she kind as she is fair?
For beauty lives with kindness.
Love doth to her eyes repair.
To help him of his blindness,
And, being help'd, inhabits there.

Then to Silvia let us sing,
That Silvia is excelling;
She excels each mortal thing.
Upon the dull earth dwelling;
To her let us garlands bring.

Host. How now! are you saunter than you were before? How do you, man? the music likes you not.

Jul. You mistake; the musician likes me not.

Host. Why, my pretty youth?

Jul. He plays false, father.

Host. How? out of tune on the strings?

Jul. Not so; but yet so false that he grieves my very heart-strings.

Host. You have a quick ear.

Jul. Ay, I would I were deaf; it makes me have a slow heart.

Host. I perceive you delight not in music.

Jul. Not a whit, when it jars so.

Host. Hark, what line change is in the music!

Jul. Ay, that change is the spite.

[Aside]

Host. You would have them always play but one.

Jul. I would always have one play but one thing.

But, host, doth this Sir Proteus that we talk on

Often resort unto this gentlewoman?

Host. I tell you what Launce, his man, told me:

He loved her out of all nick.

Jul. Where is Launce?

Host. Gone to seek his dog; which to-morrow,

By his master's command, he must carry for a present to his lady.

[Enter Sir Thurio, fear not you: I will so plead

That you shall say my cunning drift excels.

Thu. Where meet we?

Pro. At Saint Gregory's well.

Thu. Farewell.

[Exeunt Thu. and Musicians.

Enter Silvia above.

Pro. Madam, good even to your ladyship.

Sil. I thank you for your music, gentlemen.

Who is that that speake? [truth,

Pro. If you knew his pure heart's

You would quickly learn to know him by his voice.

Sil. Sir Proteus, as I take it.

Pro. Sir Proteus, gentle lady, and your servant.

Sil. What's your will?

Pro. That I may compass yours.

Sil. You have your wish; my will is even this:

That presently you lie you home to bed.

Thu. Subtle, perfured, false, disloyal man!

Think'st thou I am so shallow, so conceitless,

To be seduced by thy flattery,

That hast deceived so many with thy vows?

Return, return, and make thy love amends.
For me, by this pale queen of night I swear,
I am so far from granting thy request
That I despise thee for thy wrongful suit,

And by and by intend to chide myself

Even for this time I spend in talking to thee.

Pro. Art not, sweet love, that I did love a lady;

But she is dead.

Jul. [Aside] 'T were false, if I should speak it;
For I am sure she is not buried.

Sil. Say that she be; yet Valentine thy friend

Survives; to whom, thyself art witness,

I am before 't, and art thou not ashamed

To wrong him with thy importunity?

Pro. I likewise hear that Valentine is dead.

Sil. And so suppose am I; for in his grave

Assure myself my love is buried.

Pro. Sweet lady, let me take it from the earth.

Sil. Go to thy lady's grave and call hers thence,

Or, at the least, in hers sepulchre thine.

Jul. [Aside] He heard not that.

Pro. Madam, if your heart be so obdurate,

Vouchsafe me yet your picture for my love,

The picture that is hanging in your chamber;

To that I'll speak to that I'll sigh and weep;

For since the substance of your perfect self

Is else devoted, I am but a shadow;

And to your shadow will I make true love.

Jul. [Aside] If 't were a substance, you would,

Sure, deceive it,

And make it but a shadow, as I am.

Sil. I am very loath to be your idol, sir:

But since your falsehood shall become you well

To worship shadows and adore false shapes,

Send to me in the morning and I'll send it:

And so, good rest.

Pro. As wretches have o'ernight

That wait for execution in the morn.

[Exeunt Pro. and Sil. severally.

Jul. Host, will you go?

Host. By my halidom, I was fast asleep.

Jul. Pray you, where lies Sir Proteus?

Host. Marry, at my house. Trust me, I think it's almost day.

Jul. Not so; but it hath been the longest night

That e'er I watch'd and the most heaviest.

[Exeunt.

SCENE III. — The same.

Enter Eglamour.

Egl. This is the hour that Madam Silvia

Entreated me to call and know her mind:

There's some great matter she'll employ me in.

Madam, madam!

Enter Silvia above.

Sil. Who calls?

Egl. Your servant and your friend;

One that attends your ladyship's command. [row.

Sil. Sir Eglamour, a thousand times good-morn.

Egl. As many, worthy lady, to yourself:

According to your ladyship's impose,

I am thus early come to know what service

It is your pleasure to command me in.

Sil. O Eglamour, thou art a gentleman—

Think not I flatter, for I swear I do not—

Valiant, wise, remorseful, well accomplished:

Thou art not ignorant what dear good will

I bear unto the banish'd Valentine,

Nor how my father would enforce me marry

Vain Thurio, whom my very soul abhors.

Thyself last loved; and I have heard them say

No grief but ever come so near thy heart

As when thy lady and thy true love died,

Upon whose grave thou vow'dst pure chastity.

Sir Eglamour, I would to Valentine,

To Mantua, where I hear he makes abode;
ACT IV.  THE TWO GENTLEMEN OF VERONA.  SCENE IV.

And, for the ways are dangerous to pass, I do desire the worthy company,
Upon whose faith and honour I repose.
Urge not my father's anger, Eglamour,
But think upon my grief, a lady's grief,
And on the justice of my flying hence,
To keep me from a most unholy match, [plagues.
Which heaven and fortune still rewards with
I do desire thee, even from a heart
As full of sorrows as the sea of sands,
To bear me company and go with me:
If not, to hide what I have said to thee,
That I may venture to depart alone.
Eglamour, tell me your grievances:
Which since I know they virtuously are placed,
I give consent to go along with you,
Recking as little what betideth me
As much I wish all good beforye you.
When will you go?
Sil. This evening coming.
Eglamour. Where shall I meet you?
Sil. At Friar Patrick's cell,
Where I intend holy confession.
Eglamour. I will not fail your ladyship. Good-morrow, gentle lady.
Sil. Good-morrow, kind Sir Eglamour.

Enter Launce, with his Dog.

Launce. When a man's servant shall play the cur with him, look you, it goes hard: one that I brought up of a puppy; one that I saved from drowning, when three or four of his blind brothers and sisters went to it. I have taught him, even as one would say precisely, 'thus I would teach a dog.' I did sent to deliver him as a present to Mistress Silvia from my master; and I came no sooner into the dining-chamber but he steps me to her trencher and steals her eapon's leg: O, it is a foul thing when a cur cannot keep himself in all companies! I would have, as one should say, one that takes upon him to be a dog indeed, to be, as it were, a dog at all things. If I had not had more wit than he, to take a fault upon me that he did, I think verily he had been hanged for't; sure as I live, he had suffered for't: you shall judge. He thrusts me himself into the company of three or four gentlemanlike dogs, under the duke's table: he had not been there—bless the mark!—a pissing while, but all the chamber smelt him. 'Out with the dog!' says one: 'What cur is that?' says another: 'Whip him out' says the third: 'Hang him up' says the duke, I, having been acquainted with the smell before, knew it was Crab, and goes me to the fellow that whips the dogs: 'Friend,' quo it, 'you mean to whip the dog?' 'Ay, marry, do I,' quo he. 'You do him the more wrong,' quo it: 'I was I did the thing you wrought.' He makes me no more ado, but whips me out of the chamber. How many masters do this for his servant? Nay, I'll be sworn, I have sat in the stools for puddings he hath stolen, otherwise he had been executed; I have stood on the pillof for geese he hath killed, otherwise he had suffered for't. Thou thinkest I did not bid thee then to deliver the trick you served me when I took my leave of Madam Silvia: did not I bid thee still mark me and do as I did? when didst thou see me heave up my leg and make water against a gentlewoman's farthingale? didst thou ever see me do such a trick?

Enter Proteus and Julia.

Jul. In what you please! I'll do what I can.
Pro. I hope thou wilt. [To Launce] How now, you whoreson peasant! Where have you been these two days loitering?
Launce. Marry, sir, I carried Mistress Silvia the dog you bade me.
Pro. And what says she to my little jewel?
Launce. Marry, she says your dog was a cur, and tells you currish thanks is good enough for such a
Pro. But she received my dog? [present.
Launce. No, indeed, did she not: here have I brought him back again.
Pro. What, didst thou offer her this from me?
Launce. Ay, sir; the other squirrel was stolen from me by the hangman boys in the market-place; and then I offered her mine own, who is a dog as big as ten of yours, and therefore the gift the greater.
Pro. Go get thee hence, and find my dog again, Or never return again into my sight.
Away, I say! stay'st thou to vex me here?

Jul. It seems you loved not her, to leave her token.
She is dead, beliefe?

Pro. Not so; I think she lives.
Jul. Alas!\nPro. Why dost thou cry 'alas'?
Jul. I cannot choose but pity her.

Pro. Wherefore shouldst thou pity her?
Jul. Because methinks that she loved you as well As you do love your lady Silvia.
She dreams on him that has forgot her love;
You dote on her that cares not for your love.
'Tis pity love should be so contrary;
And thinking on it makes me cry 'alas!'
Pro. Well, give her that ring and therewithal
This letter. That's her chamber. Tell my lady I claim the promise for her heavenly picture.
Your message done, lie home unto my chamber,
Where thou shalt find me, sad and solitary. [Exit.]
Jul. How many women would do such a message?
Alas, poor Proteus! thou hast entertain'd
A fox to be the shepherd of thy lambs.
Alas, poor fool! why do I pity him?
That with his very heart despiseth me?
Because he loves her, he despiseth me;
Because I love him, I must pity him.
This ring I gave him when he parted from me,
To bind him to remember my good will;
And now am I, unhappy messenger,
To plead for that which I would not obtain,
To carry that which I would have refused,
To praise his faith which I would have dispraised.
I am my master's true-confirmed love;
But cannot be true servant to my master,
Unless I prove false to myself.
Yet will I woo for him, but yet so coldly
As, heaven it knows, I would not have him speed.

Enter Silvia, attended.

Gentlewoman, good day! I pray you, be my mean
To bring me here to speak with Madam Silvia.\nSil. What would you with her, if that I be she?
Jul. If you be she, I do entreat your patience
To hear me speak the message I am sent on.
THE TWO GENTLEMEN OF VERONA. SCENE II.

Alas, how love can trifle with itself! Here is her picture: let me see; I think, if I had such a tire, this face of mine Were full so lovely as this is of hers: And yet the painter flatter'd her a little, Unless I flatter with myself too much, Her hair is auburn, mine is perfect yellow: If that be all the difference in his love, I'll get me such a colour'd periwig, Her eyes are grey as glass, and so are mine; Ay, but her forehead's low, and mine's as high. What should it be that he respects in her But I can make respective in myself, If this fond Love were not a blinded god? Come, she is fair, the poor man is in love, For 'tis thy rival, O thou senseless form, Thou shalt be worshipp'd, kiss'd, loved and ador'd! And, were there sense in his idolatry, My substance should be statue in thy stead. I'll use thee kindly for thy mistress' sake, That is mine; so; or else I vow, I should have scratch'd out your unseen eyes, To make my master out of love with thee! [Exit.]

ACT V.

SCENE I. — Milan. An abbey.

Enter Eglinour.

Egl. The sun begins to gild the western sky; And now it is about the very hour That Silvia, at Friar Patrick's cell, should meet me. She will not fail, for lovers break not hours, Unless it be to come before their time; So much they spur their expedition. See where she comes.

Enter Silvia.

Sil. Amen, amen! Go on, good Eglinour, Out at the postern by the abbey-wall. I fear I am attended by some spies.

Egl. Fear not: the forest is not three leagues off; If we recover that, we are sure enough. [Exeunt.

SCENE II. — The same. The Duke's palace.

Enter Thurio, Proteus, and Julia.

Th. Sir Proteus, what says Silvia to my suit? Pro. O, sir, I find her milder than she was;

When all our pageants of delight were play'd, Our youth got me to play the woman's part, And I was trimm'd in Madam Julia's gown, Which served me as fit, by all men's judgments, As if the garment had been made for me: Therefore I know she is about my height, And at that time I made her weep agog: For I did play a lamentable part: Madam, 'tis Ariadne passioning For Theseus' perjury and unjust flight; Which so lively acted with my tears That my poor mistress, moved therewith, Wept bitterly; and would I might be dead If I in thought felt not her very sorrow! Sil. She is beholding to thee, gentle youth. Alas, poor lady, desolate and this! I weep myself to think upon thy words, Here, youth, there is my purse; I give thee this For thy sweet mistress' sake, because thou lov'est her. Farewell. [Exit Silvia, with attendants.

Alas, how love can trifle with itself! Here is her picture: let me see; I think, If I had such a tire, this face of mine Were full so lovely as this is of hers: And yet the painter flatter'd her a little, Unless I flatter with myself too much, Her hair is auburn, mine is perfect yellow: If that be all the difference in his love, I'll get me such a colour'd periwig, Her eyes are grey as glass, and so are mine; Ay, but her forehead's low, and mine's as high. What should it be that he respects in her But I can make respective in myself, If this fond Love were not a blinded god? Come, she is fair, the poor man is in love, For 'tis thy rival, O thou senseless form, Thou shalt be worshipp'd, kiss'd, loved and ador'd! And, were there sense in his idolatry, My substance should be statue in thy stead. I'll use thee kindly for thy mistress' sake, That is mine; so; or else I vow, I should have scratch'd out your unseen eyes, To make my master out of love with thee! [Exit.}

And yet she takes exceptions at your person.

[Exeunt.]

Thu. What, that my leg is too long?

Pro. No; that it is too little.

Thu. I'll wear a boot, to make it somewhat[ rounder.

Pro. But love will not be spurr'd to what

Thu. But what says she to my face? [It loathes.

Pro. She says it is a fair one.

Thu. Nay then, the wanton lies; my face is black.

Pro. But pearls are fair; and the old saying is, Black men are pears in beauteous ladies' eyes.

Jul. [Aside] 'Tis true; such pearls as put out ladies!

For I had rather wink than look on them. [eyes;

Thu. How likes she my discourse?

Pro. Il, when you talk of war. [peace?

Thu. But well, when I discourse of love and

Jul. [Aside] But better, indeed, when you hold your peace.

Thu. What says she to my valour?

Pro. Sir, she makes no doubt of that.

Jul. [Aside] She needs not, when she knows it

Thu. What says she to my birth? [cowardice.

Pro. That who are well derived.

Jul. [Aside] True; from a gentleman to a fool.

Thu. Considers she my possessions?
ACT V.  THE TWO GENTLEMEN OF VERONA.  SCENE IV.

Pro.  O, ay: and pities them.
Thu.  Wherefore?
Jul.  [Aside] That such an ass should owe them.
Pro.  That they are out by lease.
Jul.  Here comes the dukc.

Enter Duke.
Duke.  How now, Sir Proteus! how now, Thurio! Which of you saw Sir Egglamour of late?
Thu.  Not I.
Pro.  Nor I.
Duke.  Saw you my daughter?
Pro.  Neither.
Duke.  Why then, She's bred unto that pleasant Valentine; And Egglamour is in her company.
'Tis true; for Friar Laurence met them both, As he in penance wander'd through the forest; Him he knew well, and guess'd that it was she, But, being mask'd, he was not sure of it; Besides, she did intend confession.
At Patrick's cell this even; and there she was not; These likelihoods confirm her flight from hence. Therefore, I pray you, stand not to discourse, But mount you presently and meet with me Upon the rising of the mountain-foot: That leads toward Mantua, whither they are fled. Dispatch, sweet gentlemen, and follow me. [Exit.]
Thu.  Why, this it is to be a peevish girl, That flies her fortune when it follows her. I'll after, more to be revenged on Egglamour Than for the love of reckless Silvia. [Exit]
Pro.  And I will follow, more for Silvia's love Than hate of Egglamour that goes with her. [Exit.]
Jul.  And I will follow, more to cross that love Than hate for Silvia that is gone for love. [Exit.

SCENE III.—The frontiers of Mantua. The forest.

Enter Outlaws with Silvia.
First Out.  Come, come, Be patient; we must bring you to our captain.
Sil.  A thousand more mischances than this one Have learn'd me how to brook this patiently.
Sec. Out.  Come, bring her away. [Exit.]
First Out.  Where is the gentleman that was with Third Out.  Being nimble-footed, he hath outrun But Moyse and Valerius follow him.
Go thou with us, I pray, to the west end of the wood: There is our captain: we'll follow him that's fled; The thicket is best; he cannot 'scape.
First Out.  Come, I must bring you to our cap-tain's cove:
Fear not; he bears an honourable mind, And will not use a woman lawlessly.
Sil.  O Valentine, this I endure for thee! [Exeunt.

SCENE IV.—Another part of the forest.

Enter Valentine.
Val.  How use doth breed a habit in a man! This shadowy desert, unfrequented woods, I better brook than flourishing populous towns: Here can I sit alone, unseen of any, And to the nightingale's complaining notes Tune my distresses and my woes.
O thou that dost inhabit in my breast, Leave not the mansion so long tenantless, Last, growing ruins, the building fall And leave no memory of what it was! Repair me with thy presence, Silvia; Thou gentle nymph, cherish thy forlorn swain! What halloing and what stir is this to-day? [law, These are my mates, that make their wills their Have some unhappy passenger in chase. They love me well; yet I have much to do To keep them from uncivil outrages. Withdraw thee, Valentine: who's this comes here?

Enter Proteus, Silvia, and Julia.

Pro.  Madam, this service I have done for you, Though you respect not your servant doth, To hazard life and rescue you from him That would have forced your honour and your love; Vouchsafe me, for my need, but one fair look; A smaller boon than this I cannot beg And less than this, I am sure, you cannot give.
Val.  [Aside] How like a dream is this I see and love, lend me patience to bear awhile. [hear!]
Sil.  O miserable, unhappy that I am! Pro.  Unhappy were you, madam, ere I came; But by my coming I have made you happy.
Sil.  By thy approach thou makest me most un-happy, [your presence.
Jul.  [Aside] And me, when he approacheth to Sil.  Had I been seized by a hungry lion, I would have been a breakfast to the beast, Rather than have false Proteus rescue me. O, Heaven be judge how I love Valentine, Whose life's as tender to me as my soul! And full as much, for more there cannot be, I do detest false perjur'd Proteus. Therefore be gone; solicit me no more. [death, Pro.  What dangerous action, stood it next to Would I not undergo for one calm look! O, 'tis the curse in love, and still approved, When women cannot love where they're beloved! Sil.  When Proteus cannot love where he's be-read over Julia's heart, thy first best love, [loved. For whose dear sake thou didst then rend thy faith Into a thousand oaths; and all those oaths Descended into perjury, to love me. Thou hast no faith left now, unless thou 'st two: And that's far worse than none: better have none Than plural faith which is too much by one: Thou counterfeit to thy true friend!
Pro.  In love Who respects friend?
Sil.  All men but Proteus.
Pro.  Nay, if the gentle spirit of moving words Can no way change you to a milder form, 'I'll woo you like a soldier, at arms' end, And love you 'gainst the nature of love,—force ye. Sil.  O heaven! Pro.  I'll force thee yield to my desire. Val.  Run, Valentine, turn the rude uncivil touch, Thou friend of an ill fashion! Pro.  Valencia! Thou common friend, that's without faith or love, For such is a friend now: treacherous man! Thou hast beguiled my hopes; nought but mine eye Could have persuaded me: now I dare not say I have one friend alive; thou wouldst disprove me. Who should be trusted, when one's own right hand Is perjur'd to the bosom? Proteus, I am sorry I must never trust thee more, But count the world a stranger for thy sake. The private wound is deepest; 'tis most accurst. 'Mongst all foes that a friend should be the worst! Pro.  My shame and guilt confound me. Forgive me, Valentine: if hearty sorrow Be a sufficient and momentous offer for him I tender 't here; I do as truly suffer As e'er I did commit. Val.  Then I am paid; And once again I do receive thee honest. Who by repentance is not satisfied, Nor of heaven nor earth, for these are pleased. By penitence the Eternal's wrath's appeas'd And, that my love may appear plain and free, All that was mine in Silvia I give thee.
Come not within the measure of my wrath;
Do not name Silvia thine; if once again,
Verona shall not hold thee. Here she stands:
Take but possession of her with a touch:
I dare thee but to breathe upon my love.

Thu. Sir Valentine, I care not for her, I:
I hold her but a fool that will endanger
His body for a girl that loves him not.
I claim her not, and therefore she is thine.

Duke. The more degenerate and base art thou,
To make such means for her as thou hast done
And leave her on such slight conditions.
Now, by the honour of my ancestry,
I do applaud thy spirit, Valentine,
And think thee worthy of an empress's love:
Know then, I here forget all former griefs,
Cancel all grudge, repeal thee home again,
Plead a new state in thy unriual'd merit,
To which I thus subscribe: Sir Valentine,
Thou art a gentleman and well derived;
Take thou thy Silvia, for thou hast deserved her.

Val. I thank your grace; the gift hath made me
Now see you, for your daughter's sake, happy.
On grant one boon that I shall ask of you.
Duke. I grant it, for thine own, whatever it be.

Val. These banished men that I have kept withal
Are men enueld with worthy qualities:
Forgive them what they have committed here
And let them be recall'd from their exile:
They are reformed, civil, full of good
And fit for great employment, worthy lord. [thee.
Duke. Thou hast prevail'd; I pardon them and Dispose of them as thou know'st their deserts.
Come, let us go: we will include all jars
With triumphs, mirth, and rare solemnity.
Val. And, as we walk along, I dare be bold
With our discourse to make your grace to smile.
What think you of this page, my lord? [brushes.
Duke. I think the boy hath grace in him; he
Val. I warrant you, my lord, more grace than boy.
Duke. What mean you by that saying?
Val. Please you, I'll tell you as we pass along,
That you will wonder what hath fortified
Come, Proteus: 'tis your penance but to hear
The story of your loves discovered:
That done, our day of marriage shall be yours;
One feast, one house, one mutual happiness.

[Exeunt.]

Valentine.—Welcome, dear Proteus! Mistress, I beseech you, Confirm his welcome with some special favour.
Silvia.—His worth is warrant for his welcome hither,
If this be he you oft have wish'd to hear from.—Act II, Scene IV.
THE MERRY WIVES OF WINDSOR.

DRAMATIS PERSONÆ.

Sir John Falstaff.
Fenton, a gentleman.
Shallow, a country justice.
Slender, cousin to Shallow.
Ford, two gentlemen dwelling at Windsor.
William Page, a boy, son to Page.
Sir Hugh Evans, a Welsh parson.
Doctor Caius, a French physician.
Bardolph, Pistol, Nym, sharpers attending on Falstaff.

[For an Analysis of the Plot of this Play, see Page XLIII.]

ACT I.

Enter Justice Shallow, Slender, and Sir Hugh Evans.

Shal. Sir Hugh, persuade me not; I will make a Star-chamber matter of it: if he were twenty Sir John Falstaffs, he shall not abuse Robert Shallow, esquire.

Slender. In the county of Gloucester, justice of peace and 'Comm.'

Shal. Ay, cousin Slender, and 'Custalorum.'

Slender. Ay, and 'Rato-lorum' too; and a gentleman born, master parson; who writes himself 'Armigero,' in any bill, warrant, quittance, or obligation, 'Armigero.'

Shal. Ay, that I do; and have done any time these three hundred years.

Slender. All his successors gone before him hath done it; and all his ancestors that come after him may: they may give the dozen white luces in their coat. It is an old coat.

Evans. The dozen white louses do become an old coat well; it agrees well, passant; it is a familiar beast to man, and signifies love.

Shal. The luce is the fresh fish; the salt fish is an old fish. I may quarter, coz. [old coat.

Shal. You may, by marrying.

Evans. It is marring indeed, if he quarter it.

Shal. Not a whit.

Evans. Yes, py'r lady; if he has a quarter of your coat, there is but three skirts for yourself, in my simple conjectures: but that is all one. If Sir John Falstaff have committed disparagements unto you, I am of the church, and will be glad to do my be- nevolence to make atonement and compromises be- tween you.

Shal. The council shall hear it; it is a riot.

Evans. It is not meet the council hear a riot; there is no fear of Got in a riot: the council, look you, shall desire to hear the fear of Got, and not to hear a riot; take your vizaments in that.

Shal. Ha! o' my life, if I were young again, the sword should end it.

Evans. It is better that friends is the sword, and end it: and there is also another device in my brain, which peradventure prings good discretions with it: there is Anne Page, which is daughter to Master Thomas Page, which is pretty virginity.

Slender. Mistress Anne Page? She has brown hair, and speaks small like a woman.

Evans. It is that very person for all the orb, as just as you will desire; and seven hundred pounds of monies, and gold and silver, is her grandisire upon his death's-bed—Got deliver to a joyful resurrection—give, when she is able to overtake seventeen years old: it were a good motion if we leave our puzzles and prattles, and desire a marriage between Master Abraham and Mistress Anne Page. [point?] Slender. Did her grandisire leave her seven hundred pounds?

Evans. Ay, and her father is make her a better penny.

Slender. I know the young gentlewoman; she has good gifts.

Evans. Seven hundred pounds and possibilities is good gifts.

Shal. Well, let us see honest Master Page. Is Falstaff there?

Evans. Shall I tell you a lie? I do despise a liar as I do despise one that is false, or as I despise one that is not true. The knight, Sir John, is there; and, I beseech you, be ruled by your well-willers. I will peat the door for Master Page. [Knocks] What, hou! Got pless your house here!

Page. [Within] Who 's there?

Enter Page.

Evans. Here is Got's blessing, and your friend, Justice Shallow; and here young Master Slender, that peradventures shall tell you another tale, if matters grow to your likings.

Page. I am glad to see your worship well. I thank you for my venison, Master Shallow.

Slender. Master Page, I am glad to see you: much good do it your good heart! I wished your venison better; it was ill killed. How doth good Mistress Page?—and I thank you always with my heart, la! with my heart.

Page. Sir, I thank you.

Sir. Thank you: by yea and no, I do.

Page. I am glad to see you, good Master Slender.
Slen. How does your fallow greyhound, sir? I heard say he was outrun on Cotsull.

Page. It could not be judged, sir.

Slen. You'll confess, you'll not confess.

Shal. That he will not. 'Tis your fault, 'tis a good dog.

Page. A cur, sir.

Shal. Sir, he's a good dog, and a fair dog: can there be more said? he is good and fair. Is Sir John Falstaff here?

Page. Sir, he is within; and I would do a good offices between you.

Evans. It is spoke as a Christian ought to speak.

Shal. He hath wronged me, Master Page.

Page. What, is he in some sort confess it?

Shal. If it be confessed, it is not redressed: is not so, Master Page? He hath wronged me; indeed he hath; at a word, he hath, believe me: Robert Shallow, esquire, saith, he is wronged.

Page. Here comes Sir John.

Enter Sir John Falstaff, Bardolph, Nym, and Pistol.

Fal. Now, Master Shallow, you'll complain of me to the king?

Shal. Knight, you have beaten my men, killed my deer, and broke open my lodge.

Fal. But not kissed your keeper's daughter?

Shal. Tut, a pin! this shall be answered.

Fal. I will answer it straight; I have done all that is now answered. [This.

Shal. The council shall know this.

Fal. 'Twere better for you if you were known in counsel: you'll be laughed at.

Evans. Pauca verba, Sir John; good words.

Fal. Good words! good cabbages. Slender, I broke your head: what matter have you against me?

Slen. Marry, sir, I have matter in my head against you; and against your cony-catch ing rascals, Bardolph, Nym, and Pistol.

Bard. You Banbury cheese!

Slen. Ay, it is no matter.

Pist. How now, Mephostophilus!

Slen. Ay, it is no matter.

Nym. Slice, I say! pauca, pauca: slice! that's my humour. [Cousin?

Slen. Where's Simple, my man? Can you tell, Evans. Peace, I pray you. Now let us understand. There is three umpires in this matter, as I understand; that is Master Page, fidelocet Master Page and there is myself, fidelocet myself; and the three party is, lastly and finally, mine host of the Garter.

Page. We three, to hear it and end it between them.

Evans. Fery gout: I will make a prief of it in my note-book; and we will afterwardsork upon the cause with as great discreetly as we can.

Fal. Pistol!

Pist. He hears with ears.

Evans. The tevil and his tam! what phrase is this, 'He hears with ear'? why, it is affectation.

Fal. Pistol, did you pick Master Slender's purse?

Slen. Ay, by these gloves, did he, or I would might never come in mine own great chamber again else, of seven groats in mill-sixpences, and two Edward shovel-boards, that cost me two shilling and two pence a-piece of Yeat Miller, by these gloves.

Fal. Is this true, Pistol?

Evans. No; it is false, if it is a pick-purse.

Pist. Ha, thou mountain-foreigner! Sir John and master mine.

I commend the charge of this latten bilbo.

Word of denial in thy labors here!

Word of denial; froth and scum, thou liest!

Slen. By these gloves, then, 't was he.

Nym. Be advised, sir, and pass good humours:

I will say 'marry trap' with you, if you run the nutbook's humour on me; that is the very note of it.

Slen. By this hat, then, he be in the red face had it; for though I cannot remember what I did when you made me drunk, yet I am not altogether an ass.

Fal. What say you, Scarlet and John?

Bard. Why, sir, for my part, I say the gentleman had drank himself out of his five sentences.

Evans. It is his five senses: fie, what the ignorance is!

Bard. And being fap, sir, was, as they say, cashiered; and so conclusions passed the careiress.

Slen. Ay, you speak in Latin then too; but 'tis no matter: I'll never be drunk whilst I live again, but in honest, civil, godly company, for this trick: if I be drunk, I'll be drunk with those that have the fear of God, and not with drunken knives.

Evans. So Got uedge me, that is a virtuous mind.

Fal. You hear all these matters denied, gentlemen; you hear it.

[Exeunt Page.

Evans. O heaven! this is Mistress Anne Page.

Page. How now, Mistress Ford!

Fal. Mistress Ford, by my troth, you are very well met: by your leave, good mistress.

[Xisses her.

Page. Wife, bid these gentlemen welcome. Come, we have a hot venison pasty to dinner: come, gentlemen, I hope we shall drink down all unkindness.

[Exeunt all except Shal., Slen., and Evans.

Slen. I had rather than forty shillings I had my Book of Songs and Sonnets here.

Enter Simple.

Page. How now, Simple! where have you been? I must wait on myself, must I? You have not the Book of Riddles about you, have you?

Slen. Book of Riddles! why, did you not lend it to Alice Shortcake upon All-hallowmas last, a fortnight afore Michaelmas?

Shal. Come, coz; come, coz: we stay for you. A word with you, coz; marry, this, coz; there is, as 't were, a tender, a kind of tender, made afar off by Sir Hugh here. Do you understand me?

Slen. Master Page, sir, you shall find me reasonable; if it be so, I shall do that that is reason.

Shal. Nay, but understand me.

Slen. So I do, sir.

Evans. Give ear to his motions, Master Slender: I will description the matter to you, if you be capacity of it.

Slen. Nay, I will do as my cousin Shallow says: I pray you, pardon me: he's a justice of peace in his country, simple though I stand here.

Evans. But that is not the question: the question is concerning your marriage.

Shal. Ay, there's the point, sir.

Evans. Marry, is it; the very point of it; to Mistress Anne Page.

Slen. Why, if it be so, I will marry her upon any reasonable demands.

Evans. But can you affect the 'oman? Let us command to know that of your mouth or of your lips; for divers philosophers hold that the lips is parcel of the mouth. Therefore, precisely, can you carry your good will to the maid?

Shal. Cousin Abraham Slender, can you love her?

Slen. I hope, sir, I will do as it shall become one that would to reason.

Evans. Nay, Got's lords and his ladies! you must speak possiblie, if you can carry her your desires towards her.
Shal. That you must. Will you, upon good nearly, marry her?
Slen. I will do a greater thing than that, upon your request, cousin, in any reason.
Shal. Nay, conceive me, conceive me, sweet coz: what do I do to please you, coz? Can you love the maid?
Slen. I will marry her, sir, at your request: but if there be no great love in the beginning, yet heaven may decrease it upon better acquaintance, when we are married and have more occasion to know one another; I hope, upon familiarity will grow more contempt: but if you say, 'Marry her,' I will marry her: that I am freely dissolved, and disconsolately.
Shal. Ay. I think my cousin meant well.
Slen. Ay, or else I would might be hanged, la!
Shal. Here comes fair Mistress Anne.

Re-enter Anne Page.
Would I were young for your sake, Mistress Anne!
Anne. The dinner is on the table; my father desires your worship's company.
Shal. I will wait on him, fair Mistress Anne.
Anne. Od's will! I will not be absence at the grace. [Exeunt Shallow and Evans.
Anne. Will 't please your worship to come in, sir?
Slen. No, I thank you, forsooth, heartily; I am very well.
Anne. The dinner attends you, sir.
Slen. I am not a-hungry, I thank you, forsooth. Go, sirrah, for all you are my man, go wait upon my cousin Shallow. [Exit Simple.] A justice of peace sometimes may be beholding to his hand for a man. I keep but three men and a boy yet, till my mother be dead: but what though? yet I live like a poor gentleman born.
Anne. I may not go in without your worship: they will not sit till you come.
Slen. I' faith, I'll eat nothing; I thank you as much as though I did.
Anne. I pray you, sir, walk in.
Slen. I had rather walk here. I thank you. I bruised my shin th' other day with playing at sword and dagger with a master of fence; three veneyes for a dish of stewed prunes; and, by my troth, I cannot abide the smell of hot meat since. Why do your dogs bark so? be there bears 't the town? [of.
Anne. I hear there are, sir; I heard them talk.
Slen. I love the sport well; but I shall as soon quarrel at it as any man in England. You are afraid, if you see the bear loose, are you not?
Anne. Ay, indeed, sir.
Slen. That's meat and drink to me, now. I have seen Jackerson loose twenty times, and have taken him by the chain; but, I warrant you, the women have so cried and shrieked at it, that it passed: but women, indeed, cannot abide 'em; they are very ill-favoured rough things.

Re-enter Page.
Page. Come, gentle Master Slender, come; we stay for you.
Slen. I'll eat nothing, I thank you, sir.
Page. By cock and pie, you shall not choose, sir! come on.
Slen. Nay, pray you, lead the way.
Page. Come on, sir.
Slen. Mistress Anne, yourself shall go first.
Anne. Not I, sir: pray you, keep on.
Slen. Truly, I will not go first; truly, la! I will not do that, sir.
Anne. I pray you, sir.
Slen. I'll rather be unmannerly than troublesome. You do yourself wrong, indeed, la! [Exeunt.

SCENE II.—The same.
Enter Sir Hugh Evans and Simple.
Evans. Go your ways, and ask of Doctor Caius' house which is the way: and there dwells one Mistress Quickly, which is in the manner of his nurse, or his dry nurse, or his cook, or his laundry, his washer, and his wringer.
Sim. Well, sir.
Evans. Nay, it is better yet. Give her this letter; for it is a 'oman that altogether's acquaintance with Mistress Anne Page; and the letter is, to desire and require her to sollicit your master's desires and requests at Mistress Anne Page. I pray you, be gone: I will make an end of my dinner; there's piping and cheese to come. [Exeunt.

SCENE III.—A room in the Garter Inn.
Enter Falstaff, Host, Bardolph, Nym, Pistol, and Robin.

Fal. Mine host of the Garter! [and wisely.
Host. What says my bully-rook? speak soberly.
Fal. Truly, mine host, I must turn away some of my followers.
Host. Discard, bully Hercules; cashier: let them wag; trot, trot.
Fal. I sit at ten pounds a week.
Host. Thou 'rt an emperor, Caesar, Keisar, and Phecear. I will entertain Bardolph; he shall draw, he shall tap: said I well, bully Hector?
Fal. Do so, good mine host.
Host. I have spoke; let him follow. [To Bard.
Let me see thee froth and lime: I am at a word; follow.
[Exit.
Fal. Bardolph, follow him. A tapster is a good trade: an old cloak makes a new jerkin; a withered serving-man a fresh tapster. Go; adien.
Bard. It is a life that I have desired: I will thrive.
Pist. O base Hungarian wight! wilt thou the spigot wield?
[Exit Bardolph.
Nym. He was gotten in drink: is not the humour conceited?
Fal. I am glad I am so acquit of this tinder-box: his thefts were too open; his doling was like an unskilful singer; he kept not time. [Pist.
Nym. The good humour is to steal at a minute's.
Pist. 'Convey,' the wise it call. 'Steal!' foh! a fico for the phrase!
Fal. Well, sirs, I am almost out at heels.
Pist. Wilt thou, let kibes ensue.
Fal. There is no remedy; I must cony-catch; I must shift.
Pist. Young ravens must have food.
Fal. Which of you know Ford of this town?
Pist. I ken the wight: he is of substance good.
Fal. My honest lads, I will tell you what I am.
Pist. Two yards, and more.
[labour.
Fal. No quipts now, Pistol! Indeed, I am in the waist two yards about; but I am now about no waste; I am about thrift. Briefly, I do mean to make love to Ford's wife: I spy entertainment in her; she discourses, she carves, she gives the leer of invitation: I can construe the action of her familiar style: and the hardest voice of her behaviour, to be Englished rightly, is, 'I am Sir John Falstaff.'
Pist. He hath studied her will, and translated her will, out of honesty into English.
Nym. The anchor is deep: will that humour pass?
Fal. Now, the report goes she has all the rule of her husband's purse; he hath a legion of angels.
Pist. As many devils entertain; and 'To her, boy,' say I, 'I seem the angels.
Nym. The humour rises: it is good: humour me.
Pist. I have writ me here a letter to her: and here another to Page's wife, who even now gave me good eyes too, examined my parts with most judicious Eiillades; sometimes the beam of her view gilded my foot, sometimes my portly belly.

Pist. Then did the sun on dunghill shine.

Nym. I thank thee for that humour.

Pist. I will dig the course o’er my exteriors with such a greedy intention, that the appetite of her eye did seem to scorch me up like a burning-glass!
Here’s another letter to her; she bears the purse too; she is a region in Guyana, all gold and bounty.
I will be chaster to them both, and they shall be exempt of me; they shall be my East and West Indies, and I will trade to them both. Go bear thou this letter to Mistress Page; and thou this to Mistress Ford: we will thrive, ladies, we will thrive.

Pist. Shall I Sir Pandaras of Troy become,
And by my side wear steel? then, Lucifer take all!
Nym. I will run no base humour: here, take the humour-letter: I will keep the humour of reputation.

Fal. [To Robin] Hold, sirrah, bear you these letters tightly;
Sail like my pinnae to these golden shores.
Rogues, hence, avaunt! vanish like hailstones, go;
Fuddle, plot away o’ the hoof: seek shelter, pack!
Falstaff will learn the humour of the age,
French thrift, you rogues; myself and skirted page.

[Exeunt Falstaff and Robin.

Pist. Let vatures grip thy guts! for gourd and forth she hol.
And high and low beguiles the rich and poor:
Tester I have in pouch when thou shalt lack,
Base Phrygian Turk!

Nym. I have operations which be humours of

Nym. Art thou her star?

Pist. Wilt wit or steel?

Nym. With both the humours, I:
I will discuss the humour of this love to Page.

Pist. And I to Ford shall eke unfold
How Falstaff, variet vile,
If I down will prove, his gold will hold,
And his soft couch defile.

Nym. My humour shall not cool: I will incense Page to deal with poison; I will possess him with yellowness, for the revolt of mine is dangerous:
that is my true humour.

Pist. Thou art the Mars of malecontents: I second thee;
toop.

[Exeunt.

SCENE IV.—A room in Doctor Caius’s house.

Enter Mistress Quickly, Simple, and Rugby.

Quick. What, John Rugby! I pray thee, go to the casement, and see if thou can see my master, Master Doctor Caius, coming. If he do, i’ faith, and find any body in the house, here will be an old abusing of God’s patience and the king’s English.
Then I’ll go watch.

Quick. Go; and we’ll have a posset for ’t soon at night, in faith, at the latter end of a sea-coal fire. [Exit Rugby.]

An honest, willing, kind fellow, as ever servant shall come in house withal, and, I warrant you, no tell-tale nor no breed-bate: his worst fault is, that he is too given to pray; he is something beevish that way: but nobody but has his fault; but let that pass. Peter Simple, you say your name is?

Sim. Ay, for fault of a better.

Quick. And Master Slender’s your master?

Sim. Ay, forsooth.

Quick. Do you wear a great round beard, like a grover’s paring-knife?

Sim. No, forsooth: he hath but a little wee face, with a little yellow beard, a Cain-coloured beard.

Quick. A softly-sprighted man, is he not?

Sim. Ay, forsooth: but he is as tall a man of his hands as any is between this and his head; he hath fought with a warrenner.

Quick. How say you? O, I should remember him; does he not hold up his head, as it were, and strut in his gait?

Sim. Yes, indeed, does he.

Quick. Well, heaven send Anne Page no worse fortune! If Master Pandarus I will do what I can for your master: Anne is a good girl, and I wish—

Re-enter Rugby.

Rug. Out, alas! here comes my master.

Quick. We shall all be shent. Run in here, good young man, and go into his closet: he will not stay long. [Shuts Simple in the closet.] What, John Rugby! John! what, John, I say! Go, John, go inquire for my master; I doubt he be not well, that he comes not home.

[Staging] And down, down, adown-a, &c.

Enter Doctor Caius.

Caius. Vat is you sing? I do not like des toys.
Pray you, go, and vetch me in my closet un bottier vert, a box, a green-a box: do intend vat I speak?
a green-a box.

Quick. Ay, forsooth; I’ll fetch it you. [Aside] I am glad he went not in himself: if he had found the young man, he would have been horn-mad.

Caius. Fe, fe, fe, fe! ma foi, il fait fort chaud.
Je m’en vais la cour, la grande affaire.
Quick. Is this, this, sir?

Caius. Oui; mette le au mon pocket: depeche, quickly. ’Vere is dat knave Rugby?

Quick. What, John Rugby! John!

Rug. Here, sir!

Caius. You are John Rugby, and you are Jack Rugby. Come, take-a your rapier, and come after my heel to the court.

Rug. ’Tis ready, sir, here in the porch.

Caius. By my troth, I tarry too long. Od’s me!
Qu’al-joublie! dere is some simples in my closet, dat I vill not for the varld I shall leave behind.

Quick. Ay me, he’ll find the young man there, and be mad!

Caius. O dable, dable! vat is in my closet?
Villain! harron! [Pulling Simple out.] Rugby, my rapier!

Quick. Good master, be content.

Caius. Wherefore shall I be content-a?

Quick. The young man is an honest man.

Caius. What shall de honest man do in my closet? dere is no honest man dat shall come in my closet.

Quick. I beseech you, be not so philisematic. Hear the truth of it: he came of an errand to me from Parson Hugh.

Caius. Vell.

Sim. Ay, forsooth; to desire her to—

Quick. Peace, I pray you.

Caius. Peace-a your tongue. Speak-a your tale.

Sim. To desire this honest gentlewoman, your maid, to speak a good word to Mistress Anne Page for my master in the way of marriage.

Quick. This is all, indeed, la! but I’ll ne’er put my finger in the fire, and need not.

Caius. Sir Hugh send-a you? Rugby, baile me some paper. Carry you a little a while. [Writes.
Quick. [Aside to Simple] I am glad he is so quiet;
if he had been throughly moved, you should have heard him so loud and so melancholy. But not withstanding, man, I’ll do you your master what good
I can: and the very yea and no is, the French doctor, my master,—I mean, call him my master, look you, for I keep his house; and I wash, wring, brew, bake, scour, dress meat and drink, make the beds, and do all myself,—

Sim. [Aside to Quickly] ’Tis a great charge to come under one body’s hand.

Quick. [Aside to Simple] Are you avised o’ that?
you shall find it a great charge: and to be up early
ACT II.

THE MERRY WIVES OF WINDSOR.

SCENE I.

and down late; but notwithstanding,—to tell you in your ear; I would have no words of it,—my master hides it well with Mistress Anne Page: but notwithstanding that, I know Anne's mind,—that's neither here nor there.

Caius. You lack'nape, give-a this letter to Sir Hugh; by gar, it is a challenge: I will cut his trot in de park; and I will teach a scurry jack'nape priest to meddle or make. You may be gone; it is not good you tarry here. By gar, I will cut all his two stones; by gar, he shall not have a stone to throw at his dog.

Enter Simple.

Quick. Alas, he speaks but for his friend.

Caius. It is no matter-a ver dat: do not you tell-a me dat I shall have Anne Page for myself? By gar, I will kill de Jack priest; and I have appointed mine host de Jarter to measure our weapon. By gar, I will myself have Anne Page.

Quick. Sir, the maid loves you, and all shall be well. We must give folks leave to prate: what, the good-ler!

Caius. Rugby, come to the court with me. By gar, if I have not Anne Page, I shall turn your head out of my door. Follow my heels, Rugby.

[Exeunt Caius and Rugby.

Quick. You shall have An fool's-head of your own. No, I know Anne's mind for that: never a woman in Windsor knows more of Anne's mind than I do; nor can do more than I do with her, I thank heaven.

Fent. [Within] Who's within there? ho!

Quick. Who's there, I trow! Come near the house, I play you.

Enter Fenton.

Fent. How now, good woman! how dost thou? Quick. The better that it pleases your good worship to ask.

Fent. What news? how does pretty Mistress Anne? Quick. In truth, sir, and she is pretty, and honest, and gentle; and one that is your friend, I can tell you that by the way: I praise heaven for it.

Fent. Shall I do any good, thinkest thou? shall I not lose my suit?

Quick. Troth, sir, all is in his hands above: but notwithstanding, Master Fenton, I'll be sworn on a book, she loves you. Have not your worship a wart above your eye?

Fent. Yes, marry, have I; what of that? Quick. Well, thereby hangs a tale: good faith, it is such another Nan; but, I detest, an honest maid as ever broke bread: we had an hour's talk of that wart, I shall never laugh but in that maid's company! But indeed she is given too much to alimony and musing: but for you—well, go to.

Fent. Well, I shall see her to-day. Hold, there's money for thee; let me have thy voice in my behalf: if thou seest her before me, commend me.

Quick. Will it? I faith, that we will; and I will tell your worship more of the wart the next time we have confidence; and of other woes.

Fent. Well, farewell; I am in great haste now.

Quick. Farewell to your worship.

[Exit Fenton.

Truly, an honest gentleman: but Anne loves him not; for I know Anne's mind as well as another does. Out upon 't! what have I forgot?

[Exit.

ACT II.

SCENE I.—Before Page's house.

Enter Mistress Page, with a letter.

Mrs. Page. What, have I escap'd love-letters in the holiday-time of my beauty, and am I now a subject for them? Let me see.

[Reads.

Ask me no reason why I love you; for though Love use Reason for his physic, he admits him not for his counsellor. You are not young, no more am I; go to then, there's sympathy: you are merry, so am I; ha, ha! then there's more sympathy: you love sack, and do so I; would you desire better sympathy? Let it suffice thee, Mistress Page,—at the least, if the love of soldier can suffice,—that I love thee. I will not say, pity me; 'tis not a soldier-like phrase; but I say, love me. By me, Thine own true knight, By day or night, Or any kind of light, With all his might

For thee to fight,

John Falstaff,

What a Herold of Jewry is this! O wicked, wicked world! One that is well-nigh worn to pieces with age to show himself a young gallant! What an unweighed behaviour hath this Flemish drunkard picked—with the devil's name!—out of my conversation, that he dares in this manner assay me? Why, he hath not been thrice in my company! What should I say to him? I answer'd Fenton of my youthful days, Heaven forgive me! Why, I'll exhibit a bill in the parliament for the putting down of men. How shall I be revenged on him? for revenged I will be, as sure as his guts are made of puddings.

Enter Mistress Ford.

Mrs. Ford. Mistress Page! trust me, I was going to your house.

Mrs. Page. And, trust me, I was coming to you.

You look very ill.

Mrs. Ford. Nay, I'll ne'er believe that; I have to show to the contrary.

Mrs. Page. Faith, but you do, in my mind.

Mrs. Ford. Well, I do then; yet I say I could show you to the contrary. O Mistress Page, give me some counsel!

Mrs. Page. What's the matter, woman?

Mrs. Ford. O woman, if it were not for one trifling respect, I could come to such honour!

Mrs. Page. Hang the trifle, woman! take the honour. What is it? dispense with trifles; what is it?

Mrs. Ford. If I would but go to hell for an eternal moment or so, I could be knighted.

Mrs. Page. What? thouliest Sir Alice Ford! These knights will back; and so thou shouldst not alter the article of thy gentry.

Mrs. Ford. We burn daylight; here, read, read; perceive how I might be knighted. I shall think the worse of fat men, as long as I have an eye to make difference of men's liking: and yet he would not swear; praised women's modesty; and gave such orderly and well-behaved reproof to all uncommonness, that I would have sworn his disposition would have gone to the truth of his words; but they do no more adhere and keep place together than the Hundredth Psalm to the tune of "Green Sleeves." What do you mean by this word? at this, what fault is there? A tun of oil in his belly, ashore at Windsor? How shall I be revenged on him? I think the best way were to entertain him with hope, till the wicked fire of lust have melted him in his own grease. Did you ever hear the like?

Mrs. Page. See for the letter, but that the name of Page and Ford differs! To thy great comfort in this mystery of ill opinions, here's the twin-brother
THE MERRY WIVES OF WINDSOR

ACT II.

SCENE I.

Mrs. Ford. Now, sweet Frank! why art thou melancholy?

Ford. I melancholy! I am not melancholy. Get you hence, rogue.

Mrs. Ford. Faith, thou hast some crotchets in thy head. Now, will you go, Mistress Page?

Mistress Page. Have with you. You'll come to dinner, George. [Aside to Mrs. Ford] Look who comes yonder: she shall be our messenger to this jolly knight.

Mrs. Ford. [Aside to Mrs. Page] Trust me, I thought on her: she'll fit it.

Enter Mistress Quickly.

Mrs. Page. You are come to see my daughter Anne? Quick. Ay, forsooth; and, I pray, how does good Mistress Anne?

Mrs. Page. Go in with us and see: we have an hour's talk with you.

[Exeunt Mrs. Page, Mrs. Ford, and Mrs. Quickly.]

Mrs. Page. How now, Master Ford!

Ford. You heard what this knave told me, did you not?

Page. Yes: and you heard what the other told Ford. Do you think there is truth in them?

Ford. Hang 'em, slaves! I do not think the knight would offer it: but these that accuse him in his intent towards our wives are a yoke of his discarded men; very rogues, now they be out of service.

Ford. Were they his men?

Page. Marry, were they.

Ford. I like it never the better for that. Does he lie at the Garter?

Page. Ay, marry, does he. If he should intend this voyage towards my wife, I would turn her loose to him: and what he gets more of her than sharp words, let it lie on my head.

Ford. I do not misdoubt my wife: but I would be loath to turn them together. A man may be too confident: I would have nothing lie on my head: I cannot be thus satisfied.

Ford. Page? Where look my ranting host of the Garter comes: there is either liquor in his pate or money in his purse when he looks so merrily.

Enter Host.

Host. How now, mine host!

Host. How now, bully-rook! thou'rt a gentleman. Cavaleiro-justice, I say!

Enter Shal.

Shal. I follow, mine host, I follow. Good even and twenty, good Master Page! Master Page, will you go with us? we have sport in hand.

Host. Tell him, cavaleiro-justice; tell him, bully-rook.

Shal. Sir, there is a fray to be fought between Sir Hugh the Welsh priest and Cailus the French doctor.

Ford. Good mine host o' the Garter, a word with you. [Drawing him aside]

Host. What sayest thou, my bully-rook?

Shal. [To Page] Will you go with us to behold it? My merry host hath had the measuring of their weapons; and, I think, hath appointed them contrary places; for, believe me, I hear the parson is no jester. Hark, I will tell you what our sport shall be. [They converse apart.]

Host. Hast thou no suit against my knight, my guest-cavaleir?

Ford. None, I protest: but I'll give you a potte of burnt sack to give me recourse to him and tell him my name is Brook: only for a jest.

Host. My hand, bully: the shaft have egress and regress—said I well?—and thy name shall be Brook. It is a merry knight. Will you go, Anheirs?
Act II.

The Merry Wives of Windsor. Scene II.

Fal. I warrant thee, nobly hears; mine own people, mine own people.

Quick. Are they so? God bless them and make them his servants!

Fal. Well, Mistress Ford; what of her?

Quick. Why, sir, she's a good creature. Lord, Lord! your worship's a wanton! Well, heaven forgive you and all of us, I pray!

Fal. Mistress Ford; come, Mistress Ford.—

Quick. Marry, this is the short and the long of it; you have brought me into such a canaries as 'tis wonderful. The best courtier of them all, when the court lay at Windsor, could never have brought her to such a canary. Yet there has been knights, and lords, and gentlemen, with their coaches, I warrant you, coach after coach, letter after letter, gift after gift, so swelling my soul, and such ruffling, I warrant you, you, in silk and gold; and in such allant terms; and in such wine and sugar of the best and the fairest, that would have won any woman's heart; and, I warrant you, they could never get an eye-wink of her: I had myself twenty angels given me this morning; but I defy all angels, in any such sort, as they are, but in the way of honesty: and, I warrant you, they could never get her so much as sip on a cup with the proudest of them all: and yet there has been earls, nay, which is more, pensioners; but, I warrant you, all is one with her.

Fal. But what says she to me? be brief, my good sir,

Quick. Marry, she hath received your letter, for the which she thanks you a thousand times; and she gives you to notify that her husband will be absence from his house between ten and eleven.

Fal. Ten and eleven? Quick. Ay, forsooth; and then you may come and see the picture, she says, that you wot of: Master Ford, her husband, will be from home. Alas! the sweet woman leads an ill life with him: he's a very jealous man: she leads a very fraudulent life with him, good heart.

Fal. Ten and eleven. Woman, commend me to her: I will not fail her.

Quick. Why, you say well. But I have another messenger to your worship. Mistress Page hath her hearty commendations to you too: and let me tell you in your ear, she's as fartious a civil modest wife, as ever I see, and tells me a dozen of stories you, morning nor evening prayer, as any is in Windsor, who'er be the other: and she bade me tell your worship that her husband is seldom from home; but she hopes there will come a time. I never knew a woman so dote upon a man: surely I think you have chawns, la; yes, in truth.

Fal. Not I, I assure thee; setting the attraction of my good parts aside I have no other charms.

Quick. Blessing on your heart for't! Fal. But, I pray thee, tell me this: has Ford's wife and Page's wife acquainted each other how they love me?

Quick. That were a jest indeed! they have not so little grace, I hope; that were a trick indeed! But Mistress Page would desire you to send her your little page, of all loves; her husband has a marvellous infection to the little page; and truly Master Page is an honest man. Never a wife in Windsor leads a better life than she does: do what she will, say what she will, take all, pay all, go to bed when she list, rise when she list, all is as she will; and truly she deserves it; for if there be a kind woman in Windsor, she is one. You must send her your page; no remedy.

Fal. Why, I will.

Quick. Nay, but do so, then: and, look you, he may come and go between you both; and in any case have a say-word, that you may know one another's mind, and the boy never need to under—

Fal. Have with you, mine host.

Page. I have heard the Frenchman hath good skill in his rapier.

Shal. Tut, sir, I could have told you more. In these times you stand on distance, your point, your stockade, and I know not what: 'tis the heart, Master Page; 'tis here, 'tis here. I have seen the time, with my long sword I would have made you four tall fellows skip like rats.

Host. Here, boys, here, here! shall we wag?

Page. Have with you. I had rather see them so.

[Exit Host, Shal., and Page.

Ford. Though Page be a secure fool, and stands so firmly on his wife's frailty, yet I cannot put off my opinion so easily: she was in his company at Page's house; and what they made there, I know not. Well, I will look further into 't: and I have a disguise to sound Falstaff. If I find her honest, I lose not my labour; if she be otherwise, 'tis labour well bestowed. [Exit.

Scene II.—A Room in the Garter Inn.

Enter Falstaff and Pistol.

Fal. I will not lend thee a penny.

Pist. Why, then, the world's mine oyster, Which I with sword will open.

Fal. Not a penny. I have been content, sir, you should lay my countenance to pawn: I have granted upon you my good friends for three reprieves for you, and your coach-fellow Nym; or else you had looked through the grate, like a geny of baboons. I am damned in hell for swearing to gentlemen my friends, you were good soldiers and tall fellows; and when Mistress Bridget lost the handle of her fan, I took't upon mine honour thou hast it not.

Pist. Didst not thou share? hadst thou not fifteen pence?

Fal. Reason, you rogue, reason: thinkest thou I'll endanger my soul gratis? At a word, hang no more about me, I am no glibet for you. Go, a short knife and a thong! To your mansion of Pickhatch! Go. You 'll not bear a letter for you, me rogue! you stand upon your honour! Why, thou unconfessable baseness, it is as much as I can do to keep the terms of my honour precise: I, I, I myself sometimes, leaving the fear of God on the left hand and my own honour in my necessity, am fail to shullage, to hedge and to lurch; and yet you, rogue, will ensconce your nags, your cat-a-mountain looks, your red-lattice phrases, and your bold-beating oaths, under the shelter of your honour! You will not do it, you!

Pist. I do relent: what would thou more of man?

Enter Robin.

Rob. Sir, here's a woman would speak with you.

Fal. Let her approach.

Enter Mistress Quickly.

Quick. Give your worship good morrow.

Fal. Good morrow, good wife.

Quick. Not so, an't please your worship.

Fal. Good maid, then.

Quick. I'll be so.

As my mother was, the first hour I was born.

Fal. Do I believe the swearer. What with me?

Quick. Shall I vouchsafe your worship a word or two?

Fal. Two thousand, fair woman; and I 'l vouche

Quick. There is one Mistress Ford, sir:— I pray, come a little nearer this ways:—I myself dwell with Master Doctor Caius,—

Fal. Well, on: Mistress Ford, you say,—

Quick. Your worship says very true: I pray your worship, come a little nearer this ways, stand any thing: for 'tis not good that children should know any wickedness; old folks, you know, have discretion, as they say, and know the world.

Fal. Fare thee well: commend me to them both: there's my purse; I am yet thy debtor. Boy, go along with this woman. [Exit Mistress Quickly and Rosaline.] This news distress me!

Fal. This pun and one of Cupid's carriers:
Clap on more sails; pursue; up with your flights:
Give fire; she is my prize, or oceanwhelm them all! [Exit.

Fal. Sayest thou so, old Jack? go thy ways; I'll make more of thy old body than I have done. Will they yet look after thee? Will thou, after the expense of so much money, be now a gainer? Good body, I thank thee. Let them say 'tis grossly done; so it be fairly done, no matter.

Enter Bardolph.

Bard. Sir John, there's one Master Brook below would fain speak with you, and be acquainted with you; and hath sent your worship a morning's draught of sack.

Fal. Brook is his name?

Bard. Ay, sir, or none.

Fal. Call him in. [Exit Bardolph.] Such Brooks are welcome to me, that o'erflow such liquor. Ah, ha! Mistress Ford and Mistress Page have I encompassed you? go to; via!

Re-enter Bardolph, with Ford disguised.

Ford. Bless you, sir!

Fal. And you, sir! Would you speak with me?

Ford. I make bold to press with so little preparation upon you.

Fal. You're welcome. What's your will? Give us less a drawer. [Exit Bardolph.

Fal. Sir, I am a gentleman that have spent much; my name is Brook.

Fal. Good Master Brook, I desire more acquaintance of you.

Ford. Good Sir John, I see for yours: not to charge you; for I must let you understand I think myself in better plight for a lender than you are: the which hath something emboldened me to this unseasoned intrusion; for they say, if money go before, all ways do lie open.

Fal. Money is a good soldier, sir, and will on.

Ford. Troth, and I have a bag of money here troubles me: if you will help to bear it, Sir John, take all, or half, for easing me of the carriage.

Fal. Sir, I know not how I may deserve to be your porter. [Hearing.

Ford. I will tell you, sir, if you will give me the Fal. Speak, good Master Brook: I shall be glad to be your servant.

Ford. Sir, I hear you are a scholar,— I will be brief with you,— and you have been a man long known to me, though I had never so good means, as desire, to make myself acquainted with you. I shall discover a thing to you, wherein I must very much lay open mine own imperfection: but, good Sir John, as you have one eye upon my follies, as you hear them unfolded, turn another into the register of your own; that I may pass with a reproof the easier, sith you yourself know how easy it is to be such an offender.

Fal. Very well, sir; proceed.

Ford. There is a gentlewoman in this town; her husband's name is Ford.

Fal. Well, sir.

Ford. I have long loved her, and, I protest to you, bestowed much on her; followed her with a doting observance; engrossed opportunities to meet her; feeq'd every slight occasion that could but niggardly give me sight of her; not only bought many presents to give her, but have given largely to many to know what she would have given; briefly, I have pursued her as love hath pursued me; which hath been on the wing of all occasions. But whatsoever I have merited, either in my mind or in my means, meed, I am sure, I have received none; unless experience be a jewel that I have purchased at an infinite rate, and that hath taught me to say this: 'Love is like a shadow flies, when substance love pursues; Pursuing that that flies, and flying what pursers.'

Fal. Have you received no promise of satisfaction at her hands?

Ford. No.

Fal. Have you importuned her to such a purpose?

Ford. Never.

Fal. Of what quality was your love, then?

Ford. Like a fair house built on another man's ground; so that I have lost my edifice by mistaking the place where I erected it.

Fal. To what purpose have you unfolded this to Ford. When I have told you that, I have told you all. Some say, that though she appear honest to me, yet in other places she enlargeth her worth so far that there is shrewd construction made of her. Now, Sir John, here hath the heart of some purpose: you are a gentleman of excellent breeding, admirable discourse, of great admittance, authentic in your place and person, generally allowed for your many war-like, court-like, and learned preparations.

Fal. O, sir!

Ford. Believe it, for you know it. There is money; spend it, spend it; spend more; spend all I have; only give me so much of your time in exchange of it, as to lay an amiable siege to the honesty of this Ford's wife: use your art of wooing; win her to condescend to you; if any man may, you may as soon as any.

Fal. Would it not apply well to the vehemency of your affection, that I should win what you would enjoy? Menthinks you prescribe to yourself very preposterously.

Ford. O, understand my drift. She dwells so securely on the excellency of her honour, that the folly of my soul dares not present itself: she is too bright to be looked against. Now, could I come to her with any detection in my hand, my desires had instance and argument to commend themselves: I could drive her then from the ward of her purity, her reputation, this marriage-vow, and a thousand other gentlemen, for their defences, which now are too strongly embattled against me. What say you to 't, Sir John?

Fal. Master Brook, I will first make bold with your money; next, give me your hand; and last, as I am a gentleman, you shall, if you will, enjoy Ford's wife.

Ford. O good sir!

Fal. I say you shall.

Ford. Want no money, Sir John; you shall want

Fal. Want no Mistress Ford, Master Brook: you shall want none. I shall be with her, I may tell you, by her own appointment; even as you came in to me, her mistress, or go-between parted from me: I say I shall be with her between ten and eleven; for at that time the jealous rascally knave her husband will be forth. Come you to me at night; you shall know how I speed.

Ford. I shall best in your acquaintance. Do you know Ford, sir?

Fal. Hang him, poor cuckoldly knave! I know him not: yet I wrong him to call him poor; they say the jealous willotly knave hath masses of money for which his wife seems to me well-favoured. I will use her as the key of the cuckold rogue's coffer; and there I'll harvest home.

Ford. I would you know Ford, sir, that you might avoid him if you saw him.

Fal. Hang him, mechanical salt-butter rogue! I will stare him out of his wits: I will awe him with my cudgel; it shall hang like a meteor o'er the cuckold's horns. Master Brook, thou shalt know I will predominate over the peasant, and thou shalt lie with his wife. Come to me soon at night. Ford's a knave, and I will aggravate his style; thou, Master Brook, shalt know him for knave and cuckold. Come to me soon at night. [Exit.]

Ford. What a damned Epicurean rascal is this! My heart is ready to crack with impatience. What says this is imprudent jealousy? my wife hath sent to him; the hour is fixed; the match is made. Would any man have thought this? See the hell of having a false woman! My bed shall be abused, my coffers ransacked, my reputation gnawn at; and I shall not only receive this vilious wrong, but stand under the adoption of abominable terms, and by him that does me this wrong. Terms! names! Aaimon sounds well; Lucifer, well; Barboson, well; but they are devils' additions, the names of fiends; but Cuckold! Wittol!—Cuckold! the devil himself hath not such a name. Page is an ass, a secure ass: he will trust his wife; he will not be jealous. I will rather trust a Fleming with my butter, Parson Hugh the Welshman with my cheese, an Irishman with my aqua-vite bottle, or a thief to walk my ambling gelding, than my wife with herself; then she plots, then she sumpmutes, then she devises; and what they think in their hearts they may effect, they will break their hearts but they will effect. God be praised for my jealousy! Eleven o'clock the hour. I will prevent this, detect my wife, be revenged on Falstaff, and laugh at Page. I will about it; better three hours too soon than a minute too late. Fie, fie, fie! cuckold! cuckold! cuckold! [Exit.]

SCENE III.—A field near Windsor.

Enter Caius and Rugby.

Caius. Jack Rugby!
Rug. Sir?
Caius. Vat is de clock, Jack?
Rug. 'T is past the hour, sir, that Sir Hugh promised to meet.

Caius. By gar, he has save his soul, dat he is no come; he has pray his Pifle well, dat he is no come: by gar, Jack Rugby, he is dead already, if he be come.
Rug. He is wise, sir; he knew your worship would kill him, if he came.
Caius. By gar, de herring is no dead so as I will kill him. Take your rapier, Jack; I will tell you how I will kill him.
Caius. Villany, take your rapier.
Rug. Forbear; here's company.

Enter Host, Shallow, Slender, and Page.

Host. Bless thee, bully doctor!
Shal. Save you, Master Doctor Caius!
Page. Now, good master doctor!
Slen. Give you good morrow, sir. [For]
Caius. Vat be all you, one, two, tree, four, come Host. To see thee fight, to see thee foil, to see thee traverse; to see thee here, to see thee there; to see thee pass thy pinto, thy stock, thy reverse, thy distance, thy mountant. Is he dead, my Ethiopian? is he dead, my Francisco? ha, bully! What says my Ascaninus? my Galen? my heart of elder? ha! is he dead, bully stale? is he dead?

CAIUS. By gar, he is de coward Jack priest of de world; he is not show his face.

Host. Thou art a Castalion-King-Urinal. Hector of Greece, my boy!
Caius. I pray you, bear witness that me have stay six or seven, two, three hours for him, and he is no come.

Shal. He is the wiser man, master doctor; he is a curer of souls, and you a curer of bodies; if you should fight, you go against the hair of your professions. Is it not true, Master Page?

Page. Master Shallow, you have yourself been a great fighter, though now a man of peace.
Shal. Bodykin, Master Page, though I now be old and of the peace, if I see a sword out, my finger itches to make one. Though we are justices and doctors and churchmen, Master Page, we have some salt of our youth in us; we are the sons of women, Master Page.

Page. 'Tis true, Master Shallow.
Shal. It will be found so, Master Page. Master Doctor Caius, I am come to fetch you home. I am sworn of the peace: you have showed yourself a wise physician, and Sir Hugh hath shown himself a wise and patient churchman. You must go with me, master doctor. [Mockwater.

Host. Pardon, guest-justice. A word, Monsieur Caius. Mock-vater! vat is dat?
Host. Mock-water, in our English tongue, is valour, bully.

Caius. By gar, den, I have as much mock-vater as de Englishman. Scurvy jack-dog priest! by gar, me vill cut his ears.
Host. He will clapper-claw thee tightly, bully.

Caius. Clapper-de-claw! vat is dat?
Host. That is, he will make thee amends.

Caius. By gar, me do look he shall clapper-de-claw me; for, by gar, me vill have it.
Host. And I will provoke him to 't, or let him wag.
Caius. Me tank you for dat.
Host. And, moreover, bully,—but first, master guest, and Master Page, and eke Cavaleiro Slender, go you through the town to Froagmore. [Aside to them.

Page. Sir Hugh is there, is he?
Host. He is there; see what humour he is in; and I will bring the doctor about by the fields. Will it do well?

Shal. We will do it.

Caius. By gar, me vill kill de priest; for he speak for a jack-an-ape to Anne Page.
Host. Let him die; heathie thy impatience, throw cold water on thy choler; go about the fields with me through Froagmore: I will bring thee where Mistress Anne Page is, at a farm-house a-feasting; and thou shalt woo her. Cried I aim? said I well? Caius. By gar, me dank you for dat; by gar, I love you; and I shall procure-a you de good guest, de earl, de knight, de lords, de gentlemen, my patients.
Host. For the which I will be thy adversary toward Anne Page. Said I well?

Caius. By gar, 't is good; vell said.
Host. Let us wag, then.
Caius. Come at my heels, Jack Rugby. [Exeunt.

ACT III.

SCENE I.—A field near Froagmore.

Enter Sir Hugh Evans and Simple.

Evans. I pray you now, good Master Slender's serving-man, and friend Simple by your name, which way have you looked for Master Caius, that calls himself doctor of physick?

Slen. Marry, sir, the pittie-ward, the park-ward, every way; old Windsor way, and every way but the town way.
ACT III.  THE MERRY WIVES OF WINDSOR.  SCENE II.

Evans. I most vehemently desire you will also look that way.
Sim. I will, sir. [Enter Caius.
Evans. 'Tis my soul, how full of chollors I am, and trembling of mind I shall be glad if he have deceived me. How melancholies I am! I will knock his urinals about his knave's costard when I have good opportunities for the orch. 'Tis my soul! [Sings.

To shallow rivers, to whose falls
Melodious birds sing madrigals;
There will me make our peds of roses,
And a thousand fragrant posies.
To shallow—
Merry on me! I have a great dispositions to cry.

Melodious birds sing madrigals—
When as I sat in Palfyton—
And a thousand vagran posies.

Re-enter Simple.
Sim. Younger he is coming, this way, Sir Hugh.
Evans. He's welcome. [Sings.

To shallow rivers, to whose falls—
Heaven prosper the right! What weapons is he?
Sim. No weapons, sir. There comes my master, Master Shallow, and another gentleman, from Frogmore, over the stile, this way.

Evans. Pray you, give me my gown; or else keep it in your arms.

Enter Page, Shallow, and Slender.
Shal. How now, master Parson! Good morrow, good Sir Hugh. Keep a gammer throughout the dice, and a good account from his book, and it is wonderful.
Sim. [Aside] Ah, sweet Anne Page!
Page. Save you, good Sir Hugh!
Evans. 'Tis easy from his mercies sake, all of you.
Shal. What, the sword and the word! do you study them both, master parson?
Page. And youthful still! in your doublet and hose this raw rheumatic day!
Evans. There is reasons and causes for it.
Page. We are come to you to do a good office, master parson.
Evans. Very well: what is it?
Page. Younger is a most reverend gentleman, who, belike having received wrong by some person, is at most odds with his own gravity and patience that ever you saw.
Shal. I have lived fourscore years and upward; I never heard a man of his place, gravity and learning, so wide of his own respect.
Evans. What is he?
Page. I think you know him; Master Doctor Caius, the renowned French physician.
Evans. Got's will, and his passion of my heart! I had as lief you would tell me of a mess of porridge.
Page. Why?
Evans. He has no more knowledge in Hecubocrates and Galen,—and he is a knave besides: a cowardly knave as you would desires to be acquainted withal.
Page. I warrant you, he's the man should fight with him.
Shal. [Aside] O sweet Anne Page!
Shal. It appears so by his weapons. Keep them asunder: here comes Doctor Cains.

Enter Host, Caius, and Ruby.
Page. Nay, good master parson, keep in your weapon.
Shal. Do so you, good master doctor.
Host. Disarm them, and let them question: let them keep their limbs whole and hack our English.
Caius. I pray you, let—me speak a word with your ear. Wherefore will you not meet—a me?

Evans. [Aside to Caius] Pray you, use your patience: in good time.
Caius. By gar, you are do coward, de Jack dog, John ape.
Evans. [Aside to Caius] Pray you, let us not be laughing-stocks to other men's humours; I desire you in friendship, and I will one way or other make you amends. [Aside] I will knog your urinals about your knave's cogscomb for missing your meetings and appointments.
Caius. Diable! Jack Rugby,—mine host de Jar-ter,—have I not stay for him to kill him? have I not, at the place I did appoint.
Evans. As I am a Christians soul now, look you, this is the place appointed: I'll be judgment by mine host of the Garter.
Host. Peace, I say, Gallia and Gaul, and French and Welsh, sole-curer and body-curer!
Caius. Ay, dat is very good: excellent.
Host. Peace, I say! hear mine host of the Garter. Am I politic? am I subtle? am I a Machavel? Shall I lose my doctor? no; he gives me the potions and the motions. Shall I lose my parson. my priest, my Sir Hugh? no; he gives me the proverbs and the no-verbs. Give me thy hand, terrestrial; so. Give me thy hand, celestial; so. Boys of art, I have received you both; I have directed you to wrong places: your hearts are mighty, your skins are whole, and burnt sack be the issue. Come, bring the sword to the tan. Follow me, lads of peace, follow, follow, follow. [Follow.
Shal. Trust me, a mad host. Follow, gentlemen.
Slen. [Aside] O sweet Anne Page!
[Enter Shal., Slen., Page, and Host.
Caius. Ha, do I perceive dat? have you make—a de set of us, ha, ha?
Evans. This is well: he has made us his stout- ing-stag. I desire you that we may be friends; and let us knog our prains together to be revenge on this same scall, scurry, cogging companion, the host of the Garter.
Page. And with all my heart. 'Tis promise to bring me where is Anne Page; by gar, he deceive me too.
Evans. Well, I will smite his nodules. Pray you, follow.

SCENE II.—A street.

Enter Mistress Page and Robin.
Mrs. Page. Nay, keep your way, little gallant; you were wont to be a follower, but now you are a leader. Whether had you rather lead mine eyes, or eye your master's hecks?
Rob. I had rather, forsooth, go before you like a man than follow him like a dwarf.

Mrs. Page. O, you are a flattering boy: now I see you'll be a courtier.

Enter Ford.
Ford. Well met, Mistress Page. Whither go you?
Mrs. Page. Truly, sir, to see your wife. Is she at home?
Ford. Ay; and as idle as she may hang together. For want of company. I think, if your husbands were dead, you two would marry.
Mrs. Page. Be sure of that,—two other husbands.
Ford. Where had you this pretty weathercock?
Mrs. Page. I cannot tell what the dicens his name is my husband had him of. What do you call your night's name, sirrah?
Rob. Sir John Falstaff.
Ford. Sir John Falstaff!
Mrs. Page. He, he; I can never hit on's name. There is such a league between my good man and he! Is your wife at home indeed?
Ford. Indeed she is.
ACT III.

THE MERRY WIVES OF WINDSOR.

SCENE III.

Mrs. Page. By your leave, sir: I am sick till I see her. [Exeunt Mrs. Page and Robin.

Ford. Has Page any brains? hath he any eyes? hath he any thinking? Sure, they sleep; lie hath no use of them. Why, this boy will carry a letter twenty mile, as easy as a cannon will shoot point-blank twelve score. He pieces out his wife's in-church with Misses Anne, and I would not break with her for more money than I'll speak of.

Ford. We have lingered about a match between Anne Page and my cousin Slender, and this day we shall have our answer.

Shal. I hope I have your good will, father Page. Ford. You have, Master Slender; I stand wholly for you: but my wife, master doctor, is for you altogether.

Evans. Ay, be-gar; and de maid is love-a me; my nursh-a quickly tell me so mush.

Host. What say you to young Master Fenton? he capers, he dances, he has eyes of youth; he writes verses, he speaks holiday, he smells April and May: he will carry 't, he will carry 't; 'tis in his buttons; he will carry 't.

Page. Not by my consent, I promise you. The gentleman is of no having: he kept company with the wild prince and Falstaff; he is too much a region; he knows too much. No, he shall not knit a knot in his fortunes with the finger of my substance: if he take her, let him take her simply; the wealth I have waits on my consent, and my consent goes not that way.

Ford. I beseech you heartily, some of you go home with me to dinner: besides your cheer, you shall have sport; I will show you a monster. Master doctor, you shall go; so shall you, Master Page; and you, Sir Hugh.

Ford. Well, fare you well: we shall have the freer wassing at Master Page's. [Exeunt Shal. and Slen. Evans. Come home, John Rugby; I come anon. [Exit Rugby.

Host. Farewell, my hearts: I will to my honest knight Falstaff, and drink canary with him. [Exit Ford. [Aside] I think I shall drink in pipe-wine first with him; I'll make him dance. Will you go, gentles?

[All. Have with you to see this monster. [Exeunt.

SCENE III. — A room in Ford's house.

Enter Mistress Ford and Mistress Page.

Mrs. Ford. What, John! What, Robert! Mrs. Page. Quickly, quickly! Is the buck-basket—

Mrs. Ford. I warrant. What, Robin, I say!

Enter Servants with a basket.

Mrs. Ford. Come, come, come.

Mrs. Ford. Here, set it down.

Mrs. Page. Give your men the charge; we must be brief.

Mrs. Ford. Marry, as I told you before, John and Robert, be ready here hard by in the brew-house: and when I suddenly call you, come forth, and without any pause or staggering take this basket on your shoulders: that done, trudge with it in all haste, and carry it among the whistlers in Datchet-mead, and there empty it in the muddy ditch close by the Thames side.

Mrs. Page. You will do it?

Mrs. Ford. I ha' told them over and over; they lack no direction. Be gone, and come when you are called. [Exeunt Servants.

Mrs. Page. Here comes little Robin.

Enter Robin.

Mrs. Ford. How now, my eyes-muskets! what news with you?

Rob. My master, Sir John, is come in at your back-door, Mistress Ford, and requests your company.

Mrs. Ford. With him, how! You little Jack-a-Lent, have you been true to us?

Rob. Ay, I'll be sworn. My master knows not of your being here and hath threatened to put me into everlasting liberty if I tell you of it; for he sweats he'll turn me away.

Mrs. Page. Thou'rt a good boy: this secrecy of thine shall be a tailor to thee and shall make thee a new doublet and hose. I'll go hide me.

Mrs. Ford. Do so. Go tell thy master I am alone. [Exit Robin.] Mistress Page, remember you your course.

Mrs. Page. I warrant thee; if I do not act it, kiss me. [Exit.

Mrs. Ford. Go to, then: we'll use this unwelcome, sorry humidity, this gross watery pummion; we'll teach him to know turtles from jays.

Enter Falstaff.

Fal. Have I caught thee, my heavenly jewel? Why, now let me die, for I have lived long enough: this is the period of my ambition: O this blessed Mrs. Ford. O sweet Sir John! [hour! Fal. Mistress Ford, I cannot cog, I cannot pride: Mistress Ford. Now shall I sin in my wish: I would thy husband were dead! I'll speak it before the best lord; I would make thee my lady.

Mrs. Ford. I your lady, Sir John! alas, I should be pitiful lady!

Fal. Let the court of France show me such another. I see how thine eye would emulate the diamond: thou hast the right arched beauty of the brow that becomes the ship-tire, the tire-valiant, or any tire of Venetian admittance.

Mrs. Ford. A plain kerchief, Sir John: my brows become nothing else: nor that well neither.

Fal. By the Lord, thou art a traitor to say so: thou wouldst make an absolute courtier; and the firm fixture of thy foot would give an excellent motion to thy gait in a semi-circled farthingale. I see what thou wert, if Fortune thy foe were not, Nature thy friend. Come, thou canst not hide it.

Mrs. Ford. Believe me, there's no such thing in me.

Fal. What made me love thee? let that persuade thee there's something extraordinary in thee. Come, I cannot cog and say thou art this and that, like a many of these lisping hawk-nose-buds, that come like women in men's apparel, and smell like Buckers-bury in simple time; I cannot: but I love thee; none but thee; and thou deservest it.

Mrs. Ford. Do not betray me, sir. I fear you love Mistress Page.
ACT III.
THE MERRY WIVES OF WINDSOR.  SCENE III.

Fal. Thou mightst as well say I love to walk by the Counter-gate, which is as hateful to me as the rock of a lighthouse.

Mrs. Ford. Well, heaven knows how I love you; and you shall one day find it.

Fal. Keep in that mind; I'll deserve it.

Mrs. Ford. Nay, I must tell you, so you do; or else I could not be in that mind.

Fal. She shall not see me: I will ensnare me behind the arras.

Mrs. Ford. Pray, do so: she's a very tattling woman. [Falstaff hides himself.]

Re-enter Mistress Page and Robin.

What's the matter? how now!

Mrs. Page. O Mistress Ford, what have you done? You're shamed, you're overthrown, you're undone for ever! [Page?]

Mrs. Ford. What's the matter, good Mistress Ford! O well-a-day, Mistress Ford! having an honest man to your husband, to give him such cause of suspicion!

Mrs. Ford. What cause of suspicion?

Mrs. Page. What cause of suspicion! Out upon you! how am I mistaken in you!

Mrs. Ford. Why, alas, what's the matter? Our husband's coming hither, woman, with all the officers in Windsor, to search for a gentleman that says he's here now in the house by your consent, to take an ill advantage of his absence: you are undone.

Mrs. Ford. 'Tis not so, I hope.

Mrs. Page. Pray Heaven it be not so, that you have such a man here! but 'tis most certain your husband's coming hither, woman, with all the officers in Windsor, to search for such a one. I come before to tell you. If you know yourself clear, why, I am glad of it: but if you have a friend here, convey, convey him out. Be not amazed; call all your senses to you; defend your reputation, or bid farewell to your good life for ever.

Mrs. Ford. What shall I do? There is a gentleman, my dear friend; and I fear not mine own shame so much as his peril: I had rather a thousand pound be out of the house than lose my husband.

Mrs. Page. For shame! never stand 'you had rather' and 'you had rather:' your husband's here at hand; bethink you of some conveyance in the house you cannot hide him. O, how have you deceived me! Look, here is a basket: if he be of any reasonable stature, he may creep in here; and throw foul linen upon him, as if it were going to bucking: or—it is whitting-time—send him by your two men to Datchet-mead.

Mrs. Ford. He's too big to go in there. What shall I do?

Fal. [Coming forward] Let me see 't, let me see 't! O, let me see 't! I'll in, I'll in. Follow your friend's counsel. I'll in.

Mrs. Page. What, Sir John Falstaff! Are these your letters, knight?

Fal. Bury, bury, help me away. Let me creep in here. I'll never—

Mrs. Page. Help to cover your master, boy. Call your men, Mistress Ford. You dissembling knight! [Falstaff goes into the basket; they cover him with foul linen.]

Mrs. Ford. Help to cover your master, boy. Call your men, Mistress Ford. You dissembling knight! [Exit Robin.]

Re-enter Servants.

Go take up these clothes here quickly. Where's the cowl-staff? look, how you drumble! Carry them to the laundress in Datchet-mead; quickly, come.

Enter Ford, Page, Caius, and Sir Hugh Evans.

Ford. Pray you, come near; if I suspect without cause, why then make sport at me; then let me be your jest; I deserve it. How now! whither bear you? Serve to the laundress, forsooth.

Mrs. Ford. Why, what have you to do whither they bear it? You were best meddle with buck-washing.

Ford. Buck! I would I could wash myself of the buck! Buck, buck, buck! Ay, buck; I warrant you, buck; and of the season too, it shall appear. [Exit Servants with the basket.] Gentlemen, I have sworn to-night; I'll tell you my dream. Here, here, here be my keys: send all my chambers; search, seek, find out: I'll warrant we'll unknuckle the fox. Let me stop this way first. [Locking the door.] So, now uncover.

Page. Good Master Ford, be contented: you wrong yourself too much.

Ford. True, Master Page. Up, gentlemen; you shall see sport anon; follow me, gentlemen. [Exit.

Evans. This is very fantastical humours and jealousies.

Caius. By gar, 'tis no the fashion of France; it is not jealous in France.

Page. Nay, follow him, gentlemen; see the issue of his search. [Exit Page, Caius, and Evans.

Mrs. Page. Is there not a double excellency in this? You, Mrs. Ford, I know not which pleases me better, that my husband is deceived, or Sir John.

Mrs. Ford. What a taking was he in when your husband asked who was in the basket!

Mrs. Page. I am half afraid he will have need of washing; so throwing him into the water will do him service.

Mrs. Ford. Hang him, dishonest rascal! I would all the same strain were in the same distress.

Mrs. Ford. I think my husband hath some special suspicion of Falstaff's being here; for I never saw him so gross in his jealousy till now.

Mrs. Page. I will lay a plot to try that; and we will yet have more tricks with Falstaff: his disolute disease will scarce obviate this medicine.

Mrs. Ford. Shall we send that foolish carrie, Mistress Quickly, to him, and excuse his throwing into the water; and give him another hope, to benesse him with our bodies?

Mrs. Page. We will do it: let him be sent for tomorrow, eight o'clock, to have amends.

Re-enter Ford, Page, Caius, and Sir Hugh Evans.

Ford. I cannot find him: may be the knave bragged of that he could not compass.

Mrs. Page. [Aside to Mrs. Ford] Heard you that? [you]

Mrs. Page. You do yourself mighty wrong, Master Ford, Ay, ay; I must bear it. [Ford, Ay, ay; I must bear it.

Evans. If there be any body in the house, and in the chambers, and in the coopers, and in the presses, heaven forgive my sins at the day of judgment!

Caius. By gar, nor I that have no bodies.

Page. Fie, fie, Master Ford! are you not ashamed? What spirit, what devil suggests this imagination? I would not ha' your disturber in this kind for the wealth of Windsor Castle.

Ford. 'Tis my fault, Master Page: I suffer for it. You suffer for a bad consequence: you are as honest a 'omans as I will desire among five thousand, and five hundred too.

Caius. By gar, I see 't is an honest woman.

Ford. Well, I promised you a dinner: Come, come, walk in the Park: I pray you, pardon me; I will hereafter make known to you why I have done this. Come, wife; come, Mistress Page. I pray you, pardon me; pray heartily, pardon me.

Page. Let's go in, gentlemen; but, trust me, we'll most likely be bound to-morrow morning to my house to breakfast; after we'll a-birding together; I have a fine hawk for the bush. Shall it be so?

Ford. Any thing. [company.

Exeunt. If there be one, I shall make two in the Coast. If there be one or two, I shall make a three.

Ford. Pray you, go, Master Page. [Exit.

Exeunt. I pray you now, remembrance to-morrow on the lousy knave, mine host.

Caius. Dat is good; by gar, with all my heart.

Exeunt. A lousy knave, to have his gibes of all his mockeries! [Exit.

SCENE IV.—A room in Page's house.

Enter Fenton and Anne Page.

Fent. I see I cannot get thy father's love; Therefore no more turn me to him, sweet Nan.

Anne. Alas, how then?

Fent. Why, thou must be thyself. He doth object I am too great of birth; And that, my state being gall'd with my expense, I seek to him, it cannot be wealth: Besides these, other bars he lays before me, My riots past, my wild societies; And tells me 'tis a thing impossible I should love thee but as a property.

Anne. May be he tells you true.

Fent. No, heaven so speed me in my time to come! Albeit I will confess thy father's wealth Was the first motive that I wrou'd thee, Anne: Yet, wooing thee, I found thee of more value Than stamps in gold or sums in sealed bags; And 'tis the very riches of thyself That now I aim at.

Anne. Gentle Master Fenton, Yet seek my father's love; still seek it, sir; If opportunity and humblest suit Cannot attain it, why, then,—hark you hither! [They converse apart.

Enter Shallow, Slender, and Mistress Quickly.

Shal. Break their talk, Mistress Quickly: my kinsman shall speak for himself.

Slender. I'll make a shaft or a bolt on 't: 'sid, 'tis but venturing.

Shal. Be not dismayed.

Slender. No, she shall not dismay me: I care not for that, but that I am afraid.

Quick. Hark ye; Master Slender would speak a word with you. [Exit.

Anne. I come to him. [Aside. This is my father's O, what a world of ill-favour'd faults! Looks handsomc in three hundred pounds a-year! Quick. And how does good Master Fenton? Pray you, a word with you.

Shal. She's coming; to her, coz. O boy, thou hast a father?

Slender. I had a father, Mistress Anne; my uncle can tell you good jests of him. Pray you, uncle, tell Mistress Anne the jest, how my father stole two geese out of a pen, good uncle.

Shal. Mistress Anne, my cousin loves you.

Slender. Ay, that I do; as well as I love any woman in Gloucestershire.

Shal. He will maintain you like a gentlewoman.

Slender. Ay, that I will, come cut and long-tail, under the degree of a squire.

Shal. He will make you a hundred and fifty pounds a year.

Slender. Good Master Shallow, let him a woo for Shal. Marry, I thank you for it; I thank you for that good comfort. She calls you, coz: I'll leave Anne. Now, Master Slender,—[Exit.

Slender. Now, good Mistress Anne,—

Anne. What is your will?

Slender. My will! 'Od's heartings, that's a pretty jest indeed! I ne'er made my will yet, I thank heaven; I am not such a sickly creature, I give heaven praise.

Anne. I mean, Master Slender, what would you with me.

Slender. Truly, for mine own part, I would little or nothing with you. Your father and my uncle hath made motions: if it be my luck, so; if not, happy man be his dole! They can tell you things go better than I can: you may ask your father; he here comes.

Page. Now, Master Slender: love him, daughter Anne.

Why, how now! what does Master Fenton here? You wrong me, sir, thus still to haunt my house: I told you, sir, my daughter is disposed of.

Fent. Nay, Master Fenton, be not impatient.

Mrs. Page. Good Master Fenton, come not to my Page. She is no match for you. [Exit.

Fent. Sir, will you hear me?

Page. No, good Master Fenton. Come, Master Shallow; come, son Slender, in. Knowing my mind, I will not wrong me, Master Fenton. [Exit.

Quick. Speak to Mistress Page.

Fent. Good Mistress Page, for that I love your In such a righteous fashion as I do, [daughter Perforce, against all checks, rebukes and manners, I must advance the colours of my love And not retire: let me have your good will.

Anne. Good mother, do not marry me to yond fool.

Mrs. Page. I mean it not; I seek you a better husband. Quick. That's my master, master doctor: [band.

Anne. Alas, I had rather be set quick in the earth And bow'd to death with turnips! [Exit.

Fent. Good master, I will not be your friend nor enemy: My daughter will I question how she loves you, And as I find her, so am I affected.

Till then farewell, sir: she must needs go in; Her father will be angry.

Fent. Farewell, gentle mistress: farewell, Nan. [Exit.

SCENE V.—A room in the Garter Inn.

Enter Falstaff and Bardolph.

Falstaff. Bardolph, I say,—

Bardolph. Here, sir.

Fal. Go fetch me a quart of sack; put a toast in it.

Bardolph. Have I lived to be carried in a basket, like a barrel of butcher's offal, and to be thrown in the Thames? Well, if I be served such another trick, I'll have my brains t' eu out and buttered, and give them to a dog for a new-year's gift. The rogue slighted me into the river with as little remorse as they would have drowned a blind bitch’s puppies, fifteen of the litter; and you may know by my size that I have a kind of acuteness in sinking; if the bottom were as deep as hell, I had been drowned, but that the shore was shelly and shallow,—a death that I abhor; for the water swells a man; and what a thing should I have been when I had been swelled! I should have been a mountain of mummy.

Re-enter Bardolph with sack.

Bard. Here’s Mistress Quickly, sir, to speak with you.

Fal. Come, let me pour in some sack to the Thames water; for my belly’s as cold as if I had swallowed snowballs for pills to cool the reins. Call her in.

Bard. Come in, woman!

Enter Mistress Quickly.

Quick. By your leave; I cry you mercy: give your worship good morrow. I come to your worship from Mistress Ford.

Fal. Mistress Ford! I have had ford enough: I was thrown into the ford; I have my belly full of ford.

Quick. Alas the day! good heart, that was not her fault: she does so take on with her men; they mistook their erection. [Promise.

Fal. So did I mine, to build upon a foolish woman’s promise. Well, she laments, sir, for it, that it would yearn your heart to see it. Her husband goes this morning a-birding; she desires you once more to come to her between eight and nine: I must carry her word quickly: she’ll make you amends, I warrant you.

Fal. Well, I will visit her; tell her so; and bid her think what a man is: let her consider his frailty, and give her thought to my merit. Quick. I will tell her.

Fal. Do so. Between nine and ten, sayest thou?

Quick. Eight and nine, sir.

Fal. Well, be gone; I will not miss her.

Quick. Peace be with you, sir. [Exit.] I marvel I hear not of Master Brook; he sent me word to stay within: I like his money well. O, here he comes.

Enter Ford.

Ford. Bless you, sir!

Fal. Now, Master Brook, you come to know what hath passed between me and Ford’s wife?

Ford. That, indeed, Sir John, is my business.

Fal. Master Brook, I will not lie to you: I was at her house the hour she appointed me.

Ford. And sped you, sir?

Fal. Very ill-favouredly, Master Brook.

Ford. How so, sir? Did she change her determination?

Fal. No, Master Brook: but the peaking Cornuto her husband, Master Brook, dwelling in a continual larum of jealousy, comes me in the instant of our encounter, after we had embraced, kissed, protested, and, as it were, spoke the prologue of our comedy; and at his heels a rabble of his companions, thither provoked and instigated by his distemper, and, forsooth, to search his house for his wife’s love.

Ford. What, while you were there?

Fal. While I was there.

Ford. And did he search for you, and could not find you?

Fal. You shall hear. As good luck would have it, comes in one Mistress Page; gives intelligence of Ford’s approach; and, in her invention and Ford’s wife’s direction, they conveyed me into a buck-basket.

Ford. By the Lord, a buck-basket! rammed up in with foul shirts and smocks, socks, foul stockings, greasy napkins; that, Master Brook, there was the rankest compound of villainous smell that ever offended nostril.

Ford. And how long lay you there?

Fal. Nay, you shall hear, Master Brook, what I have suffered to bring this woman to evil for your good. Being thus crammed in the basket, a couple of Ford’s knaves, his hinds, were called forth by their mistress to carry me in the name of foul clothes to Dutch-hotel; they took me on their shoulders; met the jealous knave their master in the door, who asked them once or twice what they had in their basket: I quaked for fear, lest the lunatic knife would have searched it; but fate, ordaining he should be a cuckold, held his hand. Well: on went he for a search, and away went I for foul clothes. But mark the sequel, Master Brook: I suffered the pangs of three several deaths; first, an intolerable fright, to be detected with a jealous rotten bell-wether; next, to be compassed, like a good bibbo, in the circumference of a peck, hilt to point, heel to head, and then, to be stuffed up, like a strong distillation, with stinking clothes that fretted in their own grease: think of that—man of my kidney, think of that,—that am subject to heat as butter; a man of continual dissolution and thaw: it was a miracle to scarce-suffocation. And in the height of this bath, when I was more than half stewed in grease, like a Dutch dish, to be thrown into the Thames, and cooled, glowing hot, in that surge, like a horse-shoe; think of that,—bissing hot,—think of that, Master Brook.

Ford. In good sadness, sir, I am sorry that for my sake you have suffered all this. My suit then is desperate; you'll undertake her no more?

Fal. Master Brook, I will be thrown into Etna, as I have been into Thames, ere I will leave her thus. Her husband is this morning gone a-birding; I have received from her another embassy of meeting; twixt eight and nine is the hour, Master Brook.

Ford. It is past eight already, sir.

Fal. Is it? I will then address me to my appointment. Come to me at your convenient leisure, and you shall know how I sped; and the conclusion shall be crowned with your enjoying her. Adieu. You shall have her, Master Brook; Master Brook, you shall cuckold Ford.

[Exit.]
ACT IV.

THE MERRY WIVES OF WINDSOR.

SCENE I.—A street.

Enter Mistress Page, Mistress Quickly, and William.

Mrs. Page. Is he at Master Ford's already, think'st thou?
Quick. Sure he is by this, or will be presently: but, truly, he is very courageous mad about his thoughts. Let's go down into the water. Mistress Ford desires you to come suddenly.

Mrs. Page. I'll be with her by and by; I'll but bring my young man here to school. Look, where his master comes; 'tis a playing-day, I see.

Enter Sir Hugh Evans.

How now, Sir Hugh! no school to-day? [To play.]
Evans. No; Master Slender is let the boys leave. Quick. Blessing of his heart!
Mrs. Page. Sir Hugh, my husband says my son profits nothing in the world at his book. I pray you, ask him some questions in his accidence, [Come.]
Evans. Come hither, William; hold up your head; Mrs. Page. Come on, sirrah; hold up your head; answer your master, be not afraid.
Evans. William, how many numbers is in nouns?
Will. Two.
Quick. Truly, I thought there had been one number more, because they say; 'Od 's nouns.
Evans. Peace your tattlings! What is 'fair,?
Will. Pulcher.
[William?]
Quick. Polecats! there are fairer things than polecats, sure.
Evans. You are a very simplicity 'oman: I pray you, peace. What is 'lapis,' William?
Will. A stone.
Evans. And what is 'a stone,' William?
Will. A pebble.
Evans. No, it is 'lapis': I pray you, remember in your prayers.
Will. Lapis.
Evans. That is a good William. What is he, William, that does lend articles?
Will. Articles are borrowed of the pronoun, and be thus declined, Singulariter, nominativo, his, his, hoc.
Evans. Nominativo, big, big, hag, hag; pray you, mark: genitivus, hujus. Well, what is your accusative case?
Will. Accusativo, hinc.
Evans. I pray you, have your remembrance, child; accusativo, hinc, hang, hoc, [you].
Quick. 'Hang-hog' is Latin for bacon, I warrant.
Evans. Leave your prabbles, 'oman. What is the locative case, William?
Will. O.—vacativo, O.
Evans. Remember, William; locative is caret.
Quick. And that's a good root.
Evans. 'Oman, forbear.
Mrs. Page. Peace!
Evans. What is your genitivus case plural, William?
Will. Genitivus case! [Ilam?]
Evans. Aye.
Will. Genitivus, horum, harum, horum.
Quick. Vengeance of Jenny's case! lie on her! never name her, child, if she be a whore.
Evans. For shame, 'oman.
Quick. You do ill to teach the child such words: he teaches him to kick and to hack, which they'll do fast enough of themselves, and to call ' horum,' lie upon you!
Evans. 'Oman, art thou lunatic? hast thou no understandings for thy cases and the numbers of the genders? Thou art as foolish Christian creatures as I would desires.

Mrs. Page. Prithhee, hold thy peace.
Evans. Show me now, William, some declensions of your pronouns.
Will. Forsooth, I have forgot.
Evans. It is qui, que, quod: if you forget your 'quies,' your 'quas,' and your 'quodas,' you must be preaches. Go your ways, and play; go.
Mrs. Page. He is a better scholar than I thought he was.
Evans. He is a good sprag memory. Farewell, Mistress Page.
Mrs. Page. Adieu, good Sir Hugh. [Exit Sir Hugh.]
Get you home, boy. Come, we stay too long.
[Exeunt.]

SCENE II.—A room in Ford's house.

Enter Falstaff and Mistress Ford.

Fal. Mistress Ford, your sorrow hath eaten up my sufferance. I see you are obsequious in your looks, and I profess requital to a hair's breadth; not only, Mistress Ford, in the simple office of love, but in all the accoutrement, complement and ceremony of it. But are you sure of your husband now?
Mrs. Ford. He's a-birding, sweet Sir John.
Mrs. Ford. Step into the chamber, Sir John.
[Exit Falstaff.

Enter Mistress Page.

Mrs. Page. How now, sweetheart! who's at home besides yourself?
Mrs. Ford. Why, none but mine own people.
Mrs. Page. Indeed!
Mrs. Ford. No, certainly. [Aside to her.] Speak louder.
Mrs. Page. Truly, I am so glad you have nobody here.
Mrs. Ford. Why?
Mrs. Page. Why, woman, your husband is in his old lunes again: he so takes on yonder with his husband; so rails against all married mankind; so curses all Eve's daughters, of what complexion soever; and so buffets himself on the forehead, crying, 'Peer out, peer out!' that any madness I ever yet beheld seemed but tameness, civility and patience, to this his distemper he is in now: I am glad the fat knight is not here.
Mrs. Ford. Why, does he talk of him?
Mrs. Page. Of none but him; and swears he was carried out, the last time he searched for him, in a basket; protests to my husband he is now here, and hath drawn him and the rest of their company from their sport, to make another experiment of his suspicion; but I am glad the knight is not here; now he shall see his own foolery.
Mrs. Ford. How near is he, Mistress Page?
Mrs. Page. Hard by; at street end; he will be here anon.
Mrs. Ford. I am undone! The knight is here.
Mrs. Page. Why then you are utterly shamed, and he's but a dead man. What a woman are you! — Away with him, away with him! better shame than murder.
Mrs. Ford. Which way should he go? how should I bestow him? Shall I put him into the basket again?
Re-enter Falstaff.

Fal. No, I'll come no more 't the basket. May I not go out ere he come?
Mrs. Page. Alas, three of Master Ford's brothers watch the door with pistols, that none shall issue out; otherwise you might slip away ere he came. But what make you here?

Fal. What shall I do? I'll creep up into the chimney.

Mrs. Ford. There they always use to discharge their birding-pieces. Creep into the kiln-hole.

Fal. Where is it?

Mrs. Ford. He will seek there, on my word.
Neither press, coffer, chest, trunk, wall, vault, but he hath an abstract for the remembrance of such places, and goes to them by his note: there is no hiding you in the house.

Fal. I'll go out then.

Mrs. Page. If you go out in your own semblance, you die, Sir John. Unless you go out disguised—

Mrs. Ford. How might we disguise him?

Mrs. Page. Alas the day, I know not! There is no woman's gown big enough for him; otherwise he might put on a hat, a muffler and a kerchief, and so escape.

Fal. Good hearts, devise something: any extremity rather than a mischief.

Mrs. Ford. My maid's aunt, the fat woman of Brentford, has a gown above.

Mrs. Page. On my word, it will serve him; she's as big as he is: and there's her thrunned hat and her muffler. Run up, Sir John.

Mrs. Ford. Go, go, sweet Sir John: Mistress Page and I will look some linen for your head.

Mrs. Page. Quick, quick! we'll come dress you straight: put on the gown the while.

[Exit Falstaff.

Mrs. Ford. I would my husband would meet him in such a shape: he cannot abide the old woman of Brentford; he swears she's a witch; forbade her my house and hath threatened to beat her.

Mrs. Page. Heaven guide him to thy husband's cudgel, and the devil guide his cudgel afterwards!

Mrs. Ford. But is my husband coming?

Mrs. Page. Ay, in good sadness, is he; and talks of the basket too, howsoever he hath had intelligence.

Mrs. Ford. We'll try that; for I'll appoint my men to carry the basket again, to meet him at the door with it, as they did last time.

Mrs. Page. Nay, but he'll be here presently: let's go dress him like the witch of Brentford.

Mrs. Ford. I'll first direct my men what they shall do with the basket. Go up; I'll bring linen for him straight.

We'll leave a proof, by that which we will do, Wives may be merry, and yet honest too: We do not act that often jest and laugh; 'Tis old, but true, Still swine eat all the duff.

[Exit.

Re-enter Mistress Ford with two Servants.

Mrs. Ford. Go, sirs, take the basket again on your shoulders: your master is hard at door; if he bid you set it down, obey him: quickly, dispatch.

First Serv. Come, come, take it up.

Sec. Serv. Pray heaven it be not full of knight again.

[Exit. First Serv. I hope not; I had as lief bear so much

Enter Ford, Page, Shallow, Caius, and Sir Hugh Evans.

Ford. Ay, but if it prove true, Master Page, have you any way then to unfool me again? Set down the basket, villain! Somebody call my wife. Youth in Master Ford too. O you pandyter rascals! there's a knot, a gimp, a pack, a conspiracy against me: now shall the devil be shamed. What, wife, I say! Come, come forth! Behold what honest clothes you send forth to bleeding!

Page. Why, this passes, Master Ford; you are not to go loose any longer; you must be pinioned.

Evans. Why, this is lunatics! this is mad as a mad, indeed.

Shal. Indeed, Master Ford, this is not well, indeed.

Ford. So say I too, sir.

Re-enter Mistress Ford.

Come hither, Mistress Ford; Mistress Ford, the honest woman, the modest wife, the virtuous creature, that hath the jealous fool to her husband! I suspect without cause, mistress, do I?

Mrs. Ford. Heaven be my witness you do, if you suspect me in any dishonesty.

Ford. Will said, brazen-face! hold it out. Come forth, sirrah. [Pulling clothes out of the basket.

Page. This passes! [alone.

Mrs. Ford. Are you not ashamed? let the clothes Ford. I shall find you anon.

Evans. Tis unreasonable! Will you take up your wife's clothes? Ford. Empty the basket, I say!

Mrs. Ford. Why, man, why?

Ford. Master Page, as I am a man, there was one conveyed out of my house yesterday in this basket: why may not he be there again? In my house! I am sure he is safe; for my jealousy is true; my jealousy is reasonable. Pluck me out all the linen.

Mrs. Ford. If you find a man there, he shall die a flea's death.

Shal. By my fidelities, this is not well, Master Ford; this wrongs you.

Evans. Master Ford, you must prate, and not follow the imaginations of your own heart: this is Ford. Well, he's not here I seek for. [jealousies.

Page. Nor, nor nowhere else but in your brain.

Ford. Help to search my house this one time. If I find not what I seek, show no colour for my extremity: let me for ever be your table-sport; let them say of me, 'As jealous as Ford, that searched a hollow walnut for his wife's lemon.' Satisfy me once more; once more search with me.

Ford. What, what, Mistress Page! come you and the old woman down; my husband will come into the chamber.

Ford. Old woman! what old woman's that?

Mrs. Ford. Why, it is my maid's aunt of Brentford.

Ford. A witch, a quan, an old cozening quan! Here I am, forbid her my house! She comes of errands, does she? We are simple men; we do not know what's brought to pass under the profession of fortune-telling. She works by charms, by spells, by the figure, and such daubery as this is, beyond our element: we know nothing. Come down, you witch, you bag, you; come down, I say!

Mrs. Ford. Nay, good, sweet husband! Good gentlemen, let him not strike the old woman.

Re-enter Falstaff in woman's clothes, and Mistress Page.

Mrs. Page. Come, Mather Prat; come, give me your hand.

Mrs. Page. Are you not ashamed? I think you have killed the poor woman.

Mrs. Ford. Nay, he will do it. 'Tis a goodly credit for you.

Ford. Hang her, witch!

Shal. She beats Mrs. Ford; but I think the 'oman is a witch indeed: I like not when a 'oman has a great peard; I spy a great peard under his muffler.

Ford. Will you follow, gentlemen? I beseech you, follow; see but the issue of my jealousy: if I cry out thus upon no trail, never trust me when I open again.

Page. Let's obey his humour a little further: come, gentlemen.

[Exeunt Ford, Page, Shal., Caius, and Evans.

Mrs. Page. Trust me, he beat him most pitifully.

Mrs. Ford. Nay, by the mass, that he did not; he beat him most unpitifully, methought.

Mrs. Page. I'll have the cutigel hallowed and hung o'er the altar: if it hath done meritorious service.

Mrs. Ford. What think you? may we, with the warrant of womanhood and the witness of a good conscience, pursue him with any further revenge?

Mrs. Page. The spirit of wantonness is, sure, scared out of him: if the devil have him not in feé-simple, with waste and recovery, he will never, I think, in the way of waste, attempt us again.

Mrs. Ford. Shall we tell our husbands how we have served him?

Mrs. Page. Yes, by all means; if it be but to scrape the figures out of your husband's brains. If they can find in their hearts the poor unvirtuous fat knight shall be any further afflicted, we two will still be the ministers.

Mrs. Ford. I'll warrant they 'll have him publicly shamed: and methinks there would be no period to the jest, 'mongst he be not publicly shamed.

Mrs. Page. Come, to the forge with it then; shape it: I would not have things cool.

[Exeunt.

SCENE III.—A room in the Garter Inn.

Enter Host and Bardolph.

Bard. Sir, the Germans desire to have three of your horses: the duke himself will be to-morrow at court, and they are going to meet him.

Host. What duke should that be comes so secretly? I hear not of him in the court. Let me speak with the gentlemen: they speak English?

Bard. Ay, sir; I'll call them to you.

Host. They shall have my horses: but I'll make them pay; I'll cause them: they have had my house a week at command; I have turned away my other guests: they must come off; I'll sauce them. Come.

[Exeunt.

SCENE IV.—A room in Ford's house.

Enter Page, Ford, Mistress Page, Mistress Ford, and Sir Hugh Evans.

Evans. 'Tis true was the best discretions of a 'oman as ever I did look up on. Page. And did he send you both these letters at an instant?

Mrs. Page. Within a quarter of an hour. [wilt.

Ford. Pard'on me, wife. Henceforth do what thou I rather will suspect the sun with cold [stand, than thee with wantonness: now doth thy honour In him that was of late an heretic, As firm as faith.

Page. 'Tis well, 'tis well; no more: Be not as extreme in submission As in offence. But let our plot go forward: let our wives Yet once again, to make us public sport, Appoint a meeting with this old fat fellow, Where we may take him and disgrace him for it.

Ford. There is no better way than that they Page. How? to send him word they'll meet him in the park at midnight? Fie, fie! he'll never come.

Evans. You say he has been thrown in the rivers and has been grievously peaten as an old 'oman: methinks there should be torrens in him that he should not come; methinks his flesh is punished, he shall have no desires.

Page. So think I too.

Mrs. Ford. Devise but how you'll use him when he comes, And let us two devise to bring him thither.

Mrs. Page. There is an old tale goes that Herne the hunter, Sometime a keeper here in Windsor forest, Doth all the winter-time, at still midnight, Walk round about an oak, with great rag'd horns; And there he blasts the tree and takes the cattle And makes milk-kine yield blood and shakes a chain In a most hideous and dreadful manner: You have heard of such a spirit, and well you know The superstitious idle-headed eid Received and did deliver to our age.

This tale of Herne the hunter for a truth.

Page. Why, yet there want not many that do fear In deep of night to walk by this Herne's oak: But what of this?

Mrs. Ford. Marry, this is our device;
That Falstaff at that oak shall meet with us.

Page. Well, let it not be doubted but he 'l come: And in this shape when you have brought him thither, What shall be done with him? what is your plot?

Mrs. Page. That likewise have we thought upon, and thus:

Nan Page my daughter and my little son And three or four more of their growth we 'll dress Like urchins, urchins and fairies, green and white, With rounds of waxen tapers on their heads, And rattles in their hands: upon a sudden, As Falstaff, she and I, are newly met, Let them from forth a sawpit rush at once With some diffused song: upon their right, We two in great amazedness will fly: Then let them all encircle him about And, fairy-like, to-pinch the unclean knight, And ask him why, that hour of fairy revel, In their so sacred paths he dares to tread In shape profane.

Mrs. Ford. And till he tell the truth, Let the supposed fairies pinch him sound And burn him with their tapers.

Mrs. Page. The truth being known, We'll all present ourselves, dis-horn the spirit, And mock him home to Windsor.

Ford. The children must Be practised well to this, or they 'll ne'er do.

Evans. I will teach the children their behaviours; and I will be like a jack-an-apes also, to burn the knight with my taber. [vizards.

Ford. That will be excellent. I'll go and buy them.

Mrs. Page. My Nan shall be the queen of all the fairies, Finely attired in a robe of white.

Page. That silk will I go buy. [Aside And in that shall Master Slender steal my Nan away. And marry her at Eton. Go send to Falstaff straight. Ford. Nay, I'll to him again in name of Brook: He'll tell me all his purpose: sure, he 'l come.

Mrs. Page. Fear not you that. Go get us properties And tricking for our fairies.

Evans. Let us about it: it is admirable pleasures and fairy honest knavery.

[Exeunt Page, Ford, and Evans.

Mrs. Page. Go, Mistress Ford, Send quickly to Sir John, to know his mind.

[Exeunt Mrs. Ford of.

I'll to the doctor: he hath my good will, And none but he, to marry with Nan Page. That Slender, though well landed, is an idiot; And he my husband best of all affects. The doctor is well money'd, and his friends Potent at court: he, none but he, shall have her. Though twenty thousand worthy come to crave her. [Exit.
SCENE V.—A room in the Garter Inn.

Enter Host and Simple.

Host. What wouldst thou have, boor? what, thickskin? speak, breathe, discuss; brief, short, quick, snap.

Sim. Marry, sir, I come to speak with Sir John Falstaff from Master Slender.

Host. There's his chamber, his house, his castle, his standing bed and trundle-bed; 'tis painted about with the story of the Prodigal, fresh and new. Go knock and call; he'll speak like an Anthropophagian unto thee: knock, I say.

Sim. There's an old woman, a fat woman, gone up into his chamber: I'll be so bold as stay, sir, till she come down; I come to speak with her, indeed.

Host. Ha! a fat woman! the knight may be robbed: I'll call. Bully knight! bully Sir John! speak from thy lungs military: art thou there? it is thine host, thou, Ephesian, calls.

Fal. [Above] How now, mine host!

Host. Here's a Bohemian-Tartar terries the coming down of thy fat woman. Let her descend, bully, let her descend; my chambers are honourable: fie! privacy? fie! Enter Falstaff.

Fal. There was mine host, an old fat woman even now with me; but she's gone. [Brentford?] Sim. Pray you, sir, was't not the wise woman of Fal. Ay, marry, was it, mussel-shell: what would you with her? Sim. My master, sir, Master Slender, sent to her, seeing her go through the streets, to know, sir, whether one Nym, sir, that beguiled him of a chain, had the chain or no.

Fal. I spake with the old woman about it.

Sim. And what does she say, I pray, sir?

Fal. Marry, she says that the very same man that beguiled Master Slender of his chain cozened him of it.

Sim. I would I could have spoken with the woman herself; I had other things to have spoken with her to, from him, calls.

Fal. What are they? let us know.

Host. Ay, come; quick.

Sim. I may not conceal them, sir.

Host. Conceal them, or thou diest.

Sim. Why, sir, they were nothing but about Mistress Anne Page; to know if it were my master's fortune to have her or no.

Fal. 'Tis, 'tis his fortune.

Sim. What, sir?

Fal. To have her, or no. Go; say the woman told me so.

Sim. May I be bold to say so, sir?

Fal. Ay, sir; like who more bold.

Sim. I thank your worship: I shall make my master glad with these tidings. [Exit. Host. Thou art clerkly, thou art clerkly, Sir John. Was there a wise woman with thee? Fal. There was, mine host; one that hath taught me more wit than ever I learned before in my life; and I paid nothing for it neither, but was paid for my learning.

Enter Bardolph.

Bard. Out, alas, sir! cozenage, mere cozenage! Host. Where be my horses? speak well of them, varletto.

Bard. Run away with the cozeners; for so soon as I came beyond Eton, they threw me off from behind one of them, in a slough of mire; and set spurs and away like three German devils, three Doctor Faustiuses.

Host. They are gone but to meet the duke, villain: do not say they be fled; Germans are honest men.

Enter Sir Hugh Evans.

Evans. Where is mine host?

Host. What is the matter, sir?

Evans. Have a care of your entertainments: there is a friend of mine come to town, tells me there is three cozen-germans that has cozened all the hostels of this town, and I mind my heart the host is known to come. I tell you for good will, look you: you are wise and full of gibes and vlontology, and 'tis not convenient you should be cozened. Fare you well.

[Exit.

Enter Doctor Caius.

Caius. Vere is mine host de Jarter?

Host. Here, master doctor, in perplexity and doubtful dilemma.

Caius. I cannot tell vax is dat: but it is tell-a-me dat you make grand preparation for a duke de saffron; for your sake, more than the vilius inconstancy of man's disposition is able to bear.

Quick. Have and not they suffered? Yes, I warrant; speciously one of them; Mistress Ford, good heart, is beaten black and blue, that you cannot see a white spot about her.

Quick. Tell me, villain, of the three, which tellest thou me of black and blue? I was beaten myself into all the colours of the rainbow; and I was like to be apprehended for the witch of Brentford; but that my admirable dexterity of wit, my counterfeiting the action of an old woman, delivered me, the knave constable had set me i' the stocks, i' the common stocks, for a witch.

Quick. Sir, let me speak with you in your chamber: you shall hear how things go; and, I warrant, to your content. Here is a letter will say somewhat. Good hearts, what ado here is to bring you together! Sure, one of you does not serve heaven well, that you are so crossed.

Fal. Come up into my chamber. [Exeunt.

SCENE VI.—Another room in the Garter Inn.

Enter Fenton and Host.

Host. Master Fenton, talk not to me; my mind is heavy: I will give over all. [pose, Fent. Yet hear me speak. Assist me in my pur- And, as I am a gentleman, I'll give thee A hundred pound in gold more than your loss.

Host. I will hear you, Master Fenton; and I will at the least keep your counsel.

Fent. From time to time I have acquainted you With the dear love I bear to fair Anne Page; Who mutually hath answer'd my affection, So far forth as herself might be her chooser,
ACT V.

THE MERRY WIVES OF WINDSOR. SCENE V.

To her mother, ever strong against that match
And firm for Doctor Caius, hath appointed
That he shall likewise shun her away.
While other sports are tasking of their minds,
And at the denery, where a priest attends,
Straight marry her; to this her mother's plot
She seemingly obedient likewise hath
Made promise to the doctor. Now, thus it rests:
Her father means she shall be all in white,
And in that habit, when Slender sees his time
To take her by the hand and bid her go,
She shall go with him: her mother hath intended,
The better to denote her to the doctor.
For they must all be mask'd and vizarded,
That quaint in green she shall be loose enrob'd,
With rikunds pendent, faring 'bout her head;
And when the doctor spies his vantage ripe,
To pinch her by the hand, and on that token,
The maid hath given consent to go with him.
Host. Which means she to deceive, father or mother?
Fent. Both, my good host, to go along with me:
And here it rests, that you'll procure the vicar
To stay for me at church 'twixt twelve and one,
And, in the lawful name carrying,
To give our hearts united ceremony.
Host. Well, husband your device; I'll to the vicar:
Bring you the maid, you shall not lack a priest.
Fent. So shall I evermore be bound to thee;
Besides, I'll make a present recom pense. [Exeunt.

ACT V.

SCENE I.—A room in the Garter Inn.
Enter Falstaff and Mistress Quickly.

Fal. Prithée, no more prattling; go, I'll hold
This is the third time; I hope good luck lies in odd numbers.
Away! go. They say there is divinity
In odd numbers, either in nativity, chance, or death.
Away! Quick. I'll provide you a chain; and I'll do
What I can to get you a pair of horns.

Fal. Away, I say; time wears; hold up your head, and mine.
[Exit Mrs. Quickly.

Enter Ford.

How now, Master Brook! Master Brook, the matter will be known to-night, or never. Be you in the Park about midnight, at Herne's oak; and you shall see wonders.

Ford. Went you not to her yesterday, sir, as you told me you had appointed?

Fal. I went to her, Master Brook, as you see, like a poor old man: but I came from her, Master Brook, like a poor old woman. That same knave Ford, her husband, hath the finest math devil of jealousy in him; Master Brook, that ever governed frenzy.
I will tell you: he beat me grievously, in the shape of a woman; for in the shape of man, Master Brook, I fear not Goliath with a weaver's beard; because I know also life is a shuttle. I am in haste; go along with me: I'll tell you all, Master Brook. Since I plucked geese, played truant and whipped top, I knew not what 'twas to be beaten till lately. Follow me: I'll tell you strange things of this knave Ford, on whom to-night I will be revenged, and I will deliver his wife into your hand. Follow. Strange things in hand, Master Brook! Follow. [Exeunt.

SCENE II.—Windsor Park.
Enter Page, Shallow, and Slender.

Page. Come; come, we'll couch 't the castle-ditch till we see the light of our fairies. Remember, son
Slender, my daughter.

Slender. Ay, forsooth; I have spake with her and we have a nay-word how to know one another; I come to her in white, and cry 'mum'; she cries 'budget';
and by that we know one another.

Shall. That's good too; but what needs either your 'mum' or her 'budget'? the white will decipher her well enough. It hath struck ten o'clock.
Page. The night is dark; light and spirits will become it well. Heaven prosper our sport! No man means evil but the devil, and we shall know him by his horns. Let's away; follow me. [Exeunt.

SCENE III.—A street leading to the Park.
Enter Mistress Page, Mistress Ford, and Doctor Caius.

Mrs. Page. Master doctor, my daughter is in green:
when you see your time, take her by the hand, away with her to the denery, and dispatch it quickly. Go before into the Park: we two must go together.
Caius. I know vat I have to do. Adieu,
Mrs. Page. Fare you well, sir. [Exit Caius.] My husband will not rejoice so much at the abuse of Falstaff as he will chafe at the doctor's marrying my daughter: but 'tis no matter: better a little chick than a great deal of heart-break.
Mrs. Ford. Where is Nan now and her troop of fairies, and the Welsh devil Hugh?

Mrs. Page. They are all couched in a pit hard by Herne's oak, with obscured lights; which, at the instant of Falstaff's and our meeting, they will at once display to the night.

Mrs. Ford. That cannot choose but amaze him.

Mrs. Page. If he be not amazed, he will be mocked;
if he be amazed, he will every way be mocked.

Mrs. Ford. We'll betray him finely.

Mrs. Page. Against such jesters and their jokes;
Those that betray them do no treachery.

Mrs. Ford. The hour draws on. To the oak, to the oak! [Exeunt.

SCENE IV.—Windsor Park.
Enter Sir Hugh Evans disguised, with others as Fairies.

Evans. Trib, trib, fairies; come; and remember your parts: be bold, I pray you; follow me into the pit; and when I give the watch-ords, do as I bid you: come, come; trib, trib. [Exeunt.

SCENE V.—Another part of the Park.
Enter Falstaff disguised as Herne.

Fal. The Windsor bell hath struck twelve; the minute draws on. Now, the hot-blooded gods assist me! Remember, Jove, thou wast a bull for thy Europa; love set on thy horns. O powerful love! that, in some respects, makes a beast a man, in some other, a man a beast. You were also, Jupiter, a swan for the love of Leda. O omnipotent Love! how near the god drew to the complexion of a goose! A fault done first in the form of a beast. O Jove, a beastly fault! And then another fault in the semblance of a fowl; think on 't, Jove; a foul fault! When gods have hot backs, what shall poor men do? For me, I am here a Windsor stag: and the fattest, I think, in the wood. Send me a good mild-time, Jove, or who can blame me to piss my tallow? Who comes here? my doe?

Enter Mistress Ford and Mistress Page.

Mrs. Ford. Sir John! art thou there, my deer? my male deer?

Ful. My doe with the black sent! Let the sky rain potatoes; let it thunder to the tune of Green Sleeves, hail kissing-comfits and snow eringoes; let there come a tempest of provocation, I will shelter me here.

Mrs. Ford. Mistress Page is come with me, sweet-

Ful. Divide me like a bribe buck, each a haunch: I will keep my sides to myself, my shoulders for the fellow of this walk, and my horns I bequeath your husbands. Am I a woodman, ha? Speak I like that? that's why, now. Why, now, he has a child of conscience; he makes restitution. As I am a true spirit, welcome!

Mrs. Page. Alas, what noise?

Mrs. Ford. Heaven forgive our sins!

Ful. What should this be?

Mrs. Ford. [Away, away! [They run off.]

Ful. I think the devil will not have me damned, lest the oil that's in me should set fire on; he would never else cross me thus.

Enter Sir Hugh Evans, disguised as before; Pistol, as hob-goblin; Mistress Quickly, Anne Page, and others, as Fairies, with tapers.

Quick. Fairies, black, grey, green, and white,
You moonshine revelers, and shades of night,
You orphan heirs of fixed destiny,
Attend your office and your calling.
Crier Hobgoblin, make the fairy oys.

Pist. Elves, list your names; silence, you airy toys.
Cricket, to Windsor chimneys shall thou leap;
Where fires thou find'st unraked and heaths un-
There pinch the maidens as blue as bilberry: [swept.
Our regiment doth blow them, higher and higher.

Ful. They are fairies; he that speaks to them shall I'll wink and cough: no man their works must eye.

[Dies down upon his face.

Evans. Where's Bede? Go you, and where you find a maid

That, ere she sleep, has thrice her prayers said,
Raise up the organs of her fantasy;
Sleep she as sound as careless infancy:
But those as sleep and think not on their sins,
Pinch them, arms, legs, back, shoulders, sides and Quick. About, about! [shins.
Search Windsor Castle, elves, within and out.
Strew good luck, uphes, on every sacred room.
That it may stand till the perpetual doom,
In state as wholesome as in state 'tis fit,
Worthy the owner, and the owner it.
The several chairs of order look you scour
With juice of balm and every precious flower:
Each fair instalment, coat, and several crest,
With loyal blazon, evermore be blest!
And nightly, meadow-fairies, look you sing,
Like to the Garter's compass, in a ring:
The expression that it bears, green let it be,
More fertile-fresh than all the field to see;

And 'Honi soit qui mal y pense' write
In emerald tufts, flowers purple, blue, and white;
Like sapphire, pearl and rich embroidery,
Buckled below fair knighthood's bending knee:
Fairies use flowers for their charactery.

Away, away, Page, one o'clock,
Our dance of custom round about the oak
Of Herne the hunter, let us not forget.

Evans. Pray you, lock hand in hand; yourselves in order set;
And twenty glow-worms shall our lanterns be,
To guide our measure round about the tree.

But, stay; I smell a man of middle-earth.

Ful. Heavens defend me from that Welsh fairy,
Le stand to a piece of cheese! [birth.

Pist. Vile worm, thou wast o'erlook'd even in thy Quick. With trial-fire touch me his finger-end:
If he be chaste, the flame will back descend
And turn him to no pain; but if he start,
It is the flesh of a corrupted heart.

Pist. A trial, come.

Evans. Come, will this wood take fire?

Ful. Oh. Oh, Oh! [They burn him with their tapers.

Quick. Corrupt, corrupt, and tainted in desire!
About him, fairies; sing a scornful rhyme;
And, as you trip, still pinch him to your time.

SONG.

Fie on sinful fantasy!
Fie on lust and luxury!
Lust is but a bloody fire,
Kindled with unchaste desire;
Fed in heart, whose flames aspire
As thoughts do blow them, higher and higher.
Pinch him, fairies, mutually;
Pinch him for his villainy;
Pinch him, and burn him, and turn him about,
Till candles and starlight and moonshine be out.

During this song they pinch Falstaff. Doctor Culus comes one way, and steals away a boy in green; Slender another way, and takes off a boy in white; and Fenton comes, and steals away Mrs. Anne Page. A noise of hunting is heard within. All the Fairies run away. Falstaff pulls off his buck's head, and rises.

Enter Page, Ford, Mistress Page and Mistress Ford.

Page. Nay, do not fly; I think we have watch'd you now:
Will none but Herne the hunter serve your turn?
Mrs. Page. I pray you, come, hold up the jest no higher.

Now, good Sir John, how like you Windsor wives? See you these, husband? do not these fair yokes Become the forest better than the town?

Ford. Now, sir, who's a cuckold now? Master Brook, Falstaff's a knave, a cuckoldly knave; here are his horns, Master Brook; and, Master Brook, he hath enjoyed nothing of Ford's but his buck-basket, his cudgel, and twenty pounds of money, which must be paid to Master Brook; his horses are arrested for it, Master Brook.

Mrs. Ford. Sir John, we have had ill luck; we could never meet. I will never take you for my love again; but I will always count you my deer.

Ful. I do begin to perceive that I am made an ass.

Ford. Ay, and an ox too: both the proofs are extant.

Ful. And these are not fairies? I was three or four times in the thought they were not fairies: and yet the guiltiness of my mind, the sudden surprise of my powers, drove the grossness of the folly into a received belief, in despite of the teeth of all rhyme and reason, that they were fairies. See now how wit may be made a Jack-a-Lent, when 'tis upon ill employment!
Evans. Sir John Falstaff, serve Got, and leave your desires, and fairies will not piss you.
Ford. Well said, fairy Hugh.
Evans. And leave your jealousies too, I pray you. Ford. I will never mistrust my wife again, till they shall, able to woo her in good English?
Ful. Have I laid my brain in the sun and dried it, that it wants matter to prevent so gross o're reaching? as this? Am I ridden with a Welsh goat too? shall I have a coxcomb of frize? 'Tis time I were choked with a piece of toasted cheese.
Evans. Sense is not good to give putter; your belly is all putter.
Ful. 'Sease? and 'putter!' I have lived to stand at the taunt of one that makes fritters of English? This is enough to be the decay of lust and late-walking through the realm.
Mrs. Page. Why, Sir John, do you think, though we would have thrust virtue out of our hearts by the head and shoulders and have given ourselves without scruple to hell, that ever the devil could have made you our delight?
Page. Old, cold, withered and of intolerable entrails?
Ford. And one that is as slanderous as Satan?
Page. And as poor as Job?
Evans. And as wicked as his wife?
Ful. Well, I am your theme: you have the start of Evans. I am dejected; I am not able to answer the Welsh fritter; ignorance itself is a plummet o'er me: use me as you will.
Ford. Marry, sir, we'll bring you to Windsor, to one Master Brook, that you have cozened of money, to whom you should have been a pander: over and above that you have suffered, I think to repay that money will be a biting affliction.
Page. Yet be cheerful, knight: thou shalt eat a posset to-night at my house; where I will desire thee to laugh at my wife, that now laughs at thee: tell her Master Slender hath married her daughter.
Mrs. Page. [Aside] Doctors doubt that: if Anne Page be my daughter, she is, by this, Doctor Caius' wife.

Enter Slender.
Slen. Whoa, ho! ho, father Page!
Page. Son, how now! how now, son! have you dispatched?
Slen. Dispatched! I'll make the best in Gloucestershire know on 't; would I were hanged, la, else!
Page. Of what, son?
Slen. I came yonder at Eton to marry Mistress Anne Page, and she's a great hobbled boy. If it had not been 't the church, I would have swunged him, or he should have swunged me. If I did not think it had been Anne Page, would I might never stir: and 't is a postmaster's boy.
Page. Upon my life, then, you took the wrong.
Slen. What need you tell me that? I think so, when I took a boy for a girl. If I had been married to him, for all he was in woman's apparel, I would not have had him.
Page. Why, this is your own folly. Did not I tell you how you should know my daughter by her garments?
Slen. I went to her in white, and cried 'mum,' and she cried 'budget,' as Anne and I had appointed; and yet it was not Anne, but a postmaster's boy.
Mrs. Page. Good George, be not angry: I knew of your purpose; turned my daughter into green; and, indeed, she is now with the doctor at the deanery, and there married.

Enter Caius.
Caius. Vere is Mistress Page? By gar, I am cozened: I ha' married un garçon, a boy; un paysan, by gar, a boy; it is not Anne Page: by gar, I am cozened.
Mrs. Page. Why, did you take her in green?
Caius. Ay, by gar, and 'tis a boy: by gar, I'll raise all Windsor.
Ford. This is strange. Who hath got the right Anne?
Page. My heart misgives me: here comes Master Fenton.

Enter Fenton and Anne Page.

Page. How now, Master Fenton!
Fenton. Pardon! Anne. Pardon, good father! good my mother, Page. Now, mistress, how chance you went not with Master Slender?
Mrs. Page. Why went you not with master doctor, maid?
Fenton. You do amaze her: hear the truth of it. You would have married her most shamefully, Where there was no proportion held in love. The truth is, she and I, long since contracted, Are now so sure that nothing can dissolve us. The offence is holy that she hath committed; And this deceit loses the name of craft, Of disobedience, or undutiful title, Since therein she doth evitate and shun A thousand irreligious cursed hours, [her.]
Which forced marriage would have brought upon Ford. Stand not amazed; here is no remedy: In love the heavens themselves do guide the state; Money buys lands, and wives are sold by fate.
Ful. I am glad, though you have ta'en a special stand to strike at me, that your arrow hath glanced. Page. Well, what remedy? Fenton, heaven give thee joy!
What cannot be eschew'd must be embraced.
Page. When night-dogs run, all sorts of deer are chased. [Fenton.]
Mrs. Page. Well, I will muse no further. Master Heaven give you many, many merry days! Good husband, let us every one go home, And laugh this sport o'er by a country fire. Sir John and all.
Ford. Let it be so. Sir John, To Master Brook you yet shall hold your word; For he to-night shall lie with Mistress Ford.
MEASURE FOR MEASURE.

DRAMATIS PERSONAE.

Vincentio, the Duke.
Angelo, Deputy.
Escalus, an ancient Lord.
Claudio, a young gentleman.
Lucio, a fantastic.
Two other gentlemen.
Provost.
Thomas, Peter, two friars.
A Justice.
Varrius.
Elbow, a simple constable.

Froth, a foolish gentleman.
Pompey, servant to Mistress Overdone.
Abhorson, an executioner.
Barnardine, a dissolve prisoner.
Isabella, sister to Claudio.
Mariana, betrothed to Angelo.
Juliet, beloved of Claudio.
Francisca, a nun.
Mistress Overdone, a bawd.
Lords, Officers, Citizens, Boy, and Attendants.

SCENE—Vienna.

ACT I.

SCENE I.—An apartment in the Duke’s palace.

Enter Duke,Escalus, Lords and Attendants.

Escal. My lord.

Duke. Of government the properties to unfold,
Would seem in me to affect speech and discourse;
Since I am put to know that your own science
Exceeds, in that, the lists of all advice
My strength can give you: then no more remains,
But that to your sufficiency . . . . . . . . . . . . . .
And let them work. The nature of our people,
Our city’s institutions, and the terms
For common justice, you’re as pregnant in
As art and practice hath enriched any
That we remember. There is our commission,
From which we would not have you warp. Call
I say, bid come before us Angelo. [Exit an attendant.

What figure of us think you he will bear?
For you must know, we have with special soul
Elected him our absence to supply,
Lent him our terror, dress’d him with our love,
And given his deputation all the organs
Of our own power: what think you of it?
Escal. If any in Vienna be of worth
To undergo such ample grace and honour,
It is Lord Angelo.

Duke. Look where he comes.

Enter Angelo.

Ang. Always obedient to your grace’s will,
I come to know your pleasure.

Duke. Angelo,
There is a kind of character in thy life,
That to the observer doth thy history
Fully unfold. Thyself and thy belonging
Are not thine own so proper as to waste
Thyself upon thy virtues, they on thee.
Heaven doth with us as we with torches do,
Not light them for themselves; for it our virtues
Did not go forth of us, ’twere all alike
As if we had them not. Spirits are not finely touch’d
But to fine issues, nor nature never lends

The smallest sample of her excellence
But, like a thrifty goddess, she determines
Herself the glory of a creditor,
Both thanks and use. But I do bend my speech
To one that can my part in him advertise;
Hold therefore, Angelo:—
In our remove be thou at full ourself;
Mortality and mercy in Vienna
Live in thy tongue and heart: old Escalins,
Though first in question, is thy secondary.
Take thy commission.

Ang. Now, good my lord,
Let these be some more test made of my metal,
Before so noble and so great a figure
Be stamp’d upon it.

Duke. No more evasion:
We have with a leaven’d and prepared choice
Proceeded to you; therefore take your honours.
Our haste from hence is of so quick condition
That it prefers itself and leaves unquestion’d
Matters of needful value. We shall write to you,
As time and our concernings shall importune,
How it goes with us, and do look to know
What doth befall you here. So, fare you well:
To the hopeful execution do I leave you
Of your commissions.

Ang. Yet give leave, my lord,
That we may bring you something on the way.

Duke. My haste may not admit it;
Nor need you, on mine honour, have to do
With any scruple: your scope is as mine own,
So to enforce or qualify the laws
As to your soul seems good. Give me your hand:
I’ll privily away. I love the people,
But do not like to stage me to their eyes:
Though it do well, I do not relish well
Their loud applause and Aves vehement;
Nor do I think the man of safe discretion
That does affect it. Once more, fare you well.

Ang. The heavens give safety to your purposes!
Escal. Lead forth and bring you back in happiness!
Duke. I thank you. Fare you well. [Exit.

Escal. I shall desire you, sir, to give me leave
To have free speech with you: and it concerns me
To look into the bottom of my place;
ACT I.

MEASURE FOR MEASURE.

SCENE I.

A power I have, but of what strength and nature
I am not yet instructed.

Ang. 'Tis so with me. Let us withdraw together,
And we will soon of satisfaction have Touching that point.

Escal. I'll wait upon your honour. [Exeunt.

SCENE II.—A street.

Enter Lucio and two Gentlemen.

Lucio. If the duke with the other dukes come not to composition with the King of Hungary, why then all the dukes fall upon the king.

First Gent. Heaven grant us its peace, but not the King of Hungary's.

Sec. Gent. Amen.

Lucio. Thou concludest like the sanctimonious pirate, that went to sea with the Ten Commandments, but scraped one out of the table.

Sec. Gent. 'Tis not too steal?'

Lucio. Ay, that he raked.

First Gent. Why, 'tis a commandment to command the captain and all the rest from their functions: they put forth to steal. There's not a soldier of us all; that, in the thanksgiving before meat, do refish the petition well that prays for peace.

Sec. Gent. Amen.

Lucio. I believe thee; for I think thou never wast where grace was said.

Sec. Gent. No? a dozen times at least.

First Gent. What, in metre?

Lucio. In any proportion or in any language.

First Gent. I think, or in any religion.

Lucio. Ay, why not? Grace is grace, despite of all controversy: as, for example, thou thyself art a wicked villain, despite of all grace.

First Gent. Well, there went but a pair of shears between us.

Lucio. I grant; as there may between the lists and the velvet. Thou art the list.

First Gent. And thou the velvet: thou art good velvet; thou 'rt a three-piled piece, I warrant thee;
I had as lief be a list of an English kersey as be piled, thou as thou art piled, for a French velvet. Do I speak feelingly now?

Lucio. I think thou dost; and, indeed, with most painful feeling of thy speech: I will, out of thine own confession, learn to begin thy health; but, whilst I live, forget to drink after thee. [I not?

First Gent. I think I have done myself wrong, have not I? Yes, that thou hast, whether thou art tainted or free.

Lucio. Behold, behold, where Madam Mitigation comes! I have purchased as many diseases under her roof as come to—

Sec. Gent. To what, I pray?

Lucio. Judge.

Sec. Gent. To three thousand colours a year.

First Gent. Ay, and more.

Lucio. A French crown more.

First Gent. Thou art always figuring diseases in me; but thou art full of error; I am sound.

Lucio. Nay, not as one would say, healthy; but so sound as things that are hollow: thy bones are hollow; impieties have made a feast of thee.

Enter Mistress Overdone.

First Gent. How now! which of thy hips has the most profound scission?

Mrs. Or. Well, well; there's one yonder arrested and carried to prison was worth five thousand of you

Sec. Gent. Who's that, I pray thee? [all

Mrs. Or. Marry, sir, that's Claudia, Signior Clau-
First Gent. Claudia? Claudia in prison? 't is not so. [dio.

Mrs. Or. Nay, but I know 'tis so: I saw him arrested, saw him carried away; and, which is more, within these three days his head to be chopped off.

Lucio. But, after all this fouling, I would have it say. Art thou sure of this?

Mrs. Or. I am too sure of it: and it is for Madam Julietta with child.

Lucio. Believe me, this may be: he promised to meet me two hours since, and he was ever precise in promise-keeping.

Sec. Gent. Besides, you know, it draws something near to the speech we had to such a purpose.

First Gent. But, most of all, agreeing with the proclamation.

Lucio. Away! let's go learn the truth of it.

[Exeunt Lucio and Gentlemen.

Mrs. Or. Thus, what with the war, what with the sweat, what with the gallows and what with poverty, I am custom-shrunk.

Enter Pompey.

How now! what's the news with you?

Pom. Yonder man is carried to prison.

Mrs. Or. Well; what has he done?

Pom. A woman.

Mrs. Or. But what's his offence?

Pom. Groping for trouts in a peculiar river.

Mrs. Or. What, is there a maid with child by him?

Pom. No, but there's a woman with maid by him.

You have not heard any of the proclamation, have you?

Mrs. Or. What proclamation, man?

Pom. All houses in the suburbs of Vienna must be plucked down.

[Exeunt.

Mrs. Or. Amen. And what shall become of those in the

Pom. They shall stand for seed: they had gone down too, but that a wise burgher put in for them.

Mrs. Or. But shall all our houses of resort in the suburbs be pulled down?

Pom. To the ground, mistress.

Mrs. Or. Why, here's a change indeed in the commonwealth! What shall become of me?

Pom. Come: fear not you: good counsellors lack no clients: though you change your place, you need not change your trade; I'll be your tapster still.

Claud. Courage! there will be pity taken on you: you that have worn your eyes almost out in the service, you will be considered.

Mrs. Or. Why, what's to do here, Thomas tapster?

let's withdraw.

Pom. Here comes Signior Claudio, led by the provost to prison; and there's Madam Juliet.

[Exeunt.

Enter Provost, Claudio, Juliet, and Officers.

Claud. Fellow, why dost thou show me thus to the world?

Bear me to prison, where I am committed.

Prov. I do it not in evil disposition,
But from Lord Angelo by special charge.

Claud. Thus can the demigod Authority
Make us pay down for our offence by weight
The words of heaven; on whom it will, it will;
On whom it will not, so; yet still 'tis just.

Re-enter Lucio and two Gentlemen.

Lucio. Why, how now, Claudio! whence comes this restraint?

Claud. From too much liberty, my Lucio, liberty:
As surfeit is the father of much fast,
So every scope by the immoderate use
Turns to restraint. Our natures do pursue,
Like rats that have run down their proper house,
A thirsty evil; and when we drink we die.

Lucio. If I could speak so wisely under an arrest,
I would send for certain of my creditors; and yet,
to say the truth, I had as lief have the oppery of freedom as the morality of imprisonment.
What's thy offence, Claudio?

Claud. What but to speak of would offend again.

Lucio. What, is 't murder?
ACT I.  MEASURE FOR MEASURE.  SCENE IV.

Claud.  No.
Lucio.  Lechery?  Claud.  Call it so.
Lucio.  And all that you must go.  [with you.
Claud.  One word, good friend.  Lucio, a word.
Lucio.  A hundred, if they 'll do you any good.
Is lechery so look'd after?  [tract
Claud.  Thus stands it with me: upon a true con-
I got possession of Julietta's bed:
You know; she is fast my wife,
Save that we do the denunciation lack
Of outward order: this we came not to,
Only for propagation of a dower
Reinaming in the coffers of her friends,
From whom we thought it meet to hide our love
Till time had made them for us.  But it chances
The stealth of our most mutual entertainment
With character too gross is writ on Juliet.
Lucio.  With child, perhaps?
Claud.  Unhappily, even so.
And the new deputy now for the duke—
Whether it be the fault and disgrace of newness,
Or whether that the body public be
A horse wherein the governor doth ride,
Who, newly in the seat, that it may know
He can command, lets it straight feel the spur;
Whether the tyrannical in his place, or
In his confidence that ill did it up,
I stagger in:—but this new governor
Awakes me all the enrolled penalties  [wall
Which have, like unscour'd armor, hung by the
So long that nineteen zodiacs have gone round
And none of them been worn; and for a name,
Now puts the drowsey and neglected act
Freshly on me: 't is surely for a name.
Lucio.  I warrant it; and thy head stands so Ticky on thy shoulders that a milkmaid, if she be
In love, may sigh it off.  Send after the duke and Appel to him.
Claud.  I have done so, but he's not to be found.
I prithee, Lucio, do me this kind service:
This day my sister should the cloister enter
And there receive her approbation;
Acquit her with the danger of my state;
Implore her, in my voice, that she make friends
To the strict deputy; bid herself assay him;
I have great hope in that; for in her youth
There is a prone and speechless dialect,
Such as move men; beside, she hath prosperous art
When she will play with reason and discourse,
And in a manner can persuade Lucio.  I pray she may; as well for the encouragement of the like, which else would stand under grievous imposition, as for the enjoying of thy life, who I would be sorry should be thus foolishly lost
at a game of tick-tack.  'T ill to her.
Claud.  I thank you, good friend Lucio.
Lucio.  Within two hours.
Claud.  Come, officer, away!  [Exeunt.

SCENE III.  A monastery.

Enter Duke and Friar Thomas.

Duke.  No, holy father; throw away that thought;
Believe not that the dribbling dart of love
Can pierce a complete bosom.  Why I desire thee
To give me secret harbour, hath a purpose
More grave and wrinkled than the aims and ends
Of burning youth.
Fri. T.  May your grace speak of it:
Duke.  My holy sir, none better knows than you
How I have ever loved the life removed
And held in idle price to haunt assemblies
Whereby I lost all and was less bra very keeps.
I have deliver'd to Lord Angelo
A man of stricture and firm abstinence,
My absolute power and place here in Vienna,
And he supposes me travel'd to Poland;
For so I have throw'd it in the common ear,
And so it is received.  Now, pious sir,
You will think of my duty: why I do this?
Fri. T.  Gladly, my lord.

Duke.  We have strict statutes and most biting
The needful bits and curbs to headstrong weeds,
Which for this nineteen years we have let slip;
Even like an o'ergrown lion in a cave.
There goes out to look for fond fathers,
Having bound up the threatening twigs of birch,
Only to stick it in their children's sight
For terror, not to use, in time the rod
Becomes more mock'd than fear'd; so our decrees,
Dead to infatuation, to themselves are dead;
And liberty plucks justice by the nose.
The baby beats the nurse, and quite avarth
Goes all decorum.

Fri. T.  It rested in your grace
To unloose this tied-up justice when you pleased:
And it in you more dreadful would have seem'd
Than in Lord Angelo.

Duke.  I do fear, too dreadful:
Sith 't was my fault to give the people scope,
'Twould be my tyranny to strike and gall them
For what I bid them do: for we bid this be done,
When evil deeds have the advantage by the passive pass
And not the punishment.  Therefore indeed, my
I have on Angelo imposed the office;  [father,
Who may, in the ambush of my name, strike home,
And yet my nature never in the fight
To do in slander.  And to behold his sway,
I will, as 't were a brother of your order,
Visit both prince and people: therefore, I prithee,
Supply me with the habit and instruct me
How I may formally in person bear me
Like a true friar.  More reasons for this action
At our more leisure shall I render you;

Fri. T.  Only, this one: Lord Angelo is precise Stands at a guard with envy; scarce confesses
That his blood flows, or that his appetite
Is more to bread than stone; hence shall we see,
If power change purpose, what our seekers be.

[Exeunt.

Enter Isabella and Francisca.

Isab.  And have you nuns no farther privileges?
Fran.  Are not these large enough?

Isab.  Yes, truly: I speak not as desiring more;
But rather wishing a more strict restraint
Upon the sisterhood, the votarists of Saint Clare.
Lucio.  [Within]  Ho!  Peace be in this place!

Isab.  Who's that which calls?
Fran.  It is a man's voice.  Gentle Isabella,
Turn you the key, and know his business of him;
You may, I may not; you are yet unsworn.
When you have vow'd, you must not speak with men
But in the presence of the prioress;
Then, if you speak, you must not show your face,
Or, if you show your face, you must not speak.
He calls again; I pray you, answer him.  [Exit.

Isab.  Peace and prosperity!  Who is 't that calls?

Enter Lucio.

Lucio.  Hail, virgin, if you be, as those cheek-roses
Proclaim you are no less!  Can you so steadfast
As bring me to the sight of Isabella;
A novice of this place and no sister
To her unhappy brother Claudio?

Isab.  Why 's her unhappy brother?  let me ask,
The rather for I now must make you know
I am that Isabella and his sister.

Lucio.  Gentle and fair, your brother kindly greets
Not to be check'd with you, he's in prison.

Isab.  Woe me!  for what?  [judge
Lucio.  For that which, if myself might be his
He should receive his punishment in thanks;
He hath got his friend with child.

Isab. Sir, make me not your story.

Lucio. It is true.

I would not—though 'tis my familiar sin
With maids to see the lapping and to jest,
Tongue far from heart—play with all virgins so:
I hold you as a thing ensky'd and sainted,
By your renouncement an immortal spirit,
And to be talk'd with in sincerity,
As with a saint.

Isab. You do blaspheme the good in mocking me.

Lucio. Do not believe it. Feveness, 'tis Your brother and his lover have embraced: [thus:
As those that feed grow full, as blossoming time
That from the seeds the bare fawlow brings
To teeming poison, even so her plentiful womb
Expresseth his full tithe and husbandry. [Juliet?
Isab. Some one with child by him? My cousin
Lucio. Is she your cousin? [names
Isab. Adoptedly; as school-maids change their
By vain though apt affection.

She it is.

Isab. O, let him marry her.

Lucio. This is the point.
The duke is very strangely gone hence;
Bore many gentlemen, myself being one,
In hand and hope of action: but we do learn
By those that know the very nerves of state,
His givings-out were of an infinite distance
From his true-meant design. Upon his place,
And with full line of his authority,
Governors Lord Angelo; a man whose blood
Is very snow-broth; one who never feels
The wanton stings and motions of the sense,
But doth rebate and blunt his natural edge
With profits of the mind, study and fast.
He—to give fear to use and liberty,
Which have for long run by the hideous law,
As mice by lions—hath pick'd out an act,
Under whose heavy sentence your brother's life
Falls into forfeit: he arrests him on it:
And follows close the rigour of the statute,
To make him an example. All hope is gone,
Unless you have the grace by your fair prayer
To soften Angelo: and that's my pitch of business
'Twixt you and your poor brother.

Isab. Doth he so seek his life?

Lucio. Has censured him
Already; and, as I hear, the provost hath
A warrant for his execution.

Isab. Alas! what poor ability's in me
To do him good?

Lucio. Assay the power you have.

Isab. My power? Alas, I doubt—

Lucio. Our doubts are traitors
And make us lose the good we oft might win
By fearing to attempt. Go to Lord Angelo,
And let him learn to know, when maidens sue,
Men give like gods; but when they weep and kneel,
All their petitions are as freely theirs
As they themselves would owe them.

Isab. I'll see what I can do.

Lucio. But speedily.

Isab. I will about it straight;
No longer staying but to give the mother
Notice of my affair. I humbly thank you:
Commend me to my brother; soon at night
I'll send him certain word of my success.

Lucio. I take my leave of you.

Isab. Good sir, adieu.

[Exit.]

ACT II.

SCENE I.—A hall in Angelo's house.

Enter Angelo, Escalus, and a Justice, Provost,
Officers, and other Attendants, behind.

Ang. We must not make a scarecrow of the law,
Setting it up to fear the birds of prey,
And let it keep one shape, till custom make it
Their perch and not their terror.

Escalus. Ay, but yet
Let us be keen, and rather cut a little,
Than fall, and bruise to death. Alas, this gentleman,
Whom I would save, had a most noble father!
Let but your honour know,
Whom I believe to be most strait in virtue,
That, in the working of your own affections,
Had time colored with place or place with wishing,
Or that the resolute acting of your blood
Could have attain'd the effect of your own purpose,
Whether you had not sometime in your life
Err'd in this point which now you censure,
And pull'd the law upon you.

Ang. 'Tis one thing to be tempted, Escalus,
Another thing to fall. I not deny,
The jury, passing on the prisoner's life,
May in the sworn twelve have a thief or two Guiltier than him they try.

What's open made to Justice,
That justice seizes: what know the laws
That thieves do pass on thieves? 'Tis very pregnant,
The jewel that we find, we stoop and take 't
Because we see it; but what we do not see
We tread upon, and never think of it.

You may not so extenuate his offence:
For it have had such faults: but rather tell me,
When I, that censure him, do so offend,
Let mine own judgment pattern out my death,
And nothing come in partial. Sir, he must die.

Escalus. Be it as your wisdom will.

Ang. Where is the provost?

Provost. Here, if it like your honour.

Ang. See that Claudio
Be executed by nine to-morrow morning:
Bring him his confessor, let him be prepared;
For 'tis the utmost of his pilgrimage.

[Exit Provost.

Escalus. [Aside] Well, heaven forgive him! and for

Some rise by sin, and some by virtue fall:
Some rise from brakes of ice, and answer none:
And some condemned for a fault alone.

Enter Elbow, and Officers with Froth and Pompey.

Elbow. Come, bring them away: if these be good people in a commonweal that do nothing but use their abuses in common houses, I know no law:
bring them away.

Ang. How now, sir! What's your name? and

What's the matter?

Elbow. If it please your honour, I am the poor duke's constable,
And my name is Elbow; I do lean upon justice, sir, and do bring in here before your good honour two notorious benefactors.

Ang. Benefactors? Well; what benefactors are they? are they not malefactors?

Elbow. If it please your honour, I know not well what they are: but precise villains they are, that I am sure of;
and void of all proflation in the world that good Christians ought to have.

Escalus. This comes off well: here's a wise officer.
ACT II.

MEASURE FOR MEASURE.

SCENE I.

Ang. Go to: what quality are they of? Elbow is your name? why dost thou not speak, Elbow?

Pom. He, sir; he's out at elbow.

Ang. What are you, sir?

Elb. He, sir, a tapster, sir; parcel-bawd; one that serves a bad woman; whose house, sir, was, as they say, plucked down in the suburbs: and now she professes a hot-house, which, I think, is a very ill house.

Ang. How dost thou know that? Elb. My wife, sir, whom I detest before and your honour,—

Escal. How? thy wife? [woman,—

Elb. Ay, sir; whom I thank heaven, is an honest man; and I, therefore, detest her.

Escal. I say, sir, I will detest myself also, as well as she, that this house, if it be not a bawd's house, it is pity of her life, for it is a naughty house.

Escal. How dost thou know that, constable?

Elb. Marry, sir, by my wife; who, if she had been a woman cardinaly given, might have been accused in fornication, adultery, and all uncleanness there.

Escal. By the woman's means?

Elb. Ay, sir, by Mistress Overdone's means: but, as she spied in his face, so she defied him.

Pom. Sir, if it please your honour, this is not so. Escal. Live it before these varlets here, thou honourable man; prove it.

Escal. Do you hear how he misplaces?

Pom. Sir, she came in great with child; and longing, saving your honour's reverence, for stewed prunes; sir, we had but two in the house, which at that time stood, as it were, in a fruit-dish, a dish of some three-pence; your honour has seen such dishes; they are not China dishes, but very good dishes.

Escal. Go to, go to: no matter for the dish, sir.

Pom. No, indeed, sir, not of a pin; you are therein in the right, but to the point. As I say, this Mistress Elbow, being, as I say, with child, and being great-bellied, and longing, as I said, for prunes; and having but two in the dish, as I said, Master Froth here, this very man, having eaten the rest, as I said, and, as I say, paying them very honestly; for, as you know, Master Froth, I could not give you three-pence again.

Froth. No, indeed.

Pom. Very well; you being then, if you be remembered, cracking the stones of the foresaid prunes,—

Froth. Ay, he, but I did reply, very well; I telling you then, if you be remembered, that such a one and such a one were past cure of the thing you wot of, unless they kept very good diet, as I told you,—

Froth. All this is true.

Pom. Why, very well, then,—

Escal. Come, you are a tedious fool: to the purpose. What was done to Elbow's wife, that he hath cause to complain of? Come me to what was done to her.

Pom. Sir, your honour cannot come to that yet.

Escal. No, sir, nor I mean it not.

Pom. Sir, but you shall come to it, by your honour's leave. And, I beseech you, look into Master Froth here, sir; a man of fourscore pound a year; whose father died at Hallowmas: was not at Hallowmas, Master Froth?

Froth. All-hallows eve.

Pom. Why very well; I hope here be truths. He, sir, sitting, as I say, in a lower chair, sir; 'twas in the Bunch of Grapes, where indeed you have a delight to sit, have you not?

Froth. I have so; because it is an open room and good for winter.

Pom. Why very well, then: I hope here be truths. Ang. This will last out a night in Russia, when nights are longest there: 'I'll take my leave, and leave you to the hearing of the cause; hoping you'll find good cause to whip them all.

Escal. I think no less. Good morrow to your lordship. [Exit Angelo.

Now, sir, come on: what was done to Elbow's wife, once more?

Pom. Once, sir? there was nothing done to her.

Elb. I beseech you, sir, ask him what this man did to my wife.

Pom. I beseech your honour, ask me.

Escal. Well, sir; what did this gentleman to her?

Pom. I beseech you, sir, look in this gentleman's face. Good Master Froth, look upon his honour; 'tis for a good purpose. Dost your honour mark his face? Escal. Ay, sir, very well. [face?

Pom. Nay, I beseech you, mark it well.

Escal. Well, I do so.

Pom. Dost thy honour see any harm in his face? Escal. Why, no.

Pom. I'll be supposed upon a book, his face is the worst thing about him. Good, then; if his face be the worst thing about him, how could Master Froth do the constable's wife any harm? I would know that of your honour.

Escal. He's in the right. Constable, what say you to it?

Elb. First, an it like you, the house is a respected house; next, this is a respected fellow; and his mistress is a respected woman.

Pom. By this hand, sir, his wife is a more respected person than any of us all.

Elb. Varlet, thou liest: thou liest, wicked varlet! the time is yet to come that she was ever respected with man, woman, or child.

Pom. Sir, she was respected with him before he married with her.

Escal. Which is the wiser here? Justice or Iniquity? Is this true?

Elb. O thou caitiff! O thou varlet! O thou wicked Froth! I respected with her before I was married to her! If ever I was respected with her, or she with me, let not your worship think me the poor duke's officer. Prove this, thou wicked Hannibal, or I'll have mine action of battery on thee.

Escal. If he took you a box o' the ear, you might have your action of slander too.

Elb. Marry, I thank your good worship for it. What is 't your worship's pleasure I shall do with this wicked caitiff?

Escal. Truly, officer, because he hath some offences in him that thou wouldest discover if thou coulst, let him continue in his courses till thou knowest what they are.

Elb. Marry, I thank your worship for it. Thou seest, thou wicked varlet, now, what 's come upon thee: thou art to continue now, thou varlet; thou art to continue.

Escal. Where were you born, friend?

Froth. Here in Vienna, sir.

Escal. Are you of fourscore pounds a year?

Froth. Yes, an 't please you, sir.

Escal. So. What trade are you of, sir?

Pom. A tapster; a poor widow's tapster.

Escal. Your mistress' name?

Pom. Mistress Overdone.

Escal. Hath she had any more than one husband?

Pom. Nine, sir: Overdone by the last.

Escal. Nine! Come hither to me, Master Froth. Master Froth, I would not have you acquainted with tapsters: they will draw you, Master Froth, and you will hang them. Get you gone, and let me hear no more of you.

Froth. I thank your worship. For mine own part, I never gone into any room in a taphouse, but I am drawn in.

Escal. Well, no more of it, Master Froth: fare-well. [Exit Froth.] Come you hither to me, Master tapster. What's your name, Master tapster?
ACT II.

MEASURE FOR MEASURE. SCENE II.

Pom. Pompey.
Escal. Troth, and your bum is the greatest thing about you; so that in the beastliest sense you are Pompey the great. Pompey, you are partly a bawd, Pompey, howsoever you colour it in being a taper, are you not? come, tell me true: it shall be the better for you.

Pom. Truly, sir, I am a poor fellow that would live.

Escal. How would you live, Pompey? by being a bawd? What do you think of the trade, Pompey? Is it a lawful trade?

Pom. If the law would allow it, sir.

Escal. But the law will not allow it, Pompey; nor it shall not be allowed in Vienna.

Pom. Does your worship mean to geld and splay all the yonth of the city?

Escal. No, Pompey.

Pom. Truly, sir, in my poor opinion, they will to't then. If your worship will take order for the drabs and the knaves, you need not fear the bawds.

Escal. There are pretty orders beginning, I can tell you: it is but heading and hanging.

Pom. If you head and hang all that offend that way but for ten year together, you'll be glad to give out a commission for more heads: if this law hold in Vienna ten year, I'll rent the fairest house in it after three-pence a day: if you live to see this come to pass, say Pompey told you so.

Escal. Thank you, good Pompey; and, in requital of your prophecy, hark you: I advise you, let me not find you before me again upon any complaint whatsoever; no, not for dwelling where you do: if I do, Pompey, I shall beat you to your tent, and prove a shrewd Caesar to you; in plain dealing, Pompey, I shall have you whipt: so, for this time, Pompey, fare you well.

Pom. I thank your worship for your good counsel: [Aside] but I shall follow it as the flesh and fortune shall better direct me.

Whip me? No, no, let carman whip his jade: The valiant heart is not whipt out of his trade.

[Exit. Escal. Come hither to me, Master Elbow: come hither, Master constable. How long have you been in this place of constable?

Elb. Seven year and a half, sir.

Escal. I thought, by your readiness in the office, you had continued in it some time. You say, seven years together?

Elb. And a half, sir.

Escal. Alas, it hath been great pains to you. They do you wrong to put you so oft upon't; are there not men in your ward sufficient to serve it?

Elb. Faith, sir, few of any wit in such matters: as they are chosen, they are glad to choose me for them; I do it for some piece of money, and go through with all.

Escal. Look you bring me in the names of some six or seven, the most sufficient of your parish.

Elb. To your worship's house, sir?

Escal. To my house. Fare you well. [Exit Elbow.

What's o'clock, think you?

Just. Eleven, sir.

Escal. I pray you home to dinner with me.

Just. I humbly thank you.

Escal. It grieves me for the death of Claudio; but there's no remedy.

Just. Lord Angelo is severe.

Escal. It is but needful; Mercy is not itself, that oft looks so: Pardon is still the nurse of second woe: But yet—poor Claudio! There is no remedy. Come, sir. [Exeunt.

SCENE II.—Another room in the same.

Enter Provost and a Servant.

Serv. He's hearing of a cause; he will come I'll tell him of you. [straight:

Prov. Pray you, do. [Exit Servant.

I'll know His pleasure; may be he will relent. Alas, He hath but as offended in a dream! All sects, all ages smack of this vice; and he To die for 't! [Exit Angelo.

Ang. Now, what's the matter, provost? Prov. Is it your will Claudio shall die to-morrow? Ang. Did not I tell thee yet? hadst thou not order? Why dost thou ask again?

Prov. Lest I might be too rash: Under your good correction, I have seen, When, after execution, judgment hath Repented o'er his doom.

Ang. Go to; let that be mine: Do you your office, or give up your place, And you shall well be spared.

Prov. I crave your honour's pardon. What shall be done, sir, with the groaning Juliet? She's very near her hour.

Ang. Dispose of her To some more fitter place, and that with speed.

Re-enter Servant.

Serv. Here is the sister of the man condemn'd Desires access to you.

Ang. Hath he a sister?

Prov. Ay, my good lord; a very virtuous maid, And to be shortly of a sisterhood, If not already.

Ang. Well, let her be admitted. [Exit Servant. See you the fornicatress be removed:

Let her have needful, but not lavish, means; There shall be order for 't.

Enter Isabella and Lucio.

Prov. God save your honour!

Ang. Stay a little while. [To Isab.] You're welcome: what's your will?

Isab. I am a woeful suitor to your honour, Please but your honour hear me.

Ang. Well; what's your suit?

Isab. There is a vice that most I do abhor, And most desire should meet the blow of justice; For which I would not plead, but that I must; For which I must not plead, but that I am At war 'twixt will and will not.

Ang. Well; the matter?

Isab. I have a brother is condemn'd to die: I do beseech you, let it be his fault, And not my brother.

Prov. [Aside] Heaven give thee moving graces!

Ang. Condemn the fault, and not the actor of it? Why, every fault's condemn'd ere it be done: Mine were the very cipher of a function, To fine the faults whose fine stands in record, And let go by the actor.

Isab. O just but severe law! I had a brother, then. [Aside to Isab.] Give 't not o'er so: to him again, entreat him; Kneel down before him, hang upon his gown: You are too cold; if you should need a pin, You could not with more tame a tongue desire it: To him, I say.

Isab. Must he needs die?

Ang. Maiden, no remedy.

Isab. Yes; I do think that you might pardon him, And neither heaven nor man grieve at the mercy.

61
Ay, I will not do 't.

Isab. But can you, if you would?

Ay. Look, what I will not, that I cannot do.

Isab. But might you do 't, and do the world no wrong;

If so, your heart were touch'd with that remorse
As mine is to him?

Ay. He's sentenced; 't is too late.

Lucio. [Aside to Isab.] You are too cold.

Isab. Too late? why, no; I, that do speak a word, May call it back again. Well, believe this, No word shall any that to great ones 'longs.

Not the king's crown, nor the deputed sword,
The marshal's truncheon, nor the judge's robe,
Become them with one-half so good a grace
As mercy does.

If he had been as you and you as he,
You would have slipt like him; but he, like you,
Would not have been so stern.

Ay. Pray you, be gone.

Isab. I would to heaven I had your potency,
And you were Isabella! should it then be thus?
No; I would tell what 't were to be a judge,
And what a prisoner. [Aside to Isab.] [the vein.

Lucio. [Aside to Isab.] Ay, touch him; there's
Your brother a forfeit of the law,
And you but waste your words.

Isab. Alas, alas!

Why do all the souls that were for it once;
And He that might the vantage best have took Found out the remedy. How would you be,
If He, which is the top of judgment, should
But judge you as you are? O, think on that;
And mercy then will breathe within your lips,
Like man new made.

Ay. Be you content, fair maid;
It is the law, not I condemn your brother:
Were he my kinsman, brother, or my son,
It should be thus with him: he must die to-morrow.

He's not prepared for death. Even for our kitchens
We kill the fowl of season: shall we serve heaven
With less respect than we do minister
To our gross selves? Good, good my lord, bethink
Who is it that hath died for this offence?
There are many have committed it.

Lucio. [Aside to Isab.] Ay, well said.

Ay. The law hath not been dead, though it hath slept:
Those many had not dared to do that evil,
If the first that did the deed infringe
Had answer'd for his deed: now 'tis awake,
Takes note of what is done; and, like a prophet,
Look'd in a glass, that shows what future evils,
Either new, or by remissness new-conceived,
And so in progress to be hatch'd and born,
Are now to have no successive degrees,
But, ere they live, to end.

Isab. Yet show some pity.

Ay. I show it most of all when I show justice;
For then I pity those I do not know,
Which a dismiss'd offence would after gall;
And do him right that, answering one foul wrong,
Lives not to act another. Be satisfied;
Your brother dies to-morrow; be content.

Isab. So you must be the first that gives this sentence,
And he, that suffers. O, it is excellent
To have a giant's strength; but it is tyrannous
To show it like a man that is himself.

Lucio. [Aside to Isab.] That's well said.

Isab. Could great men thunder
As Jove himself does, Jove would ne'er be quiet,
For every pelting, petty officer
Would use his heaven for thunder;
Nothing but thunder! Merciful Heaven,

Thou rather with thy sharp and sulphurous bolt
Split'st the unwearyable and gnarled oak
Than the soft myrtle: but man, proud man,
Drest in a little brief authority,
Most ignorant of what he's most assured,
His glassy eye, like an angry ape,
Plays such fantastic tricks before high heaven
As make the angels weep; who, with our spleens,
Would all themselves laugh mortal.

Lucio. [Aside to Isab.] O, to him, to him, wench!
He's coming; I perceive 't. [he will relent;

Pros. [Aside] Pray heaven she win him.

Isab. We cannot weigh our brother with ourself;
Great men may jest with saints; 't is wit in them,
But in the less foul profanation.

Lucio. Thou 'rt? the right, girl; more o' that.

Isab. That in the captain's but a cholerick word,
Which in the soldier is flat blasphemy; [on 't.

Lucio. [Aside to Isab.] Art avis'd o' that? more
Why do you put these sayings upon me?

Isab. Because authority, though it err like others,
Hath yet a kind of medicine in itself,
That skins the vice o' the top. Go to your bosom;
And knock there what it doth know.
That's like my brother's fault: if it confess
A natural guiltiness as is his,
Let it not sound a thought upon your tongue
Against my brother's life.

[Aside] She speaks, and 'tis
Such sense, that my sense breeds with it. Fare you Isab. Gentle my lord, turn back. [well.

Ay. I will bethink me: come again to-morrow.

Isab. Hark how I'll bridle you: good my lord,

Ay. How! bridle me? [turn back.

Isab. Ay, with such gifts that heaven shall share
With you.

Lucio. [Aside to Isab.] You had marr'd all else.

Isab. Not with fond shekels of the tested gold,
Or stones whose rates are either rich or poor
As fancy values them; but with true prayers
That shall be up at heaven and enter there
Ere sun-rise, prayers from preserved souls,
From fasting maid's whose minds are dedicate
To nothing temporal.

Ay. Well; come to me to-morrow.

Lucio. [Aside to Isab.] Go to; 't is well; away!

Isab. Heaven keep your honour safe!

[Aside] Amen:

For I am that way going to temptation,
Where prayers cross.

Isab. At what hour to-morrow
Shall I attend your lordship?

Ay. At any time 'fore noon.

Isab. 'Save your honour!

[Exit Isabella, Lucio, and Provost.

Ay. From thee, even from thy virtue!

What's this, what's this? Is this her fault or
The tempter or the tempted, who sins most? [mine?

Ha! Not she; nor doth she tempt: but it is I
That, lying by the violet in the sun,
Do as the carrion does, not as the flower,
Corrupt with virtuous season. Can it be
That modesty may more betray our sense [enough,
Than women's lightness? Having waste ground,
Shall we desire to raze the sanctuary
And pitch our evils there? O, fie, fie, fie!
What dost thou, or what art thou, Angelo?
Dost thou desire her fowly for those things
That make her good? O, let her brother live;
Thieves have their robs, and traitors their authority [her.
When judges steal themselves. What, do I love
That I desire to hear her speak again,
And feast upon her eyes? What is 't I dream on?
O cunning enemy, that, to catch a saint,
With saints dost lait thy hook! Most dangerous
Is that temptation that doth goad us on 62

ACT II.  MEASURE FOR MEASURE.

SCENE III. — A room in a prison.

Enter, severally, Duke disguised as a friar, and Provost.

Duke. Hail to you, provost! so I think you are.
Prov. I am the provost. What's your will, good friar?
Duke. Bound by my charity and my best order, I come to visit the afflicted spirits
Here in the prison. Do me the common right
To let me see them and to make me know
The nature of their crimes, that I may minister
To them accordingly. [needful.
Prov. I would do more than that, if more were.

Enter Juliet.

Look, here comes one: a gentlewoman of mine,
Who, falling in the flaws of her own youth,
Hath blister'd her report: she is with child;
And he that got it, sentenced; a young man
More fit to do another such offence
Than die for this.
Duke. When must he die?
Prov. As do I think, to-morrow.
I have provided for you: stay awhile, [To Juliet.
And you shall be conducted.
Duke. Repent you, fair one, of the sin you carry?
Jul. I do; and bear the shame most patiently.
Duke. I'll teach you how you shall arraign your
And try your penitence, if it be sound, [conscience,
Or hollowly put on.
Jul. I'll gladly learn.
Duke. Love you the man that wrong'd you?
Jul. Yes, as I love the woman that wrong'd him.
Duke. So then it seems your most offensive act
Was mutually committed?
Jul. Mutually.
Duke. Then was your sin of heavier kind than his.
Jul. I do confess it, and repent it, father.
Duke. 'Tis meet so, daughter: but lest you do repent,
As that the sin hath brought you to this shame,
Which sorrow is always towards ourselves, not heaven,
Showing we would not spare heaven as we love it,
But we stand in fear.
Jul. I do repent me, as it is an evil,
And take the shame with joy.
Duke. There rest.
Your partner, as I hear, must die to-morrow,
And I am going with instruction to him.
Grace go with you, Benedictine! [Exit.
Jul. Must die to-morrow! O injurious love,
That resipits me a life, whose very comfort
Is still a dying horror!
Prov. 'Tis pity of him. [Exeunt.

SCENE IV. — A room in Angelo's house.

Enter Angelo.

Ang. When I would pray and think, I think and pray.
To several subjects. Heaven hath my empty words;
Whilst my invention, hearing not my tongue,
Anchors on Isabel: Heaven in my mouth,
As if I did but only chew his name;
And in my heart the strong and swelling evil
Of my conception. The state, wherein I studied,
Is like a good thing; being often read,
Grown fear'd and tedious; yes, my gravity.
Wherein — let no man hear me — I take pride,
Could I with boot change for an idle plum,
Which the air beats for vain. O place, O form,
How often dost thou with thy ease, thy habit,
Wrench awe from fools and tie the wiser souls
To thy false seeming! Blood, thou art blood:
Let's write good angel on the devil's horn;
'T is not the devil's crest.

Enter a Servant.

Serv. One Isabel, a sister, desires access to you.
Ang. Teach her the way. [Exit Serv.] O heavens!
Why does my blood thus mister to my heart,
Making both it unable for itself,
And dispossessing all my other parts
Of necessary fitness?
So play the foolish throns with one that swoons;
Come all to help him, and so stop the air
By which he should revive: and even so
The general, subject to a well-wish'd king,
Quit their own part, and in obsequious fondness
Crowd to his presence, where their untainted love
Must needs appear offence.

Enter Isabella.

How now, fair maid?
Isab. I am come to know your pleasure.
Ang. That you might know it, would much better please me. [live.

Than to demand what 'tis. Your brother cannot Isab. Even so. Heaven keep your honour!
Ang. Yet may he live awhile; and it may be,
As long as you or I: yet he must die.
Isab. Under your sentence?
Ang. Yeas.
Isab. When I beseech you? that in his rephrase,
Longer or shorter, he may be so fitted
That his soul sicken not.
Ang. Ha! lie, these filthy vices! It were as good
To pardon him that hath from nature stolen
A man already made, as to remit
Their saucy sweetness that do coin heaven's image
In stamps that are forbid: 'tis all as easy
Falsely to take away a life true made
As to put metal in restrained means
To make a false one.
Isab. 'T is set down in heaven, but not in earth.
Ang. Say you so? then I shall pose you quickly.
Which had you rather, that the most just law
Now took your brother's life; or, to redeem him,
Give up your body to such sweet uncleanness
As she be that hath stain'd?
Isab. Sir, believe this,
I had rather give my body than my soul.
Ang. I talk not of your soul: our compell'd sins
Stand more for number than for accomp't.
Isab. How say you?
Ang. Nay, I'll not warrant that; for I can speak Against the thing I say. Answer to this:
I, now the voice of the record'd law,
Prounce a sentence on your brother's life:
Might there not be a charity in sin
To save this brother's life?
Isab. Please you to do't,
I'll take it as a peril to my soul,
It is no sin at all, but charity.
Ang. Pleased you to do 't at peril of your soul,
Were equal poise of sin and charity.
Isab. That I do beg his life, if it be sin,
Heaven let me bear it! you granting of my suit,
If that be sin, I'll make it my term prayer
To have it added to the faults of mine,
And nothing of your answer.
Ang. Nay, but hear me.
Your sense pursues not mine: either you are igno-
Or seem so craftily; and that's not good.

63
Isab. Let me be ignorant, and in nothing good, But graciously to know I am no better.
* Ang. Thus wisdom wishes to appear most bright
When it doth tax itself; as these black masks
Proclaim an enshiled beauty ten times louder
Than the beauty could display'd. But mark me;
To be receiv'd plain, I'll speak more gross:
Your brother is to die.
Isab. So.
Ang. And his offence is so, as it appears,
According to the law upon that pain.
Isab. True.
Ang. Admit no other way to save his life,—
As I subscribe not that, nor any other,
But in the loss of question,—that you, his sister,
Finding yourself desired of such a person,
Whose credit with the judge, or own great place,
Could fetch your brother from the manacles
Of the all-building law; and that there were
No earthly mean to save him, but that either
You must lay down the treasures of your body
To this supposed, or else to let him suffer;
What would you do?
Isab. As much for my poor brother as myself:
That is, were I under the terms of death,
The impression of keen whips I'd wear as rubies,
And strip myself to death, as to a bed
That longling have been sick for, ere I'd yield
My body up to shame.
Ang. Then must your brother die.
Isab. And 't were the cheaper way:
Better it were a brother died at once,
Than that a sister, by redeeming him,
Should die for ever.
Ang. Were not you then as cruel as the sentence
That you have shudder'd so?
Isab. Ignomy in rason and free pardon
Are of two houses: lawful mercy
Is nothing kin to foul redemption.
Ang. You seem'd of late to make the law a tyrant;
And rather proved the sliding of your brother
Aerriment than a vice.
Isab. O, pardon me, my lord; it oft falls out,
To have what we would have, we speak not what we
I something do excuse the thing I hate,
[mean: For his advantage that I dearly love.
Ang. We are all frail.
Isab. Else let my brother die,
If not a feedary, but only he
Owe and succeed thy weakness.
Ang. Nay, women are frail too.
[seives;
Isab. Ay, as the glasses where they view them—
Which are as easy broke as they make forms.
Women! Help Heaven! men their creation mar
In profiting by them. 'Nay, call us ten times frail
For we are soft as our complxies are,
And credulous to false prints.
I think it well:
And from this testimony of your own sex,—
Since I suppose we are made to be no stronger
Than faults may shake our frames,—let me be bold;
I do arrest your words. Be that you are,
That is, a woman; if you be more, you're none;
If you be none, as you are well express'd
By all external warrants, show it now,
By putting on the destined livery.
Isab. I have no tongue but one: gentle my lord,
Let me entreat you speak the former language.
Ang. Plainly conceive, I love you.
Isab. My brother did love Julia.
And you tell me that he shall die for it.
Ang. He shall not, Isabell, if you give me love.
Isab. I know your virtue hath a license in't,
Which seems a little fouler than it is,
To pluck on others.
Ang. Believe me, on mine honour,
My words express my purpose.
Isab. Ha! little honour to be much believed,
And most preicious purpose! Seeming, seeming!
I will proclaim thee, Angelo; look for 't:
Sign me a present pardon for my brother,
[aloud
Or with an outstretch'd threat I'll tell the world
What man thou art.
Ang. Who will believe thee, Isabel?
My unsoll'd name, the austereness of my life,
My vouch against you, and my place i the state,
Will so your accusation overweigh,
That you shall stifte in you stifte report
And smell of calumny. I have begun,
And now I give my sensual race the rein:
Fit thy consent to my sharp appetite;
Lay by all nicety and proulious blushes,
That banish what they see for; redeem thy brother
By yielding up thy body to my will;
Or else he must not only die the death,
But thy unkindness shall his death draw out
To lingering sufferance. Answer me to-morrow,
Or, by the affection that now guides me most,
I'll prove a tyrant to him. As for you,
Say what you can, my false o'erweighs your true.
[Exit.
Isab. To whom should I complain? Did I tell this,
Who would believe me? O perilous mouths,
That bear in them one and the self-same tongue,
Either of condemnation or approbation.
Bidding the law make court'sy to their will:
Hooking both right and wrong to the appetite,
To follow as it draws! I'll to my brother:
Though he hath fall'n by prompture of the blood,
Yet lath he in him such a mind of honour,
That, had it twenty heads to turner down
On twenty bloody blocks, he'd yield them up,
Before his sister should her body stopp
To such abhorre'd pollution.
Then, Isabel, live chaste, and, brother, die:
More than our brother is our chastity.
I'll tell him yet of Angelo's request.
And fit his mind to death, for his soul's rest.
[Exit.

ACT III.

SCENE I.—A room in the prison.

Enter Duke, disguised as before, Claudio, and Provost.

Duke. So then you hope of pardon from Lord Angelo?
Clau. The miserable have no other medicine
But only hope:
I've hope to live, and am prepared to die.
Duke. Be absolute for death; either death or life Shall thereby be the sweeter. Reason thus with
If I do lose thee, I do lose a thing.

ACT III.

MEASURE FOR MEASURE.

SCENE I.

From flowery tenderness? If I must die,
I will encounter darkness as a bride,
And hug it in mine arms.

Isab. There spake my brother; there my father's Did utter forth a voice. Yes, thou must die:
Thou art too noble to conserve a life
In base appliances. This outward-sainted deputy,
Whose settled visage and deliberate word
Nips youth i' the head and follies doth ennaw
As falcon doth the fowl, is yet a devil;
His fifth within being cast, he would appear
A pond as deep as hell.

Claud. The prenzie Angelo!

Isab. O, 'tis the cunning livery of hell,
In prenzie guards! Dost thou think, Claudio?
If I would yield him my virginity,
Thou mightst be freed.

Claud. O heavens! it cannot be.
So to offend him still. This night's the time
That I should do what I abhor to name,
Or else thou diest to-morrow.

Claud. Thou shalt not do.

Isab. O, were it but my life,
I 'd throw it down for your deliverance
As frankly as a pin.

Claud. Thanks, dear Isabel.

Isab. Be ready, Claudio. For your death to-morrow.

Claud. Yes. Has he affections in him.

Isab. What thus can make him bite the law by the nose,
When he would force it? Sure, it is no sin;
Or of the deadly seven it is the least.

Claud. Which is the least?

Isab. If it were damnable, he being so wise,
Why would he be for the momentary trick
Be perdurably fined! O Isabel!

Isab. What says my brother?

Claud. Death is a fearful thing.

Isab. And shamed life a hateful.

Claud. Ay, but to die, and go we know not where;
To lie in cold obstruction and to rot;
This sensible warm motion to become
A kneaded clod; and the delighted spirit
To bathe in fiery floods, or to reside
In thrilling region of thick-ribbed ice;
To be imprisoned in the viewless winds,
And blown with restless violence round about
The pendent world; or to be worse than worst
Of those that lawless and uncertain thought
Imagine howling: 'tis too horrible!
The weariest and most loathed worldly life
That age, ache, penury and imprisonment
Can lay on nature is a paradise
To what we fear of death.

Isab. Alas, alas!

Isab. Sweet sister, let me live.

What sin you do to save a brother's life,
Nature dispenses with the deed so far
That it becomes a virtue.

Isab. O you beast!

O faithless coward! O dishonest wretch!
Wilt thou be made a man out of my vice?
Is't not a kind of incest, to take life
[think? From thine own sister's shame? What should I
Heaven shield my mother play'd my father fair!
For such a warped slip of wilderness
Ne'er issued from his blood. Take my defiance
Die, perish! Might but my bending down
Reprove thee from thy fate, it should proceed:
I'll pray a thousand prayers for thy death,
No word to save thee.

Claud. Nay, hear me, Isabel.

Isab. O, fie, fie, fie!

Thy sin's not accidental, but a trade.
Mercy to thee would prove itself a bawd:
ACT III.

MEASURE FOR MEASURE.

SCENE II.

'Tis best that thou diest quickly.

Claud. O hear me, Isabella!

Re-enter Duke.

Duke. Vouchsafe a word, young sister, but one

Isab. What is your will?

Duke. Might you dispense with your leisure, I would by and by have some speech with you: the satisfaction I would require is likewise your own benefit.

Isab. I have no superfluous leisure: my stay must be stolen out of other affairs; but I will attend you awhile.

[Walks apart.

Duke. Son, I have overheard what hath passed between you and your sister. Angelo had never the purpose to corrupt her; only he hath made an essay of her virtue to practice his judgment with the disposition of your complexion: she, having the truth of honour in her, hath made him that gracious denial which he is most glad to receive. I am confessor to Angelo, and I know this to be true; therefore prepare yourself to death: do not satisfy your resolution with hopes that are fallible: to-morrow you must go to your knees and be ready.

Claud. Let me ask my sister pardon. I am so out of love with life that I will sue to be rid of it.

Duke. Hold you there: farewell. [Exit Claudio.]

Provost. A word with you!

Re-enter Provost.

Prov. What's your will, father?

Duke. That now you are come, you will be gone.

Leave me awhile with the maid: my mind promises with my habit no less shall touch her by my company.

Prov. In good time.

[Exit Provost. Isabella comes forward.

Duke. The hand that hath made you fair hath made you good: the goodness that is cheap in beauty makes beauty brief in goodness; but grace, being the soul of your complexion, shall keep the body of it ever fair. The assault that Angelo hath made to you, fortune hath conveyed to my understanding; and, but that frailty hath examples for his falling, I should wonder at Angelo. How will you do to content this substitute, and to save your brother?

Isab. Am I now going to resolve him? I had rather my brother die by the law than my son should be unlawfully born. But, O, how much is the good duke deceived in Angelo! If ever he return and I can speak to him, I will open my lips in vain, or discover his government.

Duke. Be not so much amiss: yet, as the matter now stands, he will avoid your accusation; he made trial of you only. Therefore fasten your ear on my advisings: to the love I have in doing good a remedy presents itself. I do make myself believe that you may most uprightly do a poor wronged lady a merited benefit; reconcile your brother from the angry law; do no stain to your own gracious person; and much please the absent duke, if peradventure he shall ever return to have hearing of this business.

Isab. Let me hear you speak, father. I have spirit to do any thing that appears not foul in the truth of my spirit.

Duke. Virtue is bold, and goodness never fearful.

Have you not heard speak of Mariana, the sister of Frederick the great soldier who miscarried at sea?

Isab. I have heard of the lady, and good words went with her name.

Duke. She should this Angelo have married; was alliance to her by oath, and the nuptial appointed; between which time of the contract and limit of the nuptial, her brother Frederick was wrecked at sea, having in that perished vessel the dowry of his sister. But mark how heavily this befell to the poor gentlewoman: there she lost a noble and renowned brother, in his love toward her ever most kind and natural; with him, the portion and sinew of her fortune, her marriage-dowry; with both, her companion husband, this well-deserving Angelo.

Isab. Can this be so? did Angelo so leave her?

Duke. Left her in her tears, and dried not one of them with his comfort; swallowed his vows whole, pretending in her discoveries of dishonour: in few, bestowed her on her own lamentation, which she wore for his sake; and, he, a marble to her tears, is washed with them, but relents not.

Isab. What a merit were it in death to take this poor maid from the world! What corruption in this life, that it will let this man live! But how out of this can she avail?

Duke. It is a rupture that you may easily heal: and the cure of it not only saves your brother, but keeps you from dishonour in doing it.

Isab. Show me how, good father.

Duke. This renowned maid hath yet in her the continuance of her first affection: his unjust unkindness, that in all reason should have quenched her love, hath, like an impediment in the current, made it more violent and unruly. Go you to Angelo; answer his requiring with a plausible obedience; agree with his demands to the point; only refer yourself to this advantage first, that your stay with him may not be long; that the time may have all shadow and silence in it; and the place answer to convenience. This being granted in course,—and now follows all,—we shall advise this wronged maid to stand up your appointment, go in your place, if you can encounter this advantage itself, after, it may compel him to her recompense: and here, by this, is your brother saved, your honour untainted, the poor Mariana advantaged, and the corrupt deputy scaled. The maid will I frame and make fit for his attempt. If you think well to carry this as you may, the doubleness of the benefit defends the deceit from reproof. What think you of it?

Isab. The image of it gives me content already; and I trust it will grow to a most prosperous perfection.

Duke. It lies much in your holding up. Hast you speedily to Angelo: if for this night he entreat you to his bed, give him promise of satisfaction. I will presently to Saint Luke's: there, at the moated grange, resides this dejected Mariana. At that place call upon me; and dispatch with Angelo, that it may be quickly done.

Isab. I thank you for this comfort. Fare you well, good father.

[Exeunt severally.

SCENE II.—The street before the prison.

Enter, on one side, Duke disguised as before; on the other, Elbow, and Officers with Pompey.

Elb. Nay, if there be no remedy for it, but that you will needs buy and sell men and women like beasts, we shall have all the world drink brown and white bastard.

Duke. O heavens! what stuff is here?

Pom. 'Twas never merry world since, of two usuries, the merriest was put down, and the worser allowed by order of law a furred gown to keep him warm; and furred with fox and lamb-skins too, to signify, that craft, being richer than innocence, stands for the facing.

Elb. Come your way, sir. 'Bless you, good father friar.

Duke. And you, good brother father. What offence hath this man made you sir?

Elb. A merry, sir; he hath offended the law: and, sir, we take him to be a thief too: sir; for we have
ACT III. MEASURE FOR MEASURE. SCENE II.

Duke. I know not where; but wheresoever, I wish him well.

Lucio. It was a mad fantastical trick of him to steal from the state, and usurp the beggary he was never born to. Lord Angelo, it well in his absence; he put his transgression to t.

Duke. He does well in't.

Lucio. A little more lenity to lechery would do no harm in him; something too craved that way, friar.

Duke. It is too general a vice, and severity must curb it.

Lucio. Yes, in good sooth, the vice is of a great kindred; it is well allied: but it is impossible to extirp it quite, friar, till eating and drinking be put down. They say this Angelo was not made by man and woman after this downright way of creation; is it true, think you?

Duke. How should he be made, then?

Lucio. Some report a sea-maid spawned him; some, that he was begot between two stock-fishes. But it is certain that when he makes water his urine is congealed ice; that I know to be true: and he is a motion generative; that's infallible.

Duke. You are pleasant, sir; and speak amiss.

Lucio. Why, what a ruthless thing is this in him, for the rebellion of a codpiece to take away the life of a man! Would the duke that is absent have done this? Ere he would have hanged a man for the getting a hundred bastards, he would have put for the making this thousand: he had some feeling of the sport; he knew the service, and that instructed him to mercy.

Duke. I never heard the absent duke much detected for women: he was not inclined that way.

Lucio. O, sir, you are deceived.

Duke. 'Tis not possible.

Lucio. Who, not the duke? yes, your beggar of fifty; and his use was to put a ducat in her crack-dish: the duke had crotchetts in him. He would be drunk too; that let me inform you.

Lucio. Sir, I was an inward of his. A shy fellow was the duke: and I believe I know the cause of his withdrawing.

Duke. What, I prithee, might be the cause?

Lucio. No, sir; 'tis a secret must be locked within the teeth and the lips: but this I can let you understand, the greater life of the subject held the duke to be wise.

Duke. Wise! why, no question but he was.

Lucio. A very superficial, ignorant, unweighing fellow.

Duke. Either this is envy in you, folly, or misunderstanding: the very stream of his life and the business he hath helmed must upon a warranted need give him a better proclamation. Let him be but testified in his own brings-forth, and he shall appear to the envious a scholar, a statesman and a soldier. Therefore you speak unskillfully; or if your knowledge be more it is much darkened in your malice.

Lucio. Sir, I know him, and I love him.

Duke. Love talks with better knowledge, and knowledge with dearer love.

Lucio. Come, sir, I know what I know.

Duke. I can hardly believe that, since you know not what you speak. But, if ever the duke return, as our prayers are he may, let me desire you to make your answer before him. If it be honest you have spoke, you have courage to maintain it: I am bound to call upon you; and, I pray you, your name?

Lucio. Sir, my name is Lucio; well known to the duke.

Duke. He shall know you better, sir, if I may live to report you.

Lucio. I fear you not.

Duke. O, you hope the duke will return no more; or you imagine me too unhurtful an opposite. But indeed I can do you little harm; you’ll forswear this again.

Lucio. I’ll be hanged first: thou art deceived in my friar. But no more of this. Canst thou tell if Claudio die to-morrow or no?

Duke. Why should he die, sir?

Lucio. Why? For filling a bottle with a tun-dish. I would the duke we talk of were returned again; this ungenitured agent will unpeopele the province with continency; sparrows must not build in his lord-caves, because they are lecherous. The duke yet would have dark deeds darkly answered;
he would never bring them to light: would he were returned! Marry, this Claudio is condemned for untrussing. Farewell, good friar: I prithee, pray for me. The duke, I say to thee again, would eat mutton on Fridays. He’s not past it yet, and I say to thee, he would mouth with a beggar, though she smelt brown bread and garlic: say that I said
so. Farewell.

[Exit.]

Duke. No might nor greatness in mortality
Can encompass; back—wounding calumny
The whitest virtue strikes. What king so strong
Can tie the gall up in the slanderous tongue?

[Enter Escalus, Provost, and Officers with Mistress Overdone.]

Escal. Go; away with her to prison!

Mrs. Ov. Good my lord, be good to me; your honour is accounted a merciful man; good my lord.

Escal. Double and treble admonition, and still forfeit in the same kind! This would make mercy swear and play the tyrant.

Proc. A bawl of eleven years’ continuance, may it please your honour.

Mrs. Ov. My lord, this is one Lucio’s information against me. Mistress Kate Keelop was with child by him in the duke’s time; he promised her marriage: his child is a year and a quarter old, come Philip and Jacob; I have kept it myself; and see how he goes about to abuse me!

Escal. That fellow is a fellow of much license:
let him be called before us. Away with her to prison! Go; no more words. [Exit Officers with Mistress Ov.]

Provost. My brother Angelo will not be altered; Claudio must die to-morrow:
let him be furnished with divines, and have all charitable preparation. If my brother wrought by my pity, it should not be so with him.

Proc. Please you, this friar hath been with him, and advised him for the entertainment of direct. Escal. Good even, good father.

Duke. Bliss and goodness on you!

Escal. Of whence are you?

Duke. Not of this country, though my chance is
To use it for my time: I am a brother
Of gracious order, late come from the See
In special business from his holiness.

Escal. What news abroad in the world?

Duke. None, but that there is so great a fever on goodness, that the dissolution of it must cure it:
novelty is only in request; and it is as dangerous to be aged in any kind of course, as it is virtuous to be constant in any undertaking. There is scarce truth enough alive to make societies secure: but security enough to make fellowships accurst: much upon this riddle runs the wisdom of the world.
This news is old enough, yet it is every day’s news.
I pray you, sir, of what disposition was the duke?

Escal. One that, above all other strifes, contended especially to know himself.

Duke. What pleasure was he given to?

Escal. Rather rejoicing to see another merry, than merry at any thing which professed to make him rejoice: a gentleman of all temperance. But leave we him to his events, with a prayer they may prove prosperous; and let me desire to know how you find Claudio prepared. I am made to understand that you have lent him visitation.

Duke. He professes to have received no sinister measure from his judge, but most willingly humbles himself to the determination of justice; yet had he framed to himself, by the instruction of his frailty, many deceiving promises of life; which I by my good leisure have discredited to him, and now is he resolved to die.

Escal. You have paid the heavens your function, and the prisoner the very debt of your calling. I have laboured for the poor gentleman to the extremely shore of my modesty: but my brother justice have I found so severe, that he hath forced me to tell him he is indeed Justice.

Duke. If his own life answer the strictness of his proceeding, it shall become him well; wherein if he chance to fail, he hath sentenced himself. [well.

Escal. I am going to visit the prisoner. Fare you
Duke. Peace be with you!

[Exeunt Escalus and Provost.]

He who the sword of heaven will bear
Should be as holy as severe;
Pattern in himself to know,
Grace to stand, and virtue go;
More nor less to others paying
Than by self—offences weighing.
Shame to no whose cruel striking
Kills for faults of his own liking!
Twice treble shame on Angelo,
To weed my vice and let his grow!
O, what may man within him hide,
Though angel on the outward side!
How may likeness mix in crimes,
Making practice on the times?
To draw with idle spiders’ strings
Most ponderous and substantial things!
Craft against vice I must apply:
With Angelo to—night shall lie
His old betrothed but despised;
So disguise shall, by the disguised,
Pay with falsehood false exacting,
And perform an old contracting.

[Exit.]

ACT IV.

SCENE I.—The noised grange at St. Luke’s.

Enter Mariana and a Boy.

Boy sings.

Take, O, take those lips away,
That so sweetly were forsorn;
And those eyes, the break of day,
Lights that do mislead the morn:
But my kisses bring again, bring again;
Seals of love, but sealed in vain, sealed in vain.

68

Mori. Break off thy song, and haste thee quick
Here comes a man of comfort, whose advice [away:
Hath often still’d my brawling discontent.

[Exit Boy.

Enter Duke disguised as before.

I cry you mercy, sir; and well could wish
You had not found me here so musical:
Let me excuse me, and believe me so,
My mirth it much displeased, but pleased my woe.
ACT IV.

MEASURE FOR MEASURE.

SCENE II.

Duke. 'Tis good; though music oft hath such a charm
To make bad good, and good provoke to harm.
I pray you, tell me, hath any body inquired for me here to-day? much upon this time have I promised here to meet.

Mari. You have not been inquired after: I have sat here all day.

Enter Isabella.

Duke. I do constantly believe you. The time is come even now. I shall crave your forbearance a little: may be I will call upon you anon, for some advantage to yourself.

Mari. I am always bound to you. [Exit.]

Isab. He hath a garden circummured with brick, Whose western side is with a vineyard back'd; And to that vineyard is a planched gate,
That makes his opening with this bigger key: This other doth command a little door Which from the vineyard to the garden leads;
There have I made my promise
Upon the heavy middle of the night
To call upon him. [way?]

Duke. Are there no other tokens Between you 'greed concerning her observance? I say, no, none, but only a repair 't the dark; And that I have possess'd him my most stay Can be but brief; for I have made him know I have a servant comes with me along,
That stays upon me, whose persuasion is I come about my brother.

Isab. 'T is well borne up. I have not yet made known to Mariana A word of this. What, ho! within! come forth!

Re-enter Mariana.

I pray you, be acquainted with this maid; She comes to do you good.

Isab. I do desire the like.

Duke. Do you persuade yourself that I respect you? [lit.]

Mari. Good friar, I know you do, and have found
Duke. Take, then, this your companion by the Who hath a story ready for your ear. [hand, I shall ajjunt your leisure: but make haste;
The vaporous night approaches.

Mari. Will't please you walk aside? [Exit Mariana and Isabella.]

Duke. O place and greatness! millions of false eyes Are stuck upon thee: volumes of report Run with these false and most contrarious guests Upon thy doings: thousand escapes of wit Make thee the father of their idle dreams And rack thee in their fancies.

Re-enter Mariana and Isabella.

Welcome, how agreed?

Isab. She'll take the enterprise upon her, father, If you advise it.

Duke. It is not my consent, But my entreaty too.

Isab. Little have you to say
When you depart from him, but, soft and low, 'Remember now my brother.'

Mari. Fear me not.

Duke. Nor, gentle daughter, fear you not at all.
He is your husband on a pre-contract: To bring you thus together, 'Tis no sin, Sith that the justice of his title to him

Doth flourish the deceit. Come, let us go:
Our corn's to reap, for yet our tithe's to sow. [Eceunt.]

SCENE II.—A room in the prison.

Enter Provost and Pompey.

Prov. Come hither, sirrah. Can you cut off a man's head? Pom. If the man be a bachelor, sir, I can; but if he be a married man, he's his wife's head, and I can never cut off a woman's head.

Prov. Come, sir, leave me your snatches, and yield me a direct answer. To-morrow morning are to die Claudio and Barnardine. Here is in our prison a company of excommunication, who in his hour lacks a helper: if you will take it on you to assist him, it shall redeem you from your gyves; if not, you shall have your full time of imprisonment and your deliverance with an unpitied whippimg, for you have been a noorious bawd.

Pom. Sir, I have been an unlawful bawd time out of mind; but yet I will be content to be a lawful hangman. I would be glad to receive some instruction from my fellow partner.

Prov. What, ho! Abhorson! Where's Abhorson, there?

Enter Abhorson.

Abhor. Do you call, sir?

Prov. Sirrah, here's a fellow will help you to-morrow in your execution. If you think it meet, compound with him by the year, and let him abide here with you; if not, use him for the present and dismiss him. He cannot plead his estimation with you: he hath been a bawd.

Abhor. A bawd, sir? fit upon him! he will discredit our mystery.

Prov. Go to, sir; you weigh equally; a feather will turn the scale. [Exit.]

Pom. Pray, sir, by your good favour.—for surely, sir, a good favour you have, but that you have a hanging look.—do you call, sir, your occupation a mystery. Abhor. Ay, sir; a mystery. [Exit.]

Pom. Painting, sir, I have heard say, is a mystery; and your whomers, sir, being members of my occupation, using painting, do prove my occupation a mystery: but what mystery there should be is in hanging, if I should be hanged, I cannot imagine.

Abhor. Sir, it is a mystery. [Exit.]

Prov. Proof?

Abhor. Every true man's apparel fits your thief: if it be too little for your thief, your true man thinks it big enough; if it be too big for your thief, your thief thinks it little enough so every true man's apparel fits your thief.

Re-enter Provost.

Prov. Are you agreed?

Pom. Sir, I will serve him; for I do find your hangman is a more penitent trade than your bawd; he doth oftener ask forgiveness.

Prov. You, sirrah, provide your block and your axe to-morrow four o'clock.

Abhor. Come, bawd; I will instruct thee in my trade: follow.

Pom. I do desire to learn, sir: and I hope, if you have occasion to use me for your own turn, you shall find me yare: for truly, sir, for your kindness I owe you a good turn.

Prov. Call hither Barnardine and Claudio: [Eceunt Pompey and Abhorson. The one has my pity; not a jot the other. Being a murderer, though he were my brother. [Exit Claudio.

Look, here's the warrant, Claudio, for thy death: 'Tis now dead midnight, and by eight to-morrow
Thou must be made immortal. Where's Barnardine?
Claud. As fast lock'd up in sleep as guiltless labour
When it lies stalkly in the traveller's bones:
He will not wake.
Proc. Who can do good on him? Well, go, prepare yourself. [Knocking within.] But, lark, what noise? Heaven give your spirits comfort! [Exit Claudio.]
By and by.
I hope it is some pardon or reprieve
For the most gentle Claudio.

Enter Duke disguised as before.

Welcome, father.
Duke. The best and wholesomest spirits of the night
Envelope you, good provost! Who called here of late?
Proc. None, since the curfew rung.
Duke. Not Isabel?
Proc. No.
Duke. They will, then, ere 't be long.
Proc. What comfort is for Claudio?
Duke. There 's some in hope.
Proc. It is a bitter deputy.
Duke. Not so, not so; his life is parallel'd
Even with the stroke and line of his great justice:
He doth with holy abstinence subdue
That in himself which he spurs on his power
To qualify in others: were he 'd with that
Which he corrects, then were he tyrannous;
But this being so, he's just. [Knocking within.
Now are they come. [Exit Provost.

This is a gentle provost: seldom when
The steel'd gaoler is the friend of those
That wounds the unsisting postern with these
Re-enter Provost.
Proc. There he must stay until the officer
Ariase to let him in: he is call'd up.
Duke. Have you no countermand for Claudio yet,
But he must die to-morrow?
Proc. None, sir, none.
Duke. As near the dawning, provost, as it is,
You shall hear more ere morning.
Proc. Happily
You something know; yet I believe there comes
No countermand; no such example have we:
Besides, upon the very siege of Justice
Lord Angelo hath to the public ear
Profess'd the contrary.

Enter a Messenger.

This is his lordship's man.

Duke. And here comes Claudio's pardon.

Mes. [Giving a paper] My lord hath sent you this note;
and by me this further charge, that you Swerve not from the smallest article of it, neither in time, matter, or other circumstance. Good morrow; for, as I take it, it is almost day.

Duke. [Aside] This is his pardon, purchased by
For which the pardoner himself is in.
[such sin
Hence hath offence his quick celerity,
When it is borne in high authority;
When vice makes mercy, mercy's so extended,
That for the fault's love is the offender friended.
Now, sir, what news?
Proc. I told you. Lord Angelo, belike thinking me remiss in mine office, awakens me with this unwonted putting-on; methinks strangely, for he hath not used it before.

Duke. Pray you, let 's hear.
Proc. [Reads]
' Whatsoever you may hear to the contrary, let Claudio be executed by four of the clock; and in the afternoon Barnardine; for my better satisfaction, let me have Claudio's head sent me by five.
Let this be duly performed, with a thought that more depends on it than we must yet deliver. Thus fail not to do your office, as you will answer it at your peril.'

What say you to this, sir?
Duke. What is that Barnardine who is to be excuted in the afternoon?
Proc. A Polemic born, but here nursed up and bred;
one that is a prisoner nine years old.

Duke. How came it that the absent duke had not either delivered him to his liberty or executed him?
I have heard it was ever his manner to do so.

Proc. His friends still wrought reprieves for him; and this, it is. till now in the government of Lord Angelo, came not to an undoubted proof.
Duke. It is now apparent?
Proc. Most manifest, and not denied by himself.
Duke. Hath he borne himself penitently in prison?
how seems he to be touched?

Proc. A man that apprehends death no more dreadfully but as a drunken sleep; careless, reckless, and fearless of what's past, present, or to come; insensible of mortality, and desperately dead.
Duke. He wants advice.
Proc. He will hear none: he hath evermore had the liberty of the prison; give him leave to escape hence, he would not: drank many times a day, if not many days entirely drunk. We have very oft awaked him, as if to carry him to execution, and heaved him his coming warrant for it: it hath not moved him at all.

Duke. More of him anon. There is written in your brow, provost, honesty and constancy: if I read it not truly, my ancient skill beguilés me; but, in the boldness of my cunning, I will lay myself in hazard. Claudio, whom till now you have warrant to execute, is no greater forfeit to the law than Angelo who hath sentenced him. To make you understand this in a manifested effect, I crave but four days' respite; for the which you are to do me both a present and a dangerous courtesy.

Proc. Pray, sir, in what?

Duke. In the delaying death.

Proc. Alack, how may I do it, having the hour limited, and an express command, under penalty, to deliver his head in the view of Angelo? I may make my case as Claudio's, to cross this in the smallest.

Duke. By the vow of mine order I warrant you, if my instructions may be your guide. Let this Barnardine be this morning executed, and his head borne to Angelo.

Proc. Angelo hath seen them both, and will discover the favour of mine office.

Duke. O, death's a great disquiser; and you may add to it. Shave the head, and tie the beard; and say it was the desire of the penitent to be so bared before his death: you know the course is common.
If any thing fall to you upon this, more than thanks and good fortune, by the saint whom I profess, I will plead against it with my life.

Proc. Pardon me, good father; it is against my oath.

Duke. Were you sworn to the duke, or to the deputy?

Proc. To him, and to his substitutes.

Duke. You will think you have made no offence, if the duke avouch the justice of your dealing?

Proc. But what likelihood is in that?

Duke. Not a resemblance, but a certainty. Yet
Act IV. Measure for Measure. Scene III.

Since I see you fearful, that neither my coat, integrity, nor persuasion can with case attempt you, I will go further than I meant, to pluck all fears out of you. Look you, sir, here is the hand and seal of the duke: you know the character, I doubt not; and the signet is not strange to you.

Pom. I know them both.

Duke. The contents of this is the return of the duke: you shall anon over-read it at your pleasure: where you shall find, within these two days he will be here. This is a thing that Angelo knows not; for he this very day receives letters of strange tenour; perchance of the duke’s death; perchance coming out of some monastery; but, by chance, nothing of what is writ. Look, the unfolding star calls up the shepherd. Put not yourself into amazement how these things should be: all difficulties are but easy when they are known. Call your executioner, and off with Barnardine’s head: I will show him present shift and advise him for a better place. Yet you are amazed; but this shall absolutely resolve you. Come away; it is almost clear dawn.

[Exeunt.

Scene III. — Another room in the same.

Enter Pompey.

Pom. I am as well acquainted here as I was in our house of profession: one would think it were Miss-stress Overdone’s own house, for here be many of her old customers. First, here’s young Master Rash; he’s in for a commodity of brown paper and old ginger, nine-score and seventeen pounds; of which he made five marks, ready money: marry, then ginger was not much in request, for the old women were all dead. Then is there here one Master Capel, at the suit of Master Three-pile the mercer, for some four suits of peach-coloured satin, which now peaches him a beggar. Then have we here young Dizy, and young Master Deep-vow, and Master Copper-spur, and Master Starve-lackey the rapier and dagger man, and young Drop-heir that kills hangman eating, and Master Forthlight the tilter, and brave Master Shooey the great traveller, and wild Half-can that stabbed Pots, and, I think, forty more; all great doers in our trade, and are now ‘for the Lord’s sake.’

Enter Abhorson.

Abhor. Sirrah, bring Barnardine hither.

Pom. Master Barnardine! you must rise and be hanged, Master Barnardine!

Abhor. What, ho, Master Barnardine! Bar. [Within] A pox o’ your throats! Who makes that noise there? What are you?

Pom. Your friends, sir; the hangman. You must be so good, sir, to rise and be put to death.

Bar. [Within] Away, you rogue, away! I am sleepy.

Abhor. Tell him he must awake, and that quickly too.

Pom. Pray, Master Barnardine, awake till you are executed, and sleep afterwards.

Abhor. Go in to him, and fetch him out.

Pom. He is coming, sir, he is coming; I hear his straw rustle.

Abhor. Is the axe upon the block, sirrah?

Pom. Very ready, sir.

Enter Barnardine.

Bar. How now, Abhorson? what’s the news with you?

Abhor. Truly, sir, I would desire you to clap into your prayers; for, look you, the warrant’s come.

Bar. You rogue, I have been drinking all night; I am not fitted for it.

Pom. O, the better, sir; for he that drinks all night, and is hanged betimes in the morning, may sleep the sounder all the next day.

Abhor. Look you, sir; here comes your ghostly father: do we jest now, think you?

Enter Duke disguised as before.

Duke. Sir, induced by my charity, and hearing how hastily you are to depart, I am come to advise you, comfort you and pray with you.

Bar. Friar, not I: I have been drinking hard all night, and I will have more time to prepare me, or they shall beat out my brains with billets: I will not consent to the this day, that’s certain. [You Duke. O, sir, you must: and therefore I beseech Look forward on the journey you shall go.

Bar. I sweat I will not die to-day for any man’s persuasion.

Duke. But hear you Bar. Not a word; if you have any thing to say to me, come to my ward; for thence will not I to-day.

Duke. Unfit to live or die: O gravel heart! After him, fellows; bring him to the block.

[Exeunt Abhorson and Pompey.

Re-enter Provost.

Prov. Now, sir, how do you find the prisoner? Duke. A creature unprepared, unmeet for death; And to transport him in the mind he is Were damnable.

Prov. Here in the prison, father, There died this morning of a cruel fever One Ragozine, a most notorious pirate, A man of Claudio’s years; his beard and head Just of his colour. What if we do omit This repprobate till he were well inclined; And satisfy the deputy with the visage Of Ragozine, more like to Claudio? Duke. O, ’tis an accident that heaven provides! Dispatch it presently; the hour draws on Prefix’d by Angelo: see this be done, And sent according to command; whereas I Persuade this rude wretch willingly to die.

Prov. This shall be done, good father, presently. But Barnardine must die this afternoon: And how shall we continue Claudio, To save me from the danger that might come If he were known alive? Duke. Let this be done. Put them in secret holds, both Barnardine and Claudio: Ere twice the sun hath made his journal greeting To the under generation, you shall find Your safety manifested.

Prov. I am your free dependant.

Duke. Quick, dispatch, and send the head to Angelo. [Exit Provost]

Now will I write letters to Angelo,—
The provost, he shall bear them,—whose contents Shall witness to him I am near at home, And that, by great inquisitions, I am bound To enter publicly: him I’ll desire To meet me at the consecrated font A league below the city; and from thence, By cold gradation and well-balanced form, We shall proceed with Angelo.

Re-enter Provost.

Prov. Here is the head; I’ll carry it myself. Duke. Convenient is it. Make a swift return; For I would commune with you of such things That want no ear but yours.

Prov. I’ll make all speed. [Exit. Isab. [Within] Peace, ho, be here! Duke. The tongue of Isabel. She’s come to know If yet her brother’s pardon be come hither: But I will keep her ignorant of her good,
ACT IV. MEASURE FOR MEASURE. SCENE VI.

To make her heavenly comforts of despair, When it is least expected.

Enter Isabella.

Isab. Ho, by your leave! Duke. Good morning to you, fair and gracious daughter.

Isab. The better, given me by so holy a man. Hath yet the deputy sent my brother's pardon? Duke. He hath released him, Isabel, from the house. His head is off sent to Angelo. [world: Isab. Nay, but it is not so. Duke. It is no other; show your wisdom, daughter, In your close patience. Isab. O, I will to him and pluck out his eyes! Duke. You shall not be admitted to his sight. Isab. Unhappy Claudio! wretched Isabel! Injuries world! most damned Angelo! Duke. This nor hurts him nor profits you a jot; Forbear it therefore; give your cause to heaven. Mark what I say, which you shall find By every syllable a faithful verdict: [eyes: The duke comes home to-morrow; say, dry your One of our convent, and his confessors, Gives me this instance: already he hath carried Notice to Escalus and Angelo, Who do prepare to meet him at the gates, There to give up their power. If you can, pace your wisdom In that good path that I would wish it go, And you shall have your bosom on this wretch, Grace of the duke, revenges to your heart, And general honour.

Isab. I am directed by you.

Duke. This letter, then, to Friar Peter give; 'Tis that he sent me of the duke's return: Say, by this token, I desire his company At Mariana's house to-night. Her cause and yours I'll perfect him withal, and he shall bring you Before the duke, and to the head of Angelo Accuse him home and home. For my poor self, I am combined by a sacred vow And shall be absent. Wield you with this letter: Command these fretting waters from your eyes With a light heart; trust not my holy order, If I pervert your course. Who's here?

Enter Lucio.

Lucio. O pretty Isabella, I am pale at mine heart to see the eyes are red; thou must be patient. I am fain to dine and sup with water and bran; I dare not for my head fill my belly; one fruitful meal would set me to't. But they say the duke will be here to-morrow. By my troth, Isabel, I loved thy brother: if the old fantastical duke of dark corners had been at home, he had lived. [Exit Isabella.

Duke. Sir, the duke is marvellous little belloving to your reports; but the best is, he lives not in them.

Lucio. Friar, thou knowest not the duke so well as I do: he's a better woodman than thou takest him for.

Duke. Well, you'll answer this one day. Fare ye well.

Lucio. Nay, tarry: I'll go along with thee: I can tell thee pretty tales of the duke.

Duke. You have told me too many of him already, sir, if they be true; if not true, none were enough.

Lucio. I was once before him for getting a wench with child.

Duke. Did you such a thing?

Lucio. Yes, marry, did I: but I was fain to forswear it; they would else have married me to the rotten medlar.

Duke. Sir, your company is fairer than honest. Rest you well.

Lucio. By my troth, I'll go with thee to the lane's end: if bawdy talk offend you, we'll have very little of it. Nay, friar, I am a kind of burr: I shall stick. [Exit.

SCENE IV.—A room in Angelo's house.

Enter Angelo and Escalus.

Escalus. Every letter he hath writ hath disavouched other.

Angelo. In most uneven and distracted manner. His actions show much like to madness: pray heaven his wisdom be not tainted! And why meet him at the gates, and deliver our authorities Escalus. I guess not. [there?

Angelo. And why should we proclaim it in an hour before his entering, that if any crave redress of injustice, they should exhibit their petitions in the street.

Escalus. He shows his reason for that: to have a dispatch of complaints, and to deliver us from devices hereafter, which shall then have no power to stand against us.

Angelo. Well, I beseech you, let it be proclaimed betimes? the morn; I'll call you at your house: give notice to such men of sort and suit as are to meet him. Escalus. I shall, sir. Fare you well.

Angelo. Good night. [Exit Escalus. This deed unshapes me quite, makes me unpregnant And dull to all proceedings. A deliver'd maid! And by an eminent body that enforced The law against it! But that her tender shame Will not proclaim against her maiden loss, How might she tongue me! Yet reason dares her no; For my authority bears of a credent bulk, That no particular scandal once can touch [lived, But it confounds the breather. He should have saved that his riotous youth, with dangerous sense, Might in the times to come have tae'en revenge, By so receiving a dishonour'd life With ransom of such shame. Would yet he had lived!

Alack, when once our grace we have forgot, Nothing goes right: we would, and we would not. [Exit.

SCENE V.—Fields without the town.

Enter Duke in his own habit, and Friar Peter.

Duke. These letters at fit time deliver me; [Giving letters The provost knows our purpose and our plot. The matter being 'foot, keep your instruction, And hold you ever to our special drift; Though sometimes you do blench from this to that, As cause doth minister. Go call at Flavius's house, And tell him where I stay: give the like notice To Valentine, Rowland, and to Crassus, And bid them bring the trumpets to the gate; But send me Flavius first.

Friar P. It shall be speeded well. [Exit.

Enter Varrius.

Duke. I thank thee, Varrius; thou hast made good haste: Come, we will walk. There's other of our friends Will greet us here anon, my gentle Varrius. [Exit.

SCENE VI.—Street near the city gate.

Enter Isabella and Mariana.

Isabella. To speak so indirectly I am loth: I would say the truth; but to accuse him so,
ACT V.

MEASURE FOR MEASURE.

SCENE I.—The city gate.

Mariana re-entered, Isabella, and Friar Peter, at their stand.

Enter Duke, Varrius, Lords, Angelo, Escalus, Lucio, Provost, Officers, and Citizens, at several doors.

Duke. My very worthy cousin, fairly met!
Our old and faithful friend, we are glad to see you.

Ang. [Aside] Happy return be to your royal grace!

Luc. Many and hearty thankings to you both.
We have made inquiry of you; and we hear
Such goodness of your justice, that our soul
Cannot but yield you truth to public thanks,
Forerunning more requital.

Ang. You make my bonds still greater.

Duke. O, your desert speaks loud; and I should wrong it,
To lock it in the wards of covert bosom.
When it deserves, with characters of brass,
A fortified residence 'gainst the tooth of time
And raze of oblivion. Give me your hand,
And let the subject see, to make them know
That outward courtesies would fain proclaim
Favours that keep within. Come, Escalus,
You must walk by us on our other hand;
And good supporters are you.

Friar Peter and Isabella come forward.

Fri. P. Now is your time: speak loud and kneel before him.

Isab. Justice, O royal duke! Veil your regard
Upon a wrong'd, I would fain have said, a maid?
O worthy prince, dishonour not your eye
By throwing it on any other object
Till you have heard me in my true complaint
And have me justice, justice, justice, justice!

Duke. Relate your wrongs: in what? by whom?
—be brief.
Here is Lord Angelo shall give you justice:
Reveal yourself to him.

Isab. O worthy duke, you bid me seek redemption of the devil:
Hear me yourself; for that which I must speak
Must either punish me, not being believed. [Here!]
Or wring redress from you. Hear me, O hear me,

Ang. My lord, her wits, I fear me, are not firm:
She hath been a suitor to me for her brother
Cut off by course of justice.—

Isab. By course of justice!—

Ang. And she will speak most bitterly and strange.

Isab. Most strange, but yet most truly, will I speak:
That Angelo's forsworn; is it not strange?
That Angelo's a murderer; is 't not strange?
That Angelo is an adulterous thief,
An hypocrite, a virgin-violator;
Is it not strange and strange?

Duke. Nay, it is ten times strange.

Isab. It is not truer he is Angelo
Than this is all as true as it is strange:
Nay, it is ten times true; for truth is truth
To the end of reckoning.

Enter Friar Peter.

Fri. P. Come, I have found you out a stand most
Where you may have such vantage on the duke. [Exit,
He shall not pass you. Twice have the trumpets
The generous and gravest citizens . . . [sounded;—
Have bent the gates, and very near upon.
The duke is entering: therefore, hence, away!—

[Exit.

Duke. Away with her! Poor soul.
She speaks this in the infancy of sense.

Isab. O prince, I conjure thee, as thou believest
There is another comfort than this world,
That thou neglect me not, with that opinion
That I am touch'd with madness! Make not impossible
That which but seems unlike: 't is not impossible
But one, the wicked'st caitiff on the ground,
May seem as shy, as grave, as just, as absolute
As Angelo; even so may Angelo,
In all his dressings, characters, titles, forms,
Be an arch-villain; believe it, royal prince:
If he be less, he's nothing; but he's more,
Had I more name for badness.

Duke. By mine honesty,
If she be mad, as I believe no other,—
Her madness hath the oddest frame of sense,
Such a dependency of thing on thing,
As e'er I heard in madness.

Isab. O gracious duke,
Harp not on that, nor do not banish reason
For inequality; but let your reason serve
To make the truth appear where it seems hid,
And hide the false seems true.

Duke. Many that are not mad
Have, sure, more lack of reason. What would you

Isab. I am the sister of one Claudio, [say]
Condemn'd upon the act of fornication
To lose his head; condemn'd by Angelo:
I, in probation of a sisterhood,
Was sent to by my brother; one Lucio
As then the messenger,—

Luc. That's I an't like your grace:
I came to her from Claudio, and desired her
To try her gracious fortune with Lord Angelo
For her poor brother's pardon.

Isab. That's he indeed.

Duke. You were not bid to speak.

Lucio. No, my good lord;
Nor wish'd to hold my peace.

Duke. I wish you now, then;
Pray you, take note of it: and when you have
A business for yourself, pray heaven you then
Be perfect.

Lucio. I warrant your honour.

Duke. The warrant's for yourself; take heed to 't.

Isab. This gentleman told somewhat of my tale,—

Lucio. Right.

Duke. It may be right; but you are i'the wrong
To speak before your time. Proceed.

Isab. To this pernicious caitiff deputy,—

Duke. That's somewhat madly spoken.

Isab. Pardon it;

The phrase is to the matter.

Duke. Mended again. The matter; proceed.

Isab. In brief, to set the needless process by,
How I persuaded, how I pray'd, and kneel'd,
How he refell'd me, and how I replied,—
For this was of much length,—the vile conclusion
I now begin with grief and shame to utter:

73
He would not, but by gift of my chaste body
To his concupiscible intemperate lust,
Release my brother; and, after much debate
My sisterly remorse confutes mine honour,
And I will wish him to: for the next morrow betimes
His purpose surfetting, he sends a warrant
For my poor brother's head.

Duke. This is most likely!

Isab. O, that it were as like as it is true!

Duke. By heaven, fond wretch, thou know'st not
Or else thou art born blind to his honour
In hateful practice. First, his integrity
Stands without blemish. Next, it imports no reason
That with such vehemence he should pursue
Faults proper to the conscience; if thou hast found
In my will have weighed thy brother by himself
And not have cut him off. Some one hath set you Confess the truth, and say by whose advice [on:
Thou canst here to complain.

Isab. And is this all?

Fri. P. Blessed be your royal grace!
I have stood by, my lord, and I have heard
Your royal ear abased. First, hath this woman
Most wrongfully accused your substitute,
Who is as free from touch or soil with her
As she from one ungot.

Duke. We did believe no less.

Know you that Friar Lodovick that she speaks of?

Fri. P. I know him for a man divine and holy;
Not scurril, nor a temporary meddler,
As he's reported by this gentleman;
And, on my trust, a man that never yet
Did, as he vouches, misreport your grace.

Lucio. My lord, most villainously; believe it.

Fri. P. Well, he in time may come to clear him.
But at this instant he is sick, my lord, [self;
Of a strange fever. Upon his more request,
Being come to knowledge that there was complaint
Bleded! upon Lord Angelo, came I hither.
To speak, as from his mouth, what he doth know
Is true and false; and what he with his oath
And all probation will make up full clear,
Whensoever he's convented. First, for this woman,
To justify this worthy nobleman,
So vulgarly and personally accused,
Her shall you hear disproved to her eyes,
Till she herself confess it.

Duke. Good friar, let 's hear it.
[Isabella is carried off guarded; and Maria comes forward.

Do you not smile at this, Lord Angelo?
O heaven, the vanity of wretched fools!
Give us some seats. Come, cousin Angelo;

In this I'll be impartial; be you judge
Of your own cause. Is this the witness, friar?
First, let her show her face, and after speak.

Maria. Purse, my lord; I will not show my face
Until my husband bid me.

Duke. What, are you married?

Maria. No, my lord.

Duke. Are you a maid?

Maria. No, my lord.

Duke. A widow, then?

Maria. Neither, my lord.

Duke. Why, you are nothing then; neither maid, widow, nor wife?

Lucio. My lord, she may be a punk; for many of them are neither maid, widow, nor wife. [cause Duke. Silence that fellow: I would he had some
To prattle for himself.

Lucio. Well, my lord.

Maria. My lord, I do confess. I say 'er was married;
And I confess besides I am no maid:
I have known my husband; yet my husband
Knows not that ever he knew me. [better
Lucio. He was drunk then my lord; it can be no
Duke. For the benefit of silence, would thou wert
Lucio. Well, my lord. [so too
Duke. This is no witness for Lord Angelo.

Maria. No, I come to my lord:
She that accuses him of fornication,
In self-same manner doth accuse my husband,
And charges him, my lord, with such a time
When I 'll depose I had him in mine arms
With all the effect of love.

Ang. Charges she more than me?

Maria. Not that I know.

Lucio. No? you say your husband.

Maria. Why, just, my lord, and that is Angelo,
Who thinks he knows that he 'er knew my body,
But knows he thinks that he knows Isabel's.

Ang. That is a strange abuse. Let's see thy face.

Maria. My husband bids me; now I will un mask. [Unveiling
This is that face, thou cruel Angelo,
Which once thou sworest was worth the looking on;
This is the hand which, with a vow'd contract,
Was fast belock'd in thine; this is the body
That took away the match from Isabel,
And did supply thee at thy garden-house
In her imagined person.

Duke. Know you this woman?

Lucio. Carnally, she says.

Duke. Sirrah, no more!

Lucio. Enough, my lord.

Ang. My lord, I must confess I know this woman:
And five years since there was some speech of mar riage
Betwixt myself and her; which was broke off,
Partly for that her promised proportions
Came short of composition, but in chief
For that her reputation was dissuaded
In levity: since which time of five years
I never spake with her, saw her, nor heard from her,
Upon my faith and honour.

Noble prince, breath,
As there comes light from heaven and words from
As there is sense in truth and truth in virtue,
I am affianced this man's wife as strongly
As words could make up vows: and, my good lord,
But Tuesday night last gone in 's garden-house
He knew not whom a wife as this is true,
Let me in safety raise me from my knees;
Or else for ever be confixed here,
A marble monument.

Ang. Now, good my lord, give me the scope of justice;
My patience here is touch'd: I do perceive
These poor informal women are no more
But instruments of some more mighty member
MEASURE FOR MEASURE.

ACT V.

Scene 1.

That sets them on: let me have way, my lord, To find this practice out.

LUC. Ay, with my heart; And punish them to your height of pleasure. Thou foolish friar, and thou pernicious woman, Compact with her that's gone, think'st thou thy oaths, [saint, Though they would swear down each particular Were testimonies against his worth and credit. That's seal'd in approbation? You, Lord Escalus, Sit with my cousin; lend him your kind pains To find out this abuse, whence 'tis derived. There is another friar that set them on; Let him be sent for. [Deed

Duke. Go do it instantly. [Exit Provost. And you, my noble and well-warranted cousin, Whom it concerns to hear this matter forth, Do with your injuries as seems you best, In any chastisement: I for a while will leave you; But stir not you till you have well determined Upon these slanderers. Escalus. My lord, we'll do it thoroughly. [Exit Duke.

Signior Lucio, did not you say you knew that Friar Lodowick to be a dishonest person?

LUC. 'Cecilius non facit monachum;' honest in nothing but in his clothes; and one that hath spoke most villainous speeches of the duke. Escalus. We shall entreat you to abide here till he come and enforce them against him: we shall find this friar a notable fellow.

LUC. As any in Vienna, on my word. Escalus. Call that same Isabel here once again: I would speak with her. [Exit an Attendant. Pray you, my lord, give me leave to question; you shall see how I'll handle her.

LUC. Not better than he, by her own report. Escalus. Say you?

LUC. Marry, sir, I think, if you handled her privately, she would sooner confess: per chance, publicly, she'll be ashamed. Escalus. I will go darkly to work with her. LUC. That's the way; for women are light at midnight.

Re-enter Officers with Isabella; and Provost with the Duke in his friar's habit.

Escalus. Come on, mistress: here 's a gentlemwoman denies all that you have said. Lucio. My lord, here comes the rascal I spoke of; here with the provost.

Escalus. In very good time: speak not you to him till we call upon you. LUC. Mum. Escalus. Come, sir; did you set these women on to slander Lord Angelo? they have confessed you did. Duke. 'Tis false. Escalus. Now! know you where you are? [devil Duke. Respect to your great place! and let the Be sometime honour’d for his burning throne! Where is the duke? 'tis he should hear me speak. Escalus. The duke's in us; and we will hear you

LUC. You speak justly. [speak: Duke. Coldly, at least. But, O, poor souls, Come you to seek the lamb here of the fox? Good night to your redress! Is the duke gone? Then is your cause gone too. The duke's unjust, Thus to retort your manifest appeal, And put your trial in the villain's mouth Where he chooses to accuse.

LUC. This is the racket; this he is spoke of. Escalus. Why, thou unrevend and unhallow'd friar, is 't not enough thou hast suborn'd these women To accuse this worthy man, but, in foul mouth And in the witness of his proper ear, To call him villain? and then to glance from him To the duke himself, to tax him with injustice? Take him hence; to the rack with him! We'll toushe Joint by joint, but we will know his purpose. What 'unjust'?

Duke. Be not so hot; the duke Dare no more stretch this finger of mine than he Dare rack his own; his subject am I not, Nor here provincial. My business in this state Made me a looker on here in Vienna, Where I have seen many could stand and bubble Till it o'er-run the stew; laws for all faults. But faults so countenanced, that the strong statutes Stand like the forfeits in a barber's shop, As much in mock as mark. [spoken: Escalus. Slander to the state! Away with him to Angelo. What can you vouch against him. Signior Is this the man that you did tell us of? [Lucio? Lucio. 'T is he, my lord. Come hither, Goodman baldpate; do you know me? Duke. I remember you, sir, by the sound of your voice: I met you at the prison, in the absence of the duke. Lucio. O, did you so? And do you remember what you said of the duke? Duke. Most notably, sir. Lucio. Do you so, sir? And was the duke a flesh-monger, a fool, and a coward, as you then reported him to be? Duke. You must, sir, change persons with me, ere you make that my report: you, indeed, spoke so of him; and much more, much worse. Lucio. O thou damnable fellow! Did not I pluck thee by the nose for thy speeches? Duke. I protest I love the duke as I love myself. Ang. Hark, how the villain would close now, after his treasonable abuses! Escalus. Such a fellow is not to be talked withal. Away with him to prison! Where is the provost? Away with him to prison! lay bolts enough upon him; let him speak no more. Away with these gigliots too, and with the other confederate companions! Duke. [To Provost] Stay, sir; stay awhile. Ang. What, resists he? Help him, Lucio. Lucio. Come, sir; come, sir; come, sir; foh, sir! Why, you lauded, lying rascal, you must be hooded, must you? Show your knave's visage, with a pox to you! show your sheep-biting face, and be flanged an hour! Will 't not off? [Pulls off the friar's hood, and discovers the Duke. Thou art the first knave that e'er madest a duke.

First, provost, let me bail these gentle three. [To Lucio] Sneak not away, sir; for the friar and Must have a word anon. Lay hold on him. [you Lucio. This may prove worse than hanging. Duke. [To Escalus] What have you spoke I pardon: sit you down. [your leave: We'll borrow place of him. [To Angelo] Sir, by Hast thou or word, or wit, or impudence, That yet can do thee office? If thou hast, Refer upon it till my tale be heard, And hold no longer out. Ang. O my dread lord, I should be guiltier than my guiltiness, To think I can be undiscernible, When I perceive your grace, like power divine, Hath look'd upon my passes. Then, good prince, No longer session hold upon my shame, But let my trial be mine own confession: Immediate sentence then and sequent death Is all the grace I beg.
ACT V.  MEASURE FOR MEASURE.  SCENE I.

Duke.  Come hither, Mariana, Say, wast thou e'er contracted to this woman?  Ang.  I was, my lord.

Duke. Go take her hence, and marry her instantly.

Do you the office, friar; which consummate,

Return him here again.  Go with him, provost.

Esca. My lord, I am more amazed at his dishonour

Than at the strangeness of it.

Your friar is now your prince; as I was then

Advertising and talking to your business,

Not changing heart with habit, I am still

Attorney'd at your service.

Isab.  O, give me pardon,

That I, your vassal, have employ'd and pain'd

Your unknown sovereignty!

Duke.  For this new-married man approaching

Whose salt imagination yet hath wrong'd [here,

Your well defended honour, you must pardon

For Mariana's sake: but as he adjudged your

Being criminal, in double violation [brother,—

Of sacred chastity and of promise-break

Thereon dependent, for your brother's life,—

The very mercy of the law cries out

Most audible, even from his proper tongue,

'An Angelo for Claudio, death for death!'—

Haste still pays haste, and leisure answers leisure:

Like doth quaff like, and measure still for measure,

Though his fault is thus manifest:

Which, though thou wouldst deny, denies thee van,

We do condemn thee to the very block [stage.

Where Claudio stoop'd to death, and with like haste,

Away with him!

Mar.  O my most gracious lord,

I hope thou will not mock me with a husband.  [band.

Duke.  It is your husband mock'd you with a hus-

Consenting to the safeguard of your honour,

I thought your marriage fit; else imputation,

For that he knew you, might reproach your life

And choke your good to come: for his possessions,

Although by consication they are ours,

We do instate and widow you withal,

To buy you a better husband.

Mar.  O my dear lord,

I crave no other, nor no better man.

Duke.  Never crave him; we are definitive.

Duke.  You do but lose your labour.

Away with him to death!  [To Lucio] Now, sir, to you.

Mar.  O my good lord!  Sweet Isabel, take my part;

Lend me your knees, and all my life to come

I'll lend you all my life to do you service.

Duke.  Again thy fault's thus importunate her:

Should she kneel down in mercy of this fact,

Her brother's ghost his paved bed would break,

And take her hence in horror.

Mar.  Isabel, Sweet Isabel, do yet but kneel by me;

Hold up your hands, say nothing; I'll speak all.

They say, best men are moulded out of faults;

And, for the most, become much more the better

For being a little bad: so may my husband.

O Isabel, will you not lend a knee?

Duke.  He dies for Claudio's death.

Isab.  Look, if it please you, on this man condemn'd,

As if my brother liv'd: I partly think

A due sincerity govern'd his deeds,

Till he did look on me: since it is so,

Let him not die.  My brother had but justice,

In that he did the thing for which he died:

For Angelo,

His act did not o'ertake his bad intent,

And must be buried but as an intent

That perish'd by the way: thoughts are no subjects;

Intents but merely thoughts.

Mar.  Merely, my lord.

Duke.  Your suit's unprofitable; stand up, I say,

I have bethought me of another fault.

Provost, how came it Claudio was beheaded

At an unusual hour?

Prov.  It was commanded so.

Duke.  Had you a special warrant for the deed?

Prov.  No, my good lord: it was by private message.

Duke.  For which I do discharge you of your office:

Give up your keys.

Prov.  Pardon me, noble lord:

I thought it was a fault, but knew it not;

Yet did repent me, after more advice,

For testimony whereof, one in the prison,

That should by private order else have died,

I have reserved alive.

Duke.  What's he?

Prov.  His name is Barnardine.

Duke.  I would thou hadst done so by Claudio.

Go fetch him hither; let me look upon him.

[Exit Provost.

Esca.  I am sorry, one so learned and so wise

As you, Lord Angelo, have still appear'd,

Should slip so grossly, both in the heat of blood,

And lack of temper'd judgment afterward.

Ang.  I am sorry that such sorrow I procure:

And so deep sticks it in my penitent heart

That I crave death more willingly than mercy;

'Tis my deserving, and I do entreat it.

Re-enter Provost, with Barnardine, Claudio muffled, and Juliet.

Duke.  Which is that Barnardine?

Prov.  This, my lord.

Duke.  There was a friar told me of this man.

Sirrah, thou art said to have a stubborn soul,

That apprehends no further than this world,

And squarest thy life according.  Thou 'rt condemn'd:

But, for those earthly faults, I quit them all;

And pray thee take this mercy to provide

For better times to come.  Friar, advise him; [that?

I leave him to your hand.  What muffled fellow's

Prov.  This is another prisoner that I saved,

Who should have died when Claudio lost his head:

As like almost to Claudio as himself.

[Unmuffles Claudio.

Duke.  [To Isabella] If he be like your brother,

For his sake

Is he pardon'd; and, for your lovely sake,

Give me your hand and say you will be mine,

He is my brother too: but fitter time for that.

By this Lord Angelo perceives he's safe;

Methinks I see a quickening in his eye.

Well, Angelo, your evil quits you well: [yours.

Look that you love your wife; her worth worth

I find an apt remission in myself;

And yet here's one in place I cannot pardon.

[To Lucio] You, sirrah, that knew me for a fool, a

One all of luxury, an ass, a madman; [coward,
Wherein have I so deserved of you,
That you extol me thus?

Lucio. *Faith, my lord, I spoke it but according to the trick. If you will hang me for it, you may; but I had rather it would please you I might be whipt.

Duke. Whipt first, sir, and hanged after.

Proclaim it, provost, round about the city,
Is any woman wrong'd by this lewd fellow,
As I have heard him swear himself there's one
Whom he begot with child, let her appear.
And he shall marry her: the nuptial finish'd,
Let him be whipt and hang'd.

Lucio. I beseech your highness, do not marry me to a whore. Your highness said even now, I made you a duke: good my lord, do not recompense me in making me a cuckold.

Duke. Upon mine honour, thou shalt marry her.
Thy slanders I forgive; and therewithal
Remit thy other forfeits. Take him to prison;
And see our pleasure herein executed.

Lucio. Marrying a punk, my lord, is pressing to death, whipping, and hanging.

Duke. Slandering a prince deserves it.

[Exeunt Officers with Lucio.

She, Claudio, that you wrong'd, look you restore.
Joy to you, Mariana! Love her, Angelo:
I have confess'd her and I know her virtue.
Thanks, good friend Escalus, for thy much goodness:
There's more behind that is more gratulate.
Thanks, provost, for thy care and secrecy:
We shall employ thee in a worthier place.
Forgive him, Angelo, that brought you home
The head of Ragozine for Claudio's:
The offence pardons itself. Dear Isabel,
I have a motion much imports your good;
Whereto if you'll a willing ear incline,
What's mine is yours and what is yours is mine.
So, bring us to our palace: where we'll show
What's yet behind, that's meet you all should know.

[Exeunt.

Lucio.—I warrant, it is: and thy head stands so tickle on thy shoulders, that a milkmaid, if she be in love, may sigh it off.
Send after the duke, and appeal to him.

Claudio.—I have done so, but he's not to be found.
I prithee, Lucio, do me this kind service.
This day my sister should the cloister enter,
And there receive her approbation:
Acquaint her with the danger of my state:
Implore her, in my voice, that she make friends
To the strict deputy; bid herself assay him;
I have great hope in that; for in her youth
There is a prone and speechless dialect,
Such as move men; beside, she hath prosperous art,
When she will play with reason and discourse,
And well she can persuade.—Act I., Scene ii.

ACT I.

SCENE I.—A hall in the Duke's palace.

Enter Duke, Ægeon, Gaoler, Officers, and other Attendants.

Ægeon. Proceed, Solinus, to procure my fall
And by the doom of death end woes and all.
Duke. Merchant of Syracuse, plead no more;
I am not partial to infringe our laws:
The enmity and discord which of late
Sprung from the rancorous outrage of your duke
To merchants, our well-dealing countrymen,
Who wanting guilders to redeem their lives,
Have seal'd his rigorous statutes with their bloods,
Excludes all pity from our threatening looks.
For, since the mortal and intestine jars
'Twixt thy seditious countrymen and us,
It hath in solemn synods been decreed,
Both by the Syracuseusians and ourselves,
To admit no traffic to our adverse towns:
Nay, more,
If any born at Ephesus be seen
At any Syracusean marts and fairs;
Again: if any Syracusean born
Come to the bay of Ephesus, he dies,
His goods confiscate to the duke's dispose,
Unless a thousand marks be levied,
To quit the penalty and to ransom him.
Thy substance, valued at the highest rate,
Cannot amount unto a hundred marks;
Therefore by law thou art condemn'd to die.
Ægeon. Yet this my comfort: when your words are My woes end likewise with the evening sun. [gone,
Duke. Well, Syracusean, say in brief the cause
Why thou departed'st from thy native home
And for what cause thou came'st to Ephesus.
Ægeon. A heavier task could not have been imposed
Than I to speak my griefs unspeakable:
Yet, that the world may witness that my end
Was wrought by nature, not by vile offence,
I'll utter what my sorrow gives me leave.
In Syracuse was I born, and wed
Unto a woman, happy but for me,
And by me, had not our hap been bad.
With her I lived in joy; our wealth increased
By prosperous voyages I often made
To Epidamnum; till my factor's death
And the great care of goods at random left
Drew me from kind embraces of my spouse:
From whom my absence was not six months old
Before herself, almost at fainting under
The pleasing punishment that women bear,
Had made provision for her following me
And soon and safe arrived where I was.
There had she not been long but she became
A joyful mother of two goodly sons;
And, which was strange, the one so like the other
As could not be distinguish'd but by names.
That very hour and in the self-same inn
A meaner woman was delivered
Of such a burden, male twins, both alike:
Those, for their parents were exceeding poor,
I bought and brought up to attend my sons.
My wife, not meanly proud of two such boys,
Made daily motions for our home return:
Unwilling I agreed; ah! too soon;
We came aboard.
A league from Epidamnum had we sail'd,
Before the always wind-obeying deep
Gave any tragic instance of our harm:
But longer did we not retain much hope;
For what obscured light the heavens did grant
Did but convey unto our fearful minds
A doubtful warrant of immediate death;
Which though myself would gladly have embraced,
Yet the incessant weepings of my wife,
Weeping before for what she saw must come,
And piteous plainings of the pretty babes,
That mourn'd I for fashion, ignorant what to fear,
Forced me to seek delays for them and me.
And this it was, for other means was none:
The sailors sought for safety by our boat,
And left the ship, then sinking-ripe, to us;
My wife, more careful for the latter-born,
Had fasten'd him unto a small spare mast,
Such as seafaring men provide for storms;
To him one of the other twins was bound,
Whilst I had been like heedful of the other:
The children thus disposed, my wife and I,
Fixing our eyes on whom our care was fix'd,
Fasten'd ourselves at either end the mast;
And floating straight, obedient to the stream,
Were carried towards Corinth, as we thought.
At length the sun, gazing upon the earth,
Dispersed those vapours that offended us;
And, by the benefit of his wished light,
The seas wax’d calm, and we discovered
Two ships from far making maina to us,
Of Corinth that, of Epidaurus this:
But ere they came.—O, let me say no more!
Gather the sequel by that went before.

[so;
Duke. Nay, forward, old man; nor break off
For we may tidy, though not pardon thee.
Æge. O, had the gods done so, I had not now
Worthily term’d them merciless to us!
For, ere the ships could meet by twice five leagues,
We were encounter’d by a mighty rock;
Which being violently broken,
Our helpful ship was splitted in the midst;
So that, in this unjust divorce of us,
Fortune had left to both of us alike
What to delight in, what to sorrow for.
Her part, poor soul! seeming as burdened
With lesser weight but not with lesser woe,
Was carried with more speed before the wind;
And in our sight they three were taken up
By fishermen of Corinth, as we thought.
At length, another ship had seiz’d on us;
And, knowing whom it was their laps to save,
Gave leave to the seamen to disembark’d guests;
And would have receipt the fishers of their prey;
Had not their bark been very slow of sail;
And therefore homeward did they bend their course.
Thus have you heard me sever’d from my bliss,
That by misfortunes was my life prolong’d,
To tell sad stories of my own mischaps.

[for.
Duke. And for the sake of them thou sorrowest
Do me the favour to dilate at full
What hath befall’n of them and thee till now.
Æge. My youngest boy, and yet my eldest care,
At eighteen years became inquisitive
After his brother: and importune me
That his attendant — so his case was like,
Reft of his brother, but retain’d his name —
Might bear him company in the quest of him:
Whom whilst I labour’d of a love to see,
I hazard’d the loss of whom I loved.
Five summers have I spent in furthest Greece,
Roaming clean through the bounds of Asia,
And, coasting homeward, came to Ephesus;
Hopeless to find, yet loath to leave unsought
Or that or any place that harbours men.
But here must end the story of my life;
And henceforth do I leave this world.
Could all my travels warrant me live.

Duke. Helpless Ægeon, whom the fates have
To bear the extremity of dire mischay! — mark’d
Now, trust me, were it not against our laws,
Against my crown, my oath, my dignity,
Which princes, would they, may not disannul,
My soul should sue as advocate for thee.
But, though thou art adjudged to the death
And passed sentence may not be recall’d
But to our honour’s great disgramparization,
Yet I will favour thee in what I can.
Therefore, let me this day to this day
To seek thy life by beneficial help:
Try all the friends thou hast in Ephesus;
Beg thou, or borrow, to make up the sum,
And live; if no, then thou art doom’d to die.
Gaoler, take him to thy custody.

[Exeunt.

Æge. Hopeless and helpless doth Ægeon weep,
But to procrastinate his lifeless end.

ACT II.

THE COMEDY OF ERRORS.

SCENE II.

Enter Antipholus of Syracuse, Dromio of Syracusus, and First Merchant.

First Mer. Therefore give out your are of Epidamnest that your goods too soon be confiscate.

nu;
This very day a Syracusean merchant
Is apprehended for arrival here;
And not being able to buy out his life
According to the statute of the town
Dies ere the weary sun set in the west.
There is your money that I had to keep.
Ant. S. Go bear it to the Centaur, where we host,
And stay there, Dromio, till I come to thee.
Within this hour it will be dinner-time;
Till that, I’ll view the manners of the town,
Peruse the traders, gaze upon the buildings,
And then return and sleep within mine inn,
For with long travel I am stiff and weary.
Get thee away.

Dro. S. Many a man would take you at your word,
And go indeed, leaving so good a mean.
[Exit.

Ant. S. A trusty villain, sir, that very oft,
When I am dull with care and melancholy,
Lightens my humour with his merry jests.
What, will you walk with me about the town,
And then go to my inn and dine with me?
First Mer. I am invited, sir, to certain merchants,
Of whom I hope to make much benefit;
I crave your pardon. Soon at five o’clock,
Please you, I’ll meet with you upon the mart
And afterward proceed to you till time:
My present business calls me from you now.
Ant. S. Farewell till then: I will go lose myself
And wander up and down to view the city.
First Mer. Sir, I commend you to your own content.

[Exit.

Ant. S. He that commends me to mine own content
Commends me to the thing I cannot get.
[tent
I to the world am like a drop of water
That in the ocean seeks another drop,
Who, falling there to find his fellow forth,
Unseen, inquisitive, confounds himself:
So I, to find a mother and a brother,
In quest of them, unhappy, lose myself.

Enter Dromio of Ephesus.
Here comes the almanac of my true date.
What now? how chance thou art return’d so soon?
Dro. E. Return’d so soon! rather approach’d too,
The capon burns, the pig falls from the spit.
[late.
The clock hath strucken twelve upon the bell;
My mistress made it one upon my cheek:
She is so hot because the meat is cold;
The meat is cold because you come not home;
You come not home because I have no stomach;
You have no stomach having broke your fast;
But that we know what ’tis to fast and pray
Are penitent for your default to-day.

[pray.
Ant. S. Stop in your wind, sir; tell me this, I
Where have you left the money that I gave you?
Dro. E. O,— sixpence, that I had o’ Wednesday
To pay the saddler for my mistress’ crupper?
[last
The saddler had it, sir; I kept it not.
Ant. S. I am not in a sportive humour now:
Tell me, and daily not, where is the money?
We being strangers here, how darest thou trust
So great a charge from thine own custody?

Dro. E. I pray you, jest, sir, as you sit at dinner:
I from my mistress come to you in post;
If I return, I shall be post indeed,
For she will score your fault upon my pate.
Methinks your mouth, like mine, should be your clock
And strike you home without a messenger.
Ant. S. Come, Dromio, come, these jests are out of season:
Reserve them till a merrier hour than this.
Where is the gold I gave in charge to thee?
Dro. E. To me, sir? why, you gave no gold to me.
Ant. S. Come on sir, knife, have done your foolishness
And tell me how thou hast disposed thy charge.
Dro. E. My charge was but to fetch you from the mart

ACT II

THE COMEDY OF ERRORS

SCENE I.—The house of Antipholus of Ephesus.

Enter Adriana and Luciana.

Adr. Neither my husband nor the slave return'd,
That in such haste I sent to seek his master!
Sure, Luciana, it is two o'clock.
Luc. Some merchants have hatch'd him invited him
And from the mart he's somewhere gone to dinner.
Good sister, let us dine and never fret:
A man is master of his liberty:
Time is their master, and when they see time
They'll go or come: if so, be patient, sister.
Adr. S. Thy mistress' marks? what mistress slave, hast thou? [Phoenix; Dro. E. Your worship's wife, my mistress at the
She that doth fast till you come home to dinner
And prays that you will lie you home to dinner.

Adr. Say, didst thou speak with him? know'st thou his mind?
Dro. E. Ay, ay, he told his mind upon mine ear;
Besure, his hand, I scarce could understand it.
Luc. Spake he so doubtfully, thou couldst not feel his meaning?
Dro. E. Nay, he struck so plainly, I could too well feel his blows: and withal so doubtfully that I could scarce understand them.
Adr. But say, I prithee, is he coming home?
It seems he hath great care to please his wife. [mad.
Dro. E. Why, mistress, sure my master is horn-
Adr. E. Horn-mad, thou livest in marble?
Dro. E. I mean not cuckold-mad;
But, sure, he is stark mad.
When I desired him to come home to dinner
He ask'd me for a thousand marks in gold:
'Tis dinner-time; quoth I: 'My gold!' quoth he:
'Your meat doth burn,' quoth I; 'My gold!' quoth he:
[he,
'Will you come home?' quoth I; 'My gold!' quoth he:
'Where is the thousand marks I gave thee, villain?'
'The pig,' quoth I, 'is burn'd;' 'My gold!' quoth he:
'My mistress, sir,' quoth I; 'Hang up thy mistress!
I know not thy mistress; out on thy mistress!
Luc. Quoth who?
Dro. E. Quoth my master:
'I know,' quoth he, 'no house, no wife, no mistress.'
So that my erudition, due unto my tongue,
I thank him, I bare home upon my shoulders;
For, in conclusion, he did beat me there. [home.
Adr. Go back again, thou slave, and fetch him
Dro. E. Go back again, and be new beaten home
For God's sake, send some other messenger.
Adr. Back, slave, or I will break thy pate across.
Dro. E. And he will bless that cross with other
Between you I shall have a holy head. [beating:
Adr. Hence, prating peasant! fetch thy master home.
Dro. E. Am I so round with you as you with me,
That like a football you do spurn me thus?
You spurn me hence, and he will spurn me hither:
If I last in this service, you must case me in leathern.
[Exit.

Luc. Fie, how impiety loureth in your face!
Adr. His company must do his minions grace,
Whilst I at home starve for a merry look.
Hath homely age the alluring beauty took
From my poor cheek? then he hast wasted it:
Are my discourses dull? barrer my wit?
If voluble and sharp discourse be marr'd,
Unkindness blunts it more than marble hard:
Do their gay vestments his affections bait?
That's not my fault; he's master of my state:

SCENE II.

Home to your house, the Phoenix, sir, to dinner:
My mistress and her sister stays for you.
Ant. S. Now, as I am a Christian, answer me,
In what safe place you have bestow'd my money,
Or I shall break that merry sconce of yours
That stands on tricks when I am undisposed:
Where is the thousand marks thou hadst of me?
Dro. E. I have some marks of yours upon my pate,
Some of my mistress' marks upon my shoulders,
But not a thousand marks between you both.
If I should pay your worship those again,
Perchance you will not bear them patiently.
Ant. S. Thy mistress' marks? what mistress slave, hast thou?
[Phoenix; Dro. E. Your worship's wife, my mistress at the
She that doth fast till you come home to dinner
And prays that you will lie you home to dinner.

Ant. S. What, wilt thou flout me thus unto my face,
Being forbid? There, take you that, sir knave.
Dro. E. What mean you, sir? for God's sake, hold your hands!
Nay, and you will not, sir, I'll take my heels. [Exit.
Ant. S. Upon my life, by some device or other
The villain is o'er-ruft of all my money.
They say this town is full of cozenage,
As, nimble jugglers that deceive the eye,
Dark-working sorcerers that change the mind,
Soul-killing witches that defile the body,
Disguised cheaters, prating mountebanks,
And many such-like liberties of sin:
If it prove so, I will be gone the sooner.
I'll to the Centaur, to go seek this slave:
I greatly fear my money is not safe.
[Exit.

ACT II.

THE COMEDY OF ERRORS.

SCENE II.

Luc. Self-harming jealousy! He, beat it hence!

Adr. Unfeeling fools can with such wrongs dis-

Or else what lets it but he would be here?

Sister, you know he promised me a chain;

Wear gold; and no man that hath a name,

Wear gold; and no man that hath a name,

That such as madly thou didst answer me? [Exit.]

Luc. How many fond fools serve mad jealousy!

SCENE II.—A public place.

Enter Antipholus of Syracuse.

Ant. The gold I gave to Dromio is laid up
Safe at the Centaur; and the heedful slave
Is wander'd forth, in care to seek me out.

By computation and mine host's report,

I could not speak with Dromio since at first

I sent him from the mart. See, here he comes.

Enter Dromio of Syracuse.

How now, sir! is your merry humour alter'd?

As you love strokes, so jest with me again.

You know no Centaur? you received no gold?

Your mistress sent to have me home to dinner;

My house was at the Phænix? Waste thou mad,

That thus so madly thou didst answer me? [Exit.]

Dro. S. What answer, sir? when spake I such a

Ant. Even now, even here, not half an hour

Dro. S. I did not see you since you sent me hence,

Home to the Centaur, with the gold you gave me.

Ant. S. Villain, thou didst deny the gold's receipt

And told'st me of a mistress and a dinner;

For which, I hope, thou felt'st I was displeased.

Dro. S. I am glad to see you in this merry vein:

What means this jest? I pray you, master, tell me.

Ant. S. Ye are, dost thou jeer and flout me in the teeth?

Think'st thou I jest? Hold, take that thou and that.

[Beating him.]

Dro. S. Hold, sir, for God's sake! now your jest is Upon what bargain do you give it me? [Earest: Ant. S. Because that I familiarly sometimes

Do use you for my food and chat with you,

Your sauciness will jest upon my love

And make a common of my serious hours.

When the sun shines let foolish gnats make sport,

But creep in cranberries when he hides his beams.

If you will jest with me, know my aspect

And fashion your demeanour to my looks,

Or I will beat this method in your sconce.

Dro. S. Scence call you it? so you would leave battering, I had rather have it a head: an you use these blows long, I must get a scone for my head and lancet for my ass; or else I shall seek my wit in my shoulders. But, I pray, sir, why am I beaten?

Ant. S. Dost thou not know?

Dro. S. Nothing, sir, but that I am beaten.

Ant. S. Shall I tell you why?

Dro. S. Ay, sir, and wherefore: for they say every why hath a wherefore?

Ant. S. Why, first,—for flattering me; and then,

wherefore,

For urging it the second time to me.

Dro. S. Was there ever any man thus beaten out of season?

When in the why and the wherefore is neither rhyme nor reason?

Well, sir, I thank you.

Ant. S. Thank me, sir! for what?

Dro. S. Marry, sir, for this something that you gave me for nothing.

Ant. S. I'll make you amends next, to give you nothing for something. But say, sir, is it dinnertime?

Dro. S. No, sir: I think the meat wants that I

Ant. S. In good time, sir; what's that? [Exit.

Dro. S. Basting.

Ant. S. Well, sir, then 'twill be dry.

Dro. S. If it be, sir, I pray you, eat none of it.

Ant. S. Your reason?

Dro. S. Lest it make you cholerick and purchase me another dry basting.

Ant. S. Well, sir, learn to jest in good time:

there's a time for all things.

Dro. S. I drust have denied that, before you were so cholerick.

Ant. S. By what rule, sir?

Dro. S. Marry, sir, by a rule as plain as the plain bald pate of father Time himself.

Ant. S. Let's hear it.

Dro. S. There's no time for a man to recover his hair that grows bald by nature.

Ant. S. May he not do it by fine and recovery?

Dro. S. Yes, to pay a fine for a periwig and recover the lost hair of another man.

Ant. S. Why is Time such a niggard of hair, being, as it is, so plentiful an excrement?

Dro. S. Because it is a blessing that he bestows on beasts; and what he hath scanted men in hair

he hath given them in wit.

Ant. S. Why, but there's many a man hath more hair than wit.

Dro. S. Not a man of those but he hath the wit to lose his hair.

Ant. S. Why, thou dost conclude hairy men plain dealers without wit.

Dro. S. The plainer dealer, the sooner lost: yet he loseth it in a kind of jollity.

Ant. S. For what reason?

Dro. S. For two; and sound ones too.

Ant. S. Nay, not sound, I pray you.

Dro. S. Sure ones then.

Ant. S. Nay, sure, in a thing false.

Dro. S. Certain ones then.

Ant. S. Name them.

Dro. S. The one, to save the money that he spends in trimming: the other, that at dinner they should not drop in his porridge.

Ant. S. You would all this time have proved there is no time for all things.

Dro. S. Marry, and did, sir; namely, no time to recover hair lost by nature.

Ant. S. But your reason was not substantial, why there is no time to recover.

Dro. S. Ay, thank you, sir; and I: Time himself is bald and therefore to the world's end will have bald followers.

Ant. S. I knew 't would be a bald conclusion:

But, soft! who wafts us yonder?

Enter Adriana and Luciana.

Adr. Ay, ay, Antipholus, look strange and frown:

Some other mistress hath thy sweet aspects; I am not Adriana nor thy wife.

The time was once when thou unmerr'd wouldst vow

That never words were music to thine ear,

That never object pleasing in thine eye,

That never touch well welcome to thy hand,

That never meet sweet-savour'd in thy taste, [Thee.

Unless I speak, or look'd d, or touched, or carv'd to

ACT III.

THE COMEDY OF ERRORS.

SCENE I.—Before the house of Antipholus of Ephesus.

Enter Antipholus of Ephesus, Dromio of Ephesus, Angelo, and Balthazar.

Ant. E. Good Signior Angelo, you must excuse us
My wife is shrewish when I keep not hours; [all;
Say that I linger'd with you at your shop
To see the making of her cæcum.
And that to-morrow you will bring it home.
But here's a villain that would face me down
He met me on the mart and that I beat him
And charged him with a thousand marks in gold
And that I did deny my wife and house.
Thou drunkard, thou, what didst thou mean by this?

Dro. E. Say what you will, sir, but I know what I know;
That you beat me at the mart, I have your hand to show:

Be it my wrong you are from me exempt,
But wrong not that wrong with a more contempt.
Come, I will fasten on this sleeve of thine:
Thou art an elm, my husband, I a vine,
Whose weakness married to thy stronger state
Makes me with thy strength to communicate:
If it aught possess thee from me, it is dress,
Disguising Ivy, brier, or idle moss;
Who, all for want of pruning, with intrusion
Infect thy sap and live on thy confusion. [theme;
Ant. S. To me she speaks; she moves me for her
What, was I married to her in my dream?
Or sleep now and think I hear all this?
What error drives our eyes and ears amiss?
Until I know this sure uncertainty,
I'll entertain the offer'd failuy.

Luc. Dromio, gibid the servants spread for dinner.

Dro. S. O, for my beads! I cross me for a dinner.
This is the fairy land: O quite of sprites!
We talk with goblins, owls and sprites:
If we obey them not, this will ensue,
They'll suck our breath or pinch us black and blue.

Luc. Why protest thou to thyself and answert not?

Dromio, thou drone, thou snail, thou slugg., thou sot!

Dro. S. I am transformed, master, am I not?

Ant. S. I think thou art in mind, and so am I.

Dro. S. Nay, master, both in mind and in my shape.

Ant. S. Thou hast thine own form.

Dro. E. No, I am an ape.

Luc. If thou art changed to aught, 'tis to an ass.

Dro. S. 'Tis true; she rides me and I long for
'Tis so, I am an ass; else it could never be [grass.
But I should know her as well as she knows me.

Adr. Come, come, no longer will I be a fool,
To put the finger in the eye and weep,
Whilest man and master laugh my woes to scorn.
Come, sir, to dinner. Dromio, keep the gate.

Dro. E. Husband, I'll dine above with you to-day
And shrive you of a thousand idle pranks.
Sirrah, if any ask you for your master,
Say be dines forth and let no creature enter.

Come, sister. Dromio, play the porter well.

Ant. S. Am I in earth, in heaven, or in hell?
Sleeping or waking? mad or well-advised?
Known unto these, and to myself disguised!
I'll say as they say, and perseever so.

And in this mist at all adventures go.

Dro. S. Master, shall I be porter at the gate?

Adr. Ay: and let none enter, lest I break your pate.

Luc. Come, come, Antipholus, we dine too late.

[Exeunt.]
ACT III.

THE COMEDY OF ERRORS.

SCENE II.

Bal. Small cheer and great welcome makes a poor feast.
Ant. E. Ay to a niggardly host and more sparing guest: [part;]
    But though my cates be mean, take them in good
    Better cheer may you have, but not with better heart.
    But, soft! my door is lock'd. Go bid them let us in.
Dro. E. Maud, Bridget, Marian, Cledy, Gillian, Ginn!
Either get thee from the door or sit down at the Dost thon conjure for wenches, that thou call'st for such playing at door.
When one is one too many? Go get thee from the Dro. E. What patch is made our porter? My master stays in the street.
Dro. S. [Within] Let him walk from whence he came, lest he catch cold on 's feet. [door!]
Ant. E. Who talks within there? bo, open the Dro. S. [Within] Right, sir; I'll tell you when, an you'll tell me wherefore.
Ant. E. Wherefore? for my dinner: I have not dined to-day.
Dro. S. [Within] For to-day here you must not;
    I'11 tell again when you may.
Ant. E. What art thou that keepest me out from the house I owe?
Dro. S. [Within] The porter for this time, sir, and my name is Dromio.
Dro. E. O villain! thou hast stolen both mine office and my name.
The one ne'er got me credit, the other mickle blame.
If thou hastad be Dromio to-day in my place,
Thou wouldst have changed thy face for a name or thy name for an ass.
Luc. [Within] What a coil is there, Dromio?
    Nor get these at the gate?
Dro. E. Let my master in, Lucie.
Luc. [Within] Faith, no; he comes too late;
And so tell your master.
Dro. E. Have at you with a proverb—Shall I set in my staff?
Luc. [Within] Have at you with another; that is—
    When? can you tell?
Dro. S. [Within] If thy name be call'd Lucie,— Lucie, thou hast answer'd him well.
Ant. E. Do your hear, you minyon? you 'll let us in, I hope?
Luc. [Within] I thought to have ask'd you.
Dro. S. [Within] And you said no.
Dro. E. So, come, help: well struck! there was blow for blow.
Ant. E. Thou baggrage, let me in.
Luc. [Within] Can you tell for whose sake?
Dro. E. Master, knock the door hard.
Luc. [Within] Let him knock till it achi.
Ant. E. You'll cry for this, minyon, if I beat the door down.
Luc. [Within] What needs all that, and a pair of cockocks in the town?
Adr. [Within] What is that at the door that keeps all this noise?
Dro. S. [Within] By my troth, your town is troubled with unruly boys.
Ant. E. Are you there, wife? you might have come before.
Adr. [Within] Your wife, sir knave! go get you from the door.
Dro. E. If you went in pain, master, this 'knave' would go sore.
Ang. Here is neither cheer, sir, nor welcome:
    I would fain have either.
Bal. I am burning which was best, we shall part with neither.
Dro. E. They stand at the door, master: bid them welcome hither.

Ant. E. There is something in the wind, that we cannot get in.
Dro. E. You would say so, master, if your garments were thin.
Your cake there is warm within; you stand here in the cold:
    It would make a man mad as a buck, to be so bought and sold.
Ant. E. Go fetch me something: I'll break ope the-gate.
Dro. S. [Within] Break any breaking here, and I'll break your knave's pate.
Dro. E. A man may break a word with you, sir, and words are but inuitive,
    [hlin.
    Ay, and break it in your face, so he break it not be-
    Dro. S. [Within] It seems thou want'st breaking: out upon thee, hind!
Dro. E. Here's too much 'out upon thee!' I pray thee, let me in.
Dro. S. [Within] Ay, when fowls have no feathers and fish have no fin.
Ant. E. Well, I'll break in: go borrow me a crow.
Dro. E. A crow without feather? Master, mean you so?
    [feather: For a fish without a fin, there's a fowl without a
    If a crow help us in, sirrah, we'll pluck a crow together.
Ant. E. Go get thee gone; fetch me an iron crow.
Bal. Have patience, sir; O, let it not be so!
Herein you war against your reputation
And draw within the compass of suspect
The unviolated honour of your wife.
Once this,—your long experience of her wisdom,
    Her sober virtue, years and modesty
    Plead on her part some cause to you unknown;
And doubt not, sir, but she will well excuse
    Why at this time the doors are made against you.
    Be ruled by me; these are those at the gate.
And let us to the Tiger all to dinner,
And about evening come yourself alone
To know the reason of this strange restraint.
If by strong hand you offer to break in
Now in the stirring passage of the day,
    A vulgar comment will be made of it,
And that supposed by the common rout
    Against your yet ungalled estimation
That may with foul intrusion enter in
    In and despite of nirth, mean to be merry.
I know a wench of excellent discourse,
    Pretty and witty, wild and yet, too, gentle;
There will we dine. This woman that I mean,
    My wife — but, I protest, without desert —
    Hath oftentimes upbraided me withal:
    To her will we to dinner. [To Ang.] Get you home
And fetch the chain; by this I know 'tis made:
    Bring it, I pray you, to the Porpentine;
For there's the house: that chain will I bestow—
    Be it for nothing but to spite my wife—
    Upon mine hostess there: good sir, make haste.
Since mine own doors refuse to entertain me,
    I'll knock elsewhere, to see if they'll disdain me.
Ang. I'll meet you at that place some hour hence.
Ant. E. Do so. This jest shall cost me some expense. [Exeunt.

SCENE II.—The same.

Enter Luciana and Antipholus of Syracuse.
Luc. And may it be that you have quite forgot
A husband's office? shall, Antipholus,
Even in the spring of love, the love's spring-plugs rot?
    Shall love, in building, grow so ruinous?
If you did wed my sister for her wealth, [niss:
    Then for her wealth's sake use her with more kind-
Or if you like elsewhere, do it by stealth;
Mingle your false love with some show of blind-
Let not my sister read it in your eye;
[hess:]
Be not thy tongue thy own shame's orator;
Look sweet, speak fair, become disloyal;
Apparel vice like virtue's harbingers;
Bear fair pretence through the heart's true tint:
Teach sin the carriage of a holy saint;
Be secret-false: what need she be acquainted?
What simple thief brags of his own attain't?
'Tis double wrong, to truant with your bed
And let her read it in thy looks at board:
Shame and pride, a bastard fame well managed;
Ill deeds are doubled with an evil word.
Alas, poor women! make us but believe,
Being compact of credit, that you love us;
Though others have the arm, show us the sleeve;
'To draw in me in thy sister's flood of wars.
Then, gentle brother, get you in again;
Comfort my sister, cheer her, call her wife:
'T is holy sport to be a little vain,
When the sweet breath of flattery conquers strife.

Ant. S. Sweet mistress,—what your name is else,
Nor by what wonder you do hit of mine,— not Less in your knowledge and your grace you show
Than our earth's wonder, more than earth divine.
Teach me, dear creature, how to think and speak;
Lay open to my earthly-cross conceit,
Sudden love, being light, be drowned if you may.
The folded meaning of your words' deceit.
Against my soul's pure truth why labour you
To make it wander in an unknown field?
Are you a god? would you create me new?
Transform me then, and to your power I'll yield.
But if that I am I, then well you know
Your weeping sister is no wife of mine,
Nor to her bed no homage do I owe:
Far more, far more to you do I decline.
O, train me not, sweet mermaid, with thy note,
And in my motion turn and you may move us.
Sing, siren, for thyself and I will dote:
Spread o'er the silver waves thy golden hairs,
And as a bed I'll take them and there lie,
And in that glorious supposition think
He gains by death that hath such means to die:
Let Love, that being light, be drowned if she sink!
Luc. What, are you mad, that you do reason so?
Ant. S. Not mad, but mated; now, I do not know.
Luc. It is a fault that springeth from your eye.
Ant. S. Forgazing on your beams, fair sun, being by.
Luc. Gaze where you should, and that will clear
Your sight.
Ant. S. As good to wink, sweet love, as look on
Luc. Why call you me love? call my sister so.
Ant. S. Thy sister's sister.
Luc. That's my sister.
Ant. S. No;
It is thyself, mine own self's better part,
Mine eye's clear eye, my dear heart's dearer heart,
My food, my fortune and my sweet hope's aim,
My sole earth's heaven and my heaven's claim.
Luc. All this my sister is, or else should be.
Ant. S. Call thyself sister, sister, for I am thee.
Thee will I love and with thee lead my life:
Thou hast no husband yet nor I no wife.
Give me thy hand.
Luc. O, soft, sir! hold you still:
I'll fetch my sister, to get her good will.[Exit.

Enter Dromio of Syracuse.
Ant. S. Why, how now, Dromio! where runn'st thou so fast?

Dro. S. Do you know me, sir? am I Dromio? am I your man? am I myself?
Ant. S. Thou art Dromio, thou art my man, thou art thyself.

Dro. S. I am an ass, I am a woman's man and besides myself.

Ant. S. What woman's man? and how besides thyself?

Dro. S. Marry, sir, besides myself, I am due to a woman; one that claims me, one that haunts me, one that will have me.

Ant. S. What claim lays she to thee?

Dro. S. Marry, sir, such claim as you would lay to your horse: and she would have me as a beast:
not that, I being a beast, she would have me; but that she, being a very beastly creature, lays claim to me.

Ant. S. What is she?

Dro. S. A very reverent body; ay, such a one as a man may not speak of without he say 'Sir-reverent.'
I have but leanluck in the match, and yet is she a wondrous fat marriage.

Ant. S. How dost thou mean a fat marriage?

Dro. S. Marry, sir, she's the kitchen wenches and all grease; and I know not what use to put her to but to make a lamp of her and run from her by her own light. I warrant, her rags and the tallow in them will bum a Poland winter; if she lives till doomsday, she'll burn a week longer than the whole world.

Ant. S. What complexion is she of?

Dro. S. Swart, like my shoe, but her face nothing like so clean kept: for why, she sweats; a man may go over shanks in the ground as she.

Ant. S. That's a fault that water will mend.

Dro. S. No, sir, 'tis in grain; Noah's flood could not do it.

Ant. S. What's her name?

Dro. S. Nell, sir; but her name and three quarters, that's an ell and three quarters, will not measure her from hip to hip.

Ant. S. Then she bears some breadth?

Dro. S. No longer from head to foot than from hip to hip: she is spherical, like a globe; I could find out countries in her.

Ant. S. In what part of her body stands Ireland?

Dro. S. Marry, sir, in her buttocks: I found it out by the bogs.

Ant. S. Where Scotland?

Dro. S. I found it by the barrenness; hard in the parts of them that should crown my neck, the great where she is most wonderful.

Ant. S. Where France?

Dro. S. In her forehead; armed and reverted, making war against her hair.

Ant. S. Where England?

Dro. S. I looked for the chalky cliffs, but I could find no weakness in them; but I guess it stood in her chin, by the salt rheum that ran between France and it.

Ant. S. Where Spain?

Dro. S. Faith, I saw it not; but I felt it hot in her breast.

Ant. S. Where America, the Indies?

Dro. S. Oh, sir, upon her nose, all o'er embellished with rubies, carbuncles, sapphires, declining their rich aspect to the hot breath of Spain; who sent whole armadoes of caracks to be balast at her nose, sweet, to anoint her.

Ant. S. Where stood Belgra, the Netherlands?

Dro. S. Oh, sir, I did not look so low. To conclu-cise, this drudge, or diviner, laid claim to me; called me Dromio; swore I was assured to her: told me what privy marks I had about me, as, the mark of my shoulder; the mole in my neck, the great wart on my left arm, that I amaz'd ran from her as a witch:
And, I think, if my breast had not been made of faith and my heart of steel,
She had transform'd me to a curtail dog and made me turn the wheel.

Ant. S. Go hie thee presently, post to the road:

ACT IV.

THE COMEDY OF ERRORS.

SCENE I.

An if the wind blow any way from shore, I will not harbour in this town to-night: If any lark put forth, come to the mart, Where I will walk till thou return to me.

Dro. S. As from a bear a man would run for life, So fly I from her that would be my wife. [Exit.

Ant. S. There's none but witches do inhabit here; And therefore't is high time that I were hence. She calleth my name, and with my soul Doth for a wife abhor. But her fair sister, Possess'd with such a gentle sovereign grace, Of such enchanting presence and discourse, I hath almost made me traitor to myself:

Enter Angelo with the chain.

Ang. Master Antipholus,— Ay, that's my name. Ang. I know it well, sir: lo, here is the chain.

Enter Angelo with the chain.

Ang. Then you will bring the chain to her yourself?

Ant. E. No; bear it with you, lest I come not time enough. [Exit.

Ang. You, sir, I will. Have you the chain about you?

Ant. E. I'll. In Consent to pay thee for the chain.

Ant. S. I pray you, sir, receive the money now.

Ang. You are a merry man, sir: fare you well. [Exit.

Ant. S. What I should think of this, I cannot tell: But this I think, there's no man is so vain That would refuse so fair an offer'd chain. I see a man here needs not live by shifts, When in the streets he meets such golden gifts. I'll to the mart and there for Dromio stay:

If any ship put out, then straight away. [Exit.

ACT IV.
But, sirrah, you shall buy this sport as dear
As all the metal in your shop will answer.
Ang. Sir, sir, I shall have law in Ephesus,
To your notorious shame; I doubt it not.

Enter Dromio of Syracuse, from the bay.

Dro. S. Master, there is a bark of Epidamnum
That stays but till her owner comes aboard,
And then, sir, she bears away. Our fraughtsage, sir,
I have convey’d aboard and I have bought
The oil, the balsamum and aqua-vitae.
The ship is in her trim; the merril wind
Blows fair from land: they stay for nought at all
But for their owner, master, and yourself.
Ant. E. How now! a madman! Why, thou peevish
What ship of Epidamnum stays for me? [sheep,
Dro. S. A ship you sent me to, to hire wattage.
Ant. E. Thou drunken slave, I sent thee for a rope
And told thee to what purpose and what end.
Dro. S. You sent me for a rope’s end as soon:
You sent me to the bay, sir, for a bark.
Ant. E. I will debate this matter at more leisure
And teach your ears to list to me with heed.
To Adriana, villain, lie thee straight:
Give her her key, and tell her to her desk
That’s cover’d o’er with Turkish tapestry
There is a purse of ducats; let her send it:
Tell her I am arrested in the street
And that shall baille me: hee thee, slave, be gone!
On, officer, to prison till it come.

[Exeunt Sea Merchant, Angelo, Officer, and Ant. E.]

Dro. S. To Adriana! that is where we dined,
Where Dowsabel did claim me for her husband:
She is too big, I hope, for me to compass.
Thither I must, although against my will.
For servants must their masters’ minds fulfill.

[Exit.]

SCENE II.—The house of Antipholus of Ephesus.

Enter Adriana and Luciana.

Aldr. Ah, Luciana, did he tempt thee so?
Mightst thou perceive anestly in his eye
That he did plead in earnest? yea or no?
Look’d he or red or pale, or sad or merrily?
What observation madest thou in this case
Of his heart’s meteors tilting in his face?
Luc. First he denied you had in him right.
Aldr. He meant he did me none; the more my spite.
Luc. Then swore he that he was a stranger here.
Aldr. And true he swore, though yet forsworn he.
Luc. Then pleaded I for you. [were.
Aldr. And what said he?
Luc. That love I begged for you he begged of me.
Aldr. With what persuasion did he tempt thy love?
Luc. With words that in an honest suit might move,
First he did praise my beauty, then my speech.
Aldr. Didst speak him fair?
Luc. Have patience, I beseech.
Aldr. I cannot, nor I will not, hold me still;
My tongue, though not my heart, shall have his will.
He is deformed, crooked, old and sere,
Ill-faced, worse bodied, shapeless everywhere;
Vicious, ungentle, foolish, blustering, unkind,
Stigmatical in making, worse in mind.
Luc. Who would be jealous then of such a one?
No evil lost is wail’d when it is gone.
Aldr. Ah, but I think him better than I say,
And yet that herein others’ eyes were worse.
Far from her met the laying cries away:
My heart prays for him, though my tongue do curse.

Enter Dromio of Syracuse.

Dro. S. Here! go; the desk, the purse! sweet, now, make haste.

ACT IV.

THE COMEDY OF ERRORS.

SCENE III.

Luc. How hast thou lost thy breath?
Dro. S. By running fast.
Aldr. Where is thy master, Dromio? is he well?
Dro. S. No, he’s in Tartar limbo, worse than hell.
A devil in an everlasting garment hath him;
One whose hard heart is button’d up with steel;
A fiend, a fury, pitiless and rough;
A wolf, a hyaena, a fell dog in buff; [mends
A back-friend, a shoulder-clapper, one that counter-
The passages of alleys, creeks and narrow lands;
A hound that runs counter and yet draws dry-foot
Well!
One that before the judgment carries poor souls to
Ade. Why, man, what is the matter?
Dro. S. I do not know the matter: he is rested on the case.
Ald. What, is he arrested? Tell me at whose suit.
Dro. S. I know not at whose suit he is arrested
well;
But he is in a suit of buff which ’rested him, that can
Will you send him, mistress, redemption, the money in his desk?
Aldr. Go fetch it, sister. [Exit Luciana.
This I wonder at,
That he, he, thy own father, should be in debt.
Tell me, was he arrested on a band?
Dro. S. Not on a band, but on a stronger thing;
A chain, a chain! Do you not hear it ring?
Aldr. What, the chain?
Dro. S. No, no, the bell; ’tis time that I were gone:
It was two o’erc I left him, and now the clock strikes one.
Aldr. The hours come back! that did I never hear.
Dro. S. O, yes; if any hour meet a sergeant, a turns back for very fear.
Aldr. As if Time were in debt! how fondly dost thou reason?
Dro. S. Time is a very bankrupt and owes more than he’s worth to season.
Nay, he’s a thief too: have you not heard men say,
That Time comes stealing on by night and day?
If Time be in debt and theft, and a sergeant in the way,
Hath he not reason to turn back an hour in a day?

Re-enter Luciana with a purse.

Aldr. Go, Dromio; there’s the money, bear it straight.
And bring thy master home immediately.
Come, sister: I am press’d down with conceit—
Conceit, my comfort and my injury. [Exit.

SCENE III.—A public place.

Enter Antipholus of Syracuse.

Ant. S. There’s not a man I meet but doth salute
As if I were their well-acquainted friend;
And every one doth call me by my name.
Some tender money to me; some invite me;
Some other give me thanks for kindnesses;
Some offer me commodities to buy:
Even now a tailor call’d me in his shop
And show’d me silks that he had bought for me
And therewithal took measure of my body.
Sure, these are but imaginary wiles
And Lapland sorcerers inhabit here.

Enter Dromio of Syracuse.

Dro. S. Master, here’s the gold you sent me for.
What, have you got the picture of old Adam apparelled? [me
Aldr. What gold is this? what Adam dest thou Dro. S. Not that Adam that kept the Paradise, but that Adam that keeps the prison: he that goes in the call’s skin that was kill’d for the Prodigal;
he that came behind you, sir, like an evil angel, and bid you forsaik your liberty.
Ant. S. I understand thee not.
Dro. S. No? why, 'tis a plain case: he that went, like a bass-viol, in a case of leather; the man, sir, that, when gentlemen are tired, gives them a sob and 'rests them; he, sir, that takes pity on decayed men and gives them suits of durance; he that sets up his rest to do the devil with his more than a morris.
Ant. S. What, thou meanest an officer? [pike.]
Dro. S. Ay, sir, the sergeant of the band; he that brings any man to answer it that breaks his band; one that thinks a man always going to bed and says 'God give you good rest!'
Ant. S. Well, sir, the rest in your folly. Is there anything puts forth to-night? may we be gone?
Dro. S. Why, sir, I brought you word an hour since that the bark Expedition put forth to-night; and then were you hindered by the sergeant, to tarry for the hoy Delay. Here are the angels that you sent for to deliver you.
Ant. S. The fellow is distract; and so am I;
And here we wander in illusions:
Some blessed power deliver us from hence!

Enter a Courtezan.
Cour. Well met, well met, Master Antipholus. I see, sir, you have found the goldsmith now;
Is that the chain you promised me to-day?
Ant. S. Satan, avoid! I charge thee, tempt me not.
Dro. S. Master, if you do, expect spoon-meat; or be safe in a long spoon.
Ant. S. Why, Dro. Marry? he must have a long meat that must eat with the devil.
Ant. S. Avoid then, fiend! what tell'st thou me of supping?
Thou art, as you are all, a sorcerer:
I conjure thee to leave me and be gone.
Cour. Give me the ring of mine you had at dinner,
Or, for my diamond, the chain you promised,
And I'll be gone, sir, and not trouble you. [nail.
Dro. S. Some devils ask but the parings of one's
A rash, a hair of blood, a pin,
A nut, a cherry-stone:
But she, more covetous, would have a chain.
Master, be wise: an if you give it her,
The devil will shake her chain and fright us with it.
Cour. I pray you, sir, my ring, or else the chain:
I have no mean to cheat me so. [as go.
Ant. S. Avanunt, thou witch! Come, Dro. Marry, let Dro. S. 'Fly pride,' says the peacock; mistress, that you know. [Exeunt Ant. S. and Dro S.
Cour. Now, out of doubt Antipholus is mad,
Else would he never so demean himself.
A ring he hath of mine worth forty ducats,
And for the same he promised me a chain:
Both one and other he denies me now.
The reason that I gather he is mad,
Besides this present instance of his rage,
is a mad tale he told to-day at dinner.
Of being shut against his entrance.
Belike his wife, acquainted with his fits,
On purpose shut the doors against his way.
My way is now to his house to his house,
And tell his wife that, being lunatic,
Revel and feast it at my house to-day,
Whilst upon me the guilty doors were shut.
And I denied to enter in my house? [home;]
Adr. O husband, God doth know you dined at Where you had remain’d until this time,
Free from these slanders and this open shame!
Ant. I am bound at home! Thou villain, what sayest thou?

Dro. E. Sir, sooth to say, you did not dine at home.
Ant. E. Were not my doors lock’d up and I shut out?

Dro. E. Perdie, your doors were lock’d and you
Ant. E. And did not she herself revile me there?
Dro. E. Saws fable, she herself revile you there.
Ant. E. Did not her kitchen-maid rail, taunt and scorn [you,]
Dro. E. Certes, she did; the kitchen-vestal scorn’d
Ant. E. And did not I in rage depart from thence?
Dro. E. In verity you did; my bones bear witness,
That since have felt the vigour of his rage.

Adr. Is’t good to sooth him in these contraries?

Pinch. It is no shame: the fellow finds his vein
And yielding to him humour all his frenzy. [me;]
Ant. E. Thou hast suborn’d the goldsmith to arrest
Astr. Alas, I sent you money to redeem you,
By Dromio here, who came in haste for it. [might;
Dro. E. Money by me! heart and good-will you
But surely, master, not a rag of money. [cats?
Ant. E. Went’st not thon to her for a purse of du-Astr. He came to me and I deliver’d it.

Larg. I am return’d with her that she did.
Dro. E. God and the rope-maker bear me witness
That I was sent for nothing but a rope!

Pinch. Mistress, both man and master is possess’d;
I know it by their pale and deadly looks:
They must be bound and laid in some dark room.
Ant. E. Say wherefore didst thou lock me forth to;
And why dost thou deny the bag of gold? [day?
Astr. I did not, gentle husband, lock thee forth.
Dro. E. And, gentle master, I received no gold;
But I confess, sir, that we were lock’d out. [both.
Astr. Dismaying villain, thou speakest false in Ant. E. Dissembling harlot, thou art false in all
And art confederate with a damned pack.
To make a loathsome abject scorn of me:
But with these nails I’ll pluck out these false eyes
That would behold in me this shameful sport.

Enter three or four, and offer to bind him. He strives.

Astr. O, bind him, bind him! let him not come near me.
[him;]

Pinch. More company! The fiend is strong within Luc. Ay me, poor man, how pale and wan he looks!
Ant. E. What, will you murder me? Thou gaoler,
I am thy prisoner: wilt thou suffer them [thou,
To make a rescue?

Off. Masters, let him go:
He is my prisoner, and you shall not have him.

Pinch. Go bind this man, for he is frantic too.

They offer to bind Dro. E.

Astr. What wilt thou do, thou peevish officer?
Hast thou delight to see a wretched man
Do outrage and displeasure to himself?
Off. He is my prisoner: if I let him go,
The debt he owes will be required of me.
Astr. I will discharge thee ere I go from thee:
Bear me forthwith unto his creditor
And, knowing how the debt grows, I will pay it.
Good master doctor, see him safe convey’d
Home to my house. O most unhappy day!
Ant. E. O most unhappy strumpet!

Dro. E. Master, I am here entered in bond for you.
Ant. E. Out on thee, villain! wherefore dost thou mad me?
Dro. E. Will you be bound for nothing? be mad, good master: cry ‘The devil!’
Luc. God help, poor souls, how idly do they talk!

Astr. Go bear him hence. Sister, go you with me.
[Exeunt all but Adriana, Luciana,
Officer and Courtean.]

Say now, whose suit is he arrested at?

Off. One Angelo, a goldsmith: do you know him?
Astr. I know the man. What is the sum he owes?
Off. Two hundred ducats.

Astr. Say, how grows it due?
Off. Due for a chain your husband had of him.
Astr. He did bespeak a chain for me, but had it not.
Cour. When as your husband all in rage to-day
Came to my house and toss’d away my ring—
The ring I saw upon his finger now—
Straight after did I meet him with a chain.
Astr. It may be so, but I did never see it.
Come, gaoler, bring me where the goldsmith is:
It long to know the truth hereof at large.

Enter Antipholus of Syracuse with his rapier drawn, and Dromio of Syracuse.

Luc. God, for thy mercy! they are loose again.
Astr. And come with naked swords.
Let’s call more help to have them bound again.
Off. Away! they’ll kill us.
[Exeunt all but Ant. S. and Dro. S.
Ant. S. I see these witches are afraid of swords.
Dro. S. She that would be your wife now ran from you.
Ant. S. Come to the Centaur; fetch our stuff from thence:
I long that we were safe and sound aboard.
Dro. S. Faith, stay here this night; they will surely do us no harm; you saw they speak us fair, give us gold: methinks they are such a gentle nation that, but for the mountain of mad flesh that claims marriage of me, I could find in my heart to stay here still and turn witch.
Ant. S. I will not stay to-night for all the town;
Therefore away, to get our stuff aboard. [Exeunt.

ACT V.

SCENE I.—A street before a Priory.

Enter Second Merchant and Angelo.

Ang. I am sorry, sir, that I have hinder’d you;
But, I protest, he had the chain of me,
Though most dishonestly he doth deny it.

Sec. Mer. How is the man esteem’d here in the Antipholus household, thou, sir, [city?
Of credit infinite, highly beloved,
Second to none that lives here in the city;
His word might bear my wealth at any time.

Sec. Mer. Speak softly: yonder, as I think, he walks.

Enter Antipholus of Syracuse and Dromio of Syracuse.

Ang. ’Tis so; and that self chain about his neck
Which he forswore most monstrously to have.
Good sir, draw near to me, I’ll speak to him.
Signior Antipholus, I wonder much
That you would put me to this shame and trouble;
And, not without some scandal to yourself,
With circumstance and oaths so to deny
This chain which now you wear so openly:
Beside the charge, the shame, imprisonment,
You have done wrong to this my honest friend,
Who, but for staying on our controversy,
Had hoisted sail and put to sea to-day:
This claim you had of me; can you deny it?

_Ant._ I think I had; I never did deny it. [too.

_Sec._ Mer. Yes, that you did, sir, and forswore it

_Ant._ Who heard me to deny it or forswear it?

_Sec._ Mer. These ears of mine, thou know'st, did

Fie on thee, wretch! 'tis pity that thou livest
To walk where any honest men resort.

_Ant._ Thou art a villain to impeach me thus:
I'll prove mine honour and mine honesty
Against thee presently, if thou darest stand.

_Sec._ Mer. I dare, and do defy thee for a villain.

[They draw.

Enter Adriana, Luciana, the Courtezan, and _others._

_Adr._ Hold, hurt him not, for God's sake! he is
Some get within him, take his sword away: [mad
Bind Dromio too, and bear them to my house.

_Dro._ S. Run, master, run; for God's sake, take a house!

This is some privity. _In, or we are spoil'd!_[Exeunt _Ant._ S. and _Dro._ S. to the Priory.

Enter the Lady Abbess.

_Abb._ Be quiet, people. Wherefore throng you hither?

_Adr._ To fetch my poor distracted husband hence.
Let us come in, that we may bind him fast
And bear him home for his recovery,
_Aug._ I knew he was not in his perfect wits.

_Sec._ Mer. I am sorry now that I did draw on him.

_Abb._ How long hath this possession held the man?
_Adr._ This week he hath been heavy, sour, sad,
And much different from the man he was;
But till this afternoon his passion
Ne'er brake into extremity of rage. [sea?

_Abb._ Hath he not lost much wealth by wreck of Buried some dear friend? Hath not else his eye
Stray'd his affection in unlawful love?
A sin prevailing much in youthful men,
Who give their eyes the liberty of gazing.
Which of these sorrows is he subject to?

_Adr._ To none of these, except it be the last;
Namely, some love that drew him oft from home.

_Abb._ You should for that have reprehended him.

_Adr._ Why, so I did.

_Abb._ Ay, but not rough enough.
_Adr._ As roughly as my modesty would let me.

_Abb._ Napily, in private.

_Adr._ And in assemblies too.

_Abb._ Ay, but not enough.
_Adr._ It was the copy of our conference:
In bed he slept not for my urging it;
At board he fed not for my urging it;
_Alone, it was the subject of my theme;
In company I often glanced it;
Still did I tell him it was vile and bad.

_Abb._ And thereof came it that the man was mad:
The venereal, that great pestilence in man
Poisons more deadly than a mad dog's tooth,
It seems his sleeps were hindered by thy railing,
And thereof comes it that his head is light.

Thou say'st his meat was sauced with thy upbraid-
Unquiet meals make ill digestions; [ings
There was a raging fire of fever bred;
And what's a fever but a fit of madness?
Thou say'st his sports were hinder'd by thy brawls:
Sweet recreation barr'd, what doth ensue
But wooden and dull melancholy,
Kneading to grim and comfortless despair,
And all this made him a huge infectious troupe:
Of pale distemperatures and foes to life?
In food, in sport and life-preserving rest
To be disturb'd, would mad or man or beast:

The consequence is then thy jealous fits
Have scared thy husband from the use of wits.

_Luc._ She never reprehended him but mildly,
When he demean'd himself rough, rude and wildly.
Why bear you these rebukes and answer not?

_Adr._ She did betray me to my own reproof.

Good people, enter and lay hold on him.

_Abb._ No, not a creature enters in my house.

_Adr._ Then let your servants bring my husband forth.

_Abb._ Neither: he took this place for sanctuary,
And it shall privilege him from your hands
Till I have brought him to his wits again,
Or lose my labour in an assay of war.

_Adr._ I will attend my husband, be his nurse,
Diet his sickness, for it is my office,
And will have no attorney but myself;
And therefore let me have him home with me.

_Abb._ Be patient; for I will not let him stir
Till I have used the approved means I have,
With wholesome syrups, drugs and holy prayers,
To make of him a formal man again:
It is a branch and parcel of mine oath,
A charitable duty of my order.

Therefore depart and leave him here with me.

_Adr._ I will not hence and leave my husband here:
And ill doth beseech your holiness
To separate the husband and the wife.

_Abb._ Be quiet and depart: thou shalt not have him._ [Exit _Luc._

_Luc._ Complain unto the duke of this indignity.

_Adr._ Come, go: I will fall prostrate at his feet
And never rise until my tears and prayers
Have won his grace to come in person hither
And take perforce my husband from the abbess.

_Sec._ Mer. By this, I think, the dial points at five:
_Ann._ I'm sure, the duke himself in person
Comes to this place this way this evening;
The place of death and sorry execution,
Behind the ditches of the abbey here.

_Aug._ Upon what cause?

_Sec._ Mer. To see a reverend Syracusan merchant,
Who put unluckily into this bay;
And against the laws and statutes of this town,
Beheaded publicly for his offence._ [death.

_Aug._ See where they come: we will behold his
Luc. Kneel to the duke before he pass the abbey.

_Adr._ May it please your grace, Antipholus my Whom I made lord of me and all I had, [husband,
At your important letters,—this ill day
A most outrageous fit of madness took him;
That desperately he hurried through the street,—
With him his bandman, all as mad as he,—
Doing displeasure to the citizens
By rushing in their houses, bearing thence Rings, jewels, any thing his rage did like.

Once did I get him bound and sent him home,
Whilst to take order for the wrongs I went
With his bad bandman as my guide and guard.

_Ann._ I wit not why what strong escape,
He broke from those that had the guard of him;
And with his bad attendant and himself,
Each one with ireful passion, with drawn swords,
Meat us again and madly bent on us

Chased us away, and thinking of no aid
We came again to bind them. Then they fled
Into this abbey, whither we pursued them:

And here the abbess shuts the gates on us
ACT V.

THE COMEDY OF ERRORS.

SCENE I.

And will not suffer us to fetch him out, Nor send him forth that we may bear him hence. Therefore, most gracious duke, with thy command Let him be brought forth and borne hence for help. [wars.

_Duke._ Long since thy husband served me in my And to thee engaged a prince's word. When I did arm thee with the other hand, To do him all the grace and good I could. Go, some of you, knock at the abbey-gate And bid the lady abbess come to me. I will determine this before I stir.

Enter a Servant.

_Serv._ O mistress, mistress, shift and save yourself! My master and his man are both broke loose, Beaten the masts a-row and bound the doctor, Whose beard they have sanged off with brands of And ever, as it blazed, they threw on him [fire; Great pails of puddled mire to quench the hair; My master preaches patience to him and the while. He sprouted his nimick like a fool, And sure, unless you send some present help; Between them they will kill the conjurer. [if. And that is false thou dost report to us. [here.

_Serv._ Mistress, upon my life, I tell you true; I have not breathed almost since I did see it. He cries for you and vows, it can take you, To search your face and to disfigure you. [Cry within.

Hark, hark! I hear him, mistress: fly, be gone!

_Duke._ Come, stand by me; fear nothing. Guard with halberds!

_Ad._ Ay me, it is my husband! Witness you, That he is borne about invisible: Even now we housed him in the abbey here; And now he's there, past thought of human reason.

Enter Antipholus of Ephesus and Dromio of Ephesus.

_Ant._ Justice, most gracious duke, O, grant me justice!

Even for the service that long since I did thee, When I bestrid thee in the wars and took Deep sears to save thy life; even for the blood That then I lost for thee, now grant me justice.

_Adm._ Unless the fear of death doth make me dote, I see my son Antipholus and Dromio. [there

_Ant._ Justice, sweet prince, against that woman Whom thou gavest to me to be my wife, That hath abused and dishonour'd me Even in the strength and height of injury! Beyond imagination is the wrong That she this day hath shameless thrown on me. _Duke._ Discover how, and thou shalt find me just.

_Ant._ This day, great duke, she shut the doors upon me, While she with hurlots feasted in my house. [so? _Duke._ A grievous fault! Say, woman, didst thou _Ad._ No, my good lord: myself, he and my sister To-day did dine together, So befall my soul As this is false he burdens me withal! _Luce._ Ne'er may I look on day, nor sleep on night, But she tells to your highness simple truth! _Aug._ O perjured woman! They are both forsworn: In this the madman justly chargeth them.

_Ant._ My liege, I am advised what I say, Neither disturbed with the effect of wine, Nor heady-rish, provoked with raging ire, Albeit my voracity might make one wiser mad. This woman lock'd me out this day from dinner: That goldsmith there, were he not jack'd with her, Could witness it, for he was with me then; Who parted with me to go fetch a chain, Promising to bring it to the Porpentine, Where Balthazar and I did dine together.

Our dinner done, and he not coming thither, I went to seek him: in the street I met him And in his company that gentleman. There did this perjured goldsmith swear me down That I this day of him received the chain, Which, God he knows, I saw not: for the which He did arm me with an other commission. I did obey, and sent my peasant home For certain ducats: he with none return'd. Then fairly I bespoke the officer To go in person with me to my house. By the way we met My wife, her sister, and a rabble more Of vile confederates. Along with them [lain, They brought one Pinch, a hungry lean-faced vil- A mere anatomy, a mountebank, A threadbare juggler and a fortune-teller, A neatly, hollow-eyed, sharp-looking wretch, A living-dead man: this pernicious slave, Forsooth, took on him as a conjurer, And, gazung in mine eyes, feeling my pulse, And with no face, as 'twere, outfacing me, Cries out, I was possess'd. Then all together They fell upon me, bound me, bore me hence And in a dark hold the damn'd and this man are. There left me and my man, both bound together; Till, gnawing with my teeth my bonds in sunder, I gain'd my freedom and immediately Ran hither to your grace; whom I beseech To take me, my simple suit.

For these deep shames and great indignities. [him,

_Ang._ My lord, in truth, thus far I witness with That he dined not at home, but was lock'd out. _Duke._ But had he such a chain of thee or no? _Aug._ He had, my lord: and when he ran in here, These people saw the chain about his neck. [mine _Sec. Mer._ Besides, I will be sworn these ears of Heard you confess you had the chain of him After you first foresaw it on the mart: And thereupon I drew my sword on you; And then you fled into this abbey here, Fie, when you think, I, think you, are conspired by miracle. _Ant._ I never came within these abbey-walls, Nor ever dist'd thou draw thy sword on me: I never saw the chain, so help me Heaven! And this is false you burden me withal.

_Duke._ Why, what an intricate impeach is this! I think you all have drunk of Circe's cup. If here you housed him, here he would have been; If he were mad he would not plead so coldly; You say he dined at home; the goldsmith here Denies that saying. Sirrah, what say you? [line.

_Dro._ Sir, he dined with her there, at the Porpentine. _Aug._ He did, and from my finger snatch'd that ring.

_Ant._ 'Tis true, my liege; this ring I had of her. _Duke._ Saw'st thou him enter at the abbey here? _Aug._ As sure, my liege, as I do see your grace. _Duke._ Why, this is strange. Go call the abbess You think I are all mad: or with more fact. [Erect one to the Abbess.

_Ege._ Most mighty duke, vouchsafe me speak A haply I see a friend will save my life [word: And pay the sum that may deliver me. _Duke._ Speak freely, Syracuse, for thou wilt. _Ege._ Is not your name, sir, call'd Antipholus? And is not that your bondman, Dromio? _Dro._ Within this hour I was his bondman, sir, But he, I thank him, gaw'd in two my cords: Now an I Dromio and his man unbound. _Ege._ I am sure you both of you remember me. _Dro._ Ourselves we do remember, sir, by you; For lately we were bound, as you are now? You are not Pinch's patient, are you, sir? _Ege._ Why look you strange on me? you know me well.

_Ant._ I never saw you in my life till now.
ACT V.

THE COMEDY OF ERRORS.

Scene I.

_Age_. O, grief hath changed me since you saw me last.

_Because_ And you to tell me, dost thou not know my voice?

_Ant_. E. Neither.

_Age_. Dromio, nor thou? _Dro_. E. No, trust me, sir, nor I.

_Age_. I am sure thou dost.

_Dro_. E. Ay, sir, but I am sure I do; and whatsoever a man denies, you are now bound to believe him.

_Age_. Not know my voice! O time's extremity, Hast thou so crack'd and splitted my poor tongue In seven short years, that here my only son Knows not my feeble key of untuned cares? Though now this grained face of mine be hid In sap-consuming winter's drizzled snow And all the conduits of my blood froze up, Yet hath my night of life some memory, My waning lamps some fading glimmer left, My dull deaf ears a little use to hear: All these old witnesses—I cannot err— Tell me thou art my son Antipholus.

_Ant_. E. I never saw my father in my life.

_Duke_. I tell thee, Syracusan, Twenty years have I been patron to Antipholus, During which time he ne'er saw Syracuse: I see thy age and dangers make thee dote.

_Re-enter Abbess, with Antipholus of Syracuse and Dromio of Syracuse._

_Abb_. Most mighty duke, behold a man much wrong'd. [All gather to see them.]

_Adr_. I see two husbands, or mine eyes deceive me.

_Duke_. One of these men is Genius to the other; And so of these. Which is the natural man, And which Antipholus, these two so like? _Dro_. S. I, sir, am Dromio: command him away.

_Ant_. E. I, sir, am Dromio: pray, let me stay.

_Ant_. S. _Age_ on thou not? or else his ghost?

_Dro_. S. O, my old master! who hath bound him here?

_Abb_. Whosoever bound him, I will loose his bonds And gain a husband by his liberty.

_Speak, old _Age_, if thou be'st the man That hast a wife once call'd _Emilia_. That bore thee at a burden two fair sons: O, if thou be'st the same _Age_, speak, And speak unto the same _Emilia_!

_Age_. If I dream not, thou art _Emilia_: If thou art she, tell me where is that son That flouted with thee on the fatal raft? _Abb_. By men of Epidamnum he and I And the twin Dromio all were taken up; but here stood rude fishermen of Corinth By force took Dromio and my son from them, And me they left with those of Epidamnum. What then became of them I cannot tell; I to this fortune that you see me in.

_Duke_. Why, here begins his morning story right: These two are geniuses so like, And these two Dromios, one in semblance, Besides her urging of her wreck at sea,— These are the parents to these children, Which accidentally are met together.

_Ant_. S. No, sir, I came from Corinth first.

_Duke_. Stay, stand apart; I know not which is which.

_Ant_. E. I came from Corinth, my most gracious lord.—

_Dro_. E. And I with him.

_Ant_. E. Brought to this town by that most famous warrior,

_Duke_. Menaphon, your most renowned uncle.

_Adr_. Which of you two did dine with me to-day?

_Ant_. S. One, gentle mistress.

_Adr_. And are not you my husband?

_Ant_. E. No; I say nay to that.

_Ant_. S. And so do I; yet did she call me so:

And this fair gentlewoman, her sister here, Did call me brother. [To Luc.] What I told you I hope I shall have leis'ning to make good; [then,]

If this be not a dream I see and hear.

_Ant_. E. That is the chain, sir, which you had of me.

_Ant_. S. I think it be, sir; I deny it not.

_Ant_. E. And you, sir, for this chain arrested me.

_Ant_. S. I think I did, sir; I deny it not.

_Adr_. I sent you money, sir, to be your bail, By Dromio; but I think he brought it not.

_Dro_. E. No, none by me.

_Ant_. S. _This_ purse of ducats I received from you And Dromio my man did bring them me.

_I see we still did meet each other's man, And I was taken for him, and he for me, And thereupon these errors are arose._

_Ant_. E. These ducats pawn I for my father here.

_Duke_. It shall not need; thy father hath his life.

_Cour_. Sir, I must have that diamond from you.

_Ant_. E. There, take it; and much thanks for my good cheer.

_Abb_. Renowned duke, vouesafe to take the pains To go with us into the abbey here

And hear at large discussed all our fortunes:

And all that are assembled in this place,

That by this sympathized one day's error

Have suffer'd wrong, go keep us company,

And we shall make full satisfaction.

Thirty-three years have I but gone in travail Of you, my sons; and till this present hour My heavy burthen ne'er delivered.

The duke, my husband and my children both,

And the calendars of their nativity,

Go to a gossips' feast, and go with me: After so long grief, such festivity!

_Duke_. With all my heart, I'll gossip at this feast. [Exeunt all but _Ant_. S., _Ant_. E., _Dro_. S. and _Abb_.]

_Dro_. S. Master, shall I fetch your stuff from shipboard?

_Ant_. E. Dromio, what stuff of mine hast thou embark'd?

_Dro_. S. Your goods that lay at host, sir, in the Cantaur.

_Ant_. S. He speaks to me. I am your master, Dromio:

Come, go with us; we'll look to that anon: Embrace thy brother there; rejoice with him.

[Exeunt _Ant_. S. and _Ant_. E.]

_Dro_. S. There is a fat friend at your master's house.

That kitchen'd me for you to-day at dinner:

She now shall be my sister, not my wife.

_Dro_. E. Methinks you are my glass, and not my brother:

I see by you I am a sweet-faced youth.

Will you walk with me, and set their cunning?

_Dro_. S. Not I, sir; you are my elder.

_Dro_. E. That's a question; how shall we try it?

_Dro_. S. We'll draw cuts for the senior: till then lead thou first.

_Dro_. E. Nay, then, thus:

We came into the world like brother and brother; And now let's go hand in hand, not one before another. [Exeunt.]
Don Pedro, Prince of Arragon.
Don John, his bastard brother.
Claudio, a young lord of Florence.
Benedick, a young lord of Padua.
Leonato, Governor of Messina.
Antonio, his brother.
Balthasar, attendant on Don Pedro.
Conrade, followers of Don John.
Borachio, a follower of Don Pedro.
Friar Francis.
Dogberry, a constable.

Leon. Faith, niece, you tax Signior Benedick too much; but he'll be meet with you, I doubt it not.
Mess. He hath done good service, lady, in these wars.
Beat. You had musty victual, and he hath help to eat it: he is a very valiant treacherous man; he hath an excellent stomach.
Mess. And a good soldier too, lady.
Beat. And a good soldier to a lady: but what is he to a lord?
Mess. A lord to a lord, a man to a man; stuffed with all honourable virtues.
Beat. It is so; indeed; he is no less than a stuffed man: but for the stuffing,—well, we are all mortal.
Leon. You must not, sir, mistake my niece. There is a kind of merry war betwixt Signior Benedick and her; they never meet but there's a skirmish of wit between them.
Beat. Alas! he gets nothing by that. In our last conflict four of his five wits went halting off, and now is the whole man got over with one: so that if he have wit enough to keep himself warm, let him bear it for a difference between himself and his horse; for it is all the wealth that he hath left, to be known a reasonable creature. Who is his companion now? He hath every month a new sworn Mess. Is't possible? [brother.
Beat. Very easily possible: he wears his faith but as the fashion of his hat; it ever changes with the next block.
[books.
Mess. I see, lady, the gentleman is not in your Beat. No; an he were, I would burn my study. But, I pray you, who is his companion? Is there no young squarer now that will make a voyage with him to the devil?
Mess. He is most in the company of the right noble Claudio.
Beat. O Lord, he will hang upon him like a disease: he is sooner caught than the pestilence, and the taker runs presently mad. God help the noble Claudio! if he have caught the Benedick, it will cost him a thousand pound ere a' be cured.
Mess. I will hold friends with you, lady.
Beat. Do, good friend.
Leon. You will never run mad, niece.
Beat. No, not till a hot January.
Mess. Don Pedro is approached.
Enter Don Pedro, Don John, Claudio, Benedick, and Balthasar.

D. Pedro. Good Signior Leonato, you are come to meet your trouble: the fashion of the world is to avoid cost, and you encounter it.

Bene. You are not so much troubled in my house in the likeness of your grace: for trouble being gone, comfort should remain; but when you depart from me, sorrow abides and happiness takes his leave.

D. Pedro. You embrace your charge too willingly. I think this is your daughter.

Leon. I have not told you many times told me so.

Bene. Were you in doubt, sir, that you asked her?

Leon. Signior Benedick, no; for then were you a child.

D. Pedro. You have it full, Benedick: we may guess by this what you are, being a man. Truly, the lady fathers herself. Be happy, lady; for you are like an honourable father.

Bene. If Signior Leonato be her father, she would not have his head on her shoulders for all Messina, as like him as she is.

Bene. Would you have that you will still be talking, Signior Benedick: nobody marks you. [Living?

Bene. What, my dear Lady Disdain! are you yet Beat. Is it possible disdain should die while she hath such meet food to feed it as Signior Benedick?

Bene. 'Tis my lady's face. But I assure you, if you come in her presence, it's a turncoat. But it is certain I am loved of all ladies, only you excepted: and I would I could find in my heart that I had not a hard heart; for, truly, I love none.

Beat. A dear happiness to women: they would else have been troubled with a pertinacious suitor. I thank God and my cold blood. I am of your humour for that: I had rather hear my dog bark at a crow than a man swear he loves me.

Bene. God keep your ladyship still in that mind! so some gentleman or other shall 'scape a predestined scot.

Beat. Scratching could not make it worse, an it were such a face as yours were.

Bene. Well, you are a rare parrot-teacher.

Beat. A bird of my tongue is better than a beast of yours.

Bene. I would my horse had the speed of your tongue, and so good a continuator. But keep your way, I' faith; God's name; I have done.

Beat. You always end with a jade's trick: I know you of old.

D. Pedro. That is the sum of all, Leonato. Signior Claudio and Signior Benedick, my dear friend Leonato hath invited you all. I tell him we shall stay here at the least a month; and he heartily prays some occasion may detain us longer. I dare swear he is no hypocrite, but prays from his heart.

Leon. If you swear, my lord, you shall not be forsworn. [To Don John] Let me bid you welcome, my lord: being reconciled to the prince your brother, I owe you all duty.

D. John. I thank you: I am not of many words, but I thank you.

Leon. Please it your grace lead on?

D. Pedro. Your hand, Leonato; we will go together. [Exeunt all except Benedick and Claudio.

Claud. Benedick, didst thou note the daughter of Signior Leonato?

Bene. I noted her not; but I looked on her.

Claud. Is she not a modest young lady?

Bene. She is: and as an honest man should do, for my simple true judgment: or would you have me speak after my custom, as being a professed tyrant to their sex?

Claud. No; I pray thee speak in sober judgment.

Bene. Why, i' faith, methinks she's too low for a high praise, too brown for a fair praise and too little for a great praise: only this commendation I can afford her, that were she other than she is, she were unhandsome; and being no other but as she is, I do not like her.

Claud. Thou think'st I am in sport: I pray thee tell me truly how thou likest her. [her?

Bene. Would you buy her, that you inquire after Claude. Can the world buy such a jewel?

Bene. Yea, and a case to put it into. But speak you this with a sad brow? or do you play the flouting Jack, to tell us Cupid is a good harmless and Venus a rare demon? Consider what key shall a man take you, to go in the song?

Claud. In mine eye she is the sweetest lady that ever I looked on.

Bene. I can see yet without spectacles and I see no such matter: there's her cousin, and she was not possessed with a fury, exceeds her as much in beauty as the first of May doth the last of December. But I hope you have no intent to turn husband, have you?

Claud. I would scarce trust myself, though I had sworn the contrary, if Hero would be my wife.

Bene. Isn't one to this? In faith, hath not the world one man but he will wear his cap with suspicion? Shall I never see a bachelor of threescore again? Go to, i' faith; and thou wilt needs thrust thy neck into a yoke, wear the print of it and sigh away Sundays. Look; Don Pedro is returned to seek you.

Re-enter Don Pedro.

D. Pedro. What secret hath held you here, that you followed not to Leonato's?

Bene. I would your grace would constrain me to D. Pedro. I charge thee on thy allegiance.

Bene. You hear, Count Claudio: I can be secret as a dumb man; I would have you think so; but, on my allegiance, mark you this, on my allegiance. He is in love. With who? now that is your grace's part. Mark how short his answer is;—With Hero, Leonato's sweet daughter.

Claud. If this were so, so were it uttered.

Bene. Like the old tale, my lord: 'tis not so, nor 't was not so, but, indeed, God forbid it should be so.

Claud. If my passion change not shortly, God forbid it should be otherwise.

D. Pedro. Amen, if you love her; for the lady is very well worthy.

Claud. You speak this to fetch me in, my lord.

D. Pedro. By my troth, I speak my thought.

Claud. And, in faith, my lord, I spoke mine.

Bene. And, by my two faithfuls and troths, my lord, I spoke mine.

Claud. That I love her, I feel.

D. Pedro. That she is worthy, I know.

Bene. That I neither feel how she should be loved nor know how she should be worthy, is the opinion that fire cannot melt out of me: I will die in it at the stake.

D. Pedro. Thou wast ever an obstinate heretic in the despite of beauty.

Claud. And never could maintain his part but in the force of his will.

Bene. That a woman conceiv'd me, I thank her; that she brought me up, I likewise give her most humble thanks; but that I will have a recheat winded in my forehead, or hang my bagle in an invisible baldrick, all women shall pardon me. Because I will not do them the wrong to mistrust, I will do myself the right to trust none: and the fine is, for both: who? One go the finer, I will live a bachelor.

D. Pedro. I shall see thee, ere I die, look pale with love.

Bene. With anger, with sickness, or with hunger, my lord, not with love: prove that ever I lose more blood with love than I will get again with drinking, pick out mine eyes even with a ballad-maker's pen and hang me up at the door of a brothel-house for the sign of blind Cupid.

D. Pedro. Well, if ever thou dost fall from this faith, thou wilt prove a notable argument.

Bene. If I do, hang me in a bottle like a cat and shoot at its head, and be that hits me, let him be clapped on the shoulder, and called Adam.

D. Pedro. Well, as time shall try:

'Bene. In time the savage bull doth bear the yoke.'

D. Pedro. The savage bull may; but if ever the sensible, Benvenuto, if ever. If ever, I suffer Benedick to repair to Leonato's: commend me to him and tell him I will not fail him at supper; for indeed he hath made great preparation.

Bene. I have almost matter enough in me for such an embellish; and so I commit you —

Claud. To the tuition of God: From my house, if I had it,—

D. Pedro. The sixth of July: Your loving friend, Benedick.

Bene. Nay, mock not, mock not. The body of your horse is somewhat garnished with fragments, and the guards are but slightly lashed on neither: you flout old ends any further, examine your conscience: and so I leave you. [Exit.]

Claud. My liege, your highness now may do me good.

D. Pedro. My love is thine to teach: teach it but And thou shalt see how apt it is to learn Any hard lesson that may do thee good.

Claud. Hath Leonato any son, my lord?

D. Pedro. No child but Hero; she's his only heir. Dost thou affect her, Claudio?

Claud. O, my lord, When you went onward on this ended action, I look'd upon her with a soldier's eye, That liked, but had a rougher task in hand Than to drive liking to the name of love: But now I am return'd and that war-thoughts Have left their places vacant, in their rooms Come thronging soft and delicate desires, All prompting me how fair young Hero is, Saying, I liked her ere I went to wars.

D. Pedro. Thou wilt be like a lover presently And tire the bearer with a book of words. If thou dost love fair Hero, cherish it, And I will break with her and with her father And thou shalt have her. Was't not to this end That thou began'st to twist so fine a story?

Claud. How sweetly you do minister to love, That love's grief by his complication! But lest my liking might too sudden seem, I would have salved it with a longer treatise.

D. Pedro. What need the bridge much broader than the flood?

The fairest grant is the necessity, Look, that will serve is fit: 'tis once, thou lov'st, And I will fit thee with the remedy. I know we shall have revelling to-night: I will assume thy part in some disguise And tell fair Hero I am Claudio, And in her bosom I'll unclasp my heart And take her hearing prisoner with the force And strong encounter of my amorous tale; Then after, to have Adam under I will break; And the conclusion is, she shall be thine. In practice let us put it presently. [Exeunt.]

SCENE II.—A room in Leonato's house.

Enter Leonato and Antonio, meeting.

Leon. How now, brother! Where is my cousin, your son? hath he provided this music?

Ant. He is very busy about it. But, brother, I can tell you strange news that you yet dream not of.

Leon. What, is it so?

Ant. As the event stamps them: but they have a good cover; they show well outward. The prince and Count Claudio, walking in a thick-pleached alley in mine orchard, were thus much overheard by a man of mine: the prince discovered to Claudio brevium: therefore my niece your daughter and meant to acknowledge it this night in a dance: and if he found her accordant, he meant to take the present time by the top and instantly break with you of it.

Leon. Hath the fellow any wit that told you this?

Ant. He is a good sharp fellow: I will send for him, and question him yourself.

Leon. No, no; we will hold it as a dream till it appear itself: but I will acquaint my daughter withal, that she may be the better prepared for an answer, if peradventure this be true. Go you and tell her of it. [Enter attendants.] Cousines, you know what you have to do. O, I cry you mercy, friend; go you with me, and I will use your skill. Good cousin, have a care this busy time. [Exeunt.]

SCENE III.—The same.

Enter Don John and Conrade.

Con. What the good-year, my lord! why are you thus out of measure sad?

D. John. There is no measure in the occasion that therefore my heedness is without limit.

Con. You should hear reason.

D. John. And when I have heard it, what blessing brings it? [suffrance.

Con. If not a present remedy, at least a patient

D. John. I wonder that thou, being, as thou sayest, the machi, born under, hadst not to apply a moral medicine to a mortifying mischief. I cannot hide what I am: I must be sad when I have cause and smile at no man's jests, eat when I have stomach and wait for no man's leisure, sleep when I am drowsy and tend on no man's business, laugh when I am merry and claw no man in his humour.

Con. Yea, but you must not make the full show of this till you may do it without controlment. You have of late stood out against your brother, and he hath taken you newly into his grace; where it is impossible you should take true root, but by the faire weather that you make yourself: it is needful that you frame the season for your own harvest.

D. John. I had rather be a canker in a hedge than a rose in his grace, and it better fits my blood to be disdained of all than to fashion a carriage to rob love from any: in this, though I cannot be said to be a flattering honest man, I must not be denied but I am a plain-dealing villain. I am trusted with a muzzle and enfranchised with a clog; therefore I have decreed not to sing in my cage. If I had my mouth, a foul bite; if I had my liberty, I would do my liking: in the meantime let me be that I am and seek not to alter me.

Con. Can you make no use of your discontent?

D. John. I make all use of it, for I use it only. Who comes here?
ACT II.

MUCH ADO ABOUT NOTHING.

SCENE I.

Enter Borachio.

What news, Borachio?

Bora. I came yonder from a great supper: the prince your brother is royally entertained by Leonato; and I can give you intelligence of an intended marriage.

D. John. Shall it serve for any model to build mischief on? What is he for a fool that broths himself to unquietness?

Bora. Marry, it is your brother’s right hand. D. John. Why, the most exquisite Claudio?

Bora. Even he.

D. John. A proper squire! And who, and who? which way looks he?

[Leonato. Bora. Marry, on Hero, the daughter and heir of D. John. A very forward March-clinch! How came you to this?

Bora. Being entertained for a perfumer, as I was smoking a musty room, comes me the prince and Claudio, hand in hand, in sad conference: I whipt me behind the arras; and there heard it agreed that the prince should woo Hero for himself; and having obtained her, give her to Count Claudio.

D. John. Come, come, let us thither: this may prove food to my displeasure. That young start-up hath all the glory of my overthow: if I can cross him any way, I bless myself every way. You are both sure, and will assist me?

Con. To the death, my lord.

D. John. Let us to the great supper: their cheer is the greater that I am subdued. Would the cook were of my mind! Shall we go prove what’s to be done?

Bora. We’ll wait upon your lordship. [Exeunt.

ACT II.

SCENE I.—A ball in Leonato’s house.

Enter Leonato, Antonio, Hero, Beatrice, and others.

Leon. Was not Count John here at supper?

Ant. I saw him not.

Beat. How tarty that gentleman looks! I never can see him but I am heart-burned an hour after.

Hero. He is of a very melancholy disposition.

Beat. He were an excellent man that were made just in the midway between him and Benedick: the one is no more like an image and says nothing, and the other too like my lady’s eldest son, evermore tattling.

Leon. Then half Signior Benedick’s tongue in Count John’s mouth, and half Count John’s melancholy in Signior Benedick’s face.—

Beat. With a good leg and a good foot, uncle, and money enough in his purse, such a man would win any woman in the world, if a’ could get her good will.

Leon. By my troth, niece, thou wilt never get thee a husband, if thou be so shrewd of thy tongue.

Ant. In faith, she’s too curt.

Beat. Too curtse is more than curt; I shall lessen God’s sending that way: for it is said, ‘God sends a curst cow short horns;’ but to a cow too curtse he sends no horns.

Leon. So, by being too curtse, God will send you no horns.

Beat. Just, if he send me no husband; for the which blessing I am at him upon my knees every morning and evening. Lord, I could not endure a husband with a beard on his face: I had rather lie in the woollen.

Leon. You may light on a husband that hath no beard.

Beat. What should I do with him? dress him in my apparel and make him my waiting-gentlewoman? He that hath a beard is more than a youth, and he that hath no beard is less than a man: and be that is more than a youth is not for me, and he that is less than a man, I am not for him: therefore I will even take sixpence in earnest of the bear-ward, and lead his apes into hell.

Leon. Well, then, go you into hell?

Beat. No, but to the gate; and there will the devil meet me, like an old cuckold, with horns on his head, and say, ‘Get you to heaven, Beatrice, get you to heaven; here’s no place for you maids:’ so deliver I up my apes, and away to Saint Peter for the heavens; he shows me where the bachelors sit, and there live we as merry as the day is long.

Ant. [To Hero] Well, niece, I trust you will be ruled by your father.

Beat. Yes, faith; it is my cousin’s duty to make curtsy and say, ‘Father, as it please you.’ But yet, for all that, cousin, let him be a handsome fellow, or else make another curtsy and say, ‘Father, as it please me?’

Leon. Well, niece, I hope to see you one day fitted with a husband.

Beat. Not till God make men of some other metal than earth. Would it not grieve a woman to be overmastered with a piece of valiant dust? to make an account of her life to a cloid of wayward marl? No, uncle, I’ll none: Adam’s sons are my brethren; and, truly, I hold it a sin to match in my kindred.

Leon. Daughter, remember what I told you: if the prince do solicit you in that kind, you know your answer.

Beat. The fault will be in the music, cousin, if you be not wooded in good time: if the prince be too important, tell him there is measure in every thing, and so dance out the answer. For, hear me, Hero: wooing, wedding, and repelling, is as Scotch jigs, a measure, and a cinque pace: the first suit is hot and hasty, like a Scotch jig, and full as fantastical; the wedding, mannerly-modest, as a measure, full of state and anciently; and then comes repentance, and with his bad legs, falls into the cinque pace faster and faster, till he sink into his grave.

Leon. Cousin, you apprehend passing shrewdly.

Beat. I have a good eye, uncle; I can see a church by daylight.

Leon. The revellers are entering, brother; make good room.

[All put on their masks.

Enter Don Pedro, Claudio, Benedick, Balthasar, Don John, Borachio, Margaret, Ursula, and others, masked.

D. Pedro. Lady, will you walk about with your friend?

Hero. So you walk softly and look sweetly and say nothing, I am yours for the walk; and especially when I walk away.

D. Pedro. With me in your company?

Hero. I may say so, when I please.

D. Pedro. And when please you to say so?

Hero. When I like your favour; for God defend the lute should be like the case!

D. Pedro. My visor is Philemon’s roof; within the house is Jove.

Hero. Why, then, your visor should be thatched.

D. Pedro. Speak low, if you speak love.

[Drawing her aside.
Balth. Well, I shall not wrong your own sake; for I have many ill qualities.
Marg. I know they are such that sometimes the hearers may cry, Amen.
Balth. God match me with a good dancer!
Marg. And God keep him out of my sight when the dance is done! Answer, clerk.
Balth. A more wise — the clerk is answered. Y's, I know you well enough; you are Signior Antonio.
Ant. At a word, I am not.
Urs. I know you by the wagging of your head.
Ant. To tell you true, I counterfeited him.
Urs. You could never do him so ill, unless you were the very man. Here’s his dry hand up and down: you are he, you are he.
Ant. At a word, I am not.
Urs. Come, come, do you think I do not know you by your excellent wit? can virtue hide itself? Go to, signior, you are he: graces will appear, and there’s an end.
Beat. Will you not tell me who told you so?
Bene. No, you shall pardon me.
Beat. Nor will you not tell me who you are?
Bene. Not I, believe me.
Beat. That I was disdainful, and that I had my good wit out of the 'Hundred Merry Tales': — well, this was Signior Benedick that said so.
Bene. What’s he?
Beat. I am sure you know him well enough.
Bene. Not I, I believe me.
Beat. Did he never make you laugh?
Bene. I pray you, what is he?
Beat. Why, he is the prince’s jester: a very dull fool; only his gift is in devising impossible slanderers: none but libertines delight in him; and the commendation is not in his wit, but in his villany; for he both pleases men and angers them, and then they laugh at him and beat him. I am sure he is in the fleet: I would he had boarded me.
Bene. When I know the gentleman, I’ll tell him what you say.
Beat. Do, do: he’ll but break a comparison or two on me; which, peradventure not marked or not laughed at, strikes him into melancholy; and then there’s a partridge wing saved, for the fool will eat no supper that night. [Music.] We must follow the lord chamberlain.
Beat. Nay, if they lead to any ill, I will leave them at the next turning.

D. Pedro. Now, signior, where’s the count? did you see him?
Bene. Troth, my lord, I have played the part of Lady Fame. I found him here as melancholy as a lodge in a warren: I told him, and I think I told him true, that your grace had got the good will of this young lady; and I offered him my company to a willow-tree, either to make him a garland, as being forsaken, or to bind him up a rod, as being worthy to be whipped.

D. Pedro. To be whipped! What’s his fault?
Bene. The flat transgression of a school-boy, who, being overjoyed with finding a bird’s nest, shows it his companions, and, by his showing it, it.
D. Pedro. Will you make a trust a transgression? The transgression is in the stealer.
Bene. Yet it had not been amiss the rod had been made, and the garland too; for the garland he might have worn himself, and the rod he might have bestowed on you, who, as I take it, have stolen his bird’s nest.
D. Pedro. I will but teach them to sing, and restore them to the owner.
Bene. If their singing answer your saying, by my faith, you say honestly.

D. Pedro. The Lady Beatrice hath a quarrel to you: the gentleman that danced with her told her she is much wronged by you.
Bene. O, she misused me past the endurance of a block! an oak but with one green leaf on it would have answered her; my very visor began to assume her and scold with her. She told me, not thinking I had been myself, that I was the prince’s jester, that I was duller than a great thaw: huddling jest upon jest with such impossible conveyance upon me that I stood like a man at a mark, with a whole army shooting at me. She speaks poniards, and every word a stab: if her breath were as terrible as her terminations, there were no living near her;
she would infect to the north star. I would not marry her, though she were endowed with all that Adam had left him before he transgressed: she would have made Hercules have turned spit, yea, and have clef his club to make the fire too. Come, talk not of her; you too, you; an internal Ate in your apparel. I would to God some scholar would conjure her; for certainly, while she is here, a man may live as quiet in hell as in a sanctuary; and people sin upon purpose, because they would go thither; so, indeed, all disquiet, horror and perturbation follows her.

D. Pedro. Look, here she comes.

Enter Claudio, Beatrice, Hero, and Leonato.

Bene. Will your grace command me any service to the world’s end? I will go on the slightest errand now to the Antipodes that you can devise to send me on. I will fetch you a tooth-picker now from the furthest inch of Asia, bring you the length of Prester John’s foot, fetch you a hair off the great Cham’s beard, do you any embassy to the Pigmies, rather than hold three words’ conference with the harmless. You have no emolument for me?

D. Pedro. None, but to desire your good company.

Bene. O God, sir, here’s a dish I love not: I cannot endure my Lady Tongue. [Exit.

D. Pedro. Come, lady, come; you have lost the heart of Signior Benedick.

Bene. He has lent it me awhile; and I gave him use for it, a double heart for his single one; marry, once before he won it of me with false dice, therefore your grace may well say I have lost it.

D. Pedro. You have put him down, lady, you have put him down.

Bene. So I would not he should do me, my lord, lest I should prove the mother of fools. I have brought Count Claudio, whom you sent me to seek.

D. Pedro. Why, how now, count! wherefore are you sad?

Claud. Not sad, my lord.

D. Pedro. How then? sick?

Claud. Neither, my lord.

Beat. The count is neither sad, nor sick, nor merry, nor well; but civil count, civil as an orange, and something of that jealous complexion.

D. Pedro. I faith, lady, I think your Blazon to be true; though I have sworn of him so, his conceit is false. Here, Claudio, I have woddied in thy name, and fair Hero is won: I have broke with her father, and his good will obtained; name the day of marriage, and God give thee joy!

Leon. Count, take of me my daughter, and with her my fortunes: his grace hath made the match, and all grace say Amen to it.

Claud. Silence is the perfectest herald of joy: I were but little happy, if I could say how much. Lady, as you are mine, I am yours: I give away myself, and you, and all upon the exchange.

Beat. Speak, cousin; or, if you cannot, stop his mouth with a kiss, and let him speak neither.

D. Pedro. In faith, lady, you have a merry heart.

Beat. Yea, my lord: I think it, poor fool, it keeps on the windy side of care. My cousin tells him in his ear that he is in her heart.

Claud. And so she doth, cousin.

Beat. Good Lord, for alliance! Thus goes every one to the world but I, and I am sunburnt: I may sit in a corner and cry heigh-ho for a husband!

D. Pedro. Lady Beatrice, I will get you one.

Claud. Not one, nor any of your father’s getting. Hath your grace ne’er a brother like you? Your father got excellent husbands, if a maid could come by them.

D. Pedro. Will you have me, lady?

Beat. No, my lord, unless I might have another for working-days: your grace is too costly to wear every day. But I beseech your grace, pardon me: I was born to speak all mirth and no matter.

D. Pedro. Your silence most offends me, and to be merry best becomes you; for, out of question, you were born the more merciful. Bead. No, sure, my lord, my mother cried; but then there was a star danced, and under that was I born. Cousins, God give you joy!

Leon. niece, will you look to those things I told you of?

Beat. I cry you mercy, uncle. By your grace’s pardon.

[Exit.

D. Pedro. By my troth, a pleasant-spirited lady.

Leon. There’s little of the melancholy element in her, my lord: she is never sad but when she sleeps, and not even sad then; for I have heard my daughter say, she is often dreamed of unhappiness and waked herself with laughing.

D. Pedro. She cannot endure to hear tell of a husband.

Leon. O, by no means: she mocks all her woers out of suit.

D. Pedro. She were an excellent wife for Benedick.

Leon. O Lord, my lord, if they were but a week married, they would talk themselves mad.

D. Pedro. County Claudio, when mean you to go to church?

Claud. To-morrow, my lord: time goes on crouches that have any of his rise.

Leon. Not till Monday, my dear son, which is hence a just seven-night; and a time too brief, too, to have all things answer my mind.

D. Pedro. Come, you shake the head at so long a breathing: but, I warrant thee, Claudio, the time shall not go dully by us. I will in the interim undertake one of Hercules’ labours: which is, to bring Signior Benedick and the Lady Beatrice into a mountain of affection the one with the other. I would fain have it a match, and I doubt not but to fashion it, if you three will but minister such assistance as I shall give you direction.

Leon. My Lord, I aim for you, though it cost me ten nights’ watchings.

Claud. And I, my lord.

D. Pedro. And you too, gentle Hero?

Hero. I will do any modest office, my lord, to help my cousin to be good company.

D. Pedro. And Benedick is not the unhopefullest husband that I know. Thus far can I praise him: he is of a noble strain, of approved valour and confirmed honesty. I will teach you how to humour your cousin, that she shall fall in love with Benedick; and I, with your two helps, will so practice on Benedick that, in despite of his quick wit and his queuey stomach, he shall fall in love with Beatrice. If we can do this, Cupid is no longer an archer: his glory shall be ours, for we are the only love-gods. Go in with me, and I will tell you my drift.

[Exeunt.

SCENE II.—The same.

Enter Don John and Borachio.

D. John. It is so; the Count Claudio shall marry the daughter of Leonato.

Bora. Nor your cousin; but I can cross it.

D. John. Any bar, any cross, any impediment will be medicable to me: I am sick in displeasure to him, and whatsoever comes athwart his affection ranges evenly with mine. How canst thou cross this marriage?

Bora. Not directly, my lord; but so covertly that no dishonesty shall appear in me.

D. John. Show me briefly how.

Bora. I think I told you lordship a year since, how much I am in the favour of Margaret, the waiting-gentlewoman to Hero.
MUCH ADO ABOUT NOTHING.

ACT II.

Bor. I can, at any unseasonable instant of the night, and shall, at her lady's chamber-window.

D. John. What life is in that, to be the death of this marriage?

Bor. The poison of that lies in you to temper. Go you to the prince your brother; spare not to tell him that he hath wronged his honour in marrying the renowned Claudio — whose estimation do you mightily hold up — to a contaminated state, such as one as Hero.

D. John. What proof shall I make of that?

Bor. I hope enough to misuse the prince, to vex Claudio, and undo Hero and kill Leonato. Look you for any other issue?

D. John. Only to despise them, I will endeavour anything.

Bor. Go, then: find me a meet hour to draw Don Pedro and the Count Claudio alone: tell them that you know that Hero loves me; intend a kind of zeal both to the prince and Claudio, as, in love of your brother's honour, who hath made this match, and his friend's reputation, who is thus like to be cozened with the semblance of a paup — that you have discovered this. They will scarcely believe this without trial: offer them instances; which shall bear no less likelihood than to see me at her chamber-window, hear me call Margaret Hero, hear Margaret term me Claudio; and bring them to see this the very night before the intended wedding — for in the meantime I will so fashion the matter that Hero shall be absent, and there shall appear such seeming truth of Hero's disloyalty that jealousy shall be called assurance and all the preparation overthrown.

D. John. Grow this to what adverse issue it can, I will put it in practice. Be cunning in the working this, and thy fee is a thousand ducats.

Bor. Be you constant in the accusation, and my cunning shall not shame me.

D. John. I will presently go learn their day of marriage.

[Exeunt.]

SCENE III. — Leonato's orchard.

Enter Benedick.

Bene. Boy! Enter Boy.

Boy. Signior?

Bene. In my chamber-window lies a book: bring it hither to me in the orchard.

Boy. I am here already, sir.

Bene. I know that; but I would have thee hence, and here again. [Exit Boy.] I do much wonder that one man, seeing how much another man is a fool when he dedicates his behaviours to love, will, after he hath laughed at such shallow follies in others, become the argument of his own scorn by failing in love: and such a man is Claudio. I have known when there was no music with him but the drum and the fife; and now had he rather hear the tabor and the pipe: I have known when he would have walked ten mile a-foot to see a good armour; and now will he lie ten nights awake, carving the fashion of a new doublet. He was wont to speak plain and to the purpose, like an honest man and a soldier; and now is he turned orthography; his words are a very fantastical banquet, just so many strange dishes. May I be so converted and see with these eyes? I cannot tell; I think not: I will not be sworn but love may transform me to an oyster; but I'll take my oath on it, till he have made an oyster of me, he shall never make me such a fool. One woman is fair, yet I am well; another is wise, yet I am well; another virtuous, yet I am well; but till all graces be in one woman, one woman shall not come in my grace. Rich she shall be, that's certain; wise, or I'll not; virtuous, or I'll never cheapen her; fair, or I'll never look on her; mild, or come not near me; noble, or not I for an angel; of good discourse, an excellent musician, and her hair shall be of what colour it please God. Ha! the prince and Monsieur Love! I will hide me in the arbour.

[Wild draws.]

Enter Don Pedro, Claudio, and Leonato.

D. Pedro. Come, shall we hear this music?

Claud. Yea, my good lord. How still the even-As hush'd on purpose to grace harmony! [Sing, Is, D. Pedro. See you where Benedick hath hid himself?

Claud. O, very well, my lord: the music ended, We'll fit the child-fox with a pennyworth.

Enter Balthasar with Music.

D. Pedro. Come, Balthasar, we'll hear that song again.

Balth. O, good my lord, tax not so bad a voice To slander music any more than once.

D. Pedro. It is the witness still of excellency To put a strange face on his own perfection. I pray thee, sing, and let me woo no more.

Balth. Because you talk of wooing, I will sing;

Since many a woor doth commence his suit To her he thinks not worthy, yet he wooes,

Yet will he swear he loves. Now, pray thee, come;
Or, if thou wilt hold longer argument, Do it in notes.

Balth. Note this before my notes;
There's not a note of mine that's worth the noting.

D. Pedro. Why, these are very crotchetts that he speaks:

Note, notes, forsooth, and nothing. [Air.

Bene. Now, divine air! now is his soul ravished! Is it not strange that sheep's guts should hale souls out of men's bodies? Well, a horn for my money, when all's done.

THE SONG.

Balth. Sigh no more, ladies, sigh no more,

Men were deceivers ever,

One foot in sea and one on shore,

To one thing constant never.

This sigh not so, but let them go,

And be you blithe and bonny,

Converting all your sounds of woe

Into Hey nonny, nonny.

Sing no more ditties, sing no moe,

Of dumps so dull and heavy;

The fraud of men was ever so,

Since summer first was leafy:

Then sigh not so, &c.

D. Pedro. By my truth, a good song.

Balth. And an ill singer, my lord.

D. Pedro. Ha, no, no, faith; thou singest well enough for a shift.

Bene. An he had been a dog that should have howled thus, they would have hanged him; and I pray God his bad voice bode no mischief. I had as lief have heard the night-raven, come what plague could have come after it.

D. Pedro. Yea, marry, dost thou hear, Balthasar? I pray thee, get us some excellent music; for to- morrow night we would have it at the Lady Hero's chamber-window.

Balth. The best I can, my lord.

Come hither, Leonato. What was it you told me of to-day, that your niece Beatrice was in love with Signior Benedick?
ACT II.

MUCH ADO ABOUT NOTHING.

SCENE III.

Claud. O, ay: stalk on, stalk on; the fowl sits, I did never think that lady would have loved any man.

Leon. No, nor I neither; but most wonderful that she should so dote on Signior Benedick, whom she hath in all outward behaviours seemed ever to abhor.

Beat. Is't possible? Sits the wind in that corner? Leon. By my troth, my lord, I cannot tell what to think of it but that she loves him with an engrossed affection; it is past the infinité of thought.

Claud. May be she both but counterfeit.

Claud. Faith, like enough.

Leon. O God, counterfeit! There was never counterfeit of passion came so near the life of passion as she discovers it.

D. Pedro. Why, what effects of passion shows she?

Claud. Bait the hook well: this fish will bite.

Leon. What effects, my lord? She will sit you, you heard my daughter tell you how.

Claud. She did, indeed.

D. Pedro. How, how, I pray you? You amaze me: I would have thought her spirit had been invincible; she had been proof against all assaults of affection.

Leon. I would have sworn it had, my lord; especially against Benedick.

Beat. I should think this a gull, but the white-bearded fellow speaks it: knavery cannot, sure, hide himself in such reverence.

Claud. He hath taken the infection: hold it up.

D. Pedro. Hath she made her affection known to Benedick?

Leon. No; and swears she never will: that's her torment.

Claud. 'Tis true, indeed; so your daughter says: 'Sir, I,' says she,' that have so oft encountered him with scorn, write to him that I love him?'

Leon. This says she now when she is beginning to write to him; for she'll be up twenty times a night, and there she will sit in her smock till she have writ a sheet of paper: my daughter tells us all.

Claud. Now you talk of a sheet of paper, I remember a pretty jest your daughter told us of.

Leon. O, when she had writ it and was reading it over, she found Benedick and Beatrice between the sheet.

Claud. That.

Leon. O, she tore the letter into a thousand half-pence; railed at herself, that she should be so immodest to write to one that she knew would flout her; 'I measure him,' says she, 'by my own spirit; for I should flout him, if he write to me; yea, though I love him, I should.'

Claud. Then down upon her knees she falls, weeps, sobs, beats her heart, tears her hair, prays, curses; 'O sweet Benedick! God give me patience!'

Leon. She doth indeed: my daughter says so: and the ecstasy hath so much overborne her that my daughter is sometime afraid she will do a desperate outrage to herself: it is very true.

D. Pedro. It were good that Benedick knew of it by some other, if she will not discover it.

Claud. To what end? He would make but a sport of it and torment the poor lady worse.

D. Pedro. An he should, it were an arms to hang him. She's an excellent sweet lady; and, out of all suspicion, she is virtuous.

Claud. And she is exceeding wise.

D. Pedro. In everything but in loving Benedick. Leon. O, my lord, wisdom and blood combating in so fair a body, we have ten proofs to one that blood hath the better sway for her, as she have just cause, being her uncle and her guardian.

D. Pedro. I would she had bestowed this dotage on me: I would have daffed all other respects and made her half myself. I pray you, tell Benedick of it, and hear what a' will say.

Leon. Were it good, think you?

Claud. Hero thinks surely she will die; for she says she will die, if he love her not, and she will die, ere she make her love known, and she will die, if he woo her, rather than she will bate one breath of her accustomed crossness.

D. Pedro. She doth well: if she should make tender of her love, 'tis very possible he'll scorn it; for the man, as you know all, hath a contemptible

Claud. He is a very proper man.

D. Pedro. He hath indeed a good outward happiness.

Claud. Before God! and, in my mind, very wise.

D. Pedro. He doth indeed show some sparks that are like wit.

Claud. And I take him to be valiant.

D. Pedro. As Hector, I assure you: and in the managing of quarrels you may say he is wise: for either he avoids them with great discretion, or undertakes them with a most Christian-like fear.

Leon. If he do fear God, a' must necessarily-keep peace: if he break the peace, he ought to enter into a quarrel with fear and trembling.

D. Pedro. A' does well to fear God. For the man doth fear God, howsoever it seems not in him by some large jests he will make. Well, I am sorry for your niece. Shall we go seek Benedick, and tell him of her love?

Claud. Never tell him, my lord: let her wear it out with good counsel.

Leon. Nay, that's impossible: she may wear her heart out first.

D. Pedro. Well, we will hear further of it by your daughter: let it cool the while. I love Benedick well; and I could wish he would modestly explain himself, to see how much he is unworthy so good a lady.

Leon. My lord, will you walk? dinner is ready.

Claud. If he do not dote on her upon this, I will never trust my expectation.

D. Pedro. Let there be the same net spread for her: and that must your daughter and her gentlewomen carry. The sport will be, when they hold one an opinion of another's dotage, and no such matter: that's the scene that I would see, which will be merely a dumb-show. Let us send her to call him in to dinner. [Exeunt Don Pedro, Claudia, and Leonato.]

Beat. [Aside.] There can be no trick: the conference was sadly borne. They have the truth of this from Hero. They seem to pity the lady: it seems her affections have their full bent. Love me! why, it must be requited. I hear how I am censured: they say I will bear myself proudly, if I perceive the love come from her; they say too that she will rather die than give any sign of affection. I did never think to marry: I must not seem proud: happy are they that hear their detractions and can put them to mending. They say the lady is fair: 'tis a truth, I can bear them witness; and virtuous: 'tis so, I cannot reprove it; and wise, but for loving me: by my troth, it is no addition to her wit, nor no great argument of her folly, for I will be horribly in love with her. I may chance have some old quirks and remnants of wit broken on me, because I have railed so long against marriage: but doth not the appetite alter? a man loves the meat in his youth that he cannot endure in his age. Shall quips and sentences and these paper bullets of the brain awe a man from the career of his humour? No, the world must be peopled. When I said I would die a bachelor, I did not think I should live to be married. Here comes Beatrice. By this day! she's a fair lady: I do spy some marks of love in her.

Enter Beatrice.

Beat. Against my will I am sent to bid you come in to dinner.
ACT III.

MUCH ADO ABOUT NOTHING.

SCENE I. — Leonato's garden.

Enter Hero, Margaret, and Ursula.

Hero. Good Margaret, run thee to the parlour; There shalt thou find my cousin Beatrice Proposing with the prince and Claudio; Whisper her ear and tell her, I and Ursula Walk in the orchard and our whole discourse Is all of her; say that thou overheard'st us; And bid her steal into the pleased bower, Where honeysuckles, ripen'd by the sun, Forbid the sun to enter, like favourites, Made proud by princes, that advance their pride Against that power that bred it; there will she hide To listen our purpose. This is thy office: [her, Bear thee well in it and leave us alone.

Mary. I'll make her come, I warrant you, presently. [Exit.

Hero. Now, Ursula, when Beatrice doth come, As we do trace this alley up and down, Our talk must only be of Benedick. When I do name him, let it be thy part To praise him more than ever man did merit: My talk to thee must be how Benedick Is sick in love with Beatrice. Of this matter Is little Cupid's crafty arrow made, That only wounds by hearsay.

Enter Beatrice, behind.

Now begin; For look where Beatrice, like a bowstring, runs Close by the ground, to hear our conference. Urs. The pleasant'st angling is to see the fish Cut with her golden oars the silver stream, And greedily devour the treacherous bait: So angle we for Beatrice; who even now Is couched in the woodbine coverture. Fear you not part of the tale of her? Hero. Then go we near her, that her ear lose nothing Of the sweet bait that we lay for it. [ing

No, truly, Ursula, she is too disdainful; I know her spirits are as coy and wild As haggards of the rock.

Urs. But are you sure That Benedick loves Beatrice so entirely? Hero. So says the prince and my new-trothed lord. Urs. And did they bid you tell her of it, madam? Hero. They did entreat me to acquaint her of it; But I persuaded them, if they loved Benedick, To wish him wrestle with affection, And never to let Beatrice know of it. Urs. Why did you so? Dost not the gentleman Deserve as full as fortunate a bed As ever Beatrice shall couch upon? Hero. O god of love! I know he doth deserve As much as may be yielded to a man: But Nature never framed a woman's heart Of prouder stuff than that of Beatrice; Disdain and scorn ride sparkling in her eyes, Misprising what they look on, and her wit Values itself so highly that to her All matter else seems weak: she cannot love,

ACT III.

Nor take no shape nor project of affection, She is so self-undared. Urs. Sure, I think so; And therefore certainly it was not good She knew his love, lest she make sport at it. Hero. Why, you speak truth. I never yet saw man, How wise, how noble, young, how rarely featured, But she would spell him backward: if fair-faced, She would swear the gentleman should be her sister; If black, why, Nature, drawing of an antique, Made a foul blot; if tall, a lance ill-headed; If low, an agate very vilely cut, If speaking why, a vane with all winds; If silent, why, a block moved with none. So turns she every man the wrong side out And never gives to truth and virtue that Which simperlessness and merit purchase.

Urs. Sure, sure, such earing is not commendable. Hero. No, not to be so odd and from all fashions As Beatrice is, cannot be commendable: But who dare tell her so? If I should speak, She would mock me into air; O, she would laugh me Out of myself, press me to death with wit. Therefore let Benedick, like cover'd fire, Consume away in sighs, waste inwardly: It were a better death than die with mocks, Which is as bad as die with tickling. Urs. Yet tell her of it: hear what she will say. Hero. No; rather I will go to Benedick And counsel him to fight against his passion. And, truly, I'll devise some honest slanderers To stain my cousin with: one doth not know How much an ill word may empoison liking. Urs. O, do not do your cousin such a wrong. She cannot be so much without true judgment Having so swift and excellent a wit As she is said to have; none ever saw So rare a gentleman as Signior Benedick. Hero. He is the only man of Italy, Always excepted my dear Claudio. Urs. I pray you, be not angry with me, madam, Speaking my fancy. Signior Benedick, For shape, for bearing, argument and valour, Goes foremost in report through Italy. Hero. Indeed, he hath an excellent good name. Urs. His excellence did earn it, ere he had it. When are you married, madam? Hero. Why, every day to-morrow. Come, go in: I'll show thee some affaires, and have thy counsel Which is the best to furnish me to-morrow. Urs. She's lined, I warrant you: we have caught her, madam. Hero. If it proves so, then loving goes by haps: Some Cupid kills with arrows, some with traps. [Exit Hero and Ursula.

Beaut. [Coming forward] What fire is in mine ears? Can this be true? Staud I condemn'd for pride and scorn so much? Contempt, farewell! and maiden pride, adieu! No glory lives behind the lack of such. And, Benedick, love on; I will requite thee. Turning my wild heart to thy loving hand:
SCENE II. — A room in Leonato's house.

Enter Don Pedro, Claudia, Benedick, and Leonato.

D. Pedro. I do but stay till your marriage be consummated, and then go I toward Arragon.

Claud. I'll bring you thither, my lord, if you'll vouchsafe me.

D. Pedro. Nay, that would be as great a soil in the new gloss of your marriage as to show a child his new coat and forbid him to wear it. I will only be bold with Benedick for his company; for, from the crown of his head to the sole of his foot, he is all mirth: he hath twice or thrice cut Cupid's bow-string and the little hang-man dare not shoot at him: he hath a heart as sound as a bell and his tongue is the clapper, for what his heart thinks his tongue speaks.

Bene. Gallants, I am not as I have been.

Leon. Is it so? I must think you are sadness.

Claud. I hope he be in love.

D. Pedro. Hang him, trust! there's no true drop of blood in him, to be truly touched with love: if he be sad, he wants money.

Bene. I have the toothache.

D. Pedro. Draw it.

Bene. Hang it! [Wards.

D. Pedro. You must hang it first, and draw it after.

D. Pedro. What! sigh for the toothache?

Leon. Where is but a humour or a worm.

Bene. Well, every one can master a grief but he that has it.

Claud. Yet say I, he is in love.

D. Pedro. There is no appearance of fancy in him, unless it be a fancy that he hath to strange disguises; as, to be a Dutchman to-day, a Frenchman to-morrow, or in the shape of two countries at once; as, a German from the waist downward, all slops, and a Spaniard from the hip upward, no doublet. Unless he have a fancy to this foolery, as it appears he hath, he is no fool for fancy, as you would have it appear he is.

Claud. If he be not in love with some woman, there is no believing old signs: a' brushes his hat o'mornings; what should that bode?

D. Pedro. Hath any man seen him at the barber's?

Claud. No, but the barber's man hath been seen with him, and the old ornament of his cheek hath already stuffed muslin-balls.

Leon. Indeed, he looks younger than he did, by the loss of a beard.

D. Pedro. Nay, a' rubs himself with civet: can you smell him out by that? [In love.

Claud. That's as much as to say, the sweet youth's D. Pedro. The greatest note of it is his melancholy.

Claud. And when was he wench to wash his face?

D. Pedro. Yeas, or to paint himself? for the which, I hear what they say of him.

Claud. Nay, but his jesting spirit: which is now crept into a lute-string and now governed by stops.

D. Pedro. Indeed, that tells a heavy tale for him: conclude, conclude he is in love.

Claud. Nay, but I know who loves him.

D. Pedro. That would I know too: I warrant, one that knows him not.

Claud. Yes, and his ill conditions; and, in despite of all that, [Wards.

D. Pedro. She shall be buried with her face up.

Bene. Yet is this no charm for the toothache. Old signor, walk aside with me: I have studied eight or nine wise words to speak to you, which these hobby-horses must not hear.

[Exeunt Benedick and Leonato.

D. Pedro. For my life, to break with him about Beatrice.

Claud. 'Tis even so. Hero and Margaret have by this played their parts with Beatrice; and then the two bears will not bite one another when they meet.

Enter Don John.

D. John. My lord and brother, God save you!

D. Pedro. Good den, brother.

D. John. If your leisure served, I would speak with you.

D. Pedro. In private?

D. John. If it please you: yet Count Claudia may hear; for what I would speak of concerns him.

D. Pedro. What's the matter?

D. John. [To Claudia] Means your lordship to be married to-morrow?

D. Pedro. You know he does.

D. John. I know not that, when he knows what I Claud. If there be any impediment, I pray you discover it.

D. John. You may think I love you not: let that appear hereafter, and aim but at me by that I now will manifest. For my brother, I think he holds you well, and in dearness of heart hath holp to effect your ensuing marriage:—surely suit ill spent and labour ill bestowed.

D. Pedro. Why, what's the matter?

D. John. I came hither to tell you; and, circumstances shortened, for she has been too long a talking of, the lady is disloyal.

Claud. Who, Hero?

D. John. Even she; Leonato's Hero, your Hero, every man's Hero.

Claud. Disloyal?

D. John. The word is too good to paint out her wickedness: I could say she were worse: think you of a worse title, and I will fit her to it. Wonder not till further warrant: go but with me to-night, you shall see her chamber-window entered, even the night before her wedding-day: if you love her then, to-morrow wed her; but it would better fit your honour to change your mind.

Claud. May this be so?

D. Pedro. I will not think it.

D. John. If you dare not trust that you see, confer not that you know: if you will follow me, I will show you enough: and when you have seen more and heard more, proceed accordingly.

Claud. If I see anything to-night why I should not marry her to-morrow, in the congregation, where I should wed, there will I shame her.

D. Pedro. And, as I woe'd for thee to obtain her, I will join with thee to disgrace her.

D. John. I will disprase her no farther till you are my witnesses; bear it coldly but till midnight, and let the issue show itself.

D. Pedro. O day untowardly turned!

Claud. O mischief strangely thwarting!

D. John. O plague right well prevented! so will you say when you have seen the sequel. [Exeunt.

SCENE III. — A street.

Enter Dogberry and Verges with the Watch.

Dog. Are you good men and true?

Verge. Yes, or else it were pity but they should suffer salutation, body and soul.

Dog. Nay, that were a punishment too good for them, if they should have any allegiance in them, being chosen for the prince's watch.

Verge. Well, give them their charge, neighbour Dogberry.

Dog. First, who think you the most desertless man to be constable?

[First Watch. Hugh Otecake, sir, or George Seacole; for they can write and read.

101
ACT III.

MUCH ADO ABOUT NOTHING.

SCENE III.

Dog. Come hither, neighbour Seacoole. God hath blessed you with a good name; to be a well-favoured man is the gift of fortune; but to write and read comes by nature.

Sec. Watch. Both which, master constable,—

Dog. You have: I knew it would be your answer. Well, for your favour, sir, why, give God thanks, and make no boast of it; and for your writing and reading, let that appear when there is no need of such vanity. You are thought here to be the most senseless, and you may for the constable of the watch; therefore bear you the lantern. This is your charge: you shall comprehend all vagram men; you are to bid any man stand, in the prince’s name.

Sec. Watch. How if a will not stand?

Dog. Why, then, take no note of him, but let him go; and presently call the rest of the watch together and thank God you are rid of a knave.

Verg. If he will not stand when he is bidden, he is none of the prince’s subjects.

Dog. True, and they are to meddle with none but the prince’s subjects. You shall also make no noise in the streets for, for the watch to babble and to talk is most tolerable and not to be endured.

Watch. We will rather sleep than talk: we know what belongs to a watch.

Dog. Why, you speak like an ancient and most quiet watchman; for I cannot see how sleeping should offend: only, have a care that your bills be not stolen. Well, you are to call at all the ale-houses, and bid those that are drunk get them to bed.

Watch. How if they will not?

Dog. Why, then, let them alone till they are sober: if they will then the better answer, you may say they are not the men you took them for.

Watch. Well, sir.

Dog. If you meet a thief, you may suspect him, by virtue of your office, to be no true man; and, for such kind of men, the less you meddle or make with them, why, then you save for your honesty.

Watch. If we know him to be a thief, shall we not lay hands on him?

Dog. Truly, by your office, you may; but I think they that touch pitch will be defiled: the most peaceable way for you, if you do take a thief, is to let him show what he will do to you, and then you can testify:—

Verg. You have been always called a merciful man, partner.

Dog. Truly, I would not hang a dog by my will, much more a man who hath any honesty in him.

Verg. If you hear a child cry in the night, you must call to the nurse and bid her still it.

Watch. How if the nurse be asleep and will not hear us?

Dog. Why, then, depart in peace, and let the child wake her with crying; for the ewe that will not bear her lamb when it baes will never answer a calf when he bleats.

Verg. ’Tis very true.

Dog. This is the end of the charge: you, constable, are to present the prince’s own person: if you meet the prince in the night, you may stay him.

Verg. Why, truly, that I think I cannot.

Dog. Five shillings to one on’t, with any man that knows the statues, he may stay him: marry, not without the prince be willing; for, indeed, the watch ought to offend no man; and it is an offence to stay a man against his will.

Verg. Why, my lord, I think it be so.

Dog. Ha, ah, ha! Well, masters, good night: and there be any matter of weight chances, call up me: keep your fellows’ counsellors and your own; and good night. Come, neighbour.

Watch. Well, masters, we hear your charge: let us presently call upon the church-bench till two, and then all to bed.

One word more, honest neighbours. I pray you, watch about Signior Leonato’s door; for the wedding being there to-morrow, there is a great coil to-night. Adieu: be vigilant, I beseech you.

[Exit Dogberry and Verges.

Enter Borachio and Conrade.

Bora. What, Conrade!

Watch. [Aside] Peace! stir not.

Bora. Conrade, I say!

Con. Here, man; I am at thy elbow.

Bora. Mass, and my elbow itched; I thought there would a scab follow.

Con. I will owe thee an answer for that: and now forward with thy tale.

Bora. Stand thee close, then, under this pent-house, for the grizzles rain; and I will, like a true drunkard, utter all to thee.

Bora. Therefore know I have earned of Don John a thousand ducats.

Con. Is it possible that any villainy should be so dear?

Bora. Thou shouldst rather ask if it were possible any villainy should be so rich; for when rich villains have need of poor ones, poor ones may make what price they will.

Con. I wonder at it.

Bora. That shows thou art unconfirmed. Thou knowest that the fashion of a doublet, or a hat, or a cloak, is nothing to a man.

Con. Yes, it is apparel.

Bora. I mean, the fashion.

Con. Yes, the fashion is the fashion.

Bora. Tush! I may as well say the fool’s the fool. But seest thou not what a deformed thief this fashion is?

Watch. [Aside] I know that Deformed; n’ has been a vile thief this seven year; a’ goes up and down like a gentleman; I remember his name.

Bora. Didst thou not hear somebody?

Con. No; ’twas the vane on the house.

Bora. Sceat thou not, I say, what a deformed thief this fashion is? how ghastly a’ turns about all the hot bloods between fourteen and five-and-thirty? sometimes fashioning them like Pharnaces’ soldiers in the recky painting, sometime like god Bel’s priests in the old church-window, sometime like the shaven Hercules in the smirched worm-eaten tapestry, where his codpiece seems as masses as a child’s head.

All this I see; and I see that the fashion wears out more apparel than the man. But art not thou thyself giddily with the fashion too, that thou hast shifted out of thy tale into telling me of the fashion?

Bora. Not so, neither: but know that I have to-night wooed Margaret, the Lady Hero’s gentlewoman, by the name of Hero; she leans me out at her mistress’ chamber-window, bids me a thousand times good-night.—I tell this tale vilely:—I should first tell thee how the prince, Claudio and my master, planted an ambush, and possessed by my master Don John, saw afar off in the orchard this amiable encounter.

Con. And thought they Margaret was Hero?

Bora. Two of them did, the prince and Claudio; but the devil my master knew she was Margaret; for partly he first possessed them, partly by the dark night, which did deceive them, but chiefly by my villainy, which did confirm any slander that Don John had made, away went Claudio enraged; a swore he would meet her, as he was appointed, next morning at the temple, and there, before the whole congregation, shame her with what he saw o’er night, and send her home again without a husband.
ACT III.

MUCH ADO ABOUT NOTHING.

SCENE V.

First Watch. We charge you, in the prince's name, stand.

Sec. Watch. Call up the right master constable. We have here recovered the most dangerous piece of lechery that ever was known in the commonwealth.

First Watch. And one Deformed is one of them: I know him; 'tis a wea'er a lock.

Con. Masters,—

Sec. Watch. You'll be made bring Deformed forth, I warrant you.

Con. Masters.—

First Watch. Never speak: we charge you let us obey you to go with us.

Sec. Watch. We are like to prove a goodly commodity, being taken up of these men's bills.

Con. A commodity in question, I warrant you. Come, we'll obey you. [Exeunt.

SCENE IV.—Hero's apartment.

Enter Hero, Margaret, and Ursula.

Hero. Good Ursula, wake my cousin Beatrice, and desire her to rise.

Urs. I will, lady.

Beat. Of bid her come hither.

Hero. Well. [Exeunt.

Marg. Troth, I think your other rabato were better.

Hero. No, pray thee, good Meg, I'll wear this.

Marg. By my troth, 'tis not so good; and I warrant your cousin will say so.

Hero. My cousin's a fool, and thou art another: I'll wear none but this.

Marg. I like the new tire within excellently, if the hair were a thought browner; and your gown's a most rare fashion, 'tis faith. I saw the Duchess of Milan's gown that they praise so.

Hero. O, that exceeds, they say.

Marg. By my troth, 'tis but a night-gown in respect of yours: cloth o' gold, and cuts, and laced with silver, set with pearls, down sleeves, side sleeves, and skirts, round underborne with a blush tinsel; but for a fine, quaint, graceful and excellent fashion, yours is worth ten on't.

Hero. God give me joy to wear it! for my heart is exceeding heavy.

Marg. 'Twill be heavier soon by the weight of a Hero. [Fea upon thee! art not ashamed? [man.

Hero. Or what, lady? of speaking honourably? Is not marriage honourable in a beggar? Is not your lord honourable without marriage? I think you would have me say, 'saving your reverence, a husband? ' an bad thinking do not wearst true speaking, I'll offend nobody: is there any harm in 'the heaver for a husband'? None, I think, an it be the right husband and the right wife; otherwise 't is light, and not heavy; ask my Lady Beatrice else; she here comes.

Enter Beatrice.

Hero. Good morrow, coz.

Beat. Good morrow, sweet Hero.

Hero. Why, how now? do you speak in the sick tune?

Beat. I am out of all other tune, methinks.

Marg. Clap's into 'Light o' love,' that goes with my heart, and I'll dance it.

Beat. Ye light o' love, with your heels! then, if your husband have stables enough, you'll see he shall lack no barns.

Marg. O illegitimate construction! I scorn that with my heels.

Beat. Almost five o'clock, cousin; 'tis time you were ready. By my troth, I am exceeding ill: heigh-ho!

Marg. For a hawk, a horse, or a husband?

Beat. For the letter that begins them all, H. Mary. Well, you could turn Turk, there's no more sailing by the star.

Beat. What means the fool, twow?

Mary. Nothing I; but God send every one their heart's desire!

Hero. These gloves the count sent me; they are an excellent perfume.

Beat. I am stuffed, cousin; I cannot smell.

Mary. A maid, and stuffed! there's goodly catching of cold.

Beat. O, God help me! God help me! how long have you professed apprehension?

Mary. Even since you left it. Doth not my wit become me rarely?

Beat. It is not seen enough, you should wear it in your cap. By my troth, I am sick.

Mary. Get you some of this distilled Carduus Benedictus, and lay it to your heart: it is the only thing for a qualm.

Hero. There thou prickest her with a thistle.

Beat. Benedictus! why Benedictus? you have some moral in this Benedictus.

Mary. Moral! no, by my troth, I have no moral meaning: I meant, plain holy-thistle. You may think perchance that I think you are in love: nay, by'r lady, I am not such a fool to think what I list, nor I list not to think what I can, nor indeed I cannot think, if I would think my heart out of thinking, that you are in love or that you will be in love or that you can be in love. Yet Benedick was such another, and now is he become a man: he swore he would never marry, and yet, in despite of his heart, he eats his meat without grudging: and how you may be converted I know not, but methinks you look with your eyes as other women do.

Beat. What pace is this that thy tongue keeps?

Mary. Not a false gallop.

Re-enter Ursula.

Urs. Madam, withdraw: the prince, the count, Signior Benedick, Don John, and all the gallants of the town, are come to fetch you to church.

Hero. Help to dress me, good coz, good Meg, good Ursula. [Exeunt.

SCENE V.—Another room in Leonato's house.

Enter Leonato, with Dogberry and Verges.

Leon. What would you with me, honest neighbour? Dog. Marry, sir, I would have some confidence with you that decerns you nearly.

Leon. Brief, I pray you; for you see it is a busy time with me.

Dog. Marry, this it is; sir.

Verg. Yes, in truth it is, sir.

Leon. What is it, my good friends?

Dog. Goodman Verges, sir, speaks a little off the matter: an old man, sir, and his wits are not so blunt as, God help, I would desire they were; but, in faith, honest as the skin between his brows.

Verg. Yes, I thank God I am as honest as any man living that is an old man and no homester than I.

Dog. Comparisons are odorous: palabras, neighbour Verges.

Leon. Neighbours, you are tedious.

Dog. It pleases our worship to say so, but we are the poor duke's officers; but truly, for mine own part, if I were as tedious as a king, I could find it in my heart to bestow it all of your worship.

Leon. All thy tediousness on me, ah?

Dog. Yea, an 'twere a thousand pound more than 'tis; for I hear as good exclamation on your worship as any man in the city; and though I be but a poor man, I am glad to hear it.

Verg. And so am I.

ACT IV.

MUCH ADO ABOUT NOTHING.

SCENE I. A church.

Enter Don Pedro, Don John, Leonato, Friar Francis, Claudio, Benedict, Hero, Beatrice, and Attendants.

Leon. Come, Friar Francis, be brief; only to the plain form of marriage, and you shall recount their particular duties afterwards. [Lady. Friar. You come hither, my lord, to marry this Claudio. No. Leon. To be married to her; friar, you come to marry her. [Count. Friar. Lady, you come hither to be married to this Hero. I do. Friar. If either of you know any inward impediment why you should not be conjoint, I charge you, on your souls, to utter it. Claudio. Know you any, Hero? Hero. None, my lord. Friar. Know you any, count? Leon. I dare make his answer, none. Claudio. O, what men dare do! what men may do! what men daily do, not knowing what they do! Bene. How now! interjections? Why, then, some be of laughing, as, ah, ha, he! [Leave. Claudio. Stand thee by, friar. Father, by your Will you with free and unconstrained soul Give me this maid, your daughter? Leon. As freely, son, as God did give her me. Claudio. And what have I to give you lack, whose may counterpoise this rich and precious gift? [worth D. Pedro. Nothing, unless you render her again. Claudio. Sweet prince, you learn me noble thank- There, Leonato, take her back again: [fulness. Give not this rotten orange to your friend; She’s not the sun in semblance of her honour. Behold how like a maid she blushes here! O, what authority and show of truth Can cunning sin cover itself withal! Comes not that blood as modest evidence To witness simple virtue? Would you not swear, All you that saw her, that she was a maid, By these exterior shows? But she is none: She knows the heat of a luxurious bed; Her blush is guiltiness, not modesty. Leon. What do you mean, my lord? Claudio. Not to be married, Not to knit my soul to an approved wanton. Leon. Dear my lord, if you, in your own proof, Have vanquish’d the resistance of her youth, And made defeat of her virginity,— [known her, Claudio. I know what you would say: if I have Leon. Take their examination yourself and bring it me: I am now in great haste, as it may appear unto you. D. Dog. It shall be sufligence. Leon. Drink some wine ere you go: fare you well.

Enter a Messenger.

Mess. My lord, they stay for you to give your daughter to her husband. Leon. I’ll wait upon them: I am ready. [Execute Leonato and Messenger. D. Dog. Go, good partner, go, get you to Francis Seacoole; bid him bring his pen and inkhorn to the gaol: where his lordship wants him to examination these men. Verro. And we must do it wisely. D. Dog. We will spare for no wit, I warrant you; here’s that shall drive some of them to a nonecom: only get the learned writer to set down our excom- munication and meet me at the gaol. [Execute.
ACT IV.

MUCH ADO ABOUT NOTHING.

SCENE I.

There is not chastity enough in language
Without offence to utter them. Thus, pretty lady,
I am sorry for thy much misgovernment.

Claud. O Hero, what a Hero hast thou been,
If half thy outward graces had been placed
About thy thoughts and counsels of thy heart!
If half thee well, most foul, most fair! farewell,
That pure impurity and impious purity!
For thee I'll lock up all the gates of love,
And on my eyelids shall conjecture hang,
To turn all beauty into thoughts of harm,
And never shall it more be gracious.

Leon. Hath no man's dagger here a point for me?

Beat. Why, how now, cousin! wherefore sink you down?

D. John. Come, let us go. These things, come thus to light,
Smother her spirits up.

[Exeunt Don Pedro, Don John, and Claudio.

Ben. How doth the lady?

Leon. O Fate! take not away thy heavy hand.
Death is the fairest cover for her shame
That may be wish'd for.

Leon. O thou look up?

Friar. Yea, wherefore should she not? [thing

Leon. Wherefore! Why, doth not every earthly Cry shame upon her? Could she here deny
The story that is printed in her blood?
Do not live, Hero; do not one thine eyes:
For, did the thimk thou wouldst not quickly die, Thought I thy spirits were stronger than thy shames,
Myself would, on the rearward of reproaches,
Strike at thy life. Grieved I, I had but one?
Chid I for that at frugal nature's frame?
O, one too much by thee! Why had I one?
Why ever wast thou lovely in my eyes?
Why had I not with charitable hand
Took up a beggar's issue at my gates,
Whom smirch'd thou thus and mired with infamy,
I might have said 'No part of it is mine;
This shame derives itself from unknown loins';
But thou didst make me love and mine I praised
And mine that I was proud on, mine so much
That I myself was to myself not mine,
Valuing of her,—why, she, O, she is fallen
Into a pit of ink, that the wide sea
Hath drop's too few to wash her clean again
And salt too little which may season give
To her foul-tainted flesh!

Bene. Sir, sir, be patient.

For my part, I am so attired in wonder,
I know not what to say.

Beat. O, on my soul, my cousin is believ'd!

Bene. Lady, were you her bedfellow last night?

Beat. No, truly not; although, until last night,
I have this twelvemonth been her bedfellow.

Leon. Confirrn'd, confirm'd! O, that is stronger made

Which was before bard'd up with ribs of iron!
Would the two princes lie, and Claudio lie,
Who loved her so, that, speaking of her foullness,
Wash'd it with tears? Hence from her! let her die.

Friar. Hear me a little; for I have only been Silent so long and given way unto
This course of things.
By noting of the lady I have mark'd
A thousand blushing apparitions
To start into her face, a thousand innocent shames
In angel whiteness beat away those blushes;
And in her eye there hath appear'd a fire,

To burn the errors that these princes hold
Against her maiden truth. Call me a fool;
Trust not my reading nor my observations,
Which with experimental seal doth warrant
The tenour of my book; trust not my age,
My reverence, cunning, I know nothing,
If this sweet lady lie not guiltless here
Under some bitting error.

Leon. Friar, it cannot be.
Thou seest that all the grace that she hath left
Is that she will not add to her damnation
A sin of perjury; she doth not think it:
Why seek'st thou then to cover with excuse
That which appears in proper nakedness?

Friar. Lady, what man is he you are accused of?

Her. They know that do accuse me; I know none:
If I know more of any man alive
Than that which made his present doth warrant,
Let all my sins lack mercy! O my father,
Prove you that any man with me conversed
At hours unmeet, or that I yesternight
Maintain'd the change of words with any creature,
Refuse me, hate me, torture me to death!

Friar. There is some strange misprision in the princes;
[our.

Bene. Two of them have the very bent of hon-
And if their wisdoms be misled in this,
The practice of it lives in John the bastard,
Whose spirits toil in frame of villains.

Friar. I know not. If they speak but truth of These hands shall tear her; if they wrong her hon-
The proudest of them shall well hear of it.
[our,

Time hath not yet so dried this blood of mine,
Nor age so eat up my invention,
Nor fortune made such havoc of my means,
Nor my bad life left me so not to be friends,
But they shall find, awaked in such a kind,
Both strength of limb and policy of mind,
Ability in means and choice of friends,
To quit me of them utterly.

Friar. Pause awhile, And let my counsel sway you in this case.

Your daughter here the princes left for dead:
Let her awhile be secretely kept in,
And publish it that she is dead indeed;
Maintain a mourning ostentation
And on your family's old monument
Hang mournful epitaphs and do all rites
That appertain unto a burial.

Leon. What shall become of this? what will this Bene. Friar. Marry, this well carried shall on her behalf

Change slander to remorse; that is some good:
But not for that dream I on this strange course,
But on this travell look for greater birth.
She dying, as it must be so maintain'd,
Upon the instant that she was accused,
Shall be lamented, pitied and excused
Of every hearer: for it so falls out
That what we have we enjoy at the worth
While's we enjoy it, but being lack'd and lost,
Why, then we rack the value, then we find
The virtue that possession would not show us
While's it was ours. So will it fare with Claudio:
When he shall hear she died upon his words,
The idea of her life shall sweetly creep
Into his study of imagination,
And every lovely organ of her life
Shall come apparell'd in more precious habit,
More moving-delicate and full of life,
Into the eye and prospect of his soul.
Than when she lived indeed; then shall he mourn,
If ever love had interest in his liver,
And wish he had not so accused her,
No, though he thought his accusation true.
Let this be so, and doubt not but success
Will fashion the event in better shape.
ACT IV. MUCH ADO ABOUT NOTHING.  SCENE II.

Than I can lay it down in likelihood.
But if all aim but this be level'd false,
The supposition of the lady's death.
Will quench the wonder of her infamy:
And if it sort not well, you may conceal her,
As best befits her wounded reputation,
In some reclusive and religious life,
But cut the eyes, thine eyes, thine minds and injuries.

Bene. Signior Leonato, let the friar advise you:
And though you know my inwardsness and love
Is very much unto the prince and Claudio,
Yet, by mine honour, I will deal in this
As secretly and justly as your soul
Should with your body.

Leon. Being that I flow in grief,
The smallest twine may lead me.

Friar. 'Tis well consented: presently away;
For to strange sores strangely they strain the cure.
Come, lady, die to live: this wedding-day
Perhaps is but prolong'd: have patience and endure. [Exit all but Benedick and Beatrice.

Bene. Lady Beatrice, have you wept all this while?
Beat. Yea, and I will weep a while longer.
Bene. Will not desire that?
Beat. You have no reason; I do it freely.
Bene. Surely I do believe your fair cousin is wronged.
Beat. Ah, how much might the man deserve of me that would right her!
Bene. Is there any way to show such friendship?
Beat. A very even way, but no such friend.
Bene. May a man do it?
Beat. It is a man's office, but not yours.
Bene. Do I love nothing in the world so well as you: is not that strange?
Beat. Strange as the thing I know no it.
It were as possible for me to say I loved nothing so well as you: but believe me not; and yet I lie not;
I confess nothing, nor I deny nothing. I am sorry for my cousin.

Beatrice, thou love me.

Bene. Do not swear, and eat it.

Bene. I will swear by it that you love me; and I will make him eat it that says I love not you.

Beat. Will you not eat your word?

Beatrice. What with no sauce that can be devised to it.
I protest I love thee.
Beat. Why, then, God forgive me!

Beat. What offence, sweet Beatrice?

Beat. You have stayed me in a happy hour: I was about to protest I loved you.

Bene. And do it with all thy heart.
Beat. I love you with so much of my heart that none is left to protest.

Beat. Come, bid me do any thing for thee.

Beat. Kill Claudio.

Bene. If! not for the wide world.

Beat. You kill me to deny it. Farewell.

Beat. Tarry, sweet Beatrice.

Beat. I am gone, though I am here; there is no love in you: nay, I pray you, let me go.

Beatrice. —

Beat. In faith, I will go.

Bene. We'll be friends first.

Bene. You dare easier be friends with me than fight with mine enemy.

Bene. Is Claudio thine enemy?

Beat. Is he not approved in the height a villain, that hath slandered, scorned, dishonored my kinswoman? O that I were a man! What, bear her in hate? Thou canst, to take hands; and then, with public accusation, uncovered slander, unmitigated rancour, — O God, that I were a man! I would eat his heart in the market-place.

Beatrice. —

Beat. Hear me, Beatrice. — [saying!

Beat. Talk with a man out at a window! A proper

Bene. Nay, but, Beatrice.—

Beat. Sweet Hero! She is wronged, she is slanderdered, she is undone.

Bene. Beat —

Beat. Princes and counties! Surely, a princely testimony, a goodly count, Count Confect: a sweet galant, surely! O that I were a man for his sake:
or that I had any friend would be a man for my sake! But manhood is melted into courtesies, valour into compliment, and men are only turned into tongue, and trim ones too: he is now as valiant as Hercules that only tells a lie and swears it. I cannot be a man with much thinking, therefore I will die a woman with grieving.

Bene. Tarry, good Beatrice. By this hand, I love thee.

Beat. Use it for my love some other way than swearing by it.

Bene. Think you in your soul the Count Claudio hath wronged Hero?

Beat. Yea, as sure as I have a thought or a soul.

Bene. Enough, I am engaged; I will challenge him. I will kiss your hand; and so I leave you.
By this hand, Claudio shall render me a dear account.
As you have done of me, so think of me. Go, comfort your cousin: I must say she is dead: and so, farewell.

SCENE II. — A prison.

Enter Dogberry, Verges, and Sexton, in gowns;
and the Watch, with Conrade and Borachio.

Dog. Is our whole assembly appeared?

Verg. O, a stool and a cushion for the sexton.

Sex. Which be the malefactors?

Dog. Marry, that am I and my partner.

Verg. Nay, that 's certain; we have the exhibition to our mine.

Sex. But which are the offenders that are to be examined? let them come before master constable.

Dog. Yea, marry, let them come before me.

What is your name, friend?

Borachio.

Dog. Pray, write down, Borachio. Yours, sirrah?

Con. I am a gentleman, sir, and my name is Con-rade.

Dog. Write down, master gentleman Conrade.

Masters, do you serve God?

Con. [Yea, sir, we hope.

Borachio.

Dog. Write down, that they hope they serve God:
and write God first; for God defend but God should go before such villains! Masters, it is proved already that you are little better than false knives; and it will go near to be thought so shortly. How answer you for yourselves?

Con. Marry, sir, we say we are none.

Dog. A marvellous witty fellow, I assure you;
but I will go about with him. Come you hither, sirrah; a word in your ear: sir, I say to you, it is thought you are false knives.

Borachio. Sir, I say to you we are none.

Dog. Well, stand aside. 'Fore God, they are both in a tale. Have you writ down, that they are none?

Sex. Master constable, you go not the way to examine you must call forth the watch that are their acusers.

Dog. Yea, marry, that 's the eatest way. Let the watch come forth. Masters, I charge you, in the prince's name, accuse these men.

First Watch. This man said, sir, that Don John, the prince's brother, was a villain.

Dog. Write down Prince John a villain. Why, this is flat perjury, to call a prince's brother villain.

Borachio. Master constable,—

Dog. Pray thee, fellow, peace: I do not like thy look, I promise thee.
SCENE I.—Before Leonato’s house.

Enter Leonato and Antonio.

Ant. If you go on thus, you will kill yourself; and it is not wisdom thus to second grief against yourself.

Leon. I pray thee, cease thy counsel, which falls into mine ears as profitless as water in a sieve: give me not counsel; nor let no comforter delight mine ear. Such a one whose doings do suit with mine, bring me a father that so loved his child, whose joy of her is overwhelmed like mine, and bid him speak of patience; measure his woe the length and breadth of mine; and let it answer every strain for strain. As thus for thus and such a grief for such, in every lineament, branch, shape, and form: if such a one will smile and strike his head, bid sorrow wag, cry ‘hem!’ when he should groan; patch grief with provers, make misfortune drunk with candle-wasters; bring him yet to me, and I will dismount and gain patience. But there is no such man: for, brother, men can counsel and speak comfort to that grief which they themselves not feel; but, tasting it, their counsel turns to passion, which before would give preceptual medicine to rage, petter strong madness in a silken thread, charm aches with air and agony with words: no, no; ‘tis all men’s office to speak patience to those that wring under the load of sorrow, but no man’s virtue nor sufficiency to be so unwise when he shall endure the like himself. Therefore give me no counsel: my griefs cry louder than advertisement.

Ant. Thence do men from children nothing differ.

Leon. I pray thee, peace, I will be flesh and blood; for there was never yet philosopher that could endure the tooth patiently, however they have writ the style of gods and made a push at chance and sufferance.

Ant. Yet bend not all the harm upon yourself; make those that do offend you suffer too.

Leon. There thou speak’st reason: nay, I will do so. My soul doth tell me Hero is belied; and that shall Claudio know: so shall the prince and all of them that thus dishonour her.

Ant. Here comes the prince and Claudio hastily.

Enter Don Pedro and Claudio.

D. Pedro. Good den, good den.

Claud. Good day to both of you.

Leon. Hear you, my lords—

D. Pedro. We have some haste, Leonato.

Leon. Some haste, my lord! well, fare you well, my lord. Are you so hasty now? well, all is one. [lord: D. Pedro. Nay, do not quarrel with us, good old man.

Ant. If he could right himself with quarrelling, some of us would lie low.

Claud. Who wrongs him? Leon. Marry, thou dost wrong me; thou dissenter, thou:—

Nay, never lay thy hand upon thy sword; I fear thee not.

Claud. Marry, beshrew my hand, if it should give your age such cause of fear: In faith, my hand meant nothing to my sword.

Leon. Tush, tush, man; never fleer and jest at me: I speak not like a dotard nor a fool, as under privilege of age to brag. What I have done being young, or what would do I were not old. Know, Claudio, to thy head, thou hast so wrong’d mine innocent child and me that I am forced to lay my reverence by, and with grey hairs and bruisie of many days, do challenge thee to trial of a man. I say thou hast belied mine innocent child; thy slander hath gone through and through her heart, and she lies buried with her ancestors; O, in a tomb where never scandal slept, save this of hers, framed by thy villany! Claudio. My villany? Leon. Thine, Claudio; thine, I say.

D. Pedro. You say not right, old man.

Leon. My lord, my lord, I’ll prove it on his body, if he dare, despite his nice fence and his active practice, his May of youth and bloom of lusthoid.

Claud. Away! I will not have to do with you.

Leon. Canst thou so taft me? Thou hast kill’d my child: if thou kill’st me, boy, thou shalt kill a man.

Ant. He shall kill two of us, and men indeed: but that’s no matter; let him kill one first; win me and wear me; let him answer me.

Come, follow me, boy; come, sir boy, come, follow
ACT V.  MUCH ADO ABOUT NOTHING.  SCENE I.

Sir boy, I'll whip you from your foining fence; Nay, as I am a gentleman, I will.

Leon.  But, brother Anthony,— [niece;
Ant.  Content yourself. God knows I loved my
And she is dead, slander'd to death by villains,
That dare as well answer a man indeed
As I dare take a serpent by the tongue:
But, apes, braggarts, Jacks, milk-sops!
Leon.  Brother Antony,— Ant.  Hold you content. What, man! I know them, yea,
And what they weigh, even to the utmost scruple,— Scambling, out-facing, fashion-monging boys,
That lend cog and liquid, deprave and slander,
Go anticy, show outward hideousness,
And speak o' half a dozen dangerous words,
How they might hurt their enemies, if they durst;
And this is all.
Leon.  But, brother Antony,—
Ant.  Come, 'tis no matter: Do not you meddle; let me deal in this.
D. Pedro. Gentlemen both, we will not wake your patience.
My heart is sorry for your daughter's death:
But, on my honour, she was charged with nothing
But what the man and woman of proof.
Leon.  My lord, my lord,—
D. Pedro.  I will not hear you.
Leon.  No! Come, brother; away! I will be heard.
Ant.  And shall, or some of us will smart for it.
[Exeunt Leonato and Antonio.
D. Pedro.  See, see; here comes the man we went to seek.

Enter Benedick.

Claud.  Now, signior, what news?
Bene.  Good day, my lord.
D. Pedro.  Welcome, signior; you are almost come to part almost a fray.

Claud.  We had like to have had our two noses snapped off with two old men without teeth.
D. Pedro. Leonato and his brother. What thinkest thou? Had we fought, I doubt we should have toos been young for them.
Bene.  In a false quarrel there is no true valour,
I came to seek you both.

Claud.  We have been up and down to seek thee; for we are high-proof melancholy and would have more than we say. Wilt thou use thy wit?
Bene.  It is in my scabbard: shall I draw it?
D. Pedro. Dost thou wear thy wit by thy side?
Claud.  Never any did so, though very many have been beside their wit. I will bid thee draw, as we do the minstrels: draw, to pleasure us.
D. Pedro. As I am an honest man, he looks pale.
Art thou sick, or angry?

Claud.  What, courage, man! What though care killed a cat, thou hast mettle enough in thee to kill care.

Bene.  Sir, I shall meet your wit in the career, an you charge it against me. I pray you choose another subject.

Claud.  Nay, then, give him another subject: this last was broke cross.

D. Pedro. By this light, he changes more and more; I think he be angry indeed.
Claud.  If he be, he knows how to turn his girdle.
Bene.  Shall I speak a word in your ear?
Claud.  God bless me from a challenge!
Bene.  [Aside to Claudio] You are a villain; I jest not: I will make it good how you dare, with what you dare, and when you dare. Do me right, or I will protest your cowardice. You have killed a sweet lady, and her death shall fall heavy on you.
Let me hear from you.

Claud.  Well, I will meet you, so, I may have good cheer.

D. Pedro.  What, a feast, a feast?

Claud.  I, faith, I thank him: thou hast led me to a calf's head and a capon; the which if I do not carve most curiously, say my knife's naught. Shall I not find a woodcock too?

Bene.  Sir, your wit ambles well; it goes easily.

D. Pedro.  I'll tell thee how Beatrice praised thy worth, as I am a signior, Tuesday. I said,
'True,' said she, 'a fine little one.' No, said I, 'a great wit;' 'Right,' says she, 'a great gross one.'

Nay, said I, 'a good wit;' 'Just,' said she, 'it hurts nobody.' Nay, said I, 'the gentleman is wise.' Certain, said she, 'a wise gentleman.'

Why? said I, 'he hath the tongues.' 'That I believe,' said she, 'for he swore a thing to me on Monday night, which he forswore on Tuesday morning; there's a double tongue; there's two tongues.
Thus did she, an hour together, trans-shape thy perticular virtues: yet at last she concluded with a sigh, thou wast the bestest man in Italy.

Claud.  For the which she wept heartily and said she cares not.

D. Pedro. Yea, that she did; but yet, for all that, an if she did not hate him deadly, she would love him dearly, for the old man's daughter told us all.

Claud.  All, all; and moreover, God saw him when he was hid in the garden.

D. Pedro.  But when shall we set the savage bull's horns on the sensible Benedick's head?

Claud.  Yea, and text underneath, 'Here dwells
Benedick the married man!'

Bene.  Fare you well, boy; you know my mind.
I will leave you now to your gossip-like humour:
you break jests as braggarts do their blades, which,
God be thanked, hurt not. My lord, for your many courtesies I thank you: I must discontinue your company, for your brother the bastard is fled from Messina: you have among you killed a sweet and inocent lady. For my Lord Lackebeard there, he and I shall meet: and, till then, peace be with him. [Exit.

D. Pedro.  He is in earnest.

Claud.  In most profound earnest; and, I'll warrant you, for the love of a man!

D. Pedro.  And hath challenged thee.

Claud.  Most sincerely.

D. Pedro.  What a pretty thing man is when he goes in his doublet and hose and leaves off his wit!

Claud.  He is then a giant to an ape; but then is an ape to a man.

D. Pedro.  But, soft you, let me be: pluck up, my heart, and be sad. Did he not say, my brother was fled?

Enter Dogberry, Verges, and the Watch, with Conrade and Borachio.

Dog.  Come you, sir; if justice cannot tame you,
she shall ne'er weigh more reasons in her balance:
na, an you be a cursing hypocrite once, you must be looked to.

Prio.  How now? two of my brother's men bound! Borachio one!

Claud.  Henricken after their offence, my lord.

D. Pedro.  Officers, what offence have these men done?

Dog.  Marry, sir, they have committed false report; moreover, they have spoken untruths; secondarily, they are slander: sixth and lastly, they have belied a lady; thirdly, they have verified unjust things; and, to conclude, they are lying knaves.

D. Pedro. First, I ask thee what they have done;
thirdly, I ask thee what their offence; sixth and lastly, many they are committed; and, to conclude,
what you lay to their charge.

Claud.  Rightly reasoned, and in his own division;
and, by my troth, there's one meaning well suited.
D. Pedro.  Who have you offended, masters, that you are thus bound to your answer? this learned constable is too cunning to be understood: what's your offence?

Bora. Sweet prince, let me go no farther to mine answer: do you hear me, and let this count kill me. I have deceived even your very eyes: what your wisdoms could not discover, these shallow fools have brought to light; who in the night overheard me confessing to this man how Don John your brother incensed me to slander the Lady Hero, how you were brought into the orchard and saw me court Margaret in Hero's garments, how you dis-graced her, when you should marry her: my villain they have upon record; which I had rather seal with my death than repeat over to my shame. The lady is dead upon mine and my master's false accusation; and, briefly, I desire nothing but the reward of a villain.

D. Pedro. Rans not this speech like iron through your blood?

Clau. I have drunk poison whereas he utter'd it.

D. Pedro. But did my brother set thee on to this?

Bora. Yeas, and paid me richly for the practice of it.

D. Pedro. He is composed and framed of treach-And fed he is upon this villain. [ery.

Clau. Sweet Hero! now thy image doth appear In the rare semblance that I loved it first.

D. Pedro. With thy worship well: God restore you to health! I humbly give you leave to depart; and if a merry meeting may be wished, God prohibit it! Come, neighbour. [Exit Dogberry and Verges.

Leon. Until to-morrow morning, lords, farewell.

Ant. Farewell, my lords: we look for you to- D. Pedro. We will not fail.

Claud. To-night I'll mourn with Hero. [Exit.

Leon. [To the Watch] Bring you these fellows on. We'll talk with Margaret, How her acquaintance grew with this lewd fellow. [Exit.

SCENE II.—Leonato's garden.

Enter Benedick and Margaret, meeting.

Bene. Pray thee, sweet Mistress Margaret, de-serve well at my hands by helping me to the speech of Beatrice.

Morg. Will you then write me a sonnet in praise of my beauty?

Bene. In so high a style, Margaret, that no man living shall come over it; for, in most comely truth, thou deservest it.

Morg. To have no man come over me! why, shall I always keep below stairs?

Bene. Thy wit is as quick as the greyhound's mouth; it catches.

Morg. And yours as blunt as the fencer's foils, which hit, but hurt not.

Bene. A most manly wit, Margaret: it will not hurt a woman; and so, I pray thee, call Beatrice: I give thee the bucklers.

Morg. Give us the swords; we have bucklers of our own.

Bene. If you use them, Margaret, you must put in the pikes with a vice; and they are dangerous weapons for maidens.

Morg. Well, I will call Beatrice to you, who I think hath legs.

Bene. And therefore will come. [Exit Margaret.

[Stirs] The god of love, That sits above, And knows me, and knows me, How pitiful I deserve,—

I mean in singing: but in loving, Leonard the good swimmer, Trotius the first employer of panders, and a whole bookful of these quidnam carpet-mongers, whose names yet run smoothly in the even road of a blank verse, why, they were never so truly turned over and over as my poor self in love. Marry, I cannot show it in rhyme: I have tried: I can find out no rhyme to 'lady' but 'baby,' an innocent rhyme; for 'scream,' 'horn,' a hard rhyme; for, 'school,' 'fool,' a babbling rhyme; very ominous endings: no, I was not born under a rhyming planet, nor I cannot woo in festival terms.

Enter Beatrice.

Sweet Beatrice, wouldst thou come when I called thee?

Beat. Yea, signior, and depart when you bid me.

Bene. O, stay but till then! Beat. 'Then' is spoken; fare you well now; and yet, ere I go, let me go with that I came: which is, with knowing what hath passed between you and Claudio.

Bene. Only foul words; and thereupon I will kiss thee.

Beat. Foul words is but foul wind, and foul wind is but foul breath, and foul breath is noisome; therefore I will depart unkind.

Bene. Thou hast fainted the word out of his right sense, so forcible is thy wit. But I must tell thee plainly, Claudio undergoes my challenge: and either I must shortly hear him, or I will subscribe him a coward. And, I pray thee now, tell me for which of my bad parts didst thou first fall in love with me?

Beat. For them all together; which maintained so politic a state of evil that they will not admit any good part to intermingle with them. But for which of my good parts didst thou first suffer love for me?

Bene. Suffer love! a good epithet! I do suffer love indeed, for I love thee against my will.

Beat. In spite of your heart, I think; alas, poor heart! If you spit it for my sake, I will spit it for yours; for I will never love that which my friend hates.

Bene. Thou and I are too wise to woo peaceably.

Beat. It appears not in this confession: there's not one wise man among twenty that will praise himself.

Bene. An old, an old instance, Beatrice, that lived in the time of good neighbours. If a man do not erect in this age his own tomb ere he dies, he shall live no longer in monument than the bell rings and the wheel spins.

Beat. And how long is that, think you?

Bene. Question: why, an hour in clamber and a quarter in rhum: therefore is it most expedient for the wise, if Don Worn, his conscience, and no impediment to the contrary, to be the trumpet of his own virtues, as I am to myself. So much for praising myself, who, I myself will bear witness, is praiseworthy: and now tell me, how doth your cousin?

Beat. Very ill.

Bene. And how do you?

Beat. Very ill too.

Bene. Serve God, love me and mend. There will I leave you too, for here comes one in haste.

Enter Ursula.

Urs. Madam, you must come to your uncle. Yonder old cell at home: it is proved my Lady Hero hath been falsely accused, the prince and Claudio mightily abused; and Don John is the author of all, who is fled and gone. Will you come presently?

Beat. Will you go hear this news, signior?

Bene. I will live in thy heart, die in thy lap and be buried in thy eyes; and moreover I will go with thee to thy uncle's.

SCENE III.—A church.

Enter Don Pedro, Claudio, and three or four with tapers.

Claud. Is this the monument of Leonato? A Lord. It is, my lord.

Claud. [Reading out of a scroll]

Done to death by slanderous tongues Was the Hero that here lies: Death, in guerdon of her wrongs, Gives her fame which never dies. So the life that died with shame Lives in death with glorious fame.

Hang thou there upon the tomb, Praising her when I am dumb.

Now, music, sound, and sing your solemn hymn.

SONG.

Pardon, goddess of the night, Those that slew thy virgin knight; For the which, with songs of woe, Round about her tomb they go. Midnight, assist our moon; Help us to sigh and groan, Heavily, heavily.

Gravestones from the high and yield your dead, Till death be uttered, Heavily, heavily.

Claud. Now, unto thy bones good night! Yearly will I do this right.

Enter Leonato, Antonio, Benedick, Beatrice, Margaret, Ursula, Friar Francis, and Hero.

Friar. Did I not tell you she was innocent? Leon. So are the prince and Claudio, who accused her

Upon the error that you heard debated:
But Margaret was in some fault for this,
Although against her will, as it appears
In the true course of all the question.

Ant. Well, I am glad that all things sort so well.

Bene. And so am I, being else by faith enforced
To call young Claudio to a reckoning for it.

Leon. Well, daughter, and you gentlewomen all,
Withdraw into a chamber by yourselves,
And when I send for you, come hither mask'd.

[Exeunt Ladies.

The prince and Claudio promised by this hour
To visit me. You know your office, brother:
You must be father to your brother's daughter,
And give her to young Claudio.

Ant. Which I will do with confirm'd countenance.

Bene. Friar, I must entreat your pains, I think.

Friar. To do what, signior?

Bene. To bind me, or undo me; one of them.

Signior Leonato, truth it is, good signior.
Your niece regards me with an eye of favour.

Leon. That eye my daughter lent her: 'tis most true.

Bene. And I do with an eye of love requite her.
ACT V.

MUCH ADO ABOUT NOTHING.

SCENE IV.

Leon. The sight whereof I think you had from me.
From Claudio and the prince: But what’s your will?
Bene. Your answer, sir, is enigmatical:
But, for my will, my will is your good will
May stand with ours, this day to be conjoin’d.
In the state of honourable marriage:
In which, good friar, I shall desire your help.
Leon. My heart is with your liking.

Frier. Here comes the prince and Claudio.

Enter Don Pedro and Claudio, and two or three others.

D. Pedro. Good morrow to this fair assembly.
Leon. Good morrow, prince; good morrow, Claudio:
We here attend you. Are you yet determined
To-day to marry with my brother’s daughter?
Claud. I’ll hold my mind, were she an Ethiopie.
Leon. Call her forth, brother; here’s the friar ready.

[Exit Antonio.

D. Pedro. Good morrow, Benedick. Why, what’s the matter,
That you have such a February face,
So full of frost, of storm and cloudiness?
Claud. I think he thinks upon the savage bull,
Thou, fear not, man; we’ll tip thy horns with gold
And all Europa shall rejoice at thee,
As once Europa did at Jusly Jove,
When he would play the noble beast ‘n love.
Bene. Bull Jove, sir, had an amiable look;
And some such strange bull leap’d your father’s cow,
And got a calf in that same noble feat
Much like to you, for you have just his bleep.
Claud. For this I owe you: here comes other reckonings.

Re-enter Antonio, with the Ladies masked.

Which is the lady I must seize upon?
Ant. This same is she, and I do give you her.
Claud. Why, then she’s mine. Sweet, let me see your face.
Leon. No, that you shall not, till you take her hand.
Before this friar and swear to marry her.
Claud. Give me your hand: before this holy friar,
I am your husband, if you like of me.
Hero. And when I lived, I was your other wife:

[Unmasking.

And when you loved, you were my other husband.
Claud. Another Hero!

Frier. Nothing certain:
One Hero died defiled, but I do live,
And surely as I live, I am a maid.

D. Pedro. The former Hero! Hero that is dead!
Leon. She died, my lord, but whiles her slander liv’d.

Frier. All this amazement can I qualify;
When after that the holy rites are ended,
I’ll tell you largely of fair Hero’s death:
Meantime let wonder seem familiar,
And to the chapel let us presently.
Bene. Soft and fair, friar. Which is Beatrice?
Benedick. [Unmasking] I answer to that name. What is your will?

ACT I.

SCENE I.—The king of Navarre's park.

Enter Ferdinand, King of Navarre, Biron, Longaville, and Dumain.

King. Let fame, that all hunt after in their lives, live register'd upon our brazen tombs
And then grace us in the disgrace of death;
When, spite of cormorant devouring Time,
The end of this present breath may buy
That honour which shall bate his scythe's keen edge
And make us heirs of all eternity.
Therefore, brave conquerors,—for so you are,
That war against your own affections
And the huge army of the world's desires,—
Our late edict shall strongly stand in force;
Navarre shall be the wonder of the world;
Our court shall be a little Academe,
Still and contemplative in living art.
You three, Biron, Dumain, and Longaville,
Have sworn for three years' term to live with me
My fellow-scholars and to keep those statutes
That are recorded in this schedule here: names,
Your oaths are pass'd; and now subscribe your
That his own hand may strike his honour down
That violates the smallest branch herein:
If you are arm'd to do as sworn to do,
Subscribe to your deep oaths, and keep it too.

Long. I am resolved; 'tis but a three years' fast:
The mind shall banquet, though the body pine:
Fat paunches have lean pates, and dainty bits
Make rich the ribs, but bankrupt quite the wits.
Dum. My loving lord, Dumain is mortified:
The grosser manner of these world's delights
He throws upon the gross world's baser slaves;
To love, to wealth, to pomp, I pine and die!
With all these living in philosophy.

Biron. I can but say their protestation over;
So much, dear liege, I have already sworn,
That is, to live and study here three years.
But there are other strict observances;
As, not to see a woman in that term,
Which I hope well is not enrolled there;
And one day in a week to touch no food
And but one meal on every day beside,
The which I hope is not enrolled there:
And then, to sleep but three hours in the night,

And not be seen to wink of all the day—
When I was wont to think no harm all night
And make a dark night too of half the day—
Which I hope well is not enrolled there:
O, these are barren tasks, too hard to keep,
Not to see ladies, study, fast, not sleep!

King. Your oaths is pass'd to pass away from these.
Biron. Let me say no, my liege, an if you please:
I only swore to study with your grace
And stay here in your court for three years' space.
Long. You swore to that, Biron, and to the rest.
Biron. By yea and nay, sir; then I swore in jest.
What is the end of study? let me know.
King. Why, that to know, which else we should not know.
Biron. Things hid and barr'd, you mean, from common sense?

King. Ay, that is study's god-like recompense.
Biron. Come on, then; I will swear to study so,
To know the thing I am forbid to know:
As thus,—to study where I well may dine,
When I to feast expressly am forbid;
Or study where to meet some mistress fine,
When mistresses from common sense are hid;
Or, having sworn too hard a keeping oath,
Study to break it and not break my troth,
If study's gain be thus and this be so,
Study knows that which yet it doth not know:
Swear me to this, and I will ne'er say no.

King. These be the stops that hinder study quite
And train our intellects to vain delight.
Biron. Why, all delights are vain; but that most vain,
Which with pain purchased doth inherit pain:
As, painfully to pore upon a book
To seek the light of truth; while truth the while Doth falsely blind the eyesight of his look:
Light seeking light doth light of light beguile;
So, ere you find where light in darkness lies,
Your light grows dark by losing of your eyes.
Study me how to please the eye indeed
By fixing it upon a fairer eye;
Who dazzles by, that eye shall be his heed
And give him light that it was blinded by.
Study is like the heaven's glorious sun
That will not be deep-search'd with saucy looks:
Small have continual plodders ever won
Save base authority from others’ books.
These earthly godfathers of heaven’s lights
That laugh to see them be out-witted
Have no more profit of their shining nights
Than those that walk and wot not what they are.
Too much to know is to know nought but fame;
And every godfather can give a name. [reading!]

King. How well he’s read, to reason against
Dum. Proceeded well, to make all good proceeding Long. He weeds the corn and still lets grow the weeding.

[Breeding.
Biron. The spring is near when green geese are Dum. How follows that?
Biron. Fit in his place and time.
Dum. In reason nothing.
Biron. Something then in rhyme.
King. Biron is like an envious sneaking frost
That bites the first-born infants of the spring.

Biron. Well, say I am; why should proud summer boast:
Before the birds any cause to sing?
Why should I joy in any abortive birth?
At Christmas I no more desire a rose
Than wish a snow in May’s new-fangled mirth;
But like of each thing that in season grows.
So you, to study now it is too late,
Climb o’er the house to unlock the little gate.

King. Well, sit you out: go home, Biron: adieu.
Biron. No, my good lord; I have sworn to stay
with you:
And though I flatter for barbarism spoke more
Than for that angel knowledge you can say,
Yet confident I’ll keep what I have swore
And hide the penance of each three years’ day.
Give me the paper; let me read the same;
And to the strictest decrees I’ll write my name.

King. How well this yielding rescues thee from shame!

[Biron reads. ‘Item, That no woman shall come within a mile of my court:’ Hath this been pro-Long. Four days ago. [claimed] Biron. Let’s see the penalty. [Reads] ‘On pain of losing her tongue. Who devised this penalty?
Long. Mark that did I.
Long. To fright them hence with that dread

[Biron. A dangerous law against gentility!

[Reads] ‘Item, If any man be seen to walk with a woman within the term of three years, he shall die; and such a shame as the rest of the court can possibly devise?’
This article, my liege, yourself must break;
For well you know here comes in embassy
The French king’s daughter with yourself to speak—
A maid of grace and complete majesty—
About surrender up of Aquitaine.
To her decept, sick and bedrid father:
Therefore this article is made in vain,
Or vainly comes the admired princess hither,
King. What say you, lords? why, this was quite Biron. So study evermore is overshot! [forgot.
While it doth study to have what it would
It doth forget to do the thing it should,
And when it hath the thing it hunteth most,
’Tis won as towns with fire, so won, so lost.

King. We must of force dispense with this decree;
She must lie here on mere necessity;
Biron. Three thousand times within this three years
For every man with his affects is born, [space;
Not by might master’d but by special grace;
If I break faith, this word shall speak for me;
I am forsworn on mere necessity.
So to the laws at large I write my name: [Subscribers.
And he that breaks them in the least degree

Stands in atender of eternal shame:
Suggestions are to other as to me;
But I believe, although I seem so loath,
I am the last that will last keep his oath.
But is there no quick recreation granted?
King. Ay, that there is. Our court, you know, is haunted
With a refined traveller of Spain;
A man in all the world’s new fashion planted,
That hath a mouth of phrases in his brain;
One whom the music of his own vain tongue
Doth ravish like enchanting harmony;
A man of complements, whom right and wrong
Have chose as umpire of their mutiny:
This child of fancy that Armado light
For interim to our studies shall relate
In high-born words the worth of many a knight
From tawny Spain lost in the world’s debate.
How you delight, my lords, I know not, I;
But, I protest, I love to hear him lie
And I will use him for my minstrelsy.
Biron. Armado is a most illustrious wight,
A man of fire-new words, fashion’s own knight.
Long. Costard the swain and he shall be our sport;
And so to study, three years is but short.

Enter Dull with a letter, and Costard.

Dull. Which is the Duke’s own person?
Biron. This, fellow: what wouldst?
Dull. I myself reprehend his own person, for I am his grace’s tharborough: but I would see his own person in flesh and blood.
Biron. This is he.
Dull. Signior Arme—Arme—commends you.
There’s villany abroad: this letter will tell you more.
Cost. Sir, the contents thereof are as touching me.

King. A letter from the magnificent Armado.
Biron. How lowsoever the matter, I hope in God for high words.
Long. A high hope for a low heaven: God grant us patience!
Biron. To hear? or forbear laughing?
Long. To hear meekly, sir, and to laugh moderately:
or to forbear both.
Biron. Well, sir, let it as the style shall give us cause to climb in the merriness.

Cost. The matter is to me, sir, as concerning Jaquenetta. The manner of it was, I was taken with the manner.
Biron. In what manner?

Cost. In manner and form following, sir; all those three: I was seen with her in the manor-house, sitting with her upon the form, and taken following her into the park; which, put together, is in manner and form following. Now, sir, for the manner, it is the manner of a man to speak to a woman:
for the form,—in some form.
Biron. For the following, sir?

Cost. As it shall follow in my correction: and God defend the right!

King. Will you hear this letter with attention?
Biron. As we would hear an oracle.
Cost. Such is the simplicity of man to hearken after the flesh.

King [reads]. ‘Great deputy, the welkin’s vicegerent and sole dominator of Navarre, my soul’s earth’s god, and body’s fostering patron.’

Cost. Not a word of Costard yet.

King [reads]. ‘So it is—’

Cost. It may be so: but if lie say it is so, he is, in telling true, but so.

King. Peace!

Cost. Be to me and every man that dares not fight.

King. No words?

Cost. Of other men’s secrets, I beseech you.

King [reads]. ‘So it is, besieged with sable-coloured melancholy, I did commend the black-oppressing humour to the most wholesome physic of thy healthily-loving air; and, as I am a gentleman, betook myself to walk. The time when. About the sixth hour; when beasts most grace, birds best peck; and men sit down to that nourishment which is called supper: so much for the time when. Now for the ground, which, I mean, I walked upon: it is yelepest thy park. Then for the place where; where, I mean, I did encounter that obscene and most preposterous event, that draweth from my snow-white pen the ebon-coloured ink, which here thou viewest, belothist, surveyest, or seest: but to the place where, it standeth north-north-east and by east from the west corner of thy curious-knotted garden: there did I see that low-spirited swain, that base minnow of thy mirth;—

Cost. With a wench.

King [reads]. 'with a child of our grandmother Eve, a female; or, for thy more sweet understanding, a woman.

If I am, as my ever-esteem'd duty pricks me on, have sent to thee, to receive the meed of punishment, by thy sweet grace's officer, Anthony Dull; a man of good repu'te, carriage, bearing, and estimation.

Cost. Me, an't shall please you; I am Anthony.

King [reads]. 'For Jaquenetta,—so is the weaker vessel called which I apprehended with the afore-said swain,—I keep her as a vessel of thy law's fury; and shall, at the least of thy sweet notice, bring her to trial. Thine, in all compliments of devoted and heart-burning heat of duty.

DON ADRIANO DE ARMAZO.

Biron. This not so well as I looked for, but the best that ever I heard.

King. Ay, the best for the worst. But, sirrah, what say you to this?

Cost. Sir, I confess the wench.

King. Did you hear the proclamation?

Cost. I do confess much of the hearing it, but little of the marking of it.

King. It was proclaimed a year's imprisonment, to be taken with a wench.

Cost. I was taken with none, sir: I was taken with a damsel.

King. Well, it was proclaimed 'damsel.'

Cost. This was no damsel neither, sir; she was a virgin.

King. It is so varied too; for it was proclaimed Cost. If it were, I deny her virginity; I was taken with a maid.

King. This maid will not serve your turn, sir.

Cost. This maid will serve my turn, sir.

King. Sir, I will pronounce your sentence: you shall wash week with bran and water.

Cost. I had rather pray a month with mutton and porridge.

King. And Don Armado shall be your keeper.

My Lord Biron, see him deliver'd o'er:

And go we, lords, to put in practice that Which each to other hath so strongly sworn.

[Exit King, Longaville, and Dumain.

Biron. I'll lay my head to any good man's hat, These oaths and laws will prove an idle scorn.

Sirrah, come on.

Cost. I suffer for the truth, sir; for true it is, I was taken with Jaquenetta, and Jaquenetta is a true girl; and therefore welcome the sour cup of prosperity! Affliction may one day smile again; and till then, sit thee down, sorrow! [Exit.

SCENE II.—The same.

Enter Armado and Moth.

Arm. Boy, what sign is it when a man of great spirit grows melancholy?

Moth. A great sign, sir, that he will look sad.

Arm. Why, sadness is one and the self-same thing, dear Imp.

Moth. I go, no; O Lord, sir, no.

Arm. How canst thou part sadness and melancholy, my tender juvenile?

Moth. By a familiar demonstration of the working, my tough senior.

Arm. Why tough senior? why tough senior?

Moth. Why tender juvenile? why tender juvenile?

Arm. I spoke it, tender juvenile, as a congruent epithet appertaining to thy young days, which we may nominate tender.

Moth. And I, tough senior, as an appertaining title to your old time, which we may name tough.

Arm. Pretty and apt.

Moth. How mean you, sir? I pretty, and my saying apt? or I apt, and my saying pretty?

Arm. Thou pretty, because little. [apt?

Moth. Little pretty, because little. Wherefore Arm. And therefore apt, because quick.

Moth. Speak you this in my praise, master?

Arm. In thy commend praise.

Moth. I will praise an eel with the same praise.

Arm. What, that an eel is ingenious?

Moth. That an eel is quick.

Arm. I do say thou art quick in answers: thou hastest my blood.

Moth. I am answered, sir.

Arm. I love not to be crossed.

Moth. [Aside] He speaks the mere contrary; crosses love not him.

Arm. I have promised to study three years with the duke.

Moth. You may do it in an hour, sir.

Arm. Impossible.

Moth. How many is one thrice told?

Arm. I am ill at reckoning; it fiteth the spirit of a base learner.

Moth. You are a gentleman and a gamester, sir.

Arm. I confess both: they are both the varnish of a complete man.

Moth. Then, I am sure, you know how much the gross sum of deuce-ace amounts to.

Arm. It doth amount to one more than two.

Moth. Which the base vulgar do call three.

Arm. True.

Moth. Why, sir, is this such a piece of study? Now here is three studied, ere ye 'll thrice wink: and how easy it is to put 'years' to the word 'three,' and study three years in two words, the dancing horse will tell you.

Arm. A most fine figure!

Moth. To prove you a cipher.

Arm. I will hereupon confess I am in love: and as it is base for a soldier to love, so am I in love with a base wench. If drawing my sword against the humour of affection would deliver me from the reprobate thought of it, I would take Desire prisoner, and ransom him to any French courtier for a new-ordained courtesy. I think scorn to sigh: me-think's is not the way of Cupid. Comfort me, boy, what great men have been in love?

Moth. Hercules, master.

Arm. Most sweet Hercules! More authority, dear boy, name more: and, sweet my child, let them be men of good repu'te and carriage.
LOVE'S LABOUR'S LOST.

ACT II.

SCENE I.—The same.

Enter the Princess of France, Rosaline, Maria, Katharine, Boyet, Lords, and other Attendants.

Boyet. Now, madam, summon up your dearest spirits:
Consider who the king your father sends, To whom he sends, and what 's his embassy: Yourself, held precioso in the world's esteem, To parley with the sole inheritor Of all perfections that a man may owe,

Moth. Samson, master: he was a man of good carriage, great carriage, for he carried the town-gates on his back like a porter: and he was in love.

Arm. O well-knit Samson! strong-jointed Samson! I do excel thee in my rapier as much as thou dost me in carrying gates. I am in love too. Who was Samson's love, my dear Moth?

Moth. A woman, master.

Arm. Of what complexion?

Moth. Of all the four, or the three, or the two, or one of the four.

Arm. Tell me precisely of what complexion.

Moth. Of the sea-water green, sir.

Arm. But one of the four complexions? [too.

Moth. As I have read, sir; and the best of them.

Arm. Green indeed is the colour of lovers; but to have a love of that colour, methinks Samson had small reason for it. He surely affected her for her wit.

Moth. It was so, sir; for she had a green wit.

Arm. My love is most immaculate white and red.

Moth. Most maculate thoughts, master, are masked under such colours.

Arm. Define, define, well-educated infant.

Moth. My father's wit and my mother's tongue, assist.

Arm. Sweet invocation of a child; most pretty and pathetical!

Moth. If she be made of white and red, Her faults will ne'er be known, For blushing cheeks by faults are bred And fears by pale white shown: Then if she fear, or be to blame, By this you shall not know, For still her cheeks possess the same Which native she doth owe.

A dangerous rhyme, master, against the reason of white and red.

Arm. Is there not a ballad, boy, of the King and the Beggar?

Moth. The world was very guilty of such a ballad some three ages since: but I think now 'tis not to be found; or, if it were, it would neither serve for the writing nor the tune.

Arm. I will have that subject newly writ o'er, that I may example my digression by some mighty precedent. Boy, I do love that country girl that I took in the park with the rational hind Costard: she deserves well.

Arm. [Aside] To be whipped; and yet a better love than my master.

Arm. Sing, boy; my spirit grows heavy in love.

Moth. And that's great marvel, loving a light wench.

Arm. I say, sing.

Moth. Forbear till this company be past.

Enter Dull, Costard, and Jaquenetta.

Dull. Sir, the duke's pleasure is, that you keep Costard safe: and you must suffer him to take no delight nor no penance; but a' must fast three days a week. For this damsel, I must keep her at the park: she is allowed for the day-woman. Fare you well.

Arm. I do betray myself with blushing. Maid!

Jaq. Man?

Arm. I will visit thee at the lodge.

Jaq. That's hereby.

Arm. I know where it is situate.

Jaq. Lord, how wise you are!

Arm. I will tell thee wonders.

Jaq. With that face?

Arm. I love thee.

Jaq. So I heard you say.

Arm. And so, farewell.

Jaq. Fair weather after you!

Dull. Come, Jaquenetta, away!

[Exit Dull and Jaquenetta.

Arm. Villain, thou shalt fast for thy offences ere thou be pardoned.

Cost. Well, sir, I hope, when I do it, I shall do it on a full stomach.

Arm. Thou shalt be heavily punished.

Cost. I am more bound to you than your fellows, for they are but lightly rewarded.

Arm. Take away this villain; shut him up.

Moth. Come, you transgressing slave; away!

Cost. Let me not be pent up, sir; I will fast, being loose.

Moth. No, sir; that were fast and loose: thou shalt to prison.

Cost. Well, if ever I do see the merry days of desolation that I have seen, some shall see.

Moth. What shall some see?

Cost. Nay, nothing, Master Moth, but what they look upon. It is not for prisoners to be too silent in their words; and therefore I will say nothing: I thank God I have as little patience as another man; and therefore I can be quiet.

[Exit Moth and Costard.

Arm. I do affect the very ground, which is base, where her shoe, which is baser, guided by her foot, which is bases, doth tread. I shall be forsworn, which is a great argument of falsehood, if I love. And how can that be true love which is falsely attempted? Love is a familiar; Love is a devil: there is no evil angel but Love. Yet was Samson so tempted, and he had an excellent strength; yet was Solomon so seduced, and, he had a very good Cupid's butt-shaft is too hard for Hercules' club; and therefore too much odds for a Spaniard's rapier. The first and second cause will not serve my turn; the passado he respects not, the duello he regards not: his disgrace is to be called boy; but his glory is to subdue men. Adieu! Adieu! what! be still, drum! for your manager is in love; yea, he loveth. Assist me, some extemporal god of rhyme, for I am sure I shall turn sonnet. Devise, wit; write, pen; for I am for whole volumes in folio.

[Exit.
Than you much willing to be counted wise
In spending your wit in the praise of mine.
But now to task the tasker: good Boyet,
You are not ignorant, all-telling fame
Doth noise abroad, Navarre hath made a vow,
Till painful study shall outwear three years,
No whileth be an applicant in court:
Therefore to 's seemeth it a needful course,
Before we enter his forbidden gates,
To know his pleasure; and in that behalf,
Bold of your worthiness, we single you
As our best-moving fair solicitor.
Tell him his daughter of the King of France,
On serious business, craving quick dispatch,
Importunes personal conference with his grace:
Iaste, signify so much; while we attend,
Like humble-visaged suitors, his high will.
Boyet. Proud of employment, willingly I go.
Prim. All pride is willing pride, and yours is so.

Who are the votaries, my loving lords,
That are vow-fellows with this virtuous duke?
First Lord. Lord Longaville is one.
Mar. I know him, madam: at a marriage-feast,
Between Lord Perigord and the beauteous heir
Of Jaques Falconbridge, solemnized
In Normandy, saw I this Longaville:
A man of sovereign parts he is esteem'd;
Well suiteth him the station of his birth,
Nothing becomes him ill that he would well.
The only soil of his fair virtue's gloss,
If virtue's gloss will stain with any soil,
Is a sharp wit match'd with too blunt a will;
Whose equal hath power to cut, whose will still w ill
It should none spare that come within his power.
Prim. Some merry mocking lord, belike; is't so?
Mar. They say so most that most his humours know.
[Grow.
Prim. Such short-lived wits do wither as they Who are the rest?
Kath. The young Dumnain, a well-accomplished youth,
Of all that virtue love for virtue loved:
Most power to do most harm, least knowing ill;
For he hath wit to make an ill shape good,
And shape to wit, glorious arms in hand.
I saw him at the Duke Alencson's once;
And much too little of that good I saw
Is my report to his great worthiness.
Ros. Another of these students at that time
Was disburseed by my father in his ward.
Biron they call him; but a merrier man,
Within the limit of becoming mirth,
I never spent an hour's talk withal:
His eye begots occasion for his wit;
For every object that the one doth catch
The other turns to a mirth-moving jest,
Which his fair tongue, conceit's expositor,
Delivers in such apt and gracious words
That aged ears play truant at his tales
And younger hearings are quite ravished;
So sweet and voluble is his discourse.
Prim. God bless my ladies! are they all in love,
That every one her own hath garnished
With such bedecking ornaments of praise?
First Lord. Here comes Boyet.

Reenter Boyet.
Prim. Now, what admittance, lord? Boyet. Navarre had notice of your fair approach;
And he and his competitors in oath
Were all address'd to meet you, gentle lady,
Before I came. Marry, thus much I have learnt: He rather means to lodge you in the field,
Like one that comes here to besiege his court,
Than seek a dispensation for his oath,
To let you enter his uncoupled house.
Here comes Navarre.

Enter King, Longaville, Dumnain, Biron, and Attendants.

King. Fair princess, welcome to the court of Navarre:
Prim. 'Fair! I give you back again; and 'welcome I have not yet: the roof of this court is too high to be yours: and welcome to the wide fields too base to be mine.
King. You shall be welcome, madam, to my court.
Prim. I will be welcome, then: conduct me thither.
King. Hear me, dear lady; I have sworn an oath.
Prim. Our lady help my lord! he'll be forsworn.
King. Not for the world, fair madam, by my will.
Prim. Why, will shall break it; will and nothing else.
King. Your ladyship is ignorant what it is.
Prim. Were my lord so, his ignorance were wise.
Where now his knowledge must prove ignorance.
I hear your grace hath sworn out house-keeping:
This deadly sin to keep that oath, my lord,
And sin to break it.
But pardon me, I am too sudden-bold:
To teach a teacher ill beseech me.
You'saue to read the purpose of my coming,
And suddenly resolve me in a word.
King. Madam, I will; if suddenly I may.
Prim. You will the sooner, that I were away;
For you 'll prove perplexed if you make me stay.
Biron. Did not I dance with you in Brabant once?
Ros. Did not I dance with you in Brabant once?
Biron. If thou dost know it, I was there.
Ros. How needless was it then to ask the question?
Biron. You must not be so quick.
Ros. 'Tis long of you that spur me with such questions.
[Will tire.
Biron. Your wit's too hot, it speeds too fast.
Ros. Not till it leave the rider in the mire.
Biron. What time o' day?
Ros. The hour that fools should ask.
Biron. Now fair befall your mask!
Ros. Fair fall the face it covers!
Biron. And send you many lovers!
Ros. Amen, so you believe me.
Biron. Nay, then will I be gone.
King. Madam, your father here doth intimate
The payment of a hundred thousand crowns;
Being but the one-half of an entire sum
Disbursed by my father in his ward.
But say that he or we, as neither have,
Received that sum, yet there remains unpaid
A hundred thousand more; in surety of the which,
One part of Aquitaine is bound to us,
Although not valued to the money's worth.
If then the king your father will restore
But that one-half which is unsatisfied,
We will give up our right in Aquitaine,
And hold fair friendship with his majesty.
But that, it seems, he little purposeth,
For here he doth demand to have repaid
A hundred thousand crowns; and not demands,
On payment of a hundred thousand crowns,
To have his title live in Aquitaine;
Which we much rather had depart withal
And have the money by our father lent
Than Aquitaine so gilded as it is.
Dear princess, were not his requests so far
From reason's yielding, your fair self should make
A yielding 'gainst some reason in my breast
And go well satisfied to France again.
Prim. You do the king my father too much wrong
And wrong the reputation of your name,
In so unseemly to confess receipt
Of that which hath so faithfully been paid.
ACT III.

L O V E S L A B O U R S L O S T.

SCENE I.

King. I do protest I never heard of it; and if you prove it, I’ll repay it back.
Or yield up Aquitaine.
Boyet. We arrest your word.
Boyet. You can produce acquittances For such a sum from special officers.
Of Charles his father.

King. Satisfy me so.
Boyet. So please your grace, the packet is not come.
Where that and other specialties are bound:
To-morrow you shall have a sight of them.
King. It shall suffice me: at which interview
All liberal reason I will yield unto.
Meantime receive such welcome at my hand
As honour without breach of honour may
Make tender of to thy true worthiness:
You may not come, fair princess, in my gates;
But here without you shall be so received
As you shall deem yourself lodged in my heart,
Though so denied fair harbour in my house.
Your own good thoughts excuse me, and farewell:
To-morrow shall we visit you again. [Grace!]
Boyet. Sweet health and fair desires consort your King. Thy own wish wish I thee in every place!

[Exit. Biron.]

Biron. Lady, I will commend you to mine own heart.
Ros. Pray you, do my commendations: I would be glad to see it.
Biron. I would you heard it goan.
Ros. Is the fool sick?
Biron. Sick at the heart.
Ros. Alack, let it blood.
Biron. Would that do it good?
Ros. My physic says ‘ay.’
Biron. Will you prick ‘t with your eye?
Ros. No point, with my knife.
Biron. Now, God save thy life!
Ros. And yours from long living! Biron. I cannot stay thanksgiving. [Retiring. Dunn. Sir, I pray you, a word: what lady is that same?
Boyet. The heir of Alencson, Katharine her name.
Dunn. A gallant lady. Monsieur, fare you well.
[Exit. Long.]

Long. I beseech you a word: what is she in the white?
Boyet. A woman sometimes, an you saw her in the light.
Long. Perchance light in the light. I desire her name.
Boyet. She hath but one for herself; to desire that Were a shame.
Long. Pray you, sir, whose daughter?
Boyet. Her mother’s, I have heard.
Long. God’s blessing on your beard!
Boyet. Good sir, be not offended.
She is an heir of Faltonbridge.
Long. Nay, my choler is ended.
She is a most sweet lady.
Boyet. Not unlike, sir, that may be. [Exit Long.
Biron. What’s her name in the cap?
Boyet. Rosaline, by good hap.
Biron. Is she wedded or no?

Boyet. To her will, sir, or so.
Biron. You are welcome, sir: adieu.
Boyet. Farewell to me, sir, and welcome to you. [Exit Biron.
Mar. That last is Biron, the merry mad-cap lord:
Not a word with him but a jest.
Boyet. And every jest but a word.
Prin. It was well done of you to take him at his word.
Boyet. I was as willing to grapple as he was to Mar. Two hot sheeps, marry.
Boyet. And wherefore not ships?
No sheep, sweet lamb, unless we feed on your lips.
Mar. You sheep, and I pasture: shall that finish
Boyet. So you grant pasture for me, [the jest?
[Offering to kiss her.
Mar. Not so, gentle beast:
My lips are no common, though several they be.
Boyet. Belonging to whom?
Mar. To my fortunes and me.
Prin. Good wits will be jangling; but, gentle, agree:
This civil war of wits were much better used
On Navarre and his book-men; for here ‘t is abused.
Boyet. If my observation, which very seldom lies,
By the heart’s still rhetoric disclosed with eyes,
Deceive me not now, Navarre is infected.
Prin. With what?
Boyet. With that which we lovers entitle affected.
Prin. Your reason?
[Retire Boyet. Why, all his behaviours did make their
To the court of his eye, peeping thorough desire;
His heart, like an agate, with your print impressed’d,
Proud with his form, in his eye pride expressed’d:
His tongue, all impatient to speak and not see,
Did stumble with haste in his eyesight to be;
All senses to that sense did make their repair,
To feel only looking on fairest of fair:
Methought all his senses were lock’d in his eye,
As jewels in crystal for some prince to buy;
Who, tendering their own worth from where they were glass’d,
Did point you to buy them, along as you pass’d:
His face’s own margin did quote such amazes
That all eyes saw his eyes enchanted with gazes.
I’ll give you Aquitaine and all that is his,
As you give him for my sake but one loving kiss.
Prin. Come to our pavilion: Boyet is disposed.
Boyet. But to speak that in words which his eye hath disclosed.
I only have made a mouth of his eye,
By adding a tongue which I know will not lie.
Ros. Thou art an old love-monger and speakest skillfully.
Mar. He is Cupid’s grandfather and learns news of him.
Ros. Then was Venus like her mother, for her father is but grim.
Boyet. Do you hear, my mad wenchens?
Mar. No.
Boyet. What then, do you see?
Ros. Ay, our way to be gone.
Boyet. You are too hard for me.
[Exit.]

ACT III.

SCENE I.—The same.

Enter Armado and Moth.

Arm. Warble, child; make passionate my sense of hearing.
Moth. Concollect.

[Enter Armado and Moth; Armado singing.] Scent of the air! Go, tenderness of years; take this key, give enlargement to the swan, bring him festinately hither: I must employ him in a letter to my love.

Moth. Master, will you win your love with a French
Arm. How meanest thou? brawling in French?
Moth. No, my complete master: but to jog off a tune at the tongue’s end, canary to it with your feet, humour it with turning up your eyelids, sign a note and sing a note, sometime through the throat, as if 117

you swallowed love with singing love, sometime through the nose, as if you sniffed up love by smelling love; with your hat hen's cause you the shop of your eyes; with your arms crossed on your thin-belly doublet like a rabbit on a spit; or your hands in your pocket like a man after the old painting; and keep not too close to ridiculous suspense, but a spin and away. These are complements, these are humourists; these betray nice wenchies, that would be betrayed without these; and make them men of note—do you not me?—that most are affected to these.

Arm. How hast thou purchased this experience?

Moth. By my penny of observation.

Arm. But O,—but O.—

Moth. 'The hobby-horse is forgot.'

Arm. Callest thou my love 'hobby-horse'?

Moth. No, master; the hobby-horse is but a colt, and your love perhaps a hackney. But have you forgot your love?

Arm. Almost I had.

Moth. Negligent student! learn her by heart.

Arm. By heart and in heart, boy.

Moth. And out of heart, master: all those three I will prove.

Arm. What wilt thou prove?

Moth. A man, if I live; and this, by, in, and without, upon the instant: by heart you love her, because your heart cannot come by her: in heart you love her, because your heart is in love with her: and out of heart you love her, being out of heart that you cannot enjoy her.

Arm. I am all these three.

Moth. And three times as much more, and yet nothing at all.

Arm. Fetch hither the swain: he must carry me a letter.

Moth. A message well sympathized: a horse to be ambassador for an ass.

Arm. Ha, ha! what sayest thou?

Moth. Marry, sir, you must send the ass upon the horse, for he is very slow-gaited. But I go.

Arm. The way is but short: away!

Moth. As swift as lead, sir.

Arm. The meaning, pretty ingenious?

Is not lead a metal heavy, dull, and slow? [no.

Moth. Minimé, honest master; or rather, master, I say lead is slow.

Moth. You are too swift, sir, to say so: Is that lead slow which is fired from a gun?

Arm. Sweet smoke of rhetoric!

He requites me a cannon: and the bullet, that's he: shoot thee at the swain.

Moth. 'Thump then and I flee.' [Exit. Arm. A most acute juvenile; voluble and free of grace! [face: By thy favour, sweet welkin, I must sigh in thy Most rude melancholy, value gives thee place. My herald is return'd.

Retreat Moth with Costard.

Moth. A wonder, master! here's a costard broken in a shin.

Arm. Some guinea, some riddle: come, thy Pen. Cost. No egum, no riddle, no 'venyo; no salve in the mail, sir; O, sir, plantain, a plain plantain! no 'venyo, no 'venyo; no salve, sir, but a plantain!

Arm. By virtue, thou'enforced laughter; thy silly thought my spleen: the heating of my lungs provokes, too long in one time, but a spin and away. O, pardon me, my stars! Both the insensitive take salve for the 'venyo, and the word 'venyo for a salve?

Moth. Do the wise think then other? is not the 'venyo a salve?

Arm. No, page; it is an epilogue or discourse, to

Some obscure precedence that hath tofor been sain. I will example it:

The fox, the ape and the humble-bee,
Were still at odds, being but three.

There's the moral. Now the 'venyo.

Moth. I will add the 'venyo. Say the moral again.

Arm. The fox, the ape, the humble-bee,
Were still at odds, being but three.

Moth. Until the goose came out of door,
And stay'd the odds by adding four.

Now will I begin your moral, and do you follow with my 'venyo.

The fox, the ape, and the humble-bee,
Were still at odds, being but three.

Arm. Until the goose came out of door,
Staying the odds by adding four.

Moth. A good 'venyo, ending in the goose: would you desire more?

Cost. The boy hath sold him a bargain, a goose, that's flat.

Sir, your pennyworth is good, an your goose be fat. To sell a bargain well is as cunning as fast and loose; Let me see; a fat 'venyo; ay, that's a fat goose.

Arm. Come hither, come hither. How did this argument begin?

Moth. By saying that a costard was broken in a
Then call'd you for the 'venyo. [shin.

Cost. True, and I for a plantain: thus came your argument in; [bought; Then the boy's fat 'venyo, the goose that you And he enters the market. [Exit. Arm. But tell me: how was there a costard broken in a shin?

Moth. I will tell you sensibly. Cost. Thou hast no feeling of it, Moth: I will speak that 'venyo: I Costard, running out, that was safely within. Fell over the threshold, and broke my shin.

Arm. We will talk no more of this matter.

Cost. Till there be more matter in the shin.

Arm. Sirrah Costard, I will enfranchise thee.

Cost. O, marry me to one Frances: I smell some 'venyo, some goose, in this.

Arm. By my sweet soul, I mean setting thee at liberty, enfreedoming thy person: thou wast immured, restrained, captivated, bound.

Cost. True, true; and now you will be my purgation and let me loose. Arm. I'll use thee thy liberty, set thee from duration; and, in lieu thereof, impose on thee nothing but this: bear this significant [giving a letter] to the country maid Jaquenetta: there is remuneration; for the best word of mine honour is rewarding my dependents. Moth, follow.

Moth. Like the sequel, J. Signior Costard, adjus.

Cost. My sweet ounce of man's flesh! my inconstancy Jew! [Exit Moth. Now will I look to his remuneration. Remuneration! O, that's the Latin word for three farthings: three farthings—remuneration.—What's the price of this inkle?—'One penny.'—'No, I'll give you a remuneration:' why, it carries it. Remuneration! why, it is a fairer name than French crown. I will never buy and sell out of this word.

Enter Biron.

Biron. O, my good knave Costard! exceedingly well met.

Cost. Pray you, sir, how much carnation ribbon may a man buy for a remuneration?

Biron. What is a remuneration?

Cost. Marry, sir, halfpenny farthing.

Biron. Why, then, three farthings worth of silk. Cost. I thank your worship: God be wi! you! Biron. Stay, slave; I must employ thee: [Exit. As thou will win my favour, good my knave, Do one thing for me that I shall entreat. [Exit Cost. When would you have it done, sir? Biron. This afternoon.
ACT IV.

LOVE'S LABOUR'S LOST.

SCENE I. — The same.

Enter the Princess, and her train, a Forester, Boyet, Rosaline, Maria, and Katharine.

Prin. Was that the king, that spurred his horse
Against the steep uprising of the hill? [so hard Boyet. I know not; but I think it was not he.
Prin. Who'er a' was, a' show'd a mounting mind.
Well, lords, to-day we shall have our dispatch:
On Saturday we will return to France.
Then, forester, my friend, where is the bush
That we must stand and play the murderer in?
For, hereby, upon the edge of yonder coppice;
A stand where you may make the fairest shoot.
Prin. I thank my beauty, I fear that shoot,
And thereupon thou speak'st the fairest shoot.
For. Pardon me, madam, for I meant not so.
Prin. What, what? first praise me and again say
O short-lived pride! Not fair? ask for woe! [no?
For. Yes, madam, fair.

Prin. Nay, never paint me now:
Where fair is not, praise cannot mend the brow.
Here, good my glass, take this for telling true:
Fair payment for foul words is more than due.
For. Nothing but fair is that which you inherit.
Prin. See, see, my beauty will be saved by merit!
O heresy in fair, fit for these days!
A giving hand, though foul, shall have fair praise.
But come, the bow: now mercy goes to kill,
And shooting well is then accounted ill.
Thus will I save my credit in the shoot:
Not wounding, pity would not let me do't.
If wounding, then it was to show my skill,
That more for praise than purpose meant to kill.
And out of question so it is sometimes,
Glory grows guilty of detested crimes.
When, for fame's sake, for praise, an outward part,
We bend to that the working of the heart;
As I for praise sake, when to strive to be
Lords o'er their lords?

Prin. Only for praise: and praise we may afford
To any lady that subdues a lord.

This senior-junior, giant-dwarf, Dan Cupid;
Regent of love-rhymes, lord of folded arms,
The anointed sovereign of sighs and groans,
Liege of all loiterers and malcontents,
Dread prince of plackets, king of codpieces,
Solo imperator and great general
Of trotting 'paritors: — O my little heart! —
And I to be a corporal of his field,
And wear his colours like a tumbler's hoop!
What, I! love! I sue! I seek a wife!
A woman, that is like a German clock,
Still a-repairing, ever out of frame,
And never going a right, being a watch,
But being watch'd that it may still go right!
Nay, to be perjured, which is worst of all:
And, among three, to love the worst of all;
A wightely wanton with a velvet brow,
With two pitch-balls stuck in her face for eyes;
Ay, and, by heaven, one that will do the deed
Though Argus were her eunuch and her guard:
And I to sigh for her! to watch for her!
To pray for her! Go to: it is a plague
That Cupid will improve for my neglect
Of his almighty dreadful little might.
Well, I will love, write, sigh, pray, sue and groan:
Some men must love my lady and some Joan. [Exit.
ACT IV.  LOVE'S LABOUR'S LOST.  SCENE II.

beggar; for so witnesseth thy lowliness. Shall I command thy love? I may: shall I enforce thy love? I could: shall I entreat thy love? I will. What shall thou exchange for rings' robes; for titles? titles; for thyself? me. Thus, expecting thy reply, I profuse my lips on thy feet, my eyes on thy picture, and my heart on thy every part. Thine, in the dearest design of industry,

DON ADRIANO DE ARMADO.

Thus dost thou hear the Nemean lion roar
To thee thou lamb, that standest as his prey.
Submit his princely feet before,
And he from forage will incline to play:
But if thou strive, poor soul, what art thou then?
Food for his rage, repasture for his den.

PRIN. What plume of feathers is he that indited
This letter?

[Exeunt Prin.

What vane? what weathercock? did you ever hear
Boyet. I am much deceived but I remember the style.

[erewhile.

PRIN. Else your memory is bad, going o'er it Boyet. This Armado is a Spaniard, that keeps here in court;
A phantasm, a Monarch, and one that makes sport
To the prince and his bookmates.

PRIN. Thou fellow, a word:
Who gave thee this letter?

[To Ros. Here, sweet, put up this: 't will be thine another day.

[Exeunt Princess and train.

Boyet. Who is the suitor? who is the suitor?
Ros. Shall I teach you to know?
Boyet. Ay, my continent of beauty.
Ros. Why, she that bears the bow.
Finely put off!

Boyet. My lady goes to kill hons; but, if thou marry,
Hang me by the neck, if horns that year miscarry.
Finely put on!
Ros. Well, then, I am the shooter.
Boyet. And who is your deere?
Ros. If we choose by the horns, yourself come not near.
Finely put on.
Mor. You still wrangle with her, Boyet, and she strikes at the brow.

Boyet. But she herself is hit lower: have I hit her now?
Ros. Shall I come upon thee with an old saying, that was a man when King Peen of France was a little boy, as touching the hit it?
Boyet. So I may answer thee with one as old, that was a woman when Queen Guinever of Britain was a little wench, as touching the hit it.
Ros. Thou canst not hit it, hit it, hit it, and not hit it, my good man!
Boyet. An I cannot, cannot, cannot
An I cannot, another can.

[Exeunt Ros. and Kath.

Cost. By my troth, most pleasant: how both did it!

Mor. A mark marvells well shot, for they both did hit it.

Boyet. A mark! O mark but that mark! A mark, says my lady!

[be.

Let the mark have a prick in 't. to meet at, if it may
Mor. tide o' the bow hand? faith, your hand is out.

Cost. Indeed, a' must shoot nearer, or he 'll ne'er hit the clout.

Boyet. An if my hand be out, then belie your hand is in.

Cost. Then will she get the upshot by cleaving the pin.

Mor. Cost. As come, you talk gracefully; your lips Cost. She's too hard for you at pricks, sir: challenge her to a bowl.

Boyet. I fear too much rubbing. Good-night, my good owl.

[Exeunt Boyet and Marn.

Cost. By my soul, a swain! a most simple clown!

Lord. O, come, the ladies and I have put him down. O' my throat, most sweet jests! most incoy vulgar wit!

When it comes so smooth off, so obsesly, as it were, so fit.

Armado o' the one side.—O, a most dainty man!
To see him walk before a lady and to bear her fan!
To see him kiss his hand! and how most sweetly a'
will swear!

And his page o' the other side, that handful of wit!
Ah, heavens, it is a most pathetical nit!
Sola, sola, ! [Shout within.—Exit Costard, running.

SCENE II.—The same.

Enter Holofernes, Sir Nathaniel, and Dull.

Nath. Very reverend sport, truly; and done in the estimable of a good book.

Hol. The deer was, as you know, sangius, in blood; ripe as the pomeower, who now hangeth like a jewel in the ear of cælæ, the sky, the welkin, the heaven; and anon falleth like a crab on the face of terra, the soil, the land, the earth.

Nath. The Master Holofernes, the epitaphs are sweetly varied, like a scholar' at the least; but, sir,
I assure ye, it was a buck of the first head.

Hol. Sir Nathaniel, hau credo.

Dull. 'T was not a hau credo; 't was a pricket.

Hol. Most barbarous intimation! yet a kind of insinuation, as it were, in via, in way, of explication; facere, as it were, replication, or rather, ostenature, to show, as it were, his inclination, after his undressed, unpollished, uneducated, unpruned, untrained, or rather, unlettered, or ratherest, unconfirmed fashion, to insert again my hau credo for a deer.

Dull. I said the deer was not a hau credo; 't was a pricket.

Hol. 'Twice-sod simplicity, his coactus!’ [look!
O thou monster Ignorance, how deformed dost thou Nath. Sir, he hath never fed of the dainties that are bred in a book:
he hath not eat paper, as it were; he hath not drank ink: his intellect is not replenished: he is only an animal, only sensible in the droller parts:
And such barren plants are set before us, that we thankful should be,
Which of us taste and feeling are, for those parts that do frustrify us more than he.

For as it would ill become me to be vain, indiscreet,
or a fool,
So were there a patch set on learning, to see him in a new shape.

But omne bene, say I; being of an old father's mind,
Many can brook the weather that love not the wind.

Dull. You two are book-men: can you tell me by your wit
What was a month old at Cain's birth, that 's not five weeks old as yet? [ian Dull.

Hol. Dictynna, goodman Dull; Dictynna, good-
Dull. What is Dictynna?

Nath. A title to Phebe, to Luna, to the moon.

Hol. The moon was a month old when Adam was no more of high conscience. [score.
And raught not to five weeks when he came to live.
The allusion holds in the exchange.

Dull. 'T is true, indeed; the collusion holds in the ACT IV.        LOVE'S LABOUR'S LOST.        SCENE III.

If knowledge be the mark, to know thee shall suffice;
Well learned is that tongue that well can thee commend,
[der; All ignorant that soul that sees thee without wonder
Which in her arms doth embrace]. Sir that I thy parts admire:
Thy eye Jove's lightning beams, thy voice his dreadful thunder,

Which, not to anger bent, is music and sweet fire.
Celestial as thou art, O, pardon love this wrong,
That sings heaven's praise with such an earthly

If you find not the apostrophes, and so miss the accent: let me supervise the canzonet. Here are only numbers ratified; but, for the elegance, facility, and golden cadence of poesy, care.

Ovidius Naso was the man: and why, indeed, Naso, but for snuffing out the odoriferous flowers of fancy, the jerks of invention? Imitari is nothing: so doth the hound his master, the ape his keeper, the tired horse his rider. But, damosella virgini, was this directed to you?

Jaq. Ay, sir, from one Monsieur Biron, one of the strange queen's lords.

I will overglaunce the superscription: 'To the snow-white hand of the most beauteous Lady Rosaline.' I will look again on the intellect of the letter, for the nomination of the party writing to the person written unto: 'Your ladyship's in all desired employment.'

Sir Nathaniel, this Biron is one of the votaries with the king; and here he hath framed a letter to a sequent of the stranger queen's, which accidentally, or by the way of progression, hath miscarried. Trip and go, my sweet; deliver this paper into the royal hand of the king: it may concern much. Stay not thy compliment: I forgive thy duty: adieu.

[Your life!]

Jaq. Good Costard, go with me. Sir, God save Cost. Have with thee, my girl.

[Exeunt Cost. and Jaq.]

Nath. Sir, you have done this in the fear of God, very religiously; and, as a certain father saith,—

Hol. Sir, tell me of the father: I do fear colourable colours. But to return to the verses: did they please you, Sir Nathaniel?

Nath. Marvellous well for the pen.

Hol. I do dine to-day at the father's of a certain pupil of mine; where, if, before repast, it shall please you to gratify the table with a grace, I will, on my privilege I have with the parents of the fore-said child or pupil, undertake your ben venuto; where I will prove those verses to be very unlearned, neither savouring of poetry, wit, nor invention: I beseech your society.

Nath. And thank you too; for society, saith the text, is the happiness of life.

Hol. And, certes, the text most infallibly concludes it. [To Dull] Sir, I do invite you too; you shall not say me nay: pruce verba. Away! the gentle are at their game, and we will to our recreation.

[Exeunt.]

SCENE III.—The same.

Enter Biron, with a pear.

Biron. The king he is hunting the deer; I am courting myself: they have pitched a toil; I am toiling in a pitch.—pitch that defiles: defile! a foul word. Well, set thee down, sorrow! for so they say the fool said, and so say I, and the fool: well proved, wit! By the Lord, this love is as mad as Ajax: it kills sheep; it kills me. I a sheep; well proved again? My sidelong will I not. If I do not faith, I will not. O, but her eye,—by this light, but for her eye, I would not love her; yes, for her two eyes. Well, I do nothing in the world but lie, and lie in my throat. By heaven, I do love: and it hath taught me to rhyme and to melancholy; and 121.

Enter the King, with a paper.

King. Ay me! Biron. [Aside] Shot, by heaven! Proceed, sweet Cupid, tint the plume of thy bird-bolt under the left pap. In faith, secrets!

King [reads].

So sweet a kiss the golden sun gives not
To those fresh morning drops upon the rose,
As thy eye-beams, when their fresh rays have smote
The night of dew that on my cheeks down flows:
Nor shines the silver moon half so bright
Through the transparent bosom of the deep,
As doth thy face through tears of mine give light:
Thou shinest in every tear that I do weep:
No drop but as a coach doth carry thee;
So rides thou triumphing in my woe.
Do but behold the tears that swell in me,
And they thy glory through my grief will show:
But do not love thyself; then thou wilt keep
My tears for glasses, and still make me weep.
O queen of pleasures! O fair excellence,
No thought can think, nor tongue of mortal tell
How shall she know my griefs? I'll drop the paper!
Sweet leaves, shade folly. Who is he comes here?

[Steps aside.]

What, Longaville! and reading! listen, ear.
Biron. Now, in thy likeness, one more fool appear!

Enter Longaville, with a paper.

Long. Ay me, I am forsworn!
Biron. Why he comes in like a perjurer, wearing papers.

King. In love, I hope: sweet fellowship in shame!
Biron. One drunkard loves another of the name.
Long. Am I the first that have been perjur'd so?
Biron. I could put thee in comfort. Not by two
That I know: [ety, Thou dost see the triumvir, the corner-cap of society.
The shape of Love's Tyburn that hangs up simplicity.

Long. I fear these stubborn lines lack power to O sweet Maria, empress of my love!
These numbers will I tear, and write in prose.
O, rhymes were guards on wanton Cupid's
Disfigure not his slope.

[Reads.] Long. Did not the heavenly rhetoric of thine eye,
Gainst whom the world cannot hold argument,
Persuade my heart to this false perjury?
Vows for thee broke deserve not punishment.
A woman I forswore: but I will prove,
Thou being a goddess, I forswore not thee:
My vow was earthly, thou a heavenly love;
Thy grace being gain'd cures all disgrace in me.
Voices are but breath, and breath a vapour is:
Then thou, fair Juno, which on my earth dost shine,
Exhalest this vapour vow; in thee is it:
If broken then, it is no fault of mine:
If by me broke, what fool is not so wise
To lose an oath to win a paradise?

[Aside. Biron. This is the liver-vein, which makes flesh
A green gorse a goddess: pure, pure idolatry.]
God amend us, God amend! we are much out o' the long.
By whom shall I send this?—Company!

[Steps aside.]

Biron. All hid, all hid: an old infant play.
Like a dead god here sit I in the sky.
And wretched fools' secrets heedfully o'er-eye.
More saeks to the mill! O heavens, I have my wish!

Enter Dumain, with a paper.

Dumain transform't! four woodcocks in a dish! Dum. O most divine Kate!
Biron. O most profane comb!
Dum. By Jove, the wonder in a mortal eye!
Biron. By earth, she is not, corporal, there you lie.
Dum. Her amber hair for foul hath amber quoted.
Biron. An amber-colour'd raven was well noted.
Dum. As upright as the cedar.
Biron. Stoop, I say;
Her thimder is with child.
Dum. As fair as day.—[shine.
Biron. Ay, as some days; but then no sun must
Dum. O that I had my wish!
Long. And I had mine!
King. And I mine, too, good Lord! [word?
Biron. Amen, so I had mine: is not that a good
Dum. I would forget her; but a fever she Reigns in my blood and will remember'd.
Biron. A fever in your blood! why, then incision
Would let her out in sacers: sweet misprision!
Dum. Once more I'll read the ode that I have writ.

[Exit.]

Dumain. Once more I'll mark how love can vary
Dum. [reads.]

On a day—alack the day!—

Love, whose month is ever May,
Strip'd a blossom past its pitch, excel,
Playing in the wanton air:

Through the vaulted leaves the wind,
All unseen, can passage find;
That the lover, sick to death,
Wish himself the heaven's breath.

Air, quoth he, thy cheeks may blow;
Air, would I might triumph so!
But, alack, my hand is sworn
Ne'er to pluck thee from thy thorn;

Vow, alack, for youth unmeet.
Youth so apt to pluck a sweet!
Dumain. Do not call it sin in me.
That I am forsworn for thee;
Thou for whom Jove would swear
Juno but an Ethiope were;
And deny himself for Jove,
Turning mortal for thy love.

This will I send and something else more plain,
That shall express my true love's fasting pain.
O, would the king, Biron, and Longaville,
Were lovers too! Ill, to example ill,
Would from my forehead wipe a perjur'd note:
For none on earth where all amends do note.

Long. [advancing] Dumain, thy love is far from charity,
That in love's grief desirest society:
You may look pale, but I should blush, I know,
To be o'heard and taken napping so.

King. [advancing] Come, sir, you blush; as his your case is such:
You chide at him, offending twice as much:
You do not love Maria: Longaville,
Dumain never sonnet for her sake compile,
Nor never lay his wreathed arms athwart
His loving bosom to keep down his heart.
I have been closely shrouded in this bush
And mark'd you both and for you both did blush:
I heard your guilty rhymes, observed your fashion,
Saw sigils seek from you, noted well your passion:
Ay me! says one; O Jove! the other cries:
One, her hair was gold, golden crystal, the other's eyes:

[To Long.] You would for paradise break faith and troth;

[To Dum.] And love, for your love, would infringe
What will Biron say when that he shall hear
Faith so infringed, which such zeal did swear?
How will he speak! how will be spend his wit
How will he triumph, leap and laugh at it!
ACT IV.

LOVE'S LABOUR'S LOST.

SCENE III.

For all the wealth that ever I did see,
I would not have him know so much by me.

_Biron._ Now step I forth to whipt hypocrisy.

[Advancing.

Ah, good my liege, I pray thee, pardon me!

Good heart, what grace hast thou, thus to reproveh
These worms for loving, that art most in love?
Your eyes do make no coaches; in your tears
There is no certain princess that appears;
You 'll not be perjured, 'tis a hateful thing;
Tush, none but minstrels like of sounding!
But are you not ashamed ? nay, are you not,
All three of you, to be thus much o'ershott?
You found my note; the king your mote did see;
But I a beam do find in each of three.
O, what a scene of foolery have I seen,
Of sigs, of groans, of sorrow and of teen!
O me, with what strict patience have I sat,
To see a king transformed to a gnat!
To see great Hercules whipping a pig,
And profound Solomon to tune a jig,
And Nestor play at push-pin with the boys,
And critic Timon laugh at idle toys!
Where have my grief, O, tell me, good Dumain?
And, gentle Longaville, where lies thy pain?
And where my liege's? all about the breast:
A candle, ho!

_King._ Too bitter is thy jest.

Are we betray'd thus to thy over-view?

_Biron._ Not you to me, but betray'd by you:
I, that am honest: I, that hold it sin
To break the vow I am engaged in;
I am betray'd, by keeping company
With men like men of inconstancy.
When shall you see me write a thing in rhyme?
Or groan for love? or spend a minute's time
In pruning me? When shall you hear that I
Will praise a hand, a foot, a face, an eye,
A gait, a state, a brow, a breast, a waist,
A leg, a limb?

_King._ Soft! whither away so fast?

_A true man or a thief that gallops so?

_Biron._ I post from love: good lover, let me go.

Enter Jaquenetta and Costard.

_Jag._ God bless the king!

Cost._ Some certain thing!

_King._ What present hast thou there?

_Cost._ A wife, mistress, is a great dignity.

_King._ What makes treason here?

_Cost._ Nay, it makes nothing, sir.

_King._ If it mar nothing neither,
The treason and you go in peace away together.

_Jag._ Beseech your grace, let this letter be read:
Our parson misdoubts it: 't was treason, he said.

_Biron._ Jaquenetta, read it over. [Giving him the paper.

_Where hast thou it?"

_Jag._ Of Costard.

_King._ Where hast thou it?

_Cost._ Of Dun Adriamado, Dun Adriamado.

[ _Biron tears the letter._

_King._ How now! what is in you? why dost thou tear it?

_Biron._ A toy, my liege, a toy: your grace needs not fear it.

_Long._ It did move him to passion, and therefore let's hear it.

_Dum._ It is Biron's writing, and here is his name.

[Gathering up the pieces.

_Biron._ To Costard] Ah, you whoreson loggerhead! you were born to do me shame.

_Guilty._ My lord, guilty! I confess, I confess.

_King._ What? all this Abbe?

_Biron._ That you three fools lack'd me fool to make up the mess:
He, he, and you, and you, my liege, and I,
Are pick-purses in love, and we deserve to die.
O, dismiss this audience, and I shall tell you more.

_Dum._ Now the number is even.

_Biron._ True, true; we are four.

_Will these turtles be gone?"

_King._ Hence, sirs; away! _Cost._ Walk aside the true folk, and let the traitors stay.

[ _Exeunt Costard and Jaquenetta._

_Biron._ Sweet lords, sweet lovers, O, let us embrace!
As true we are as flesh and blood can be:
The sea will ebb and flow, heaven show his face;
Young blood doth not obey an old decree:
We cannot cross the cause why we were born;
Therefore we must we be worsen.

_King._ What, did these rent lines show some love of thine?

[ _by Rosaline._

_Biron._ Did they, quoth you? Who sees the heaven-That, like a rude and savage man of Inde,
At the first opening of the gorgeous east,
Bows not his vassal head and stricken blind
Kisses the base ground with obedient breast?

_What peremptory eagle-eyed sighted mixe

Dares look upon the heaven of her brow,
That is not blinded by her majesty?

_King._ What zeal, what fury hath inspired thee?

_Biron._ O, my love, her mistress, is a great dignity.

 Ents an attending star, scarce seen a light.

_Biron._ My eyes are then no eyes, nor I Biron:
O, but for my love, day would turn to night!

Of all complexions the eul'd sovereignty
Do meet, as at a fair, in her fair cheek,
Where seem'd a worth'ly fire, makes one dignify,

_Might shake off fifty, looking in her eye:

Beaut' doth varnish age, as if new-born,
And gives the crutch the cradle's infancy:

 испи the sun that maketh all things shine.

_King._ By heaven, thy love is black as ebony.

_Biron._ Is ebony her? O, wood divine!

_A wife of such wood were felicity,
O, who can give an oath? where is a book?

That I may swear beauty doth beauty lack,
If that she learn not of her eye to look:

_No face is fair that is not full so black.

_King._ Black is the face of hell.
The lute of dungeons and the suit of night;
And beauty's crest becomes the heavens well.

_Biron._ Devils soonest tempt, resembling spirits of

If in black my lady's brows be deck'd, _light._

It morns that painting and usurping hair
Should ravish doters with a false aspect;

And therefore is she born to make black fair.

Her favour turns the fashion of the days,
For native blood is counted painting now;
And therefore red, that would avoid dispraise,
Paints itself black, to imitate her brow.

_Dum._ To lie like her are chimney-sweepers black.

_Long._ And since her time are colliers counted bright.

_Crack._ And Ethiopes of their sweet complexion

_Dum._ Dark needs no candles now, for dark is light.

_Biron._ Your mistresses dare never come in rain,
For fear their colors should be wash'd away.

_King._ 'T were good, yours did; for, sir, to tell you

_I'll find a fairer face not wash'd to-day._

_Biron._ I'll prove her fair, or talk 'til doomsday here.

_She._ Devil will fright thee then so much as

_Dum._ I never knew man hold vale stuff so dear.

_Long._ Look, here's thy love: my foot and her face see.

_Biron._ O, if the streets were paved with thine eyes,

_Their feet were much too dainty for such tread!_
ACT V.

LOVE'S LABOUR'S LOST.

SCENE I.

Enter Holofernes, Sir Nathaniel, and Dull.

Hol. Satis quod sufficit.

Nath. I praise God for you, sir; your reasons at dinner have been sharp and sententious; pleasant without scurvity, witty without affectation, audacious without impudence, learned without opinion, and strange without heresy. I did converse this quondam day with a companion of the king's, who is initiated, nominated, or called, Don Adriano de Armagnac.

Hol. Novi hominem tanquam te: his humour is lofty, his discourse peremptory, his tongue filed, his eye ambitious, his gait majestic, and his general behaviour vain, ridiculous, and thronatical. He is too picked, too spruce, too affected, too odd, as it were, too peregrinate, as I may call it.

Nath. A most singular and choice epithet.

Hol. He draweth out the thread of his verbosity finer than the staple of his argument. I abhor such fanatical phantasmes, such insociable and point-devisive companions; such rackers of orthography, as to speak dout, fine, when he should say doubt; det, when he should pronounce debt,—d, e, b, t, not d, e, b, t; he calleth a calf, cunt: half, half; neighbour vocatur nebour; neighbour alabre, not, nolle; this is abhomina, which he would call abominable: it

Dum. O vile! then, as she goes, what upward lies
The street should see as she walk'd overhead.

King. But what of this? are we not all in love?

Biron. Nothing so sure; and thereby all forsworn.

King. Then leave this chat; and, good Biron, now
Our loving lawful, and our faith not torn.

Dum. Ay, marry, there; some flattery for this evil.

Long. O, some authority how to proceed;
Some tricks, some quibbles, how to cheat the devil.

Dum. Some salve for perjury.

Biron. True, sir; it's more than need.
Have at you, then, affections men at arms.
Consider what you first did swear unto,
To fast, to study, and to see no woman;
Flat treason 'gainst the kingly state of youth.
Say, can you fast? your stomachs are too young;
And absence engenders maladies.
And where that you have vow'd to study, lords,
In that each of you forsworn his book,
Can you still dream and pore thereon look?
For when would you, my lord, or you, or you,
Have found the ground of study's excellence
Without the beauty of a woman's face?
[From women's eyes this doctrine I derive;]
They are the ground, the books, the academes
From whence doth spring the true Promethean fire.

Wyl. Universal plopping potions up
The apple-wafted taverns.
As motion and long-during action tires
The sinewy vigour of the traveller.
Now, for not looking on a woman's face,
You have in that forsworn the use of eyes
And study too, the causer of your vow;
For where is any author in the world
Teaches such beauty as a woman's eye?
Learning is but an adjunct to ourself
And where we are our learning likewise is;
Then when ourselves we see in ladies' eyes,
Do we not likewise see our learning there?
O, we have made a vow to study, lords,
And in that vow we have forsworn our books.
For when would you, my liege, or you, or you,
In leden contemplation have found out
Such airy numbers as the prompting eyes
Of beauty's tutors have end, and sublimates?
Other slow arts entirely keep the brain;
And therefore, finding barren practisers,
Scarce show a harvest of their heavy toil:
But love, first learned in a lady's eyes,
Lives not alone immersed in the brain;
But, with the motion of all elements,
Courses as swift as thought in every power,
And gives to every power a double power,
Above their functions and their offices.
It adds a precious seeing to the eye;

A lover's eyes will gaze an eagle blind;
A lover's ear will hear the lowest sound,
When the suspicious head of theft is stopp'd:
Love's feeling is more soft and sensible
Than are the tender horns of cocked snails;
Love's tongue leaves dulcissimae glossas in taste:
For valour, is not Love a Hercules!
Still climbing trees in the Hesperides!
Subtle as Sphinx; as sweet and musical
As bright Apollo's lute, strung with his hair;
And when Love speaks, the voice of all the gods
Make heavenly drowsy with the harmony.
Never durst poet touch a pen to write
Until his ink were temper'd with Love's sighs;
O, then his lines would ravish savage ears
And plant in tyrants mild humility.
From women's eyes this doctrine I derive:
They sparkle still the right Promethean fire;
They are the books, the arts, the academes,
That show, contain and nourish all the world:
Else none at all in ought proves excellent.
Then fools were you these women to forswear,
Or keeping what is sworn, you will prove fools.
For wisdom's sake, a word that all men love,
Or for love's sake, a word that loves all men,
Or for men's sake, the authors of these women,
Or women's sake, by whom we men are men;
Let us once lose our oaths to find ourselves,
Or else we lose our spirits to keep our oaths.
It is religion to be thus forsworn,
For charity itself fulfills the law,
And who can sey love from charity?

King. Saint Cupid, then! and, soldiers, to the field!

Biron. Advance your standards, and upon them,
Pell-mell, down with them! but be first advised,
In conflict that you get the sun of them.

Long. Now to plain-dealing; lay these gazoles by:
Shall we resolve to woo these girls of France?

King. And win them too; therefore let us devise
Some entertainment for them in their tents.

Biron. First, from the park let us conduct them thither;
Then homeward every man attach the hand
Of his fair mistress: in the afternoon
We will with some strange pastime solace them,
Such as the thought of the romance is shape;
For revels, dances, masks and merry hours
Forerun fair Love, strewing her way with flowers.

King. Away, away! no time shall be omitted
That will betime, and may by us be fitted.

Biron. Allons! allons! Sow'd cockle reap'd no corn;
And justice always whirls in equal measure;
Light wenchles may prove plagues to men forsworn;
If so, our copper buys no better treasure. [Exeunt.]
insinuateth me of insanie; anne intelligis, domine? to make frantic, lunatic.
Nath. Laus Deo, bene intelligo.
Hol. Bon, bon, fort bon, Priscian! a little scratched, sir, I observe.
Nath. Videone quis venit?
Hol. Video, et gaudeo.

Enter Armado, Moth, and Costard.

Arm. Chirrah! [To Moth. Hol. Chirrah chirrah, not sirrah?
Arm. Men of peace, well encountered.
Hol. Most military sir, salutation.
Moth. [Aside to Costard] They have been at a great feast of languages, and stolen the scraps.
Cost. O, they have lived long on the aims-basket of words. I marvel thy master hath not eaten thee for a word; for thou art not so long by the head as honorificabilitudinitatibus; thou art easier swallowed than a flap-dragon.

Moth. Peace! the peal begins.
Arm. [To Hol.] Monsieur, are you not lettered?
Hol. He teaches boys the horn-book. What is a b, spelt backward, with the horn on his
Hol. Ba, puerita, with a horn added. [head? Moth. Ba, most silly sheep with a horn. You hear his learning.

Hol. Quis, quis, qui, countermand?
Arm. The third of the five vowels, if you repeat them; or the fifth, if I.
Hol. I will repeat them,—a, e, i,—[o, u.
Moth. The sheep: the other two concludes it.—
Arm. Now, by the salt wave of the Mediterraneum, a sweet touch, a quick venue of wit! snip, snap, quick and home! it rejoiceth my intellect: true wit! [wit-old.
Moth. Offered by a child to an old man; which is Hol. What is the figure? what is the figure?
Moth. Horns.

[gig. Moth. Thou disputest like an infant: go, whip thy Moth. Lend me thy horn to make one, and I will whip about thy infanty circums circum,—a gig of a cuckold's horn.

Cost. An I had but one penny in the world, thou shouldst have it to buy gingerbread: hold, there is the very remuneration I had of thy master, thou half-penny, thou other pigeon-egg of discretion. O, an the heavens were so pleased that thouwert but my bastard, what a joyful father wouldst thou make me! Go to; thou hast it ad dunghill, at the fingers' ends, as they say.
Hol. O, I smell also Latin; dunghill for unguem. Arm. Arts-man, preambulate, we will be singeled from the barbarous. Do you not educate youth at the charge-house on the top of the mountain?
Hol. Or monks, the hill.
Arm. At your sweet pleasure, for the mountain.
Hol. I do, sans question.
Arm. Sir, it is the king's most sweet pleasure and affection to congratulate the princess at her pavilion in the posteriors of this day, which the rude multitude call the afternoon.
Hol. The posteriors of the day, most generous sir, is liable, congruent and measurable for the afternoon: the word is well culled, chose, swell and apt. I do assure you, sir, I do assure.
Arm. Sir, the king is a noble gentleman, and my familiar, I do assure ye, very good friend: for what is inward between us, let it pass. I do beseech thee, remember thy courtesy: I beseech thee, apparel thy being; having other important and most serious designs, and of great import indeed, too, but let that pass: for I must tell thee, it will please his grace, by the world, sometime to lean upon my poor shoulder, and with his royal finger, thus, daily with my excrement, with my mustardo, but, sweet heart, let that pass. By the world, I recount no fable: some certain special honours it pleaseth his greatness to impart to Armado, a soldier, a man of travel, that hath seen the world; but let that pass. The very all of all is,—but, sweet heart, I do implore secrecy, lest the king would have me present the princess, sweet cluck, with some delightful ostentation, or show, or pageant, or antique, or firework. Now, understanding that the curious and your sweet self are good at such enchantments and sudden breaking out of mirth, as it were, I have accosted you withal, to the end to crave your assistance.
Hol. Sir, you shall present before her the Nine Worthies. Sir, as concerning some entertainment of time, some show in the posterior of this day, to be rendered by our assistants, at the king's command, and this most gallant, illustrious, and learned gentleman, before the princess; I say none so fit as to present the Nine Worthies.

Nath. Where will you find men worthy enough to present them?
Hol. Joshua, yourself; myself and this gallant gentleman, Judas Maccæus; this swain, because of his great limb or joint, shall pass Pompey the Great; the page, Hercules.

Arm. Pardon, sir; error: he is not quantity enough for that Worthy's thumb: he is not so big as the end of his club.
Hol. Shall I have audience? he shall present Hercules in minority: his enter and exit shall be strangling a snake: and I will have an apology for that purpose.
Moth. An excellent device! so, if any of the audience hiss, you may cry 'Well done.' Hercules! now thou crushest the snake! that is the way to make an offence gracious, though few have the grace to do it.

Arm. For the rest of the Worthies?—
Hol. I will play three myself.
Moth. Thrice-worthy gentleman!
Arm. Shall I tell you a thing?
Hol. We attend.
Arm. We will have, if this fadge not, an antique.
I beseech you, follow.
Hol. Via, good Dull! thou hast spoken no word all this while.
Dull. Neither have I spoken none neither, sir.
Hol. Allons! we will employ thee.

[play. Dull. I'll make one in a dance, or so; or I will on the tabor to the Worthies, and let them dance the lay.
Hol. Most dull, honest Dull! To our sport, away! [Exit.}

SCENE II.—The same.

Enter the Princess, Katharine, Rosaline, and Maria.

Prin. Sweet hearts, we shall be rich ere we depart, If fairings come thus plentifully in: A lady well'd with diamonds! Look you what I have from the loving king? Ros. Madame, came nothing else along with that? Prin. Nothing but this! yes, as much love in rhyme
As would be cramm'd up in a sheet of paper, Write o' both sides the leaf, margin and all, That he was fain to seal on Cujjiu's name.
Ros. That was the way to make his godhead wax, For he hath been five thousand years a boy.
Kath. Ay, and a shrewd unhappy gallows too.
Ros. You would never be friends with him: a 'kill'd your sister.
Kath. He made her melancholy, sad, and heavy; And so she died: had she been light, like you, Of such a merry, nimble, stirring spirit, She might ha' been a grandam ere she died: And so may you; for a light heart lives long.

Act V. Love's Labour's Lost. Scene II.
ACT V. LOVE'S LABOUR'S LOST. SCENE II.

Ros. What's your dark meaning, mouse, of this light word? KATH. A light condition in a beauty dark. Ros. We need more light to find your meaning out. KATH. You'll mar the light by taking it in spuff; There's darkness darkly and the argument Ros. Look, what you do, you do it still i' the dark. KATH. So do not you, for you are a light wench. Ros. Indeed I weigh not you, and therefore light. KATH. You weigh me not? O, that's you care not for me. Ros. Great reason; for 'tis cure still past care.

Prioress. Well bandied both; a set of wit well play'd. But, Rosaline, you have a favour too: Who sent it? and what is it? Ros. I would you knew. An if my face were but as fair as yours, My favour were as great; be witness this. Nay, I have verses too, I thank Biron: The numbers true; and, were the numbering too, I were the fairest goddess on the ground: I am compared to twenty thousand fairs. O, he hath drawn my picture in his letter! Prioress. Any thing like? Ros. Much in the letters; nothing in the praise. Prioress. Beautious as ink; a good conclusion. Kath. Fair as a text B in a copy-book. Ros. Ware pencils, ho! let me note thine debtor, My red penwork, in my golden letter; O that your face were not so full of O's! Kath. A pox of that jest! and I beseech you all shrews. Prioress. But, Katharine, what was sent to you from the other main? Kath. Madam, this glove. Prioress. Did he not send you twain? Kath. Yes, madam, and moreover Some thousand verses of a faithful lover, A huge translation of hypocrisy, Very compiled, profound simplicity. [ville: Mar. This and these pearls to me sent Long ago. The letter is too long by half a mile. Prioress. I think no less. Dost thou not wish in heart The chain were longer and the letter short? Mar. Ay, or I would these hands might never part. Prioress. We are all so foolish as to mock our lovers so. Ros. They are worse fools to purchase mocking so. That same Biron I'll torture ere I go: O that I knew he were but in by the week! How would I make him fawn and beg and seek And tear his hair and chew his times And spend his prodigal wits in booteless rhymes And shape his service wholly to my hests And make him proud to make me proud that jests So pertinacious would I o'ersway my state That he should be my fool and I his fate. Prioress. None are so surely caught, when they are catch'd. As wit turn'd fool: folly, in wisdom hatch'd, Hath wisdom's warrant and the help of school And wit's own grace to grace a learned fool. Ros. The blood of youth burns not with such ex- cess As woman's talent to wantonness. [cess Mar. Folly in fools bears not so strong a note As foolery in the wise, when wit doth dote; Since all the power thereof it doth apply To prove, by wit, worth in simplicity. Prioress. Here comes Boyet, and mirth is in his face.

Enter Boyet.

Boyet. O, I am stabb'd with laughter! Where's her grace? Prioress. Thy news, Boyet? Boyet. Prepare, madam, prepare! Arm, wenches, arm! encounters mounted are Against your peace: Love doth approach disguise, Armed in arguments; you'll be surprised:

Muster your wits; stand in your own defence; Or hide your heads like cowards, and fly hence. Prioress. Saint Denis to Saint Coupé! What are they That charge their breath against us? say, scout, say. Boyet. Biron, for the cool of a devoce; I thought to close mine eyes some half an hour; When, lo! to interrupt my purpose rest, Toward that shade I might behold address The king and his companions: warily I stole into a neighbour thicket by, And overheard what you shall overhear; That, by and by, disguised they will be here. Their herald is a pretty knavish page, That well by heart hath comm'd his embassage: Action and accent did they teach him there; Th' must thou speak, 'and thus thy body bear,' And ever and anon they made an jest Presence majestical would put him out; 'For,' quoth the king, 'an angel shall thou see; Yet fear not thou, but speak audaciously,' The boy replied, 'An angel is not evil; I should have fear'd her lord she been a devil.' With that, all laugh'd and clapp'd him on the shoulder, Making the bold wag by their praises bolder: One rubb'd his elbow thus, and deerd and swore A better speech was never spoke before; Another, with his finger down his shirt, Cried 'Vail!' we will do't, come what will come! The third he caper'd, and cried, 'All goes well;' The fourth turn'd on the toe, and down he fell. With that, they all did tumble on the ground, With such a zealous laughter, so profound, That in fathom three did make undul's appear To check their folly, passion's solemn tears. Prioress. But what, but what, come they to visit us? Boyet. They do, they do; and are apparel'd thus, Like Muscovites or Russians, as I guess. Their purpose is to parle, to court and dance Unto his several mistress, which they'll know By favours several which they did bestow. Prioress. And, will they so? The gallants shall be For, ladies, we will every one be mask'd; [task'd; And not a man of them shall have the grace, Despite of it, to see a lady's face. Hold, Rosaline, this favour thou shalt wear, And then the king will court thee for his dear: Hold, take thou this, my sweet, and give me thine, So shall Biron take me for Rosaline. And change not the penny srand all your loves Woo contrary, deceived by these removes. [light, Ros. Come on, then; wear the favours most in Kath. But in this changing what is your intent? Prioress. The effect of my intent is to cross theirs: They do it but in mocking merriment; And mock for mock is only my intent, Their several counsels they unbosom shall To loves mistook, and so be mock'd withal Upon the next occasion that we meet, With visages display'd, to talk and greet. Ros. But shall we dance, if they desire us to 't? Prioress. No, to the death, indeed will not move a foot; Nor to their penn'd speech render we no grace, But while 't is spoken each turn away her face. Boyet. Why, that contempt will kill the speaker's heart, And quite divorce his memory from his part. Prioress. Therefore I do it; and I make no doubt The rest will ne'er come in, if he be out. There's no such sport as sport by sport o'erthrown, To make theirs ours and ours none but our own: So shall we stay, mocking intended game, And they, well mock'd, depart away with shame. [Trumpets sound within. Boyet. The trumpet sounds: be mask'd; the maskers come. [The Ladies mask.
Enter Blackamoors with music: Moth; the King, Biron, Longaville, and Dumain, in Russian habits, and masked.

Moth. All hail, the richest beauties on the face of the earth! —

Boyet. Beauties no richer than rich taffeta.

Moth. A holy parcel of the fairest dames. [The Ladies turn their backs to him.]

That ever turn'd their — backs — to mortal views! —

Biron. [Aside to Moth] Their eyes, their villain, their eyes [views! —

Moth. That ever turned their eyes to mortal

Out —

Boyet. True; out indeed. [safe.

Moth. Out of your favours, heavenly spirits; vouchsafed.

Not to behold —

Biron. [Aside to Moth] Once to behold, rogue.

Moth. Once to behold with your sun-beamed eyes, — with your sun-beamed eyes —

Boyet. They will not answer to that epithet; You were best call it 'daughter-beamed eyes,'

Moth. They do not mark me, and that brings me out.

Biron. Is this your perfection? be gone, you rogue!

Ros. What would these strangers? know their minds, Boyet; If they do speak our language, 't is our will That some plain man recount their purposes:

Know what they would.

Boyet. What would you with the princess?

Biron. Nothing but peace and gentle visitation.

Ros. What would they, say they?

Boyet. Nothing but peace and gentle visitation.

Ros. Why, that they have; and bid them so be gone.

Biron. She says, you have it, and you may be gone.

King. Say to her, we have measured many miles To tread a measure with her on this grass. [a mile.

Boyet. They say, that they have measured many

To tread a measure with you on this grass.

Ros. It is not so. Ask them how many inches

Is in one mile: if they have measured many,

The measure then of one is easily told. [miles.

Boyet. If to come hither you have measured

And many miles, the princess bids you tell

How many inches doth fill up one mile.

Biron. Tell her, we measure them by weary steps.

Boyet. She hears herself.

Ros. How many weary steps,

Of many weary miles you have o'ergone,

Are number'd in the travel of one mile? [you: Biron. We number nothing that we spend for

Our duty is so rich, so infinite,

That we may do it without accompt.

Vouchsafe to show the sunshine of your face,

That we, like savages, may worship it.

Ros. My face is but a moon, and clouded now.

King. Blessed are clouds, to do as such clouds do! [shine.

Vouchsafe, bright moon, and these thy stars, to

Those clouds removed, upon our watery eye.

Ros. O vain petitioner! beg a greater matter;

Thou now request'st but moonshine in the water.

King. Then, in our measure do but vouchsafe one change.

Thou bid'st me beg: this begging is not strange.

Ros. Play, music, then! Nay, you must do it soon. [Music plays.

Not yet to dance! Than change I like the moon.

King. Will you not dance? How come you thus estranged? [changed.

Ros. You took the moon at full, but now she's King. Yet still she is the moon, and I the man.

The music plays; vouchsafe some motion to it.

Ros. Our ears vouchsafe it.

King. But your legs should do it.

Ros. Since you are strangers and come here by chance,

We'll not be nice; take hands. We will not dance.

King. Why take we hands, then?

Ros. Only to part friends:

Curtsy, sweet hearts; and so the measure ends.

King. More measure of this measure; be not nice.

Ros. We can afford no more at such a price.

King. Prize you yourselves: what buys your com-

Ros. Your absence only.

King. That can never be.

Ros. Then cannot we be bought: and so, adieu!

Twice to your visor, and half once to you.

King. If you deny to dance, let 's hold more chant.

Ros. In private, then.

King. I am best pleased with that.

[They converse apart.

Biron. White-handed mistress, one sweet word with thee.

Prin. Honey, and milk, and sugar; there is three.

Biron. Nay then, two treys, and if you grow so nice,

Methelgin, wort, and malbsey: well run, dice! There's half-a-dozen sweets.

Prin. Seventh sweet, adieu;

Since you can cog, I'll play no more with you.

Biron. One word in secret.

Prin. Let it not be sweet.

Biron. Thou grievest my gall.

Prin. Gall! bitter.

Biron. Therefore meet.

[They converse apart.

Dum. Will you vouchsafe with me to change a Mar. Name it. [word?

Dum. Fair lady.—

Mar. Say you so? Fair lord,—

Take that for your fair lady.

Dum. Please it you,

As much in private, and I'll bid adieu.

[They converse apart.

Kath. What, was your vizard made without a tongue?

Long. I know the reason, lady, why you ask.

Kath. O for your reason! quickly, sir; I long. Long. You have a double tongue within your mask.

And would afford my speechless vizard half,

Long. Let's part the word.

Kath. No. 'Tis not; you'll not be your half.

Take all, and wane it: it may prove an ox. [mocks.

Long. Look, how you butt yourself in these sharp Will you give horns, chaste lady? do not so.

Kath. Then die a calf, before your horns do grow.

Long. One word in private with you, ere I die.

Kath. Bleat softly then; the butcher hears you cry.

[They converse apart.

Boyet. The tongues of mocking wenchens are as As is the razor's edge invisible. [keen

Cutting a smaller hair than may be seen,

Above the sense of sense; so sensible

Seemeth their conference: their conceits have wings Clouded the eagles' flight.

Fleeter than arrows, bullets, wind, thought, swifter things.

Ros. Not: one word more, my maids; break off, Biron. By heaven, all dry-beaten with pure scoff! King. Farewell, mad wenches: you have simple Prin. Twenty adieux, my frozen Museovits. [wits. [Exit King, Lords, and Blackamoors.

Are these the breed of wits so wonder'd at? Boyet. Tapers they are, with your sweet breaths puff'd out. [lit.

Ros. Well-liking wits they have: gross, gross; fat,

Prin. O poverty in wit, kingling-poor fiend! Will they not, think you, hang themselves to-night?
Or ever, but in vizards, show their faces?
This pert Biron was out of countenance quite.
Ros. O, they were all in lamentable cases!
The king was weeping-ripe for a good word.
Prin. Biron did swear himself out of all suit.
Mor. Dumain was at my service, and so he was.
No person which I have serv'd in all this while was mute.
Kath. Lord Longaville said, I came o'er his heart;
And trow you what he called me?
Prin. Qualm, perhaps.
Kath. Yes, in good faith,
*Prin.? Go, sickness as thou art!
Ros. Well, better wits have worn plain statute-caps.
But will you hear? the king is my love sworn.
Prin. And quick Biron hath plighted faith to me.
Kath. And Longaville was for my service born.
Mor. Dumain is mine, as sure as bark on tree.
Boyet. Madam, and pretty mistresses, give ear:
Immediately they will again be here
In their own shapes; for it can never be
They will digest this harsh indignity.
*Prin.? What? the king?
Boyet. They will, they will, God knows,
And leap for joy, though they are lame with blows:
Therefore change favours; and, when they repair,
Blow like sweet roses in this summer air. [stood.
Prin. How blow? how blow? speak to be under-Disguised in their mask'd; their wits, like angels,
Put on their weeks; and so hold your vow:
Nor God, nor I, delights in perjur'd men.
King. Rebuoke me not for that which you provoke:
The virtue of your eye must break my oath.
Prin. You nickname virtue; vice you should have spoke;
For virtue's office never breaks men's troth.
Now by my maiden honour, yet as pure
As the unsullied lily, I protest,
A world of torrents though I should endure,
I would not yield to be your house's guest;
So much I hate a breaking cause to be
Of heavenly oaths, you'd with integrity.
King. O, you have lived in desolation here,
Unseen, unvisited, much to our shame.
Prin. Not so, my lord; it is not so, I swear;
We have had pastimes here and pleasant game:
And a mess of Russians to drink and eat.
King. How, madam! Russians!
Prin. Ay, in truth, my lord;
Trim gallants, full of courtship and of state.
Ros. Madam, speak true. It is not so, my lord:
My lady, to the manner of the days,
In commendation gives in courtly disguise.
We few indeed confronted were with four
In Russian habit: here they stay'd an hour,
And talk'd apace; and in that hour, my lord,
They did not bless us with one happy word.
I dare not call them fools: but this I think,
When they are thirsty, fools would fain have drink.
Boyet. This jest is dry to me. Fair gentle sweet,
Your wit makes wise things foolish: when we greet,
With eyes best seeing, heaven's fiery eye,
By light we lose light: your capacity
Is of that nature that to your huge store
Wise things seem foolish and rich things but poor.
Ros. This proves you wise and rich, for in my eye,—
Boyet. I am a fool, and full of poverty.
Ros. But that you take what doth to you belong,
It were a fault to snatch words from my tongue.
Boyet. O, I am yours, and all that I possess!
Ros. All the fool mine?
Boyet. I cannot give you less.
Ros. Which of the vizards was it that you wore?
Ros. They, then, that vizard; that superfluous
That hid the worse and show'd the better face.
King. We are descried; they'll mock us now downright.
[Exit. Let us confess and turn it to a jest. [sad?
Prin. Amazed, my lord? why looks your highness Ros. Help, hold his brows! he'll swoon! Why look you pale?
Sea-sick, I think, coming from Muscovy.
Boyet. Thus pour the stars down plagues for perjury.
Can any face of brass hold longer out?
Here stand I: lady, dart thy skill at me;
Bruse me with scorn, confound me with a flout;
Thrust thy sharp wit quite through my ignorance;
Cut me to pieces with thy keen conceit;
And I will wish thee never more to dance,
Nor never more in Russian habit wait.
O, never will I trust to speeches pent!
Not to the motion of a schoolboy's tongue,
ACT V.  LOVE'S LABOUR'S LOST.

SCENE II.

Nor never come inizard to my friend,
Nor woo in rhyme, like a blind harper's song!
Taffeta phrases, silken terms precise,
Three-piled hyperboles, spruce affectation,
Figures pedantical; these summer-flies
Have blown me full of maggots ostentation:
I do foresee them; and I here protest, [know!]—
By this white glove,—how white the hand, God
Henceforth my wooing mind shall express'd
In russet yes and honest kersey noes:
And, to begin, wench,—so God help me, la! —
My love to thee is sound, sans crack or flaw.
Ros. Ronsansans, I pray you.
Biron. Yet I have a trick
Of the old rage: bear with me, I am sick;
I'll leave it by degrees. Soft, let us see:
Write, 'Lord have mercy on us' on these three;
They are infected; in their hearts it lies;
They have the plague, and caught it of your eyes;
These lords are visited, you are not free,
For the Lord's tokens on you do see.
[us.
Prin. No, they are free that gave these tokens to Biron. Our states are forfeit: seek not to undo us.
Ros. It is not so; for how can this be true,
That you stand forfeit, being those that sue?
Biron. Peace! for I will not have do with you.
Ros. Nor shall not, if I do as I intend.
Biron. Speak for yourselves; my wit is at an end.
King. Teach us, sweet madam, for our rude trans.
Some fair excuse.
[expression.
Prin. The fairest is confession.
Were not you here but even now disguised?
King. Madam, I was.
Prin. And were you well advised?
King. I was, fair madam.
Prin. When you then were here,
Where did you whisper in your own ear? [her.
King. That more than all the world I did respect
Prin. When she shall challenge this, you will re-King. Upon mine honour, no. [jeet her.
Your oath once broke, you force not to foreswear.
Ros. Madam, he swore that he did hold me dear
As precious eyesight, and did value me
Above this world; adding thereto moreover
That he could wed her with his own true love.
Prin. God give thee joy of him! thine noble lord
Most honourably doth uphold his word.
King. What mean you, madam? by my life, my
I never swore this lady such an oath. [troth,
Ros. By heaven, you did; and to confirm it plain,
You gave me this: but take it, sir, again.
King. My faith and this the prince I did give:
I knew her by this jewel on her sleeve.
Prin. Pardon me, sir, this jewel did she wear;
And Lord Biron, I thank him, is my dear.
What, will you have me, or your pearl again?
Biron. Neither of either: I remit both twain.
I see the trick on 't: here was a complain;
Knowing aforehand of our merriment,
To dash it like a Christmas comedy:
Some carry-tale, some please-man, some slight zany,
Some rumble-news, some treacher-knight, some ICK.
That smiles his cheek in years and knows the trick
To make my lady laugh when she's disposed,
Told our intents before; which once disclosed,
The ladies did change favours: and then we,
Following the signs, woud but the sign of she.
Now, for a juggling trick,
We are again forewarned, in will and error.
Much upon this it is: and might not you
[To Boyet.
Foretell our sport, to make us thus untrue?
Do not you know my lady's foot by the squier,
And laugh upon the apple of her eye?
And stand between her back, sir, and the fire,
Holding a trestler, jesting merrily?
You put our page out: go, you are allowed;
Die when you will, a smack shall be your shroud.
You leer upon me, do you? there's an eye
Wounds like a leaden sword.
Boyet. Full merrily
Hath this brave manage, this career, been run.
Biron. Lo, he is tilting straight! Peace! I have done.

Enter Costard.

Welcome, pure wit! thou partest a fair fray.
Cost. O Lord, sir, they would know
Whether the three Worthies shall come in or no.
Biron. What, are there but three?
Cost. No, sir; but it is vane false,
For every one pursent's three.
Biron. And three times thrice is nine.
Cost. Not so, sir; under correction, sir; I hope it is not so.
You cannot beg us, sir, I can assure you, sir; we know what we know:
I hope, sir, three times thrice, sir,—
Biron. Is not nine.
Cost. Under correction, sir, we know whereunto it doth amount.
Biron. By Jove, I always took three threes for nine.
Cost. O Lord, sir, if we pity you should get your living by reckoning, sir.
Biron. How much is it?
Cost. O Lord, sir, the parties themselves, the actors, sir, will show whereabouts that doth amount:
for mine own part, I am, as they say, but to perfect
one man in one poor man, Pompion the Great, sir.
Biron. Art thou one of the Worthies?
Cost. It pleased them to think me worthy of Pompion the Great: for mine own part, I know not the degree of the Worthy, but I am to stand for him.
Biron. Go, bid them prepare.
Cost. We will turn it finely off, sir; we will take some care.
[Exit.
King. Biron, they will shame us: let them not approach.

Biron. We are shame-proof, my lord: and 'tis some policy.
[pany.
To be scarce show worse than the king's and his con-
King. I say they shall not come.
Prin. Nay, my good lord, let me o'errule you now:
That sport best pleases that doth least know how:
Where zeal strives to content, and the contents
Dies in the zeal of that which it presents.
Their form confounds makes most form in mirth,
When great things labouring perish in their birth.
Biron. A right description of our sport, my lord.

Enter Armado.

Arm. Anointed, I implore so much expense of thy royal sweet breath as will utter a brace of words.
[Converses apart with the King, and delivers him a paper.
Prin. Doth this man serve God?
Biron. Why ask you?
Prin. He speaks not like a man of God's making.
Arm. That is all one, my fair, sweet, honey moun-
tan, for, I assure you, I do fancy that the schoolmaster is exceeding fantastical: too too vain, too too vain: but we will put it, as they say, to fortuna de la guerra. I wish you the peace of mind, most royal couplement!
[Exit.
King. Here is like to be a good presence of Worthies. He presents Hector of Troy: the swain, Pompey the Great; the parish curate, Alexander:
Armado's page, Hercules; the pedant, Judas.

Macabeus;

ACT V.  LOVE'S LABOUR'S LOST.

SCENE II.

And if these four Worthies in their first show thrive,
These four will change habits, and present the other

Biron.  There is live in the first show.  [five.

King.  You are deceived; 'tis not so.

Biron.  The peasant, the braggart, the hedge-rod, and the boy:—

Abate throw at novum, and the whole world again
Cannot pick out five such, take each one in his vein.

King.  The ship is under sail, and here she comes amain.

Enter Costard, for Pompey.

Cost.  I Pompey am.—

Boyet.  You lie, you are not he.

Cost.  I Pompey am.—

Boyet.  With Hubbard's head on knee.

Biron.  Well said, old mocker: I must needs be friends with thee.

Cost.  I Pompey am, Pompey surnamed the Big,—

Dum.  The Great.

Cost.  It is, 'Great,' sir:—

Pompey surnamed the Great:
That oft in field, with his targe and shield did make my foe to sweat: [by chance,

And travelling along this coast, I here am come
And lay my arms before the legs of this sweet lass of France. [had done.]

If your ladyship does say, 'Thanks, Pompey,' I

Prixest, the fool and the boy.

Cost.  'T is not so much worth; but I hope I was perfect: I made a little fault in 'Great.'

Biron.  My hat to a halfpenny, Pompey proves the best Worthy.

Enter Sir Nathaniel, for Alexander.

Nath.  When in the world I lived, I was the world's commander;

By east, west, north, and south, I spread my conquering might:

My sentence plain declares that I am Alisander,— Boyet.  Your nose says, no, you are not; for it stands too right.

Biron.  Your nose smells 'no' in this, most tender-smelling knight.  [Alexander.

Prin.  The conqueror is dismay'd.  Proceed, good

Nath.  When in the world I lived, I was the world's commander.  [sander.

Boyet.  Most true, 't is right; you were so, Al-

Biron.  Pompey the Great,—

Cost.  Your servant, and Costard.  [sander.

Biron.  Take away the conqueror, take away Al-

Nath.  To Sir Nath.  O, sir, you have overthrown

Alisander the conqueror!  You will be scraped out of the painted cloth for this: your lion, that holds his poll-axe sitting on a close-stool, will be given to Ajax: he will be the ninth Worthy.  A conqueror, and afraid to speak! I run away for shame, Alisander.  [Nath.  retires] There, an 't shall please you; a foolish mild man; an honest man, look you, and soon dashed.  He is a marvellous good neighbour, faith, and a very good bowler; but, for Alisander,— alas, you see how 'tis,—a little o'ertopped.  But there are Worthies a-coming will speak their mind in some other sort.

Prin.  Stand aside, good Pompey.

Enter Holofernes, for Judas; and Moth, for Hercules.

Hol.  Great Hercules is presented by this imp,

Whose club kill'd Cerberus, that three-headed

And when he was a babe, a child, a shrimp, [canis;

Thus did he strangle serpents in his hands.

Quoniam he seemeth in minority,

Ergo I come with this apology,

Keep some state in thy exit, and vanish,

Moth retires.

Judas I am,—

Dum.  A Judas!

Hol.  Not Iscariot, sir.

Judas I am, yelped Maccabaeus,

Dum.  Judas Maccabaeus clipt is plain Judas.

Biron.  A kissing traitor.  How art thou proved

Dum.  I, Alisander; I am,—

The more shame for you, Judas.

Hol.  What mean you, sir?

Boyet.  To make Judas hang himself.

Hol.  Begin, sir; you are my elder.  [elder.

Biron.  Well followed: Judas was hanged on an

Hol.  I will not be put out of countenance.

Biron.  Because thou hast no face.

Hol.  What is this?

Boyet.  A cittern-head.

Dum.  The head of a bodkin.

Biron.  A Death's face in a ring.

Long.  The face of an old Roman coin, scarce seen.

Boyet.  The pommel of Caesar's falchion.

Dum.  The carved-bone face on a flask.

Biron.  Saint George's half-cheek in a brooch.

Dum.  Ay, and in a brooch of lead.

Biron.  And worn in the cap of a tooth-drawer.

And now forward; for we have put thee in countenance.

Hol.  You have put me out of countenance.

Biron.  False; we have given thee faces.

Hol.  But you have out-faced them all.

Biron.  An thou wert a lion, we would do so.

Boyet.  Therefore, as he is an ass, let him go.

And so adieu, sweet Jude! nay, why dost thou stay?

Dum.  For the latter end of his name.

Biron.  For the ass to the Jude; give it him:—

Judas, away!

Hol.  This is not generous, not gentle, not humble.

Boyet.  A light for Monsieur Judas! it grows dark, he may stumble.  [Hol.  retires.

Prin.  Alas, poor Maccabaeus, how hath he been bailed!

Enter Armado, for Hector.

Biron.  Hide thy head, Achilles: here comes Hector in arms.

Dum.  Though my ncoes come home by me, I will now be merry.

Long.  If Armado was but a Trojan in respect of this.

Boyet.  But is this Hector?

King.  I think Hector was not so clean-timbered.

Long.  His leg is too big for Hector's.

Dum.  More calf, certain.

Boyet.  No; he is best indued in the small.

Biron.  This cannot be Hector.

Dum.  He's a god or a painter; for he makes faces.

Arm.  The armipotent Mars, of lances the al-

Gave Hector a gift.—  [mighty,

Dum.  A gilt nutmeg.

Biron.  A lemon.

Long.  Sack with cloves.

Dum.  No, cloven.

Arm.  Peace!—

The armipotent Mars, of lances the almighty,

Gave Hector a gift, the heir of Lion;

A man so breathed, that certain he would fight; yea

From morn till night, out of his pavilion.

I am that flower,—

Dum.  That mint.

Arm.  Such nectar, Longaville, rich in tongue.

Long.  I must rather give it the rein, for it runs against Hector.

Dum.  Ay, and Hector's a greyhound.

Arm.  The sweet war-man is dead and rotten;

sweeticks, beat not the bones of the buried:

when he breathed, he was a man.  But I will forward with you, sir; by my device.  [To the Princes]  Sweet royalty, bestow on me the sense of hearing.  [lighted.

Prin.  Speak, brave Hector: we are much de-

SCENE II.

Arm. I do adore thy sweet grace's slippers.
Boyet. [Aside to Dum.] Loves her by the foot.
Dum. [Aside to Boyet.] He may not by the yard.
Arm. This Hector far surmounts Humilial,-
Cost. The party is gone, fellow Hector, she is gone; she is two months on her way.
Arm. Is not that so?
Cost. Faith, unless you play the honest Trojan, the poor wench is cast away: she's quick: the child brags in her belly already: 'tis yours.
Arm. Dost thou inflammize me among potentially heats shall say?
Cost. Then shall Hector be whipped for Jaquenetta that is quick by him and hanged for Pompey that is dead by him.
Dum. Most rare Pompey!
Boyet. Renowned Pompey!
Biron. Greater than great, great, great, great Pompey! Pompey the Huge!
Dum. Hector trembles.
Biron. Pompey is moved. More Ates, more Ates! stir them on! stir them on!
Dum. Hector will challenge him.
Arm. Ay, if a' have no more man's blood in 's belly than will sup a flea.
Arm. By the north pole, I do challenge thee.
Cost. I will not fight with a pole, like a northern man: 'I'll slash; 'I'll do it by the sword. I bepray you, let me borrow my arms again.
Dum. Never a lend, nor Worthies!
Cost. I'll do it in my shirt.
Dum. Most resolute Pompey!
Moth. Master, let me take you a button-hole lower. Do you not see Pompey is uncasing for the combat? What mean you? You will lose your reputation.
Arm. Gentlemen and soldiers, pardon me; I will not combat in my shirt.
Dum. You may not deny it: Pompey hath made the challenge.
Arm. Sweet bloods, I both may and will.
Arm. What reason have you for 't?
Arm. The naked truth of it is, I have no shirt; I go woolward for penance.
Boyet. True. And it was enjoined him in Rome for want of linen: since when, 'I'll be sworn, he wore none but a disheelt of Jaquenetta's, and that a' wears next his heart for a favour.

Enter Mercade.

Mer. God save you, madam!
Prin. Welcome, Mercade; But that thou interrupt'st our errament.
Mer. I am sorry, madam; for the news I bring Is heavy in my tongue. The king your father-
Prin. Dead, for my life!
Mer. Even so; my tale is told.
Biron. Worthies, away! the scene begins to cloud.
Arm. For mine own part, I breathe free breath. I have not the day of wrong through the little hole of discretion, and I will right myself like a soldier.

[Exit Worthy.

King. How fares your majesty?
Prin. Boyet, prepare; I will away to-night.
King. Madam, not so; I do beseech you, stay.
Prin. Prepare, I say. I thank you, gracious lords, For all your fair endeavours; and entreat, Out of a new-sad soul, that you vouchsafe In your rich wisdom to excuse or hide The liberal opposition of our spirits, If over-holidy we have borne ourselves In the chase of ladies, to the great gentleness Was guilty of it. Farewell, worthy lord! A heavy heart bears not a nimble tongue: Excuse me so, coming too short of thanks For my great suit so easily obtain'd.
King. The extreme parts of time extremely form
All causes to the purpose of his speed, And often at his very loose declines That which long process could not arbitrate; And though the mourning brow of progeny Forbid the smiling courtesy of love The holy sun which falls in pinnacled convenance, Yet, since love's argument was first on foot, Let not the cloud of sorrow juste it From what it purposed; since, to wall friends lost Is not by much so wholesome-profitable As to rejoice at friends but newly found.
Prin. I understand you, but my griefs are double.
Biron. Honest plain words best pierce the ear of grief; And by these badges understand the king. For your fair sakes have we neglected time, Play'd foul play with our oaths; your beauty, ladies, Hath much deform'd us, fashioning our humours Even to the opposed end of our intents: And in what we hast seem'd so ridiculous,— As love is full of unbecitting strains, All wanton as a child, skipping and vain, Form'd by the eye and therefore, like the eye, Full of strange shapes, of bankets and of forms, Varying in subjects as the eye doth roll To every varied object in his glance: Which part-coated presence of loose love Put on by us, if, in your heavenly eyes, Have misbecome our oaths and gravities, These heaven-born eyes, that look into faults, Suggested us to make. Therefore, ladies, Our love being yours, the error that love makes Is likewise yours: we to ourselves prove false, By being once false for ever to be true To those that make us both,—fair ladies, you: And even that falsehood, in itself a sin, Thus purifies itself and turns to grace.
Prin. We have received your letters full of love; Your favours, the ambassadors of love; And, in our maiden council, rated them At courtship, pleasant jest and courtesy, As bonnast and as lining to the time: But more devout than this in our respects Have we not been: and therefore met your loves In their own fashion, like a merriment.
Dum. Our letters, madam, should much more than Long. So did our looks.
Biron. We did not quote them so.
King. Now, at the latest minute of the hour, Grant us your loves.
Prin. A time, methinks, too short To make a world-without-end bargain in. No, no, my lord, your grace is perjured much, Full of dear guiltiness; and therefore this: If for my love, as there is no such cause, You will do aught, this shall you do for me: Your oath I will not trust; but go with speed To some forlorn and naked hermitage, Remote from all the pleasures of the world; There stay until the two last signs Have brought about the annual reeling, If this austere insensible life Change not your offer made in heat of blood; If frosts and fasts, hard lodging and thin weeds Nip not the gaudy blossoms of your love, But that it bear this trial and last love; Then, at the expiration of the year, Come challenge me, challenge me by these deserts, And, by this virgin palm now kissing thine, I will be thine; and till that instant shut My woeful self up in a mourning house, Raining the tears of lamentation. For the remembrance of my father's death, If this thou do deny, let our hands part, Neither intituled in the other's heart.
King. If this, or more than this, I would deny, To throttle up these powers of mine with rest,
ACT V.

LOVE'S LABOUR'S LOST.

SCENE II.

The sudden hand of death close up mine eye!
Hence ever then my heart is in thy breast.

[Enter Biron. And what to me, my love? and what to me?]

Ros. You must be purged too, your sins are rack’d,
You are attaint with faults and perjury:
Therefore if you my favour mean to get,
A twelvemonth shall you spend, and never rest,
But seek the weary beds of people sick.]

Dum. But what to me, my love? but what to me?

A wife?

Kath. A beard, fair health, and honesty;
With three-fold love I wish you all these three.

Dum. O, shall I say, I thank you, gentle wife?

Kath. Not so, my lord; a twelvemonth and a day
I’ll mark no words that smooth-faced wooers say:
Come when the king doth to my lady come;
Then, if I have much love, I’ll give you some.

Dum. I’ll serve thee true and faithfully till then.

Kath. Yet swear not, lest ye be forsworn again.

Long. What says Maria?

Ros. At the twelvemonth’s end
I’ll change my black gown for a faithful friend.

Long. I’ll stay with patience; but the time is long.

Ros. The liker you; few taller are so young.
Biron. What is my lady? mistress, look on me;
Behold the window of my heart, mine eye,
What humble suit attends thy answer there:
Impose some service on me for thy love.

Ros. Oft have I heard of you, my Lord Biron,
Before I saw you; and the world’s large tongue
Proclaims you for a man replete with mocks,
Full of comparisons and wounding flouts,
Which you on all estates will execute
That lie within the mercy of your wit.
To weed this wormwood from your fruitful brain,
And therewithal to win me, if you please,
Without the whiles that smooth-faced wooers say:
You shall this twelvemonth term from day to day
Visit the speechless sick and still converse
With groaning wretches; and your task shall be,
With all the fierce endeavour of your wit
To enforce the pained impotent to smile.

Biron. To move wild laughter in the throat of death?

It cannot be; it is impossible;
Mirth cannot move a soul in agony.

Ros. Why, that’s the way to choke a gibing spirit,
Whose influence is begot of that loose grace
Which shallow laughing hearers give to fools:
A jest’s prosperity lies in the ear
Of him that hears it, never in the tongue
Of him that makes it: then, if sickly ears,
Deaf’d with the clamours of their own dear groans,
Will hear your idle scorns, continue then,
And I will have you and that fault withal;
But if they will not, throw away that spirit,
And I shall find you empty of that fault,
Right joyful of your reformation.

Biron. A twelvemonth! well; befall what will befall,
I’ll jest a twelvemonth in an hospital.

Prin. [To the King] Ay, sweet my lord; and so I take my leave.

King. No, madam; we will bring you on your way.

Biron. Our wooing doth not end like an old play;
Jack hath not Jill: these ladies’ courtesy
Might well have made our sport a comedy.

King. Come, sir, it wantsa twelvemonth and a day,
And then ’twill end.

Biron. That’s too long for a play.

Re-enter Armado.

Arm. Sweet majesty, vouchsafe me,—

Prin. Was not that Hector?

Dum. The worthy knight of Troy.

Arm. I will kiss thy royal finger, and take leave.

I am a votary: I have vowed to Jaquinetta to hold
The plough for her sweet love three years. But,
Most esteemed greatness, will you hear the dialogue
That the two learned men have compiled in praise
Of the owl and the cuckoo? it should have followed
In the end of our show.

King. Call them forth quickly; we will do so.

Arm. Holla! approach.

Re-enter Holofernes, Nathaniel, Moth, Costard,

This side is Ilium, Winter, this Ver, the Spring;
the one maintained by the owl, the other by the cuckoo. Ver, begin.

THE SONG.

SPRING.

When daisies pied and violets blue
And lady-smocks all silver-white
And cuckoo-buds of yellow hue
Do paint the meadows with delight,
The cuckoo then, on every tree,
Mocks married men; for thus sings he,

Cuckoo, cuckoo: O word of fear,
Unpleasing to a married ear!

When shepherds pipe on eaten straws
And merry larks are ploughmen’s cocks,
When turtles tread, and rocks, and daws,
And maidens bleach their summer smocks,
The cuckoo then, on every tree,
Mocks married men; for thus sings he,

Cuckoo,

Cuckoo, cuckoo: O word of fear,
Unpleasing to a married ear!

WINTER.

When icicles hang by the wall
And Dick the shepherd blows his nail
And Tom bears logs into the hall
When blood is nipp’d and ways be foul,
Then nightly sings the staring owl,

Tu-whit;

Tu-who, a merry note,
While greasy Joan doth keel the pot.

When all aloud the wind doth blow
And coughing drowns the parson’s saw
And birds sit brooding in the snow
And Marian’s nose looks red and raw,
When roasted crabs hiss in the bowl,
Then nightly sings the staring owl,

Tu-whit;

Tu-who, a merry note,
While greasy Joan doth keel the pot.

Arm. The words of Mercury are harsh after the songs of Apollo. You that way: we this way.

[Exeunt.]

SCENE—Athens, and a wood near it.

ACT I.

SCENE I.—Athens. The palace of Theseus.

Enter Theseus, Hippolyta, Philostrate, and Attendants.

The. Now, fair Hippolyta, our nuptial hour Draws on apace; four happy days bring in Another moon: but, O, methinks, how slow This old moon wanes! she lingers my desires, Like to a step-dame or a dowager Long withering out a young man’s revenue. [night; Hip. Four days will quickly steep themselves in Four nights will quickly dream away the time; And then the moon, like to a silver bow New-bent in heaven, shall behold the night Of our solemnities.

The. Go, Philostrate, Stir up the Athenian youth to merriments; Awake the pert and nimble spirit of mirth; Turn melancholy forth to funerals; The pale companion is not for our pomp.

[Exit Philostrate.

Hippolyta, I wo’d thee with my sword, And won thy love, doing thee injuries; But I will wed thee in another key, With pomp, with triumph and with revelling.

Enter Egeus, Hermia, Lysander, and Demetrius.

Ege. Happy be Theseus, our renowned duke! The. Thanks, good Egeus: what’s the news with thee?

Ege. Full of vexation come I, with complaint Against my child, my daughter Hermia. Stand forth, Demetrius. My noble lord, This man hath my consent to marry her. Stand forth, Lysander: and, my gracious duke, This man hath bewitch’d the bosom of my child: Thou, thou, Lysander, thou hast, given her rhymes And interchanged love-tokens with my child: Thou hast by moonlight at her window sung With feigning voice verses of feigning love, And stolen the impression of her fantasy With bracelets of thy hair, rings, gawds, conceits, Knacks, trifles, nosegays, sweetmeats, messengers Of strong prevailment in unharden’d youth:

With cunning hast thou filch’d my daughter’s heart, Turn’d her obedience, which is due to me, To stubborn harshness: and, my gracious duke, Be it so she will not here before your grace Consent to marry with Demetrius, I beg the ancient privilege of Athens, As she is mine, I may dispose of her: Which shall be either to this gentleman Or to her death, according to our law Immediately provided in that case.

The. What say you, Hermia? be advis’d, fair maid: To you your father should be as a god; One that composed your beauties, yea, and one To whom you are but as a form in wax By him imprinted and within his power To leave the figure or disfigure it. Demetrius is a worthy gentleman. Her. So is Lysander. The. In himself he is; But in this kind, wanting your father’s voice, The other must be held the wortlier. Her. I would my father look’d but with my eyes. The. Rather your eyes must with his judgment Her. I do entreat your grace to pardon me. [look. I know not by what power I am made bold, Nor how it may concern my modesty, In such a presence here to plead my thoughts; But I beseech your grace that I may know The worst that may befall me in this case, If I refuse to wed Demetrius. The. Either to die the death or to abjure For ever the society of men. Therefore, fair Hermia, question your desires; Know of your youth, examine well your blood, Whether, if you yield not to your father’s choice, You can endure the livery of a nun, For aye to be in shady cloister mew’d, To live a barren sister all your life, Chanting faint hymns to the cold fruitless moon. Thrice-blessed they that master so their blood, To undergo such maiden pilgrimage; But earilier happy is the rose distil’d, Than that which withering on the virgin horn Grows, lives and dies in single blessedness. Her. So will I grow, so live, so die, my lord,
Ere I will yield my virgin patent up Unto his lordship, whose unwished yoke My soul consents not to give sovereignty.

The. Take time to pause; and, by the next new The sealing-day betwixt my love and me, [moon—
For everlastings bond of fellowship—
Upon that day either prepare to do For disobedience to your father's will, Or else to wed Demetrius, as he would; Or on Diana's altar to protest For eye austerities and single life.

Lynd. Believe, sweet: That is resolved, Lysander, yield Thy crisis to my certain right.

Lys. You have her father's love, Demetrius; Let me have Hermia's: do you marry him.

Ege. Scornful Lysander! true, he hath my love, And what is mine my love shall render him. And she is mine, and all my right of her I do estate unto Demetrius.

Lys. I am, my lord, as well derived as he, As well possess'd; my love is more than his; My fortunes every way as fairly rank'd: If not with vantage, as Demetrius, And, which is more, than all the boasts can be, I am beloved of beauteous Hermia: Why should not I then prosecute my right? Demetrius, I'll avouch it to his head, Made love to Neda's daughter, Helena, And with her soul; and she, sweet lady, doth, Devoutly dotes, dotes in impiety. Upon this spotted and inconstant man.

The. I must confess that I have heard so much, And with Demetrius thought to have spoke thereof; But, being over-full of self-affairs, My mind did best dispence of Demetrius, come; And come, Egeus; you shall go with me, I have some private schooling for you both. For you, fair Hermia, look you arm yourself To fit your fancies to your father's will; Or else the law of Athens yields you up— Which by no means may extenuate — To death, or to a vow of single life. Come, my Hippolyta: what cheer, my love? Demetrius and Egeus, go along; I must employ you in some business Against our nuptial and confer with you Of something nearly that concerns ourselves. Ege. With duty and desire we follow you.

[Exeunt all but Lysander and Hermia.]

Lys. How now, my love! why is your cheek so pale? How chance the roses there do fade so fast? By heaven, what fault of mine, which I could well Beget them from the temper of my eyes. Lys. Ay me! for aught that I could ever read, Could ever hear by tale or history, The course of true love never did run smooth; But, either it was different in blood, — Her. O cross! too high to be enthrall'd to love. Lys. Or else misgравed in respect of years,— Her. O spite! too old to be engaged to young.

Lys. Or else it stood upon the choice of friends,— Her. O hell! to choose love by another's eyes.

Lys. Or, if there were a sympathy in choice, War and the laws did make a strong league to it, Making it momentary as a sound, Swift as a shadow, short as any dream; Brief as the lightning in the collied night, That, in a spout, unfolds both heaven and earth, And are a man hath power to say 'Believ'.

Her. Behold! So quick bright things come to confusion.

Lys. If then true lovers have been ever cross'd, It stands an edict in destiny: Then let us teach our trial patience, Because it is a customary cross, As due to love as thoughts and dreams and sighs, Wishes and tears, poor fancy's followers.

Lys. A good persuasion: therefore, hear me, I have a widow aunt, a dowager [Hermia. Of great revenue, and she hath no child: From Athens is her house remote seven leagues; And she respects me as her only son. There, good Hermia, may I be free; And to that place the sharp Athenian law Cannot pursue us. If thou lovest me then, Steal forth thy father's house to-morrow night; And in the wood, a league without the town, Where I did meet thee once with Hermia, To do obedience to a moment of May, There will I stand for thee.

Her. My good Lysander! I swear to thee, by Cupid's strongest bow, By his best arrow with the golden head, By the simplicity of Venus' doves, By that which knittest souls and prospers loves, And by that fire which burn'd the Cartage queen, When the false Troyan under sail was seen, By all the vows that ever men have broke, In number more than ever women spoke, In that same place thou hast appointed me, To-morrow truly will I meet with thee. [Ena. Lys. Keep promise, love. Look, here comes Hel- Enter Helena. Her. God speed fair Helena! whither away? Hel. Call you me fair? that fair again unsay. Demetrius loves your fair: O happy fair! [air Your eyes are lode-stars; and your tongue's sweet More tunable than lark to shepherd's ear, When what is green, when hawthorn buds appear. Sickness is catching: O, were a favour so. Yours would I catch; fair Hermia, ere I go; My ear should catch your voice, my eye your eye, My tongue should catch your tongue's sweet melody. Were the world mine, Demetrius being bated, The rest I 'ld give to be to translated. O, teach me how you look, and with what art You sway the motion of Demetrius' heart. Her. I frown upon him, yet he loves me still. Hel. O that your frowns would teach my smiles such skill! Her. I give him curses, yet he gives me love. Hel. O, I pray you, let me know what affection move! Her. The more I hate, the more he follows me. Hel. The more I love, the more he hateth me. Her. His f issoy, Helena, is no fault of mine. [mine! Hel. None, but your beauty: would that fault were Her. Take comfort: he no more shall see my face; Lysander and myself will be at this place. Before the time I did Lysander see. Seem'd Athens as a paradise to me: O, then, what graces in my love do dwell, That he hath turn'd a heaven unto a hell! Lys. Helen, to you our minds we will unfold: To-morrow night, when Phoebus doth behold Her silver visage in the watery glass, Decking with liquid pearl the bladed grass, A time that lovers' flights doth still conceal. Through Athens' gates have we devised to steal. Her. And in the wood, where often you and I Upon fair rose-blossom, or sweet violet, sit, Emptying our bosoms of their counsel sweet, There my Lysander and myself shall meet; And thence from Athens turn away our eyes, To seek new friends and stranger companies. Farewell, sweet playfellow: pray thon for us; And grant our wish that we may be thus! Keep word, Lysander: we must starve our sight From lovers' food till morrow deep midnight.

Lys. I will, my Hermia. [Exit Herm. Hel. [Exit Herm. As you on him, Demetrius doth you. [Hel. How happy some o'er other some can be! Through Athens I am thought as fair as she.
ACT I.

A MIDSUMMER-NIGHT'S DREAM.

SCENE I.

But what of that? Demetrius thinks not so; he will not know what all but he do know; and as he err, dotting on Hermia's eyes, so I, admiring of his qualities. Things base and vile, holding no quantity, love can transpose to form and dignity; love looks not with the eyes, but with the mind; and therefore is wing'd Cupid painted blind: nor hath love's mind of any judgment taste: wings and no eyes figure unheedly haste: and therefore is love said to be a child, because in choice he is so oft beguiled. As waggish boys in game themselves forswear, so the boy Love is perjured every where: for ere Demetrius look'd on Hermia's eye, he hail'd down oaths that he was only mine; and when this hail some heat from Hermia felt, so he dissolved, and showers of oaths did melt. I will go tell him of fair Hermia's flight: then to the wood will he to-morrow night pursue her; and for this intelligence If I have thanks, it is a dear expense: but herein mean I to enrich my pain, to have his sight thither and back again. [Exit.

SCENE II.—Athens. Quince's house.

Enter Quince, Snug, Bottom, Flute, Snout, and Starveling.

Quin. Is all our company here?
Bot. You were best to call them generally, man by man, according to the scrup. Masters, spread yourselves.

Quin. Answer as I call you. Nick Bottom, the weaver.
Bot. Ready. Name what part I am for; and proceed.
Quin. You, Nick Bottom, are set down for Pyramus.
Bot. What is Pyramus? a lover, or a tyrant?
Quin. A lover, that kills himself most gallant for love.
Bot. That will ask some tears in the true performing of it: if I do it, let the audience look to their eyes: I will move storms, I will condole in some measure. To the rest: yet my chief humour is for a tyrant: I could play Ercles rarely, or a part to tear a cat in, to make all split. The raging rocks, and shivering shocks shall break the locks of prison gates; and Philibbus' ear shall shine from far, and break and make the foolish Fates. This was lofty! Now name the rest of the players.

This is Ercles' vein, a tyrant's vein; a lover is more condoling.

Quin. Francis Flute, the bellows-mender.
Flu. Here, Peter Quince.
Quin. Flute, you must take Thisby on you.
Flu. What is Thisby? a wandering knight?
Quin. It is the lady that Pyramus must love.
Flu. Nay, faith, let not me play a woman, I have a beard coming.
Quin. That's all one: you shall play it in a mask, and you may speak as small as you will.
Bot. An I may hide my face, let me play Thisby too. I'll speak in a monstrous little voice. 'Thysne, Thysne!' 'Ah Pyramus, my lover dear! thy Thisby dear, and lady dear!'
Quin. No, no; you must play Pyramus: and, Flute, you Thisby.
Bot. Well, proceed.
Quin. Robin Starveling, the tailor.
Snout. Here, Peter Quince.
Quin. You, Pyramus' father: myself, Thisby's father. Snout. The joiner; you, the lion's part: and, I hope, here is a play at length.
Snout. Have you the lion's part written? pray you, if it be, give it me, for I am slow of study.
Quin. You may do it extempore, for it is nothing but roaring.
Bot. Let me play the lion too: I will roar, that I will do any man's heart good to hear me; I will roar, that I will make the duke say 'Let him roar again, let him roar again.'
Quin. An you should do it too terribly, you would fright the duchess and the ladies, that they should shriek; and that were enough to hang us all.
All. That would hang us, every mother's son.
Bot. I grant you, friends, if that you should fright the ladies out of their wits, they would have no more discretion but to hang us: but I will aggravate my voice so that I will roar you as gently as any sucking dove; I will roar you an 't were any nightingale.
Quin. You can play no part but Pyramus; for Pyramus is a sweet-faced man; a proper man, as one shall see in a summer's day; a most lovely gentleman-like man: therefore you must needs play Pyramus.
Bot. Well, I will undertake it. What beard were I best to play it in?
Quin. Why, what you will.
Bot. I will discharge it in either your straw-colour beard, your orange-tawny beard, your purple-in-grain beard, or your French-crown-colour beard, your perfect yellow.
Quin. Some of your French crowns have no hair at all, and then you will play barefaced. But, masters, here are your parts: and I am to entreat you, request you and desire you, to con them by to-morrow night; and meet me in the palace wood, a mile without the town, by moonlight; there will we rehearse, for if we meet in the city, we shall be dogged with company, and our devices known. In the meantime I will draw a bill of properties, such as our play wants. I pray you, fall me not.
Bot. We will meet; and there we may rehearse most old play, and courageously. Take pains; be perfect: adieu.
Quin. At the duke's oak we meet.
Bot. Enough; hold or cut bow-strings. [Exeunt.]
SCENE I.—A wood near Athens.

Enter, from opposite sides, a Fairy, and Puck.

Puck. How now, spirit! whither wander you?

Fai. Over hill, over dale,

Thorough bush, thorough brier,

Over park, over pale,

Thorough flood, thorough fire,

I do wander every where,

Swifter than the moon's sphere;

And I serve those to lead through the glimmering:

To dea her orbs upon the green.

The cowslips tall her pensioners be:

In their gold coats spots you see;

Those be rubies, fairy favours,

In those freckles live their savours:

I must go seek her, and dress them up;

And hang a pearl in every cowslip's ear.

Farewell, thou loth of spirits; I'll be gone:

Our queen and all her elves come here anon.

Puck. The king doth keep his revels here to-night:

Take heed the queen come not within his sight;

For Oberon is passing fell and wrath.

Because that she as her attendant hath

A lovely boy, stolen from an Indian king;

She never had so sweet a changeling;

And jealous Oberon would have the child

Killed, and set in the forest wild;

But she perforce withholds the loved boy,

Crown'd him with flowers and makes him all her joy:

And now they never meet in grove or green,

By fountain clear, or spangled starlight shone,

But they do square, that all their elves for fear

Create no corn-cups and hide them there.

Fai. Either I mistake your shape and making quite,

Or else you are that shrewd and knavish sprite

Call'd Robin Goodfellow: are not you he?

That frights the maidens of the village,

Skin withal, and sometimes labour in the quern

And bootless make the breathless housewife charm;

And sometime make the drink to bear no harm;

Mislead night-wanderers, laughing at their harm?

That those Hobgoblin call you and sweet Puck,

You do their work, and they shall have good luck:

Are not you he?

Puck. Thou speak'st ast right;

I am that merry wanderer of the night.

I jest to Oberon and make him smile

When I a fat and bean-fed horse beguile,

Neighing in likeness of a fily foal:

And sometime lurk I in a gossips' bowl,

In very likeness of a roasted crab,

And when she drinks, against her lips I bob

And on her wither'd dewlap pour the ale.

The wisest aunt, telling the saddest tale,

Sometimes for three-foot stool misdaketh me;

Then slip I from her bum, down topples she,

And 'taller' cries, and falls into a cough;

And then the whole quire hold their higs and laugh,

And waxen in their mirth and cease and swear

A merrier hour was never wasted there.

But rough Fairy! here comes Oberon, [gone!]

Fai. And here my mistress. Would that he were Enter, from one side, Oberon, with his train; from the other, Titania, with hers.

Ober. Ill met by moonlight, fair and queen Titania.

Titania. What, jealous Oberon! Fairies, skip-hence:

I have forsworn his bed and company.

Ober. Tarry, rash woman; am I not thy lord?

Titania. Then I must be thy lady: but I know

When thou hast stolen away from fairy land,

And in the shape of Corin sat all day,

Playing on pipes of corn and versing love

To amorous Phillida. Why art thou here,

Come from the farthest steppe of India?

But that, forsooth, the bounding Amazon,

Your buskin'd mistress and your mortal love,

To Theseus must be welded, and you come

To give their bed joy and prosperity.

Ober. How canst thou thus for shame, Titania,

Glance at my credit with Hippolyta?

Knowing I know thy love to Theseus?

[uight

Didst thou not lead through the glimmering:

From Perigenia, whom he ravished?

And make him with fair Egle break his faith,

With Ariadne and Antiope?

Titania. These are the forgeries of jealousy:

And never, since the middle summer's spring,

Met we on earth in dale, forest or mead,

By paved fountain or by rushy brook,

Or in the beached, margin of the sea,

To dance our ringlets to the whispering wind,

But with thy brawls thou hast disturb'd our sport.

Therefore the winds, piping to us in vain,

As In revenge, have suck'd up from the sea.

Contagious fogs; which falling in the land

Have every pelting river made so proud

That they have overcome their continents:

The ox hath therefore stretch'd his yoke in vain,

The ploughman lost his sweat, and the green corn

Hath rotten in his youth for lack of rain.

The fold stands empty in the drowned field,

And crows are fatted with the murrion flock;

The nine men's morris is ill'd up with mud.

And the quaint mazes in the wanton green

For lack of truant are indistinguishable:

The human mortals want their winter here;

No night is now with hymn or carol blest:

Therefore the moon, the governess of floods,

Pale in her anger, washes all the air,

That rheumatic diseases do abound;

And thorough distemper is we see

The seasons alter: hoary-headed froses

Fall in the fresh lap of the crimson rose,

And on old Hiems' thin and icy crown

An odorous chaplet of sweet summer buds

Is, as in mockery, set: the spring, the summer,

The chiding morn, and all the winter change,

Their wonted liveries, and the mazed world,

By their increase, now knows not which is which:

And this same progeny of evils comes

From our debate, from our dissension;

We are their parents and original.

Ober. Do you amend it then? it lies in you:

Why should Titania cross her Oberon?

I do but beg a little changeling boy,

To be my henchman.

Titania. Set your heart at rest:

The fairy land buys not the child of me.

His mother was a votress of my order:

And, in the spiced Indian air, by night,

Full often hath she gossip'd by my side,

And sat with me on Neptune's yellow sand's,

Marking the embark'd traders on the flood,

And when we have laugh'd to see the sails conceive

And grow big belled with the wanton wind;

Which she, with pretty and with swimming gait

Following,—her womb then rich with my young

Would imitate, and sail upon the land, [sign,

To fetch me trilles, and return again,

As from a voyage, rich with merchandise.

But she, being mortal, of the same died;

And for her sake do I rear up her boy,

And for her sake will not part with him.

Ober. How long within this wood intend you stay?

Titania. Perchance till after Theseus' wedding-day.
ACT II.

A MIDSUMMER-NIGHT'S DREAM.

SCENE II.

If you will patiently dance in our round
And see our moonlight revels, go with us;
If not, shun me, and I will spread no flowers.

Obe. Give me that boy, and I will go with thee.

Tit. Not for thy fairy kingdom. Fairies, away!

We shall chide downright, if I longer stay.

[Exit Titania with her train.

Obe. Well, go thy way: thou shalt not from this Till I torment thee for this trick of thine! [grov

My gentle Puck, come hither. Thou rememberest
Since once I sat upon a promontory,
And heard a mermaid on a dolphin's back
Uttering such dulcet and harmonious breath
That the rude sea grew civil at her song
And whisper'd tales of love from ancient hours,
To hear the sea-maid's music.

Puck. I remember.

Obe. That very time I saw, but thou couldst not Flying between the cold moon and the earth,
Cupid all arm'd: a certain aim he took
At a fair vestal throne by the west,
And loosed his love-shaft smartly from his bow,
As it should pierce a hundred thousand hearts;
But I might see young Cupid's fiery shaft
Quench'd in the chaste beams of the watery moon,
And the immortal vales were put to rest,
In maiden meditation, fancy-free,
Yet mark'd I where the bough of Cupid fell:
It fell upon a little western flower,
Before milk-white, now purple with love's wound,
And maidens call it love-in-idleness.

Fetch me that flower: the herb I shew'd thee once;
The juice of it on sleeping eye-lids laid
Will make or man or woman madly dote
Upon the next live creature that it sees.

Fetch me this herb; and be thou here again
Ere the leviathan can swim a league.

Puck. I'll put a girdle round about the earth
In forty minutes. [Exit.

Obe. Having once this juice,
I'll watch Titania when she is asleep,
And drop the liquor in it in her eyes.
The next thing then she waking looks upon,
Be it on lion, bear, or wolf, or bull,
On meddling monkey, or on busy ape,
She shall pursue it with the soul of love.

As I take this charm from off her sight,
I close my eyes to with another herb,
I'll make her render up her page to me.

But when I have this power,
I shall not lose it,
And I will overhear their conference.

Enter Demetrius, Helena following him.

Dem. I love thee not, therefore pursue me not.
Where is Lysander and fair Hermia?
The one I'll slay, the other shew me.
Thou told'st me they were stolen unto this wood;
And here am I, and woe within this wood,
Because I cannot meet my Hermia.

Hec. Get thee gone, and follow me no more.

Hel. You draw me, you hard-hearted adamant;
But yet you draw not iron, for my heart
Is true as steel: leave you your power to draw,
And I shall have no power to follow you.

Dem. Do I entice you? do I speak you fair?
Or, rather, do I not in plainest truth
Tell you, I do not, nor I cannot love you?

Hel. And every word that doth prove I love you the more,
I am your spaniel; and, Demetrius,

The more you beat me, I will fawn on you:
Use me but as your spaniel, spur me, strike me,
Neglect me, lose me; only give me leave,
Unworthy as I am, to follow you.

What and where shall I lay in your love,—
And yet a place of high respect with me,—
Than to be used as you use your dog?

Dem. Tempt not too much the hatred of my

Hel. And I am sick when I look not on you.

Dem. You do impeach your modesty too much,
To leave the city and commit yourself
Into the hands of one that loves you not;
To trust the opportunity of night
And the hill counsel of a desert place
With the rich worth of your virginitv.

Hel. Your virtue is my privilege: for that
It is not night when I do see your face,
Therefore I think I am not in the night;
Nor doth this wood lack worlds of company,
For you in my respect are so vocal,
Then how can it be said I am alone?

When all the world is here to look on me?

Dem. I'll run from thee and hide me in the

Hel. The wildest hath not such a heart as you.

Run when you will, the story shall be changed:
Apollo flies, and Daphne holds the chase;
The dove pursues the griffin; the mild hind
Makes speed to catch the tiger; bootless speed,
When cowardice pursues and valour flies.

Dem. I will not stay thy questions; let me go:
Or, if thou follow me, do not believe
But I shall do thee mischief in the wood.

Hel. Ay, in the temple, in the town, the field,
You do me mischief. Fie, Demetrius!

Your wrongs do set a scandal on my sex:
We cannot fight for love, as men may do;
We should be woo'd and were not made to woo.

[Exit Dem.]

I'll follow thee and make a heaven of hell,

To die upon the hand I love so well.

Obe. Fare thee well, nymph: ere he do leave this Thou shalt fly him and he shall seek thy love.

[Exit.

Puck. Fear not, my lord, your servant shall do

[Exeunt.

SCENE II.—Another part of the wood.

Enter Titania, with her train.

Tit. Come, now a roundel and a fairy song;
Then, for the third part of a minute, hence;
Some to kill cankers in the musk-rose buds,
Some war with reere-mice for their leathern wings,
To make my small elves coze, and some keep buck
The clanging sylvl that nightly hoots and wonders
At our quaint spirits. Sing me now asleep;
Then to your offices and let me rest.
A Fairy. Hence, away! now all is well:
One alack stand sentinel.

Enter Oberon, and squeezes the flower on Titania's eyelids.

Obe. What thou seest when thou dost wake,
Do it for thy true-love sake,
Love and languish for his sake:
Be it ounce, or cat, or bear,
Pard, or boar with bristled hair,
In thy eye that shall appear.
When thou wakest, He is thy dear:
Wake when some vile thing is near. [Exit.

Enter Lysander and Hermia.

Lys. Fair love, you faint with wandering in the
And to speak truth, I have forgot our way: [wood; We'll rest us, Hermia, if you think it good,
And tarry for the comfort of the day.

Herm. Be it so, Lysander: find you out a bed;
For I upon this bank will rest my head.

Lys. One turf shall serve as pillow for us both;
One heart, one bed, two bosoms and one troth.

Herm. Nay, good Lysander; for my sake, my dear,
Lie further off yet, do not lie so near.

Lys. O, take the sense, sweet, of my innocence!
Love takes the meaning in love's conference.

Herm. I mean, that my heart unto yours is knit
So that he heart we cannot part of it;
Two bosoms interchanged with an oath;
So then two bosoms and a single troth.

Lys. Then by your side no bed-room me deny;
For lying so, Hermia, I do not lie.

Herm. Lysander reddles very prettily:
Now much besheer he my manners and my pride,
If Hermia meant to say Lysander lied.
But, gentle friend, for love and courtesy
Lie further off; in human modesty,
Such separation as may well be said
Becomes a virtuous bachelor and a maid.

Lys. Amen, amen, to that fair prayer, say I;
And then end life when I end loyalty!

Herm. Here is my bed: sleep give thee all his rest!

Lys. With half that wish the wisher's eyes be press'd! [They sleep.

Enter Puck.

Puck. Through the forest have I gone,
But Athenian found I none,
On whose eye's I might approve
This flower's force in stirring love.

Night and silence.—Who is here?

Weeds of Athens he doth wear:
This is he, my master said.

Despised the Athenian maid;
And here, the maiden, sleeping sound,
On the dank and dirty ground.

Prettily so, she durst not lie.
Near this lack-love, this kill-courtesy:
Churl, upon thy eyes I throw
All the power this charm doth owe.

When thou wakest, let love forbid
Sleep his seat on thy eyelid:
So awake when I am gone;
For I must now to Oberon. [Exit.

Enter Demetrius and Helena, running.

Dem. Stay, though thou kill me, sweet Demetrius.

Dem. I charge thee, hence, and do not haunt me thus.

Dem. O, wilt thou darkness leave me? do not so.

Dem. Stay, on thy peril: I alone will go. [Exit.

Hel. O, I am out of breath in this fond chase!

The more my prayer, the lesser is my grace.

Happy is Hermia, whereas she lies;
For she hath blessed and attractive eyes,
How came her eyes so bright?
Not with salt tears:
If so, my eyes are oftener wash'd than hers.

No, no, I am as ugly as a bear;
For beasts that meet me run away for fear:

They marvel though Demetrius
Do, as a monster, fly my presence thus.

What wicked and dissembling glass of mine
Made me compare with Hermia's spleney eye?

But who is here? Lysander! on the ground!

Dead? or asleep? I see no blood, no wound.

Lysander, if you live, good sir, awake.

Lys. [Awaking] And run through fire I will for thy sweet sake.

Transcendent Helena! Nature shows art,
That through thy bosom makes me see thy heart.

Where is Demetrius? O, how fit a word! Is that vile name to perish on my sword?

Dem. Do not say so, Lysander; say not so.

What though he love your Hermia? Lord, what though?

Yet Hermia still lies you: when be content.

Lys. Content, with Hermia, she lies; I do repent
The tedious minutes I with her have spent.

Not Hermia but Helena I love:
Who will not change a raven for a dove?

The will of man is by his reason sway'd;
And reason says you are the worthier maid.

Things great and small are in their season:

So I, being young, till now ripe not to reason;

And touching now the point of human skill,
Reason becomes the marshal to my will

And leads me to your eyes, where I o'erlook
Love's stories written in love's richest book.

Hel. Wherefore was I to this keen mockery born?

When at your hands did I deserve this scorn?
Is 't not enough, 't is not enough, young man,

That I did never, no, nor never can,

Deserve a sweet look from Demetrius' eye,

But you may not find my heart, sweet friend:

Thy love ne'er alter till thy sweet life end!

Lys. Amen, amen, to that fair prayer, say I;
And then end life when I end loyalty!

Here is my bed: sleep give thee all his rest!

Lys. With half that wish the wisher's eyes be press'd! [They sleep.

Hel. And never mayst thou come Lysander near!

For as a surfeit of the sweetest things

The deepest sleep to the stomach brings,
Or as the heresies that men do lose.

Are hated most of those they did deceive,

So thou, my surfeit and my heresy,

Of all be hated, but the most of me!
And, all my powers, address your love and might
To honour Helen and to be her knight! [Exit.
Her. [Aeoftyng] Help me, Lysander, help me!
Fly for my life!
To pluck this crawling serpent from my breast!
Ay me, for pity! what a dream was here!
Lysander, how I do quake with fear:
Methought a serpent eat my heart away,
And you sat smiling at his cruel prey.
Lysander! what, removed? Lysander! lord!
What, out of hearing? gone? no sound, no word?
Ah, where are you? speak, an you hear;
Speak, of all loves! I swoon almost with fear.
No? then I well perceive you are not nigh:
Either death or you I'll find immediately. [Exit.

ACT III.

SCENE I.—The wood. Titania lying asleep.
Enter Quince, Snug, Bottom, Flute, Snout, and Starveling.

Bot. Are we all met?
Quin. Not yet, and here's a marvellous convenient place for our rehearsal. This green plot shall be our stage, this bough-borne-brake our tiring-house; and we will do it in action as we will do it before the Bot. Peter Quince.—
Quin. What sayest thou, bully Bottom?
Bot. There are things in this comedy of Pyramus and Thisby that will not bear pleasure. First, Pyramus must drive a sword to kill himself: which the ladies cannot abide. How answer you that?
Snout. By'r lakin, a perilous fear.
Star. I believe we must leave the killing out, when all is done.
Bot. Not a whit: I have a device to make all well. Write me a prologue; and let the prologue seem to say, we will do no harm with our swords and that Pyramus is not killed indeed: and, for the more better assurance, tell them that I Pyramus am not Pyramus, but Bottom the weaver: this will put them out of fear.
Quin. Well, we will have such a prologue; and it shall be written in eight and six.

Bot. No, make it two more; let it be written in eight and eight.

Snout. Will not the ladies be afraid of the lion?
Star. I fear it, I promise you.
Bot. Masters, you ought to consider with yourselves: to bring in—God shiel us!—a lion among ladies, is a most dreadful thing; for there is not a more fearful wild-fowl than your lion living; and we ought to look to 't.

Snout. Therefore another prologue must tell he is not such.
Bot. Nay, you must name his name, and half his face must be seen through the lion's neck: and he himself must speak through, saying thus, or to the same defect,—"Ladies,—'r Fair ladies,—I would wish you,—or 'I would request you,—or 'I would correct you,—not to fear, not to tremble: my life for yours. If you think I come hither as a lion, it were pity of my life: no, I am no such thing: I am a man as other men are; and there indeed let him name his name, and tell them plainly he is Such the joiner.

Quin. Well, it shall be so. But there are two hard things; that is, to bring the moonlight into a chamber; for, you know, Pyramus and Thisby meet by moonlight.

Bot. A calendar, a calendar I look in the almanac; find out moonshine, find out moonshine.

Quin. Yes, it doth shine that night.
Bot. Why, then may you leave a casement of the great chamber-window, where we play, open, and the moon may shine in at the casement.
Quin. Any one must come in with a bush of thorns and a lantern, and say he comes to disfigure, or to present, the person of Moonshine. Then, there is another thing: we must have a wall in the great chamber; for Pyramus and Thisby, says the story, did talk through the chink of a wall.

Snout. You can never bring in a wall. What say you, Bottom?

Bot. Some man or other must present Wall: and let him have some plaster, or some loam, or some rough-cast about him, to signify wall; and let him hold his fingers thus, and through that cranny shall Pyramus and Thisby whisper.

Quin. If that may be, then all is well. Come, sit down, every mother's son, and rehearse your parts. Pyramus, you begin; when you have spoken your speech, enter into that brake: and so every one according to his cue.

Enter Puck behind.
Puck. What hempen home-spuns have we swagger-
So near the cradle of the fairy queen? [ing here,
What, a play toward! I'll be an auditor;
An actor too perhaps, if I see cause.

Bot. Thisby, the flowers of odious savours sweet.—
Quin. Odours, odours.
Bot. Odours savours sweet:
So hath they breath, me dear, Thyby dear.
But hark, a voice! stay thou but here awhile.
And by and by I will to thee appear.

Flute. Must I speak now?
Quin. Ay, marry, must you; for you must understand he goes but to see a noise that he heard, and is to come again.

Flute. Most radiant Pyramus, most lily-white of hue,
Of colour like the red rose on triumphant brier,
Most briskly juvenal and eke most lovely Jew,
As true as truest horse that yet would never tire,
I'll meet thee, Pyramus, at Ninny's tomb.

Quin. 'Ninus' tomb,' man: why, you must not speak that; yet you answer to Pyramus: you speak all your part at once, cues and all. Pyramus enter: your cue is past: it is, 'never tire.'

Flute. O,—As true as truest horse, that yet would never tire.

Re-enter Puck, and Bottom with an ass's head.

Bot. If I were fair, Thisby, I were only thine.
Quin. O monstrous! O strange! we are haunted.
Pray, masters! fly, masters! Help! [Exit Quince, Snug, Flute, Snout, and Starveling.
Puck. I'll follow you, I'll lead you about a round,
Through bog, through bush, through brake, through brier:
Some time a horse I'll be, sometime a hound,
A hog, a headless bear, sometime a fire;
And neigh, and bark, and grunt, and roar, and burn,
Like horse, hound, hog, bear, fire, at every turn.

[Exit.

Bot. Why do they run away? this is a knavery of them to make me afeard.

Re-enter Snout.

Snout. O Bottom, thou art changed! what do I see on thee?
ACT III.

A MIDSUMMER-NIGHT’S DREAM.

SCENE II.

Bot. What do you see? you see an ass-head of your own, do you?
[Exit Snout.

Re-enter Quince.

Quin. Bless thee, Bottom! bless thee! thou art translated.
[Exit.

Bot. I see their knavery: this is to make an ass of me; to fright me, if they could. But I will not stir from this place, do what they can: I will walk up and down here, and I will sing, that they shall hear I am not afraid.

[Sings.

The osuel cock so black of hue,

With orange-tawny bill,

The throstle with his note so true,

The wren with little quill.—

Titania. What angel wakes me from my flowery bed?

Bot. [Sings]

The Finch, the sparrow and the lark,

The plain-song cuckoo gray,

Whose note full many a man doth mark,

And dare not answer nay:

for, indeed, who would set his wit to so foolish a bird? who would give a bird the lie, though he cry ‘cuckoo’ never so?

Titania. I pray thee, gentle mortals, sing again:

Mimick with much enamour’d of thy note;

So is mine eye enthrall’d to thy shape;

And thy fair virtue’s force perforce doth move me

On the first view to say, to swear, I love thee.

Bot. Methinks, mistress, you should have little reason for that: and yet, to say the truth, reason and love keep little company together now-a-days: the more the pity that some honest neighbors will not make them friends. Nay, I can gleek upon occasion.

Titania. Thou art as wise as thou art beautiful.

Bot. Not so, neither: but if I had wit enough to get out of this wood, I have enough to serve mine own turn.

Titania. Out of this wood do not desire to go:

Thou shalt remain here, whether thou wilt or no.

I am a spirit of no common rate:

The summer still doth tend upon my state;

And I do love thee, therefore, go with me;

I’ll give thee fairies to attend on thee,

And they shall fetch thee jewels from the deep,

And sing while thou on pressed flowers dost sleep;

And I will purge thy mortal grossness so

That thou shalt like an airy spirit go.

Peaseblossom! Cobweb! Moth! and Mustardseed!

Enter Peaseblossom, Cobweb, Moth, and Mustardseed.

Peas. Ready.

Cob. And I.

Moth. And I.

Mus. And I.

All. Where shall we go?

Peas. Be kind and courteous to this gentleman;

Hop in his walks and gambol in his eyes;

Feed him with apples, peacocks and dewberries;

With purple grapes, green figs, and mulberries;

The honey-bags steal from the humble-bees,

And for night-tapers crop their waxen thighs

And light them at the fiery glow-worm’s eyes.

To have my love to bed and to arise;

And put to wings the tidings from painted butterflies.

To fan the moonbeams from his sleeping eyes:

Not to him, elves, and do him courteous.

Peas. Hail, mortal!

Cob. Hail!

Moth. Hail!

Mus. Hail!

Bot. I cry your worship’s mercy, heartily: I beseech your worship’s name.

Cob. Cobweb.

Bot. I shall desire you of more acquaintance, good Master Cobweb: if I cut my finger, I shall make bold with you. Your name, honest gentleman?

Peas. Peaseblossom.

Bot. I pray you, commend me to Mistress Squash, your mother, and to Master Peascod, your father.

Good Master Peaseblossom, I shall desire you of more acquaintance too. Your name, I beseech you, sir?

Mus. Mustardseed.

Bot. Good Master Mustardseed, I know your patience well: that same cowardly, giant-like ox-and-beef hath devoured many a gentleman of your house; I promise you your kindred hath made my eyes water ere now. I desire your more acquaintance, good Master Mustardseed.

Titania. Come, wait upon him; lead him to my bower. The moon methinks looks with a watery eye;

And when she weeps, weeps every little flower,

Lamenting some enforced chastity.

Tie up my love’s tongue, bring him silently.

[Exit.

SCENE II. — Another part of the wood.

Enter Oberon.

Obe. I wonder if Titania be awakened;
Then, what it was that next came in her eye,
Which she must dote on in extremity.

Enter Puck.

Here comes my messenger. How now, mad spirit!
What night-rule now about this haunted grove?

Puck. My mistress with a monster is in love.
Near to her close and consecrated bower,
While she was in her dull and sleeping hour,
A crew of patches, rude mechanicals,
That work for bread up Athenian stalls,
Were met together to rehearse a play
Intended for great Thespeus’ nuptial-day.

The shallowest thick-skin of that barren sort,
Who Pyramus presented, in their sport
Forsook his scene and enter’d in a brake:
When I did him at this advantage take,
An ass’s nose I fixed on his head;
Anon his Thespeus must be answered,
And forth my mimic comes. When they him spy,
As wild geese that the creeping Fowler eye,
Russel-patedoughs, many in sort,
Rising and calling at the garden gate,
Sever themselves and madly sweep the sky,
So, at his sight, away his fellows fly;
And, at our stamp, here o’er and o’er one falls;
He murdertears and help from Athens calls. [strong,
Their sense this weak, lest with their fears thus
Made senseless things begin to do them wrong;
For briers and thorns in their apparel snatch;
Some sleeves, some hats, from yielders all things
I led them on in this distracted fear, [catch.
And left sweet Pyramus translated there:
When in that moment, so it came to pass,
Titania waked and straightway loved an ass.

Obe. This falls out better than I could devise.
But hast thou yet latch’d the Athenian’s eyes
With the love-juice, as I did bid thee do?

Puck. I took him sleeping,—that is finish’d too,—
And the Athenian woman by his side;
That, when he waked, of force she must be eyed.

Enter Hermia and Demetrius.

Obe. Stand close: this is the same Athenian.

Puck. This is the woman, but not this the man.

Dem. O, who shall make him that loves you so?

Puck. Lay breath so better on your bitter toe.

Her. Now I but chide; but I should use thee worse,
For thou, I fear, hast given me cause to curse.
If thou hast slain Lysander in his sleep,
Being o'er him in blood, plunge in the deep,
And kill me too.
The sun was not so true unto the day
As he to me: would he have stolen away
From sleeping Hermia? I'll believe as soon
This whole earth may be bored and that the moon
May through the ether slip and so displease
Her brother's nocturnall with the Antipodes.
It cannot be but thou hast murder'd him;
So should a murderer look, so dead, so grim.
Dem. So should the murder'd look, and so should I,
Pierced through the heart with your stern cruelty;
Yet you, the murderer, lock your lines, that clear,
As wonder Venus in her glimmering sphere.
Her. What's this to my Lysander? where is he?
Ah, good Demetrius, wilt thou give him me?
Dem. I had rather give his carcass to my hounds.
Her. Out, dog! out, cur! thou drivest me past the bounds
Of maiden's patience. Hast thou slain him, then?
Henceforth be never number'd among men!
O, once tell true, tell true, even for my sake!
Durst thou have look'd upon him being awake,
And hast thou kill'd him sleeping? O brave touch!
Could not some tear, and tender heart,
An adder did it; for with doublure tongue
Than thine, thou serpent, never adder stung.
Dem. You spend your passion on a misprisned mood:
I am not guilty of Lysander's blood;
Nor is he dead, for aught that I can tell.
Her. An if I could, what should I get therefore?
Her. A privilege never to see me more.
And from thy hated presence part I so:
See me no more, whether he be dead or no. [Exit.
Dem. There is no following her in this fierce vein:
Here through the whis she will remain.
So sorrow's heaviness doth heavier grow
For debt that bankrupt sleep doth sorrow owe;
Which now in some slight measure it will pay,
If for his tender here I make some stay.
[Exit
Obe. What hast thou done? thou hast mistak'd quite
And laid the love-juice on some true-love's sight:
Of thy misprison must perforce ensue
Some true love turn'd and not a false turn'd true.
Puck. Then fate o'er-rules, that one man holding
A million fail, confounding oath on oath.
Obe. About the wood go swifter than the wind,
And Helena of Athens look thou find:
All fancy-sick she is and pale of cheer,
With sighs of love, that costs the fresh blood dear:
By some illusion see thou bring her here:
I'll charm his eyes against she do appear.
Puck. I go, I go: look how I go,
Swifter than arrow from the Tartar's bow. [Exit.
Obe. Flower of this purple dye,
Hilt with Cupid's archery,
Sink in apple of his eye.
When his love he doth espy,
Let her shine as gloriously
As the Venus of the sky,
When thou wakist, if she be by,
Beg of her for remedy.

Re-enter Puck.
Puck. Captain of our fairy band,
Helena is here at hand;
And the youth, mistook by me,
Pleading for a lover's fee.
Shall we their fond complaint see?
Lord, what fools these mortals be!
Obe. Stand aside: the noise they make
Will cause Demetrius to awake.

Puck. Then will two at once woo one;
That must needs be sport alone;
And those things do best please me
That beal prefpostiously.

Enter Lysander and Helena.
Lys. Why should you think that I should woo in Scorn and derision never come in tears: [scorn?
Look, when I vow, I weep; and vows so born,
In their nativity all truth appears.
How can these things in me seem scorn to you,
Bearing the badge of faith, to prove them true?
Hel. You do advance your cunning more and more.
When truth kill'd me, didst thou wish me fray?
These vows are Hermia's: will you give her o'er?
Weigh oath with oath, and you will nothing weigh:
Your vows to her and me, put in two scales,
Will even weigh, and both as light as tales.
Lys. I had no judgment when to her I swore.
Hel. Nor none, in my mind, now you give her o'er.
Lys. Demetrius loves her, and he loves not you.
Dem. [Awaking] O Helen, goddess, nymph, perfect, divine!
To what, my love, shall I compare thine eye?
| Crystal is mauldy, O, how rife in show
| They lies, and kissing cream grow and grow!||
That pure congealed white, high Taurus' snow,
Fann'd with the eastern wind, turns to a crown
When thou hold'st up thy hand: O, let me kiss
This princess of pure white, this seal of bliss!
Hel. O spite! O hell! I see you all are bent
To set against me for your remittance:
If you were civil and knew courtesy,
You would not do me thus much injury.
Can you not hate me, as I know you do,
But you must join in souls to mock me too?
If you were men, as men you are in show,
You would not use me for a thing so low.
To vow, and swear, and superfluous my parts,
When I am sure you hate me with your hearts.
You both are rivals, and love Hermia;
And now both rivals, to mock Helena:
A trim exploit, a manly enterprise,
To conjure tears up in a poor maid's eyes
With your derision! none of noble sort
Would so offend a virgin and extort
A poor soul's patience, all to make you sport.
Lys. You are unkind, Demetrius; be not so;
For you love Hermia: this you know I know:
And here, with all good will, with all my heart,
In Hermia's love I yield you up my heart;
And yours of Helena to me bequeath,
Whom I do love and will do till my death.
Hel. Never did mockers waste more idle breath.
Dem. Lysander, keep thy Hermia: I will none:
If e'er I loved her, all that love is gone.
My heart to her but as guest-wise sojourn'd,
And now to Helen is it home return'd,
There to remain.
Lys. Helen, it is not so.
Dem. Disparage not the faith thou dost not know,
Lest, to thy peril, thou aby it dear.
Look, where thy love comes: yonder is thy dear.

Re-enter Hermia.
Her. Dark night, that from the eye his function takes,
The eye more quick of apprehension makes;
Wherein it doth injure the seeing sense,
It pays the hearing double recompense.
Thou art not by mine eye, Lysander, found;
Mine ear, I thank it, brought me to thy sound.
But why unkindly dist thou leave me so? [to go?
Lys. Why should he stay, whom love doth press
Her. What love could press Lysander from my side?
Lys. Lysander's love, that would not let him hide,
ACT III.

A MIDSUMMER-NIGHT'S DREAM.

SCENE II.

Fair Helena, who more engilds the night
Than all you fiery oes and eyes of light.
Why seek'st thou me? could not this make thee know
The hate I bear thee made me leave thee so?

Her. You speak not as you think: it cannot be.

Hel. Lo, she is one of this confederacy!
Now I perceive they have conjoin'd all three
To fashion this false sport, in spite of me.
Injurious Hermia! just ungrateful maid!
Have you conspired, have you with these contriv'd
To bait me with this foul decision?
Is all the counsel that we two have shared,
The sisters' vows, the hours that we have spent,
When we have chid the hasty-footed time
For parting us?—O, is it all forgot?
All school-days' friendship, childhood innocence?
We, Hermia, like two artificial gods,
Have with our needles created both one flower,
Both on one sampler, sitting on one cushion,
Both warbling of one song, both in one key,
As if our hands, our sides, voices and minds,
Had been incorporate. So we grew together,
Like to a double cherry, seeming parted,
Yet but an union in partition;
Two lovely berries moulded on one stem;
So, when you make me wonder by my heart,
Two of the first, like coats in heraldry,
Due but to one and crowned with one crest.
And will you rent our ancient love asunder,
To join with men in scorning your poor friend?
It is not friendly, 't is not maldently:
Our love should sport, I may chide you for it,
Though I alone do feel the injury.

Herm. I am amazed at your passionate words.
I scorn you not: it seems that you scorn me.

Hel. Have you not set Lysander, as in scorn,
To follow me and praise my eyes and face?
And made your other love, Demetrius,
Who even but now did spurn me with his foot,
To call me goddess, nymph, divine and rare,
Precious, celestial? Wherefore speaks he this
To her he hates? and wherefore doth Lysander
Deny your love, so rich within his soul,
And tender me, forsooth, affection.
But by your setting on, by your consent?
What though I be not so in grace as you,
So hung upon with love, so fortunate?
But miserable most, to love unloved?
Yet you should pity rather than despise.

Herm. I understand not what you mean by this.

Hel. Ay, do, persevere, counterfeit sad looks,
Make mouths upon me when I turn my back;
Wink each at other; hold the sweet jest up;
This sport, well carried, shall be chronicled.
If you have any pity, grace, or manners,
You would not make me such an argument.
But fare ye well; 't is partly my own fault;
Which death or absence soon shall remedy.

Lys. Stay, gentle Helena; hear my excuse;
My love, my life, my soul, fair Helena!

Hel. O excellent! Sweet, do not scorn her so.

Dem. If she cannot entreat, I can compel.

Lys. Thou canst compel no more than she entreat:
Thy threats have no more strength than her weak
Helm, my life, my life!—oh life!—[prayers.
I swear by that which I will lose for thee,
To prove him false that says I love thee not.

Dem. I say love thee more than he can do.

Lys. If thou say so, withdraw, and prove it too.

Dem. Quick, come! I Lysander, whereto tends all this?

Lys. Away, you Ethiope!

Dem. No, no: he'll ...

Seem to break loose: take on as you would follow,
But yet come not: you are a tame man, go!

142
Why will you suffer her to flout me thus?
Let me come to her.

Lys. Get you gone, you dwarf;
You minims, of hindering knot-grass made;
You bead, you acorn.

Dem. You are too officious
In her behalf that scour your servies.
Let her alone: speak not of Helena;
Take not her part; for, if thou dost intend
Never so little show of love to her,
Thou shalt aby it.

Lys. Now she holds me not;
Now follow, if thou desirest, to try whose right,
Of thine or mine, is most in Helena.

Dem. Follow! nay, I'll go with thee, cheek by jole.
[Exeunt Lysander and Demetrius.

Her. You, mistress, all this coil is 'long of you:
Nay, go not back.

Hel. I will not trust you, I,
Nor longer stay in your curtse company.
Your hands than mine are quicker for a fray,
My legs are longer though, to run away.
[Exit.

Obe. This is thy negligence: still thou mistakest,
Or else commit'st thy knavery willfully.

Puck. Believe me, king of shadows, I mistook.
Did not you tell me I should know the man
By the Athenian garments he had on?
And so far blameless proves my enterprise,
That I have pointed an Athenian's eyes;
And so far am I glad it so did sort
As this their jangling I esteem a sport.

Obe. Thou seest these lovers seek a place to fight:
He therefore, Robin, overcast the night;
The starry velkin cover thou anon
With drooping fog as black as Acheron,
And lead these testy rivals so astray
As one come not within another's way,
Like to Lysander sometime frame thy tongue,
Then stir Demetrius up with bitter wrong;
And sometime rail thou like Demetrius;
And from each other look thou lead them thus,
Till o'er their brows death-counterfeiting sleep
With leaden legs and petty wings doth creep;
Then crush this herb into Lysander's eye;
Whose liquor hath this virtuous property,
To take from thence all error with his might,
And make his eyeballs roll with wonted sight.
When they next wake, all this derision
Shall seem a dream and fruitless vision,
And back to Athens shall the lovers wend,
With league whose date till death shall never end.
Whiles I in this affair do thee employ,
I'll to my queen and beg her Indian boy;
And then I will her charmed eye release
From monster's view, and all things shall be peace.

Puck. My fairy lord, this must be done with haste,
For night's swift dragons cut the clouds full fast,
And yonder shines Aurora's harbinger; [there.
At whose approach, ghosts, wandring here and there,
Troop home to churchyards: damned spirits all,
That in crossways and floods have burial,
Already to their wormy beds are gone;
For fear lest day should look their shapes upon,
They willfully themselves exile from light
And must for eye consort with black-brow'd night.

Obe. But we are spirits of another sort:
I with the morning's love have oft made sport,
And, like a forester, the groves may tread,
Even till the eastern gate, all flory-red,
Opening on Neptune with fair blessed beams,
Turns his black eye as it on fair scenes.
But, notwithstanding, haste: make no delay:
We may effect this business yet ere day.

Puck. Up and down, up and down,
Will lead them up and down:

I am fear'd in field and town:
Goblin, lead them up and down.

Here comes one.

Re-enter Lysander.

Lys. Where art thou, proud Demetrius? speak thou now.

Puck. Here, villain; drawn and ready. Where art thou?

Lys. I will be with thee straight.

Puck. Follow me, then,

To plainest ground.

[Exeunt Lysander, as following the voice.

Re-enter Demetrius.

Dem. Lysander! speak again;
Thou runaway, thou coward, art thou fled?
Speak! In some bush? Where dost thou hide thy head?

Puck. Thou coward, art thou bragging to the stars,
Telling the bushes that thou looke'st for wars,
And wilt not come? Come, recreant; come, thou
I'll whip thee with a rod: he is defiled [child;
That draws a sword on thee.

Dem. Yea, art thou there?

Puck. Follow my voice: we'll try no manhood here.

[Exeunt.

Re-enter Lysander.

Lys. He goes before me and still dares me on:
When I come where he calls, then he is gone.

The villain is much lighter-heele'd than I:
I follow'd fast, but faster he did fly;
That fallen am I in dark uneven way,
And here will rest me. [Lies down.] Come, thou gentle day!

For if but once thou show me thy grey light,
I'll find Demetrius and revenge this spite. [Sleeps.

Re-enter Puck and Demetrius.

Puck. Ho, ho, ho! Coward, why comest thou not?

Dem. Abide me, if thou darest; for well I wot
Thou runn'st before me, shifting every place,
And darest not stand, nor look me in the face.

Where art thou now?

Puck. Come hither: I am here.

Dem. Nay, then, thou mock'st me. Thou shalt buy this dear,
If ever I thy face by daylight see:
Now, go thy way. Fainting constraineth me
To measure out my length on this cold bed.
By day's approach look to be visited.

[Exeunt.

Re-enter Helena.

Hel. O weary night, O long and tedious night,
Abate thy hours! shine comforts from the east,
That I may back to Athens by daylight,
From these that my poor company detest;
And sleep, that sometimes shits up sorrow's eye,
Steal me awhile from mine own company.

[Exeunt.

Puck. Yet but three? Come one more;
Two of both kinds makes up four.
Here she comes, curtst and sad:
Cupid is a knavish lad,
Thus to make poor females mad.

Re-enter Hermia.

Her. Never so weary, never so in woe,
Bedabbled with the dew and torn with briers,
I can no further crawl, no further go;

My legs can keep no pace with my desires.
Here will I rest me till the break of day.

Heavens shield Lysander, if they mean a fray!

[Exeunt.

Puck. On the ground

Sleep sound.

143
ACT IV.

SCENE I.—The same. Lysander, Demetrius, Helena, and Hermia lying asleep.

Enter Titania and Bottom; Peaseblossom, Cobweb, Moth, Mustardseed, and other Fairies attending; Oberon behind scenes.

Tit. Come, sit thee down upon this flowery bed, While I thy amiable cheeks do coy, And stick musk-roses in thy sleek smooth head, And kiss thy fair large ears, my gentle joy. Bot. Where's Peaseblossom? Peas. Ready. Bot. Scratch my head, Peaseblossom. Where's Mounsieur Cobweb? Cob. Ready. Bot. Mounsieur Cobweb, good mounsieur, get you your weapons in your hand, and kill me a red-hipped humble-bee on the top of a thistle; and, good mounsieur, bring me the honey-bag. Do not fret yourself too much in the action, mounsieur; and, good mounsieur, have a care the honey-bag break not; I would be loth to have you overthrown with a honey-bag, signior. Where's Mounsieur Mustardseed? Mus. Ready. Bot. Give me your yarn, Mounsieur Mustardseed. Pray you, leave your courtesy, good mounsieur. Mus. What's your will? Bot. Nothing, good mounsieur, but to help Cavalery Cobweb to scratch. I must to the barber's, mounsieur; for me thinks I am marvellous hairy about the face; and I am such a tender ass, if my hair do but tickle me, I must scratch. Tit. What, wilt thou hear some music, my sweet love? Bot. I have a reasonable good ear in music. Let's have the tongs and the bones. Tit. Or say, sweet love, what thou desirest to eat. Bot. Truly, a peck of provender: I could munch your good dry oats. Methinks I have a great desire to a bottle of hay: good hay, sweet hay, hath no fellow. Tit. I have a venturous fairy that shall seek The squirrel's heard, and fetch thee new nuts. Bot. I had rather have a handful or two of dried peas. But, I pray you, let none of your people stir me: I have an exposition of sleep come upon me. Tit. Sleep thou, and I will wind thee in my arms. Fairies, be gone, and be all ways away. [Exeunt fairies.

So doth the woodbine the sweet honeysuckle Gently entwine; the female ivy so Enrings the barking fingers of the elm. O, how I love thee! how I doze on thee! [They sleep.

Enter Puck.

Obe. [Advancing] Welcome, good Robin. See'st thou this sweet sight? Her dotage now I do begin to pity: For, meeting her of late behind the wood, Seeking sweet favours for this hateful fool, I did upbraiid her and fall out with her;

Of thy former lady's eye And the country proverb known, That every man should take his own, In your waking shall be shown: Jack shall have Jill; Nought shall go ill: The man shall have his mare again, and all shall be well. [Exit.

For she his hairy temples then had rounded With coronet of fresh and fragrant flowers; And that same dew, which sometime on the buds Was wont to swell like round and orient pearls, Stood now within the pretty flowerets' eyes. Like tears that did their care disgrace bewail, When I had at my pleasure taunted her And she in mild terms begg'd my patience, I then did ask of her her changeling child; Which straight she gave me, and her fairy sent To bear him to my bower in fairy land. And now I have the boy, I will undo This hateful imperfection of her eyes: And, gentle Puck, take this transformed scalp From off the head of this Athenian swain; That, he awaking when the other do, May all to Athens back again repair. And think no more of this night's accidents But as the fierce vexation of a dream. But first I will release the fairy queen. Be as thou wast wont to be; See as thou wast wont to see; Dian's bud o'er Cupid's flower Hath such force and blessed power. Now, my Titania; wake you, my sweet queen. Tit. My Oberon! what visions have I seen! Methought I was enamour'd of an ass. Obe. There lies your love. Puck. How! how! are these things to pass? O, how mine eyes do loathe his visage now! Obe. Silence awhile. Robin, take off this head. Titania, music call; and strike more dead Than common sleep of all these live the sense. Tit. Music, ho! music, such as charmeth sleep! [Music, still. Puck. Now, when thou wakest, with thine own fool's eyes peep. [with me, Obe. Sound, music! Come, my queen, take hands And rock the ground whereon these sleepers be. Now thou and I are new in amity And will to-morrow midnight solemnly Dance in Duke Theseus' house triumphantly And bless it to all fair prosperity: There shall the pairs of faithful lovers be Wedded, with Theseus, all in jollity. Puck. Fairy king, attend, and mark: I do hear the morning lark: Obe. Then, my queen, in silence sad, Trip we after the night's shade: We the globe can compass soon, Swiftelier than the wandering moon. Tit. Come, my lord, and in our flight Tell me how it came this night That I sleeping here was found With these mortals on the ground, [Exeunt. [Horns wined within.

Enter Theseus, Hippolyta, Egeus, and train.

The. Go, one of you, find out the forester; For now our observation is perform'd; And since we have the vaward of the day, My love shall hear the music of my hounds.
Un Couple in the western valley; let them go: Dispatch, I say, and find the forester.

We will, fair queen, up to the mountain's top
And mark the musical confusion
Of hounds and echo in conjuction,

Hipp. I was with Hercules and Cadmus once, When in a wood of Crete they lay'd the bear
With hounds of Sparta; never did I hear
Such gallant chiding; for, besides the groves, The skies, the fountains, every region near Seem'd all one mutual cry: I never heard So musical a discord, such sweet thunder.

The. My hounds are bred out of the Spartan kind, So faithful, so styled, and their heads are hung With ears that sweep away the morning dew; Crook-knee'd, and dew-lapp'd like Thessalian bull; Slow in pursuit, but match'd in mouth like bells, Each under each. A cry more tuneable Was never holla'd to, nor cheer'd with horn, In Crete, in Sparta, nor in Thessaly: [These? Judge when you hear. But, soft! what nymphs are Egeus, This Helena, old Nedar's Helena: I wonder of their being here together. The rite of May, and, hearing our intent, Came here in grace of our solemnity. But speak, Egeus; is not this the day That Hermia should give answer of her choice? Egeus. It is, my lord. The Go, and the huntsman wake them with their horns. [Horns and shout within. Lys, Dem., Hel., and, wake and start up. Good morrow, friends. Saint Valentine is past: Begin these wood-birds but to couple now? Lys. Pardon, my lord. The I pray you all, stand up.

You know two are rival enemies: How comes this gentle concord in the world, That hatred is so far from jealousy, To sleep by hate, and fear no enmity? Lys. My lord, I shall reply amazedly. Half sleep, half waking; but as yet, I swear, I cannot truly say how I came here; But, as I think,—for truly would I speak, And now I do behold him, so it is,— I came with Hermia hither: our intent Was to come from Athens, where we might, Without the peril of the Athenian law, Egeus. Enough, enough, my lord; you have enough: I beg the law, the law, upon his head. [trius, They would have stolen away; they would, Demetrius, to have defeated you and me, You of your wife and me of my consent, Of my consent that she should be your wife. Dem. My lord, fair Helen told me of their stealth, Of their purpose hither to this wood; And in fury hither follow'd them, Fair Helena in fancy following me. But, my good lord, I shot not by what power,— But by some power it is,—my love to an Hermia, Melted as the snow, seems to me now As the remembrance of an idle gaud Which in my childhood I did dot upon; And all the faith, the virtue of my heart, The tears and the pleasure of mine eye, Is only Helena. To hear her voice Was I betroth'd ere I saw Hermia: But, like in sickness, did I loathe this food; But, as in health, come to my natural taste, Now I do wish it, love it, long for it, And wish for evermore to be true to it.

The. Fair lovers, you are fortunately met: Of this discourse we more will hear anon. Egeus, I will overbear your will; For in the temple, by and by, with us These couples shall eternally be knit: And, for the watching of something worn, Our purposed hunting shall be suspended. Away with us to Athens; three and three, We'll hold a feast in great solemnity. Come, Hippolyta.

[Exeunt The., Hipp., Ege., and train.

Dem. These things seen small and undistinguishable far-off mountains turned into clouds. I'll go. Her. Methinks I see these things with parted eye, When every thing seems double.

Hel. So mithinks: And I have found Demetrius like a jewel, My own, and not mine own.

Dem. Are you sure
That we are awake? It seems to me That yet we sleep, we dream. Do not you think The duke was here, and bid us follow him?

Hel. And Hippolyta.

Lys. And he bid us follow to the temple.

Dem. Why, then, we are awake: let's follow him; And by the way let us recount our dreams. [Exeunt.

Bot. [Arackingly] When my cue comes, call me, and I will answer: my next is, 'Most fair Pyramus.' Heigh! Pyramus! Flute, thou fellow, mender! Snout, the timber! Starveling! God's my life, stolen hence, and left me asleep! I have had a most rare vision. I have had a dream, past the wit of man to say what dream it was: man is but an ass, if he go about to expound this dream. Methought I was—there is no man can tell what. Methought I was,—and methought I had,—but man is but a patched fool, if he will offer to say what methought I had. The eye of man hath not heard, the ear of man hath not seen, man's hand is not able to taste, his tongue to conceive, nor his heart to report, what my dream was. I will get Peter Quince to write a ballad of this dream: it shall be called Bottom's Dream, because it hath no bottom: and I will sing it in the latter end of a play, before the duke: peradventure, to make it the more gracious, I shall sing it at her death.

[Exeunt.

SCENE II. — Athens. Quince's house.

Enter Quince, Flute, Snout, and Starveling.

Quin. Have you sent to Bottom's house? is he come home yet? [transported.

Snug. He cannot be heard of. Out of doubt he is

Flu. If he come not, then the play is marred: it goes not forward, doth it?

Quin. It is not possible: you have not a man in all Athens able to discharge Pyramus but he.

Flu. No, he hath simply the best wit of any hand-craft man in Athens.

Quin. Yea, and the best person too; and he is a very paramount for a sweet voice.

Flu. You must say 'paramour': a paramour is, God bless us, a thing of naught.

Enter Snug.

Snug. Masters, the duke is coming from the temple, and there is two or three lords and ladies more married: if our sport had gone forward, we had all been made men.

Flu. O sweet bully Bottom! Thus hath he lost sixpence a day during the rest of his life; he could not have escaped sixpence a day: an the duke had not given him sixpence a day for playing Pyramus, I'll be hanged; he would have deserved it: sixpence a day in Pyramus, or nothing.

Enter Bottom.

Bot. Where are these lads? where are these hearts?
ACT V.

SCENE I.—Athens. The palace of Theseus.

Enter Theseus, Hippolyta, Philostrate, Lords, and Attendants.

Hip. 'Tis strange, my Theseus, that these lovers speak of
The More strange than true: I never may believe
These antique fables, nor these fairy toys.
Lovers and madmen have such seething brains,
Such shaping fancies, that apprehend
More than cool reason ever comprehends.
The lunatic, the lover and the poet
Are of imagination all compact:
One sees more devils than vast hell can hold,
That is, the madman: the lover, all as frantic,
Sees Helen's beauty in a brow of Egypt:
The poet's eye, in a fine frenzy rolling,
Doth glance from heaven to earth, from earth to
And as imagination bodies forth
The forms of things unknown, the poet's pen
Turns them to shapes and gives to airy nothing
A local habitation and a name.
Such tricks hath strong imagination,
That, if it would but apprehend some joy,
It comprehends some bringer of that joy;
Or in the night, imagining some fear,
How easy is a bush supposed a bear!
Hip. But all the story of the night told over,
And all their minds transfigured so together,
More with invention than fancy's images
And grows to something of great constancy;
But, howsoever, strange and admirable.
The. Here come the lovers, full of joy and mirth.

Enter Lysander, Demetrius, Hermia, and Helena.

Joy, gentle friends! Joy and fresh days of love Accompany your hearts!

Lys. More than to us
Wait in your royal walks, your board, your bed!

The. Come now; what masques, what dances Shall we have,

To wear away this long age of three hours
Between our after-supper and bed-time?
Where is our usual manager of mirth?
What revels are in hand? Is there no play,
To ease the anguish of a torturing hour?

Call Philostrate.

Phil. Here, mighty Theseus.

The. Say, what abridgment have you for this evening?
What masque? what music? How shall we beguile
The lazy time, if not with some delight?

Phil. There is a brief how many sports are ripe:
Made choice of which your highness will see first.

[Giving a paper.

The. [Reads] 'The battle with the Centaurs, to be sung
By an Athenian eunuch to the harp,'
We'll none of that: that have I told my love,
In glory of my kinsman Hereules.

[Reads] 'The riot of the tipsy Bacchanauls,

Tearing the Thracian singer in their rage?
That is an old device; and it was play'd
When I from Thebes came last a conqueror.
[Reads] 'The thrice three Muses mourning for the
Of Learning, late deceased in beggary.'

Death
That is some satire, keen and critical,
Not sorting with a nuptial ceremony.
[Reads] 'A tedious brief scene of young Pyramus
And his love Thisbe; very tragical mirth.'

Merry and tragical! tedious and brief!
That is, hot ice and wondrous strange snow.
How shall we find the concord of this discord?

Phil. Is there any ten words long,
Which is as brief as I have known a play;
But by ten words, my lord, it is too long,
Which makes it tedious: for in all the play
There is not one word apt, one player fitted:
And tragical, my noble lord, it is;
For Pyramus therein doth kill himself.
Which, when I saw rehearsed, I must confess,
Made mine eyes water; but more merry tears
The passion of loud laughter never shed.

The. What are they that do play it?

Phil. Hard-hearted men that work in Athens here,
Which never labour'd in their minds till now.
And now have told their unbreathed memories
With this same play, against your nuptial.

The. And we will hear it.

Phil. No, my noble lord;
It is not for you: I have heard it over,
And it is nothing, nothing in the world;
Unless you can find sport in their intents,
Extremely stretch'd and conn'd with cruel pain,
To do you service.

The. I will hear that play;
For never anything can be amiss,
When simplicity and duty tender it.
Go, bring them in: and take your places, ladies.

[Exit Philostrate.

Hip. I love not to see wretchedness o'ercharged
And duty in his service perishing.

The. Why, gentle sweet, you shall see no such thing.

Hip. He says they can do nothing in this kind.

The. The kinder we, to give them thanks for nothing.

Our sport shall be to take what they mistake:
And what poor duty cannot do, noble respect
Takes it in might, not merit.
Where I have come, great clerks have purposed
To greet me with premeditated welcomes;
Where I have seen them shiver and look pale,
Make periods in the midst of sentences,
Throttle the air practised in their fears
And in conclusion doubtly have broke off,
Not paying me a welcome. Trust me, sweet,
Out of this silence yet I pick'd a welcome;
And in the modesty of fearful duty
I read as much as from the rattling tongue
Of saucy and audacious eloquence.

Love, therefore, and tongue-tied simplicity
In least speak most, to my capacity.
ACT V.
A MIDSUMMER-NIGHT'S DREAM.
SCENE I.

Re-enter Philostrate.

Phil. Soplease your grace, the Prologue is address'd.
The. Let him approach.  [Flourish of trumpets.

Enter Quince for the Prologue.

Pro. If we offend, it is with our good will.
That you should think, we come not to offend,
But with good will. To show our simple skill,
That is the true beginning of our end.
Consider then we come but in despite.
We do not come as minding to content you,
Our true match, Us. All for your good.
We are not here. That you should here repent you,
The actors are at hand and by their show
You shall know all that you are like to know.
The. This fellow doth not stand upon points.
Lys. He hath rid his prologue like a rough colt;
he knows not the stop. A good moral, my lord: it is not enough to speak, but to speak true.
Hipp. Indeed he hath played on his prologue like a child on a recorder; a sound, but not in government.
The. His speech was like a tangled chain; nothing impaired, but all disordered. Who is next?

Enter Pyramus and Thisbe, Wall, Moonshine, and Lion.

Pro. Gentles, per chance you wonder at this show;
But wonder on, till truth make all things plain.
This man is Pyramus, if you would know;
This bounteous lady Thisbe is certain.
This man, with lime and rough-cast, doth present
Wall, that vile Wall which did these lovers Sunder;
[content
And through Wall's chink, poor souls, they are
To whisper. At the which let no man wonder.
This man, with horn, dog, and branch of thorn,
Presenteth Moonshine; for, if you will know,
By moonshine did these lovers think no scorn
To meet at Ninn's tomb, there, there to woo.
This grisly beast, which Lion hight by name,
The trusty Thisby, coming first by night,
Did scare away, or rather did affright;
And, as she fled, her mantle she did fall,
Which Lion vile with bloody mouth did stain.
Anon comes Pyramus, sweet youth and tall,
And finds his trusty Thisby's mantle slain;
Whereat, with blade, with bloody shameful blade,
He bravely broach'd his boiling bloody breast;
And Thisby, tarrying in mulberry shade,
His dagger drew, and died. For all the rest,
Let Lion, Moonshine, Wall, and lovers twain
At large discourse, while here they do remain.
[Exeunt Prologue, Thisbe, Lion, and Moonshine.
The. I wonder if the lion be to speak.
Dem. No wonder, my lord: one lion may, when many asses do.
Wall. In this same interlude it doth befall
That I, one Snout by name, present a wall;
And such a wall, as I would have you think,
That had in it a crannied hole to think.
Through which the lovers, Pyramus and Thisby,
Did whisper often very secretly.
This loam, this rough-cast and this stone doth show
That I am that same wall; the truth is so:
And this the cranny is, right and sinister,
Through which the fearful lovers are to whisper.
The. Would you desire lime and hair to speak better?
Dem. It is the Wittiest partition that ever I heard discourse, my lord.

Enter Pyramus.

Pyr. O grimlook'd night! O night with hue so
O night, which ever art when day is not! [black!
O night, O night! allack, allack, allack,
I fear my Thisby's promise is forgot!
And thou, O wall, O sweet, O lovely wall, [mine!
That stand'st between her father's ground and
Thou wall, O wall, O sweet and lovely wall,
Show me thy chink, to blink through with mine
eye. [Wall holds up his fingers.
Thanks, courteous wall: Jove shield thee well for
But what see I? No Thisby do I see.
[This! O wicked wall, through whom I see no bliss!
Cursed be thy stones for thus deceiving me!
The. The wall, methinks, being sensible, should curse again.
Pyr. No, a truth, sir, he should not. 'Deceiving me' is Thisby's cue: she is to enter now, and I am to spy her through the wall. You shall see, it will full pat as I told you. Yonder she comes.

Enter Thisbe.

This. O wall, full often hast thou heard my
For parting my fair Pyramus and me! [noons,
My cherry lips have often kissed thy stones,
Thy stones with lime and hair knit up in thee.
Pyr. I see a voice: now will I to the chink,
To spy an I can hear my Thisby's face.

Thisby!

This. My love thou art, my love I think.
Pyr. Think what thou wilt, I am thy lover's
And, like Limander, am I trusty still.
[grace;
This. And I like Helen, till the Fates me kill.
Pyr. Not Shafalus to Procrus was so true.
This. As Shafalus to Procrus, to you. [wall!
Pyr. O, kiss me through the hole of this vile
This. I kiss the wall's hole, not your lips at all.
Pyr. Wilt thou at Ninny's tomb meet me straightway?

This. 'Tide life, 'tide death, I come without delay.
[Exeunt Pyramus and Thisbe.
Wall. Thus have I, Wall, my part discharged so;
And, being done, thus Wall away doth go.
[Exit.
The. Now is the mural down between the two neighbours.

Dem. No remedy, my lord, when walls are so willful to bear without warning.

Hipp. This is the silliest stuff that ever I heard.
This. The best in this kind are but shadows; and the worst are no worse, if imagination amend them.
Hipp. It must be your imagination then, and not theirs.
This. If we imagine no worse of them than they of themselves, they may pass for excellent men.
Here come two noble beasts in, a man and a lion.

Enter Lion and Moonshine.

Lion. You, ladies, you, whose gentle hearts do fear [door,
The smallest monstrous mouse that creeps on
May now perchance both quake and tremble here,
When lion rough in wildest rage doth roar.
Then know that I, one Snug the joiner, am
A lion-fell, nor else no lion's dam;
For, if it should as lion come in strife
Into this place, 't were pity on my life.

This. A very gentle beast, and of a good con-

Dem. The very best at a beast, my lord, that ever I saw.
Lion. This lion is a very fox for his valour.
This. True; and a goose for his discretion.

Dem. Not so, my lord; for his valour cannot carry his discretion; and the fox carries the goose.
This. His discretion, I am sure, cannot carry his valour; for the goose carries not the fox. It is well for you, I leave it to his discretion, and let us listen to the moon.

[Sent:
Moon. This lantern doth the horned moon pres-

Dem. He should have worn the horns on his head.

147
Enter Thisbe.

This. This is old Ninny's tomb. Where is my love?

Lion. [Roaring] Oh — [Thistbe runs off.]

Dem. Well roared, Lion.

This. The well run, Thisbe.

Hip. Well shone, Moon. Truly, the moon shines with a good grace.

And The Lion shakes Thisbe's mantle, and exit.

This. The well moused, Lion.

Lys. And so the lion vanished.

Dem. And then came Pyramus.

Enter Pyramus.

Pyr. Sweet Moon, I thank thee for thy sunny beams; I thank thee, Moon, for shining now so bright; For, by thy gracious, golden, glittering gleams, I trust to take of truest Thisby sight.

But stay, O sprite! But mark, poor knight, What dreadful dole is here! Eyes, do you see? How can it be? O dainty duke! O dear! Thy mantle gone! What, shan't I with blood! Approach, ye Furies fell! O Fates, come, come, Cut thread and thrum:

Quail, crush, conclude, and quell!

This. This passion, and the death of a dear friend, would go near to make a man look sad.

Hip. Beshrew my heart, but I pity the man.

Pyr. O wherefore, Nature, didst thou lions frame?

Since lion vile hath here deflower'd my dear: Which is — no, no — which was the fairest dame That lived, that loved, that liked, that look'd with cheer.

That, come, tears, confound; Out, sword, and wound

The paw of Pyramus; Ay, that left paw.

Where heart doth hop: [Stabs himself.]

Thus die I, thus, thus, thus.

Now am I dead,
Now am I dead; My soul is in the sky:

Tongue, lose thy light; Moon, take thy flight: [Exit Moonshine.]

Now die, die, die, die, die. [Dies.]

Dem. No die, but an ace, for him; for he is but one.

Lys. Less than an ace, man; for he is dead; he is nothing.

The. With the help of a surgeon he might yet recover, and prove an ass.

Hip. How chance Moonshine is gone before Thisbe comes back and finds her lover?

This. She will find him by starlight. Here she comes; and her passion ends the play.

Re-enter Thisbe.

Hip. Methinks she should not use a long one for such a Pyramus: I hope she will be brief.

Dem. A mote will turn the balance, which Pyramus, which Thisbe, is the better; he for a man, God warrant us; she for a woman, God bless us. [eyes.]

Lys. She hath spied him already with those sweet

Dem. And thus she means, videlicet:—

This. Asleep, my love?

What? dead, my dove?

O Pyramus, arise!

Speak, speak. Quite dumb?

Dead, dead? A tomb

Must cover thy sweet eyes.

These lil'y lips,

This cherry nose,

These yellow cowslip cheeks,

Are gone, are gone: Lovers, make moon: His eyes were green as leeks.

O Sisters Three,

Come, come to me,

With hands as pale as milk;

Lay them in gore,

Since you have shore With shears his thread of silk.

Tongue, not a word: Come, trusty sword;

Come, blade, my breast I imbru: [Stabs herself.]

And farewell, friends;

Thus Thisby ends:

Adieu, adieu, adieu.

[Dies.]

The. Moonshine and Lion are left to bury the dead.

Dem. Ay, and Wall too.

Dot. [Stealing up] No, I assure you; the wall is down that parted their fathers. Will it please you to see the epilogue, or to hear a Bergomask dance between two of our company?

The. No epilogue, I pray you; for your play needs no excuse. Never excuse; for when the players are all dead, there need none to be blamed. Marry, if he that writ it had played Pyramus and hanged himself in Thisbe's garret, it would have been a fine tragedy; and so it is, truly; and very notably discharged. But, come, your Bergomask: let your epilogue alone. [A dance.

The iron tongue of midnight hath told twelve: Lovers, to bed; 'tis almost fairy time. I fear we shall out-sleep the coming morn As much as we this night have overwatch'd. This palpitating play hath well beguiled The heavy gait of night. Sweet friends, to bed. A fortnight hold we this solemnity, In nightly revels and new jollity. [Exit.

Enter Puck.

Puck. Now the hungry lion roars, And the wolf behoards the moon; Whilst the heavy ploughman snores, All with weary task forborne. Now the wasted brands do glow, Whilst the screech-owl, screeching loud, Puts the wretch that lies in woe In remembrance of a shroud. Now it is the time of night That the graves all gaping wide, Every one lets forth his sprite, In the church-way paths to glide: And we fairies, that do run By the triple Hecate's team,
ACT V.

A MIDSUMMER-NIGHT'S DREAM.

SCENE I.

From the presence of the sun,
Following darkness like a dream,
Now are frolic; not a mouse
Shall disturb this hallow'd house:
I am sent with broom-before,
To sweep the dust behind the door.

Enter Oberon and Titania with their train.
Obe. Through the house give glimmering light,
By the dead and drowsy fire:
Every elf and fairy sprite
Hop as light as bird from brier;
And this ditty, after me,
Sing, and dance it trippingly,
Thu. First, rehearse your song by rote,
To each word a warbling note:
Hand in hand, with fairy grace,
Will we sing, and bless this place.

{Song and dance.}

Obe. Now, until the break of day,
Through this house each fairy stray,
To the best bride-bed will we,
Which by us shall blessed be;
And the issue there create
Ever shall be fortunate.
So shall all the couples three Ever true in loving be;
And the blots of Nature's hand
Shall not in their issue stand;

Never mole, hare lip, nor scar;
Nor mark prodigious, such as are Despised in nativity,
Shall upon their children be.
With this field-dew consecrate,
Every fairy take his gait;
And each several chamber bless,
Through this palace, with sweet peace;
And the owner of it bless
Ever shall in safety rest.
Trip away; make no stay;
Meet me all by break of day.

{Exeunt Oberon, Titania, and train.}

Puck. If we shadows have offended,
Think but this, and all is mended,
That you have but slumber'd here
While these visions did appear.
And this weak and idle theme,
No more yielding but a dream,
Gentles, do not reprehend:
If you pardon, we will mend:
And, as I am an honest Puck,
If we have unearned luck
Now to 'scape the serpent's tongue,
We will make amends ere long;
Else the Puck a liar call:
So, good night unto you all.
Give me your hands, if we be friends,
And Robin shall restore amends.

{Exit.}

Hermia.—Out, dog! out, cur! thou driv'st me past the bounds
Of maiden's patience. Hast thou slain him then?
Henceforth be never numbered among men!
O! once tell true, tell true, e'en for my sake;
Durst thou have look'd upon him, being awake,
And hast thou kill'd him sleeping? O brave touch!
Could not a worm, an adder, do so much?
An adder did it; for with doubler tongue
Than thine, thou serpent, never adder stung.
Demetrius.—You spend your passion on a mispris'd mood:
I am not guilty of Lysander's blood,
Nor is he dead, for aught that I can tell.—Act III, Scene ii.
THE MERCHANT OF VENICE.

DRAMATIS PERSONÆ.

The Duke of Venice.
The Prince of Morocco.
Antonio, a merchant of Venice.
Bassanio, his friend, suitor likewise to Portia.
Salario.
Salarino.
Gratiano.
Salerio.
Lorenzo, in love with Jessica.
Shylock, a rich Jew.
Tubal, a Jew, his friend.
Launcelot Gobbo, the clown, servant to Shylock.
Old Gobbo, father to Launcelot.
Leonardo, servant to Bassanio.
Balthasar, servant to Portia.
Stephano.
Portia, a rich heiress.
Nerissa, her waiting maid.
Jessica, daughter to Shylock.

Magnificoes of Venice, Officers of the Court of Justice, Goaler, Servants to Portia, and other Attendants.

SCENE.—Partly at Venice, and partly at Belmont, the seat of Portia, on the Continent.

ACT I.

SCENE I.—Venice. A street.

Enter Antonio, Salarino, and Salanio.

Ant. In sooth, I know not why I am so sad:
It wearies me; you say it wearies you;
But how I caught it, found it, or came by it,
What stuff 'tis made of, whereof it is born,
I am to learn;
And such a want-wit sadness makes of me,
That I have much ado to know myself.
Salar. Your mind is tossing on the ocean;
There, where your argosies with portly sail,
Like signiors and rich burghers on the flood,
Or, as it were, the pages of the sea,
Do overpeer the petty traffickers,
That curst to them, do them reverence,
As they fly by them with their woven wings.
Salan. Believe me, sir, had I such venture forth,
The better part of my affections would,
Be with my hopes abroad. I should be still Plucking the grass, to know where sits the wind,
Peering in maps for ports and piers and roads;
And every object that might make me fear,
Misfortune to my ventures, out of doubt
Would make me sad.
Sal. My wind cooling my broth
Would blow me to an ague, when I thought
What harm a wind too great at sea you do;
I should not see the sandy hour-glass run,
But I should think of shallows and of flats,
And see my wealthy Andrew dock'd in sand,
Vailing her high-top lower than her ribs,
To kiss her burial. Should I go to church
And see the holy edifice of stone,
And not bethink me straight of dangerous rocks,
Which touching but my gentle vessel's side,
Would scatter all her spices on the stream,
Enrobe the roaring waters with my silks,
And, in a word, but even now worth this,
And now worth nothing? Shall I have the thought
To think on this, and shall I lack the thought
That such a thing beclouded would make me sad?
But tell not me, I know, Antonio, is sad to think upon his merchandise.
Ant. Believe me, no: I thank my fortune for it,

My ventures are not in one bottom trusted,
Nor to one place; nor is my whole estate
Upon the fortune of this present year:
Therefore my merchandise makes me not sad.
Salar. Why, then you are in love.
Ant. Fie, fie!
Salar. Not in love neither? Then let us say
You are sad,
Because you are not merry; 'tis were as easy
For you to laugh and leap and say you are merry,
Because you are not sad. Now, by two-headed Janus,
Nature hath framed strange fellows in her time:
Some that will evermore peep through their eyes
And laugh like parrots at a bag-piper,
And other of such vinegar aspect
That they'll not show their teeth in way of smile,
Though Nestor swear the jest be laughable.

Enter Bassanio, Lorenzo, and Gratiano.

Salen. Here comes Bassanio, your most noble
Gratiano and Lorenzo. Fare ye well:kinsman,
We leave you now with better company. [merry,
Salar. I would have stay'd till I had made you
If worthier friends had not prevented me.
Ant. Your worth is very dear in my regard.
I take it, your own business calls on you
And you embrace the occasion to depart.
Salar. Good morrow, my good lords.
Bass. Good signiors both, when shall we laugh?
say, when?
You grow exceeding strange: must it be so?
Salar. We'll make our pleasures to attend on yours.
[Exeunt Salarino and Salanio.

Lor. My Lord Bassanio, since you have found Antonio,
We two will leave you: but at dinner-time,
I pray you, have in mind where we must meet.
Bass. I will not fail you.
Gra. You look not well, Signior Antonio:
You have too much respect upon the world:
They lose it that do buy it with much care:
Believe me, you are marvellously changed.
Ant. I hold the world but as the world, Gratiano;
A stage where every man must play a part,
And mine a sad one.
To wind about my love with circumspection;
And out of doubt you do me now more wrong
In making question of my uttermost
Than if you had made waste of all I have;
Then do but say to me what I should do
That in your knowledge may by me be done,
And I am prizing now the lesser part.

Bass. In Belmont is a lady richly left;
And she is fair and, fairer than that word,
Of wondrous virtues: sometimes from her eyes
I did receive fair speechless messages:
Her name is Portia, nothing undervalued
To Cato's daughter, Gratius' sister.
Nor is the wide world ignorant of her worth,
For the four winds blow in from every coast
Renowned suitors, and her sunny locks
Hang on her temples like a golden fleece;
Which makes her seat of Belmont Colehos' strand,
And many Jasons come in quest of her.
O my Antonio, had I but the means
To hold a rival place with one of them,
I have a mind presages me such thrift,
That I should questionless be fortunate!

Ant. Thou know'st that all my fortunes are at sea;
Neither have I money and commodity;
To raise a present sum: therefore go forth;
Try what my credit can in Venice do:
That shall be rack'd, even to the uttermost,
To furnish thee to Belmont, to fair Portia.
Go, presently inquire, and so will I,
Where money is, and I no question make
To have it of my trust or for my sake.

[Exeunt.]

SCENE II.—Belmont. A room in Portia's house.

Enter Portia and Nerissa.

Por. By my troth, Nerissa, my little body is aweary of this great world.

Ner. You would be, sweet madam, if your miseries were in the same abundance as your good fortunes are: and yet, for aught I see, they are as sick that surfeit with too much as they that starve with nothing. It is no mean happiness therefore, to be seated in the mean: superfluity comes sooner by white hairs, but competency lives longer.

Por. Good sentences and well pronounced.

Ner. They would be better, if well followed.

Por. If to do were as easy as to know what were good to do, no shop would buy our counsels and poor men's cottages princes' palaces. It is a good divine that follows his own instructions: I can easier teach twenty what were good to be done, than be one of the twenty to follow mine own teaching. The brain may devise laws for the blood, but a hot temper leaps o'er a cold degree: such a bare is madness in the youth, to skip o'er the meshes of good counsel the cripple. But this reasoning is not in the fashion to choose me a husband. O me, the word 'choose!' I may neither choose whom I would nor refuse whom I dislike; so is the will of a living daughter thought by the dead a will of a dead father. Is it not hard, Nerissa, that I cannot choose one nor refuse none?

Ner. Your father was ever virtuous; and holy men at their death have good inspirations: therefore the lottery, that he hath devised in these three chests of gold, silver and lead, whereof who chooses his meaning chooses you, will, no doubt, never be chosen by any but one who shall rightly love. But what warmth is there in your affection towards any of these princely suitors that are already come?

Por. I pray thee, over-name them; and as thou namest them, I will describe them; and according to me describe, level by level, in my full doubt.

Ner. First, there is the Neapolitan prince.

Por. Ay, that's a colt indeed, for he doth nothing but talk of his horse; and he makes it a great appropriation to his own good parts, that he can shoe him himself. I am much afraid my lady his mother played false with a smith.

Por. Then there is the County Palatine.

Ner. He doth nothing but frown, as who should say 'If you will not have me, choose:' he hears merry laughter, and you will prove the worst philosopher when he grows old, being so full of unmannerly sadness in his youth. I had rather be married to a death's-head with a bone in his mouth than to either of these. God defend me from these two!

Por. Now say you by the French lord, Monsieur Le Bon?

Por. God made him, and therefore let him pass for a man. In truth, I know it is a sin to be a mocker: but, he! why, he hath a horse better than the Neapolitan's, a better habit of frowning than the County Palatine; he is every man in no man; if a throttle-sing, he falls straight a capering: he will fence with his own shadow: if I should marry him, I should marry twenty husbands. If he would despise me, I would forgive him, for if he love me to madness, I shall never requite him.

Ner. What say you, then, to Falconbridge, the young baron of England?

Por. You know I say nothing to him, for he understands not me, nor I him: he hath neither Latin, French, nor Italian, and you will come into the company unworthy in the English. He is a proper man's picture, but, alas, who can converse with a dumb-show? How oddly he is suited! I think he bought his doublet in Italy, his round hose in France, his bonnet in Germany and his behaviour everywhere.

Ner. Will not think you of the Scottish lord, his neighbour?

Por. That he hath a neighbourly charity in him, for he borrowed a box of the ear of the Englishman and swore he would pay him again when he was able: I think the Frenchman became his surety and sealed it for another.

Ner. How like you the young German, the Duke of Saxony's nephew?

Por. Very vilely in the morning, when he is sober, and most vilely in the afternoon, when he is drunk: when he is best, he is a little worse than a man, and when he is worst, he is a little better than a beast; and the worst that ever fell, I hope I shall make shift to go without him.

Ner. If he should offer to choose, and choose the right casket, you should refuse to perform your father's will, if you should refuse to accept him.

Por. Therefore, for fear of the worst, I pray thee, set a deep glass of rhenish wine on the contrary casket, for if the devil be within and that temptation without, I know he will choose it. I will do any thing, Nerissa, ere I will be married to a sponge.

Ner. You need not fear, lady, the having any of these lords; they have acquainted me with their determinations; which is, indeed, to return to their home and to trouble you with no more suit, unless you may be won by some other sort than your father's imposition depending on the caskets.

Por. If I live to be an old Shylock, I will die as chaste as Diana, unless I be obtained by the manner of my father's will. I am glad this parcel of wooers are so reasonable, for there is not one among them but I dote on his very absence, and I pray God grant them a fair departure.

Por. Do you not remember, lady, in your father's time, a Venetian, a scholar and a soldier; that came hither in company of the Marquis of Montferrat?

Por. Yes, yes, it was Bassanio; as I think, he was so called.

Por. True, madam: he, of all the men that ever my foolish eyes looked upon, was the best deserving a fair lady.

Por. I remember him well, and I remember him worthy of thy praise.

Enter a Servant.

Serv. How now! what news?

Por. The four kings seek for you, madam, to take their leave: and there is a forerunner come from a fifth, the Prince of Morocco, who brings word the prince his master will be here to-night.

Por. If I could bid the fifth welcome with so good a heart as I can bid the other four farewell, I should be glad of his morose; if he favours the condition of a saint and the complexion of a devil, I had rather he should shrive me than wive me.

Come, Nerissa. Sirrah, go before.

While we shut the gates upon one wooper, another knocks at the door. [Exeunt.

Scene III.—Venice. A public place.

Enter Bassanio and Shylock.

Shy. Three thousand ducats: well.

Bass. Ay, sir, for three months.

Shy. For three months: well. [Be bound.

Bass. For the which, as I told you, Antonio shall Shy. Antonio shall become bound; well.

Bass. May you stead me? will you pleasure me? shall I know your answer?

Shy. Three thousand ducats for three months and Antonio bound.

Bass. Your answer to that.

Shy. Antonio is a good man. [trary?

Bass. Have you heard any imputation to the contrary?

Shy. Oh, no, no, no, no: my meaning in saying he is a good man is to have you understand me not that he is sufficient. Yet his means are in supposition: he hath an argosy bound to Tripolis, another to the Indies; I understand, moreover, upon the Rialto, he hath a third at Mexico, a fourth for England, and other ventures he hath, squandered abroad. But ships are but boards, sailors but men: there be land-rats and water-rats, water-thieves and land-thieves, I mean pirates, and then there is the peril of waters, winds and rocks. The man is, notwithstanding, sufficient. Three thousand ducats; I think I may take his bond.

Bass. Be it so: you may.

Shy. I will be assured I may; and, that I may be assured, I will think on it. May I speak with An-cha.

Bass. If it please you to dine with us. [tonio?

Shy. Yes, to smell pork: to eat of the habitation which your prophet the Nazarine conjured the devil into. I will buy with you, sell with you, talk with you, walk with you, and so following, but I will not eat with you, drink with you, nor pray with you. What news on the Rialto? Who is he comes here?

Enter Antonio.

Bass. This is Signior Antonio. [looks!

Shy. [Aside] How like a fawning publican he hate him for he is a Christian, But more for that in low simplicity He lends out money gratis and brings down The rate of exchange hence with us in Venice. If I can catch him once upon the hip, I will feed fat the ancient grudge I bear him. He hates our sacred nation, and he nicks, Even there where merchants most do congregate, On me, my bargains and my well-won thrift, Which he calls interest. Cursed be my tribe, If I forgive him! Shylock, do you hear?

Shy. I am debating of my present store, And, by the near guess of my memory, I cannot instantly raise up the gross Of full three thousand ducats. What of that? Tota, a wealthy Hebrew of my tribe,
ACT II.

THE MERCHANT OF VENICE.

SCENE I.

Belmont. A room in Portia's house.

Flourish of cornets. Enter the Prince of Morocco and his train; Portia, Nerissa, and others attending.

Mor. Mislike me not for my complexion, The shadow'd livery of the burnish'd sun,
ACT II.

THE MERCHANT OF VENICE.

SCENE II. — VENICE. A street.

Enter Launcelot.

Laun. Certainly my conscience will serve me to run from this Jew my master. The fiend is at mine elbow and tempts me saying to me 'Gobbo, Launcelot Gobbo, good Launcelot,' or 'good Gobbo;' or 'good Launcelot Gobbo, use your legs, take the start, run away. My conscience says, 'No: take heed, honest Launcelot; take heed, honest Gobbo,' or, as aforesaid, 'honest Launcelot Gobbo; do not run; scorn running with thy heels.' Well, the most courageous fiend bids me pack; 'Vilia! says the fiend; 'away!' says the fiend; 'for the heavens, rouse up a brave mind,' says the fiend, 'and run.' Well, my conscience, hanging about the neck of my heart, says very wisely to me 'My honest friend Launcelot, being an honest man's son,' or rather an honest woman's son; for, indeed, my father did something smack, something growing to a be, had a kind of taste: well, my conscience says, 'Launcelot, budge not,' 'Budge,' says the fiend. 'Budge not,' says my conscience. 'Conscience, say I, 'you counsel well;' 'Friend,' say I, 'you counsel well.' To be ruled by my conscience, I should stay with my Jew master, who, God bless that mark, is a kind of devil; and, to run away from the Jew, I should be ruled by the fiend, who, saving your reverence, is the devil himself. Certainly the Jew is the very devil incarnat; and, in my conscience, my conscience is but a kind of hard conscience, to offer to counsel me to offend with the Jew. The fiend gives the more friendly counsel: I will run, fiend; my heels are at your command; I will run.

Enter old Gobbo, with a basket.

Gob. Master young man, you, I pray you, which is the way to master Jew's?

Laun. [Aside] Sanseverino, this is my true-begotten father! who, being more than sand-blind, high-gravel blind, knows me not: I will try confusions with him.

Gob. Master young gentleman, I pray you, which is the way to master Jew's?

Laun. Turn on your right hand at the next turning, but, at the next turning of all, on your left; marry, at the very next turning, turn of no hand, but turn down indirectly to the Jew's house.

Gob. By God's son'tics, 't will be a hard way to hit. Can you tell me whether one Launcelot, that dwells with him, dwell with him or no?

Laun. Talk you of young Master Launcelot? [Aside] Mark me now; now will I raise the waters. Talk you of young Master Launcelot?

Gob. No master, sir, but a poor man's son: his father, though I say it, is an honest exceeding poor man and, God be thanked, well to live.

Laun. Well, let his father be what a will, we talk of young Master Launcelot.

Gob. Your worship's friend and Launcelot, sir.

Laun. But I pray you, ergo, old man, ergo, I see see, you talk of young Master Launcelot?

Gob. Of Launcelot, with all my heart; but it may please your mastership.

Laun. Ergo, Master Launcelot. Talk not of Master Launcelot, father; for the young gentleman, according to Fates and Destinies and such odd sayings, the Sisters Three and such branches of learning, is indeed deceased, or, as you would say in plain terms, gone to heaven.

Gob. Marry, Good forbid! the boy was the very staff of my age, my very prop.

Laun. Do I look like a cudgel or a hovel-post, a staff or a prop? Do you know me, father?

Gob. Alack the day, I know you not, young gentleman: but, I pray you, tell me, is my boy, God rest his soul, alive or dead?

Laun. Do you not know me, father?

Gob. Alack, sir, I am sand-blind; I know you not.

Laun. Nay, indeed, if you had your eyes, you might fail of the knowing me: it is a wise father that knows his own child. Well, old man, I will tell you news of your son: give me your blessing; truth will come to light; murder cannot be hid long; a man's son may, but at the length truth will out.

Gob. Pray you, sir, stand up: I am sure you are not Launcelot, my boy.

Laun. Pray you, let's have no more fooling about it, but give me your blessing: I am Launcelot, your boy that was, your son that is, your child that shall be.

Gob. I cannot think you are my son.

Laun. I know not what I shall think of that: but I am Launcelot, the Jew's man, and I am sure Margery your wife is my mother.

Gob. Her name is Margery, indeed: I'll be sworn, if thou be Launcelot, thou art mine own flesh and blood. Lord worshipped might he be! what a beard hast thou got! thou hast got more hair on thy chin than Dobbin my full-horse has on his tail.

Laun. It should seem, then, that Dobbin's tail grows backward: I am sure he had more hair of his tail than I have of my face when I last saw him.

Gob. Lord, how art thou changed! How dost thou and thy master agree? I have brought him a present. How 'gree you now?

Laun. Well, well: but, for mine own part, as I have set up my rest to run away, so I will not rest.
Enter Bassanio, with Leonado and other followers.

Bass. You may do so; but let it be so hasted that supper be ready at the farthest by five of the clock. See these letters delivered; put the liveries to making, and desire Gratiano to come anon to my lodging. [Exit a Servant.

Laun. To him, father.

Gob. God bless your worship!

Bass. Gramercy! wouldst thou aught with me?

Gob. Here's my son, sir, a poor boy.

Laun. Not a poor boy, sir, but the rich Jew's man; that would, sir, as my father shall specify —

Gob. He hath a great infection, sir, as one would say, to serve —

Laun. Indeed, the short and the long is, I serve the Jew, and have a deal as much as my father shall specify.

Bass. His master and he, saving your worship's reverence, are scarce cater-cousins —

Laun. To be brief, the very truth is that the Jew, having done me wrong, doth cause me, as my father, being, I hope, an old man, shall utterly unto you —

Gob. I have here a dish of doves that I would bestow upon your worship, and my suit is —

Laun. In very brief, the suit is pertinent to myself, as your worship shall know by this honest old man; and, though I say it, though old man, yet poor man, my father.

Bass. One speak for both. What would you?

Laun. Serve you, sir.

Gob. That is the very defect of the matter, sir.

Bass. I know thee well; thou hast obtain'd thy Shylock thy master spoke with me this day, [suit: And hath preferr'd thee, if it be preferment]

To leave a rich Jew's service, to become The follower of so poor a gentlem.

Laun. The old proverb is very well parted between my master Shylock and you, sir: you have the grace of God, sir, and he hath enough.

Bass. Thou speak'st it well. Go, father, with thy Leave leave of thy old master and inquire My lodgings. Give him a livem. More guarded than his fellows': see it done.

Laun. Father, in. I cannot get a service, no; I have ne'er a tongue in my head. Well, if any man in Italy have a fairer table which doth offer to swallow upon a book, I shall have good fortune. Go to, here's a simple line of life: here's a moral trifle of wives alas, fifteen wives is nothing! eleven widows and nine maids is a simple coming-in for one man: and then to 'scape drowning thrice, and to be in peril of my life with the edge of a feather-bed; here are simple scarcely. Well, if Fortune be a woman, she's a good wench for this gear. Father, come; I'll take my leave of the Jew in the twinkling of an eye. [Exit Launcelot and old Gobbo.

Bass. I pray thee, good Leonado, think on this: These things being bought and orderly bestow'd, Return in haste, for I do feast to-night.

My best esteem and acquaintance: bie thee, go.

Leon. My best endeavours shall be done herein.

Enter Gratiano.

Gra. Where is your master?

Leon. Yonder, sir, he walks. [Exit

Gra. Signior Bassanio!

Bass. Gratiano!
ACT II.

THE MERCHANT OF VENICE.

SCENE VI.

Lor. I know the hand: in faith 'tis a fair hand; And whiter than the paper it writ on Is the fair hand that writ.

Law. Love-news, in faith.

Lor. Your leave, sir.

Law. Marry, sir, to bid my old master the Jew To supper to-night with my new master the Christian. Lor. Hold here, take this: tell gentle Jessica I will not fail her; speak it privately.

Go, gentlemen, [Exit Launcelot.

Will you prepare for this masque to-night? I am provided of a torch-bearer.

Sal. Ay, marry, I'll be gone about it straight.

Sal. And so will I.

Lor. Meet me and Gratiano At Gratiano's lodging some hour hence.

Sal. 'Tis good we do so.

[Exeunt Salario and Gratiano.

SCENE V.—The same. Before Shylock's house.

Enter Shylock and Launcelot.

Shy. Well, thou shalt see, thy eyes shall be thy judge. The difference of old Shylock and Bassanio:— What, Jessica!—thou shalt not gormandize, As thou hast done with me:— What, Jessica!— And sleep and snore, and rend apparel out;— Why, Jessica, I say!

Law. Your worship was wont to tell me that I could do nothing without bidding.

Enter Jessica.

Jes. Call you? what is your will?

Shy. I am bid forth to supper, Jessica: There are my keys. But wherefore should I go? I am not bid for love; they flatter me: But yet I 'll go in hate, to feed upon The prodigal Christian. Jessica, my girl, Look to my house. I am right loth to go; There is some ill a-brewing towards my rest, For I did dream of money-bags to-night.

Laun. I beseech you, sir, go: my young master doth expect your repose.

Shy. So do this.

Laun. An they have conspired together, I will not say you shall see a masque; but if you do, then it was not for nothing that my nose fell a-bleeding on Black-Monday last at six o'clock? I'm the morning, falling out that year on Ash-Wednesday was four years in the afternoon.

Shy. What, are there masques? Hear you me, Jessica: Lock up my doors; and when you hear the drum And the vile squealing of the wyre-neck'd fife, Clamber not you up to the casements then, Nor thrust your head into the public street To gaze on Christian fools with varnish'd faces, But stop my house's ears. I mean my casements: Let not the sound of shallow foppery enter My sober house. By Jacob's staff, I swear, I have no mind of feasting forth to-night:

But I will go. Go you before me, sirrah; Say I will come.

Law. I will go before, sir. Mistress, look out at window, for all this:

There will come a Christian by,

Shy. Will be worth a Jewess' eye. [Exit.

Jes. His words were 'Farewell mistress;' nothing

Shy. The patch is kind enough, but a huge feeder; Snarl-small in profit, and he sleeps by day More than the wild-cat: drones hive not with me; But more I plight with him, and part with him To one that I would have him help to waste His borrow'd purse. Well, Jessica, go in: Perhaps I will return immediately: Do as I bid you; shut doors after you: Fast bind, fast find;

A proverb never stale in thirsty mind. [Exit.

Jes. Farewell; and if my fortune be not crost, I have a father, you a daughter, lost. [Exit.

SCENE VI.—The same.

Enter Gratiano and Salario, masqued.

Sal. This is the pent-house under which Lorenzo Desired us to make stand.

Sal. His hour is almost past.

Shy. And it is marvel he out-dwells his hour, For lovers ever run before the clock.

Sal. O, ten times faster Venus' pigeons fly To seal love's bonds new-made, than they are wont To keep obliged faith unforfeited!

Jes. That ever holds: who riseth from a feast With that keen appetite that he sits down? Where is the horse that doth not tread again His tedious measures with the unslaked fire That he did pace them first? All things that are, Have with more spirit chased than enjoy'd. How like a younger or a prodigal! The scarfed bard puts from her native bay, Hugg'd and embraced by the trumpet wind! How like the prodigal cloth she return, With over-weather'd ribs and ragged sails, Lean, rent and beggar'd by the trumpet wind! Sal. Here comes Lorenzo: more of this hereafter.

Enter Lorenzo.

Lor. Sweet friends, your patience for my long Not I, but my affairs, have made you wait: [abode; When you shall please to play the thieves for wives, I'll watch as long for you then. Approach; Here dwells my father Jew. Ho! who's within?

Jes. Who are you? Tell me, for more certainty, Albeit I'll swear that I do know your tongue. Lor. Lorenzo, and thy love.

Jes. Lorenzo, certain, and my love indeed. For who loves so much? And now who knows But you, Lorenzo, whether I am yours? [thou art. Lor. Heaven and thy thoughts are witness that Jes. Here, catch this casket; it is worth the I am glad 'tis night, you do not look on me, [paths. For I am much ashamed of my exchange: But love is blind and lovers cannot see. The pretty follies that themselves commit; For if they could, Cupid himself would blush To see me thus transformed to a boy.

Lor. Descend, for you must be my torch-bearer.

Jes. What, must I hold a candle to my shame? They in themselves, the snare, are too light. Why, 'tis an office of discovery, love; And I should be obscured.

Lor. So are you, sweet, Even in the lovely garnish of a boy. But come at once;

ACT II.

THE MERCHANT OF VENICE.

SCENE VIII.

For the close night doth play the runaway, And we are stay'd for at Bassanio's feast.

Jes. I will make fast the doors, and gild myself With some more ducats, and be with you straight. (Exit above.)

Gra. Now, by my hood, a Gentile and no Jew.

Lor. Beshrew me but I love her heartily; For she is wise, if I can judge of her, And fair she is, if that nine eyes be true, And true she is, as she hath proved herself, And therefore, like herself, wise, fair and true, Shall she be placed in my constant soul.

Enter Jessica, below.

What, art thou come? On, gentlemen; away! Our masquing mates by this time for us stay. (Exit with Jessica and Salarino.)

Enter Antonio.

Ant. Who's there?

Gra. Signior Antonio!

Ant. Ike, Ike, Gratiano! where are all the rest?

'T is nine o'clock: our friends all stay for you. No more to-night: the wind is come about; Bassanio presently will go aboard: I have sent twenty out to seek for you.

Gra. I am glad on't: I desire no more delight Than to be under sail and gone to-night. (Exeunt.)

SCENE VII.—Belmont. A room in Portia's house.

Flourish of cornets. Enter Portia, with the Prince of Morocco, and their trains.

Por. Go draw aside the curtals and discover The several caskets to this noble prince. Now make your choice among the caskets.

Mor. The first, of gold, who this inscription bears, 'Who chooseth me shall gain what many men desire.'

The second, silver, which this promise carries, 'Who chooseth me shall get as much as he deserves.'

This third, dull lead, with warning all as blunt, 'Who chooseth me must give and hazard all he hath.'

How shall I know if I do choose the right?

Por. The one of them contains my picture, prince: If you choose that, then I am yours withal. [see; Mor. Some god direct my judgment! Let me I will survey the inscriptions back again. What says this lea-en casket? Mor. 'Who chooseth me must give and hazard all he must give: for what? for lead? hazard for lead?' This casket threatens. Men that hazard all Do it in hope of fair advantages: A golden mind stoops not to shows of dross; I'll then nor give nor hazard aught for lead. What says the silver with her virgin hue?

'Who chooseth me shall get as much as he deserves.'

As much as he deserves! Pause there, Morocco, And weigh thy value with an even hand: If thou best rated by thy estimation, Thou dost deserve enough; and yet enough May not extend so far as to the lady: And yet to be afraid of my deserving Were but a weak disabling of myself. As much as I deserve! Why, that's the lady: I do in birth deserve her, and in fortunes, In graces and in qualities of breeding; But more than these, in love I do deserve. What if I stay'd no further, but chose here? Let's see once more this saying graven in gold; 'Who chooseth me shall gain what many men desire.'

Why, that's the lady; all the world desires her; From the four corners of the earth they come, To kiss this shrine, this mortal-breathing saint: The Hyrcanian deserts and the vasty wilds Of while Arabia are as throughfares now For princes to come view fair Portia: The watery kingdom, whose ambitious head Spits in the face of heaven, is no bar To stop the foreign spirits, but they come, As o'er a brook, to see fair Portia. One of the three containeth a heavenly picture. Is 't like that lead contains her? 'T were damnation To think so base a thought: it were too gross To rib her cereloch in the obscure grave. Or shall I think in silver she's immured, Being ten times undervalued to tried gold? Or shall I think that no rich gem Was set in worse than gold. They have in England A coin that bears the figure of an angel Stamped in gold, but that's insculp'd upon; But here an angel in a golden bed Lies all within. Deliver me the key; Here do I choose, and thrive I as I may! [there, Por. There, take it, prince; and if my form lie Then I am yours. (He unlocks the golden casket. Mor. O hell! what have we here? A carrion Death, within whose empty eye There is a written scroll! I'll read the writing. [Reads] and that if glisters is not gold. Often have you heard that told: Many a man his life hath sold But my outside to behold: Gilded tombs do worms infold. Had you been as wise as bold, Young in limbs, in judgment old, Your answer had not been inscr appet'd: Fare you well; your suit is cold. Cold, indeed; and labour lost: Then, farewell, heat, and welcome, frost! Portia, adieu. I have too grieved a heart To take a tedious leave: [Exit with his train. Flourish of cornets. Por. A gentle riddance. Draw the curtains, go. Let all of his complexion choose me so. (Exeunt.)

SCENE VIII.—Venice. A street.

Enter Salarino and Salario.

Salar. Why, man, I saw Bassanio under sail: With him is Gratiano gone along; And in their ship I am sure Lorenzo is not.

Sal. The villain Jew with outeries raised the wind That went with him to search Bassanio's ship.

Salar. He came too late, the ship was under sail: But there the duke was given to understand That in a gondola were seen together Lorenzo and his amorous Jessica: Besides, Antonio certified the duke They were not with Bassanio in his ship.

Sal. I never heard a passion so confused, So strange, outrageous, and so variable, As the dog Jew did utter in the streets: 'My daughter! O my ducats! O my daughter! Fleed with these Christian ducats! Fleed with these Christian ducats! Justice! the law! my ducats, and my daughter! A sealed bag, two sealed bags of ducats, Of double ducats, stolen from me by my daughter! And jewels, two stones, two rich and precious stones, Stolen by my daughter! Justice! and the girl! She hath the stones upon her, and the ducats.'

Salar. Why, all the boys in Venice follow him, Crying, his stones, his daughter, and his ducats.

Sal. Let good Antonio look he keep his day, Or he shall pay for this.

Salar. Marry, well remember'd. I reason'd with a Frenchman yesterday, Who told me, in the narrow seas that part The French and English, there miscarried A vessel of our country richly fraught: I thought upon Antonio when he told me; And wish'd in silence that it were not his.
Salar. You were best to tell Antonio what you hear; Yet do not suddenly, for it may grieve him.
Salar. A kinder gentleman treads not the earth.
I saw Bassanio and Antonio part:
Bassanio told him he would make some speed
Of his return: he answer'd, 'Do not so;
Slander not business for my sake, Bassanio,
But stay the very riping of the time:
And for the Jew's bond which he hath of me,
Let it not enter in your mind of love;
Be merry, and employ your chiefest thoughts
To courtship and such fair ostents of love
As shall conveniently become you there:
And even there, his eye being big with tears,
Turning his face, he put his hand behind him,
And with affection wondrous sensible
He wrung Bassanio's hand; and so they parted.
Salar. I think he only loves the world for him.
I pray thee, let us go and find him out
And quicken his embraced heaviness
With some delight or other.
Salar. Do we so. [Exeunt.]

SCENE IX.—Belmont. A room in Portia's house.
Enter Nerissa with a Servitor.

Ner. Quick, quick, I pray thee; draw the curtain straight:
The Prince of Arragon hath ta'en his oath,
And comes to his election presently.

Flourish of cornets. Enter the Prince of Arragon, Portia, and their trains.

Por. Behold, there stand the caskets, noble prince:
If you choose that wherein I contain'd,
Straight shall our nuptial rites be solemnized:
But if you find them empty, without shed,
You must be gone from hence immediately.
Ar. I am enjoin'd by oath to observe three things:
First, never to unfold to any one
Which casket 'twas I chose; next, if I fail
Of the right casket, never in my life
To woo a maid in way of marriage:
Lastly,
If I do fail in fortune of my choice,
Immediately to leave you and be gone.
Por. To these injunctions every one doth swear
That comes to hazard for my worthless self.
Ar. And so have I address'd me. Fortune now
To my heart's hope! Gold; silver; and base lead.
'Who chooseth me shall gain what many men desire.'
You shall look fairer, ere I give or hazard.
What says the golden chest? ha! let me see.
'Who chooseth me shall gain what many men desire.'
What many men desire! that 'many' may be meant.
By the fool mutitute, that choose by show,
Not learning more than the fond eye doth teach;
Which pricks not to the interior, but, like the market,
Builds in the weather on the outward wall,
Even in the force and road of casualty.
I will not choose what many men desire,
Because I will not jump with common spirits
And rank me with the barbarous multitudes.
Why, then to thee, thou silver treasure-house;
Tell me once more what little thou dost bear;
'Who chooseth me shall get as much as he deserves.'
And well said too; for who shall go about
To cozen fortune and be honourable
Without the stamp of merit? Let none presume
To wear an undeserved dignity.

Por. Too long a pause for that which you find there.
Ar. What's 'here'? the portrait of a blinking idiot,
Presenting me a schedule! I will read it.
How much unlike art thou to Portia!
How much unlike my hopes and my deservings!
'Who chooseth me shall have as much as he deserves.'
Did I deserve no more than a fool's head?
Is that my prize? are my deserts no better?
Por. To offend, and judge, are distinct offices
And of opposed natures.
Ar. What is here?
[Reads] The fire seven times tried this:
Seven times tried that judgment is,
That did never choose amiss.
Some there be that shadows kiss;
Such have but a shadow's bliss:
There be fools alive, I wis;
Silver'd o'er; and so was this.
Take what wife you will to bed,
I will ever be your head:
So be gone: you are sped.
Still more fool I shall appear
By the time I linger here:
With one fool's head I came to woo,
But I go away with two.
Sweet, adieu. I'll keep my oath,
Patiently to bear my wroth.
[Exeunt Arragon and train.]

Por. Thus hath the candle singed the moth.
O, these deliberate fools! when they do choose,
They have the wisdom by their wit to lose.
Ner. The ancient saying is no heresy,
Hanging and wiving goes by destiny.
Por. Come, draw the curtain, Nerissa.

Enter a Servant.

Serv. Where is my lady?
Por. Here: what would my lord?
Serv. Madam, there is alighted at your gate
A young Venetian, one that comes before
To signify the approaching of his lord;
From whom he bringeth sensible regrets,
To wit, besides commendats and courteous breath,
Gifts of rich value. Yet I have not seen
So likely an ambassador of love:
A day in April never came so sweet,
To show how costly summer was at hand,
As this fore-spurrier comes before his lord.
Por. No more, I pray thee: I am half afraid
Thou wilt say anon he is too kin to thee,
Thou spend'st such high-day wit in praising him.
Come, come, Nerissa: for I long to see
Quick Cupid's post that comes so mannerly.
Ner. Bassanio, lord Love, if thy will it be!
SCENE I.—Venice. A street.

Enter Salanio and Salarino.

Salan. Now, what news on the Rialto?

Salar. Why, yet it lives there unheeded that Antonio hath a ship of rich lading wrecked on the narrow seas; the Goodwins, I think they call the place: a very dangerous flat and fatal, where the chances of many a tall ship lie buried, as they say, if my gossip report be an honest woman of her word.

Salan. I would she were as lying a gossip in that as ever knapped ginger or made her neighbours believe she wept for the death of a third husband. But it is true, without any slips of proliﬁxity or crossing the plain highway of talk, that the good Antonio, the honest Antonio,—O that I had a title good enough to keep his name company! —

Salar. Come, the full stop.

Salan. Ha! what sayest thou? Why, the end is, he hath lost a ship.

Salar. I would it might prove the end of his losses.

Salan. Let me say 'amen' betimes, lest the devil cross my prayer, for here he comes in the likeness of a Jew.

Enter Shylock.

Shy. How now, Shylock! what news among the merchants?

Salar. You knew, none so well, none so well as you, of my daughter's flight.

Salan. That's certain: I, for my part, knew the tailor that made the wings she flew withal.—

Salar. And Shylock, for his own part, knew the bird was fledged; and then it is the complexion of them all to leave the dam.

Shy. She is damned for it.

Salar. That's certain, if the devil may be her Shy. My own flesh and blood to rebel! [Judge.

Salan. Out upon it, old carrion! rebels it at these years?

Shy. I say, my daughter is my flesh and blood.

Salar. There is more difference between thy flesh and hers than between jet and ivory; more between your bloods than there is between red wine and rhenish. But tell us, do you hear whether Antonio have had any loss at sea or no?

Shy. There I have another bad match: a bankrupt, a prodigal, who dare scarce show his head on the Rialto; a beggar, that was used to come so snug upon the mart; let him look to his bond: he was wont to call me usurer; let him look to his bond: he was wont to lend money for a Christian courtesy; let him look to his bond.

Salar. Why, I am sure, if he forfeit, thou wilt not take his flesh: what's that good for?

Shy. To bait fish withal: if it will feed nothing else, it will feed my revenge. He hath disgraced me, and hindered me half a million; laughed at my losses, mocked at my gains, scorned my nation, thwarted my bargains, cooled my friends, heated mine enemies; and what's his reason? I am a Jew. Hath not a Jew eyes? hath not a Jew hands, organs, dimensions, senses, affections, passions? feel with the same food, hurt with the same weapons, subject to the same diseases, healed by the same means, warmed and cooled by the same winter and summer, as a Christian is? If you prick us, do we not bleed? If you tickle us, do we not laugh? If you poison us, do we not die? and if you wrong us, shall we not revenge? If we are like you in the rest, we will resemble you in that. If a Jew wrong a Christian, what is his humility? Revenge. If a Christian wrong a Jew, what should his sufferance be by Christian example? Why, revenge. The villain you teach me, I will execute, and it shall go hard but I will better the instruction.

Enter a Servant.

Serv. Gentlemen, my master Antonio is at his house and desires to speak with you both.

Salar. We have been up and down to seek him.

Enter Tubal.

Salan. Here comes another of the tribe: a third cannot be matched, unless the devil himself turn Jew. [Exeunt Salan., Salar., and Servant.

Shy. How now, Tubal! what news from Genoa? hast thou found my daughter?

Tub. I often came where I did hear of her, but cannot find her.

Shy. Why, there, there, there! a diamond gone, cost me two thousand ducats in Frankfort! The curse never fell upon our nation till now; I feared it till now: two thousand ducats in that; and other precious, precious jewels. I would my daughter were dead at my foot, and the jewels in her ear! would she were hearsed at my foot, and the ducats in her cofﬁn! No news of them? Why, so: and I know not what's spent in the search: why, thou loss upon loss! the thief gone with so much, and so much to ﬁnd the thief: and no satisfaction, no revenge: nor no ill luck stirring but what lights on my shoulders; no sighs but of my breathing; no tears but of my shedding.

Tub. Yes, other men have ill luck too: Antonio, as I heard in Genoa,—

Shy. What, what, what? ill luck, ill luck?

Tub. Hath an argosy cast away, coming from Tripolis.

Shy. I thank God, I thank God. Is't true, is't true?

Tub. I spoke with some of the sailors that escaped the wreck.

Shy. I thank thee, good Tubal: good news, good news! ha, ha! where? in Genoa?

Tub. Your daughter spent in Genoa, as I heard, in one night fourscore ducats.

Shy. Thou stickest a dagger in me: I shall never see my gold again: fourscore ducats at a sitting! fourscore ducats!

Tub. There came divers of Antonio's creditors in my company to Venice, that swear he cannot choose but break.

Shy. I am very glad of it: I'll plague him; I'll torture him: I am glad of it.

Tub. One of them showed me a ring that he laid of your daughter for a monkey.

Shy. Out upon her! Thou tormentest me, Tubal: it was my turquoise: I had it of Leah when I was a bachelor: I would not have given it for a wilderness of monkeys.

Tub. But Antonio is certainly undone.

Shy. Nay, that's true, that's very true. Go, Tubal, fee me an officer; bespeak him a fortnight before. I will have the heart of him, if he forfeit: for, were he out of Venice, I can make what merchandize I will. Go, go, Tubal, and meet me at our synagogue; go, good Tubal; at our synagogue, Tubal.

[Exeunt.

SCENE II.—Belmont. A room in Portia's house.

Enter Bassanio, Portia, Gratiano, Nerissa, and Attendants.

Por. I pray you, tardy: pause a day or two Before you hazard; for, in choosing wrong, I lose your company: therefore forbear awhile. There's something tells me, but it is not love,

130
I would not lose you; and you know yourself,
Hate counsels not in such a quality.
But lest you should not understand me well,—
And sere men are not tongue but thought,—
I would detain you here some month or two,
Before you venure for me. I could teach you
How to choose right, but I am then forsworn;
So will I never be: so may you miss me;
But if you do, you'll make me wish a sin,
That I had ever seen into your eyes,
They have o'erlook'd me and divided me;
One half of me is yours, the other half yours,
Mine own, I would say; but if mine, then yours,
And so all yours. O, these naughty times
Put bars between the owners and their rights!
And so, though you, not yours. Prove it so.
Let fortune go to hell for it, not I.
I speak too long; but 'tis to peize the time,
To eke it and to draw it out in length,
To stay you from election.
Bass. Let me choose;
For as I am, I live upon the rack.
Por. Upon the rack, Bassanio! then confess
What treason there is mingled with your love.
Bass. None but that ugly treason of mistrust,
Which makes me fear the enjoying of my love:
'Tween snow and fire, as treason and my love.
Por. Ay, but I fear you speak upon the rack,
Where men enforce do speak anything.
Bass. Promise me life, and I'll confess the truth.
Por. Well then, confess and live.
Bass. What 'sho be called 'fuss' and 'love',
Had been the very sum of my confession:
O happy torment, when my torturer
Doth teach me answers for deliverance!
But let me to my fortune and the caskets.
Por. Away, then! I am lock'd in one of them:
If you do love me, you will find me out.
Nerissa and the rest, stand all aloof.
Let music sound while he doth make his choice;
Then, if he lose, he makes a swan-like end,
Fading in music: that the comparison
May stand more proper, my eye shall be the stream
And watery death-bed for him. He may win;
And what is music then? Then music is Even as the flourish when true subjects bow
To a new-crownd monarch: such is it
As are those dulcet sounds in break of day
That creep as charming and life-room's ear
And summon him to marriage. Now he goes,
With no less presence, but with much more love,
Than young Alcides, when he did redeem
The virgin tribute paid by howling Troy
To the sea-monster: I stand for sacrifice;
The rest aloof are the Dardanian wives,
With beaured visages, come forth to view
The issue of the exploit. Go, Hercules!
Live thou, I live: with much much more dismay
I view the fight than thou that makest the fray.

Music, whilst Bassanio comments on the caskets to himself.

SONG.
Tell me where is fancy bred,
Or in the heart or in the head?
Howbeit, how nourish'd?
Reply, reply.
It is engender'd in the eyes,
With gazing feet; and fancy dies
In the cradle where it lies.
Let us all ring fancy's knell:
'Tis done in it,--Ding, dong, bell.

All. Ding, dong, bell.

Bass. So may the outward show be least them.
The world is still deceived with ornament,
In law, what plea so tainted and corrupt
But, being seasoned with a gracious voice,
Obscures the show of evil? In religion,
What damned error, but some sober brow
Will bless it and approve them of them?
Hiding the grossness with fair ornament?
There is no vice so simple but assumes
Some mark of virtue on his outward parts:
How many cowards, whose hearts are all as false
As stairs of sand, wear yet upon their chins
The beards of heroes and famous men.
Who, inward search'd, have livers white as milk;
And these assume but valour's excrement
To render them redoubled! Look on beauty,
And you shall see 'tis purchased by the weight;
Which wherein works a miracle in nature,
Making them lightest that wear most of it:
So are those crisped snaky golden locks
Which make such wanton gambols with the wind,
Upon supposed fairness, often known
To be the dowry of a second head,
The skull that bred them in the Cupidchre.
Thus ornament is but the gilded shore
To a most dangerous sea; the beauteous scarf
Veiling an Indian beauty; in a word,
The seeming truth which cunning times put on
To entrap the wisest. Therefore, thou gaudy gold,
Hard food for Midas, I will never taste;
Nor none of thee, thou pale and common drudge.
'Twixt man and man: but thou, thou meanest head,
Which rather threatenest than dost promise aught,
Thy paleness moves me more than eloquence;
And here choose 1: joy be the consequence!
Por. (Aside.) Methinks all the earth doth fleet to air,
As doubtful thoughts, and rash-embrauced despair,
And shuddering fear, and green-eyed jealousy!
O love,
Be moderate; allay thy ecstasy;
In measure rein thy joy; scan this excess.
You feel too much thy blessing; make it less,
For fear I surfeit.

Bass. What find I here?

[Opening the leaden casket.]

Fair Portia's counterfeitt! What demi-god
Hath come so near creation? Move these eyes?
Or whether, riding on the backs of men,
Seem they in motion? Here are sever'd lips,
Parted with sugar breath: so sweet a bar
Should sunder such sweet friends. Here in her hairs
The painter plays the spider and hath woven
A golden net to entrap the waters of men.
Faster than gannets in cold winds: but her eyes,—
How could he see to do them? having made one,
Methinks it should have power to steal both his
And leave itself unfurnished. Yet look, how far
The substance of my praise doth wrong this shadow
In underprizing it, so far this shadow
Doth limp behind the substance. Here's the scroll,
The continent and summary of my fortune.

[Reads] You that choose not by the view,
Chance as fair and choose as true!
Since this fortune falls to you,
Be content and seek no more.
If you be well pleased with this
And hold your fortune for your bliss,
Turn you where your lady is
And claim her with a loving kiss.
A gentle scroll. Fair lady, by your leave;
I come by note to give and to receive.
Like one of two contending in a prize,
That thinks he hath done well in people's eyes,
Hearing applause and universal shout,
Glibly in spirit, still gazing in a doubt
To begin. Whether those peals of praise be his or no;
So, thrice-fair lady, stand I now.
As doubtful whether what I see be true,
Until confirm'd, sign'd, ratified by you.
Por. You see me, Lord Bassanio, where I stand,
Such as I am: though for myself alone
I would not be ambitious in my wish,
To wish myself much better; yet, for you
I would be trebled twenty times myself;
A thousand times more fair, ten thousand times
More rich;
That only to stand high in your account,
I might in virtuous beauties, livings, friends,
Exceed account: but the full sum of me
Is sum of something, which, to term in gross,
Is an unlesson'd girl, unschool'd, unpractised;
Happy in this, she is not yet so old
But she may learn; happier than this,
She is not bred so well but she can learn;
Happiest of all is that her gentle spirit
Commits itself to yours to be directed,
As from her lord, her governor, her king.
Myself and what is mine to you and yours
Is now converted: but now I was the lord
Of this fair mansion, master of my servants,
Queen o'er myself; and even now, but now,
This house, these servants and this same myself
Are yours, my lord: I give them with this ring;
Which when you part from, lose, or give away,
Let it presage the ruin of your love
And be a vantage point to exclaim on you.
Bass. Madam, you have bereft me of all words,
Only my blood speaks to you in my veins;
And there is such confusion in my powers,
As, after some oration fairly spoke
By a beloved prince, there doth appear
Among the vacts, no such oration as
Where every something, being blunt together,
Turns to a wild of nothing, save of joy,
Express'd and not express'd. But when this ring
Parts from this finger, then parts life from hence:
O, then be bold to say Bassanio's dead!
For no part of me, from the first till now,
That have stood by and seen our wishes prosper,
To cry, good joy: good joy, my lord and lady!
Gra. My lord Bassanio and my gentle lady,
I wish you all the joy that you can wish:
For I am sure you can wish none from me;
And when your honours mean to solemnize
The bargain of your faith, I do beseech you,
Even at that time I may be married too.
Bass. Madam, with all my heart, so thou canst get a wife.
Gra. I thank your lordship, you have got me one.
My eye, my lord, can look as swift as yours;
You saw the mistress, I beheld the maid;
You loved, I loved for intermission.
No more pertains to me, my lord, than you.
Your fortune stood upon the basket there,
And so did mine too, as the matter falls;
For wooring here until I sweat again,
And swearing till my very roof was dry
With oaths of love, it last, if promise last,
I got a promise of this fair one here
To have her love, provided that your fortune
Achieved her mistress.
Por. Is this true, Nerissa?
Ner. Madam, it is, so you stand pleased withal.
Bass. And do you, Gratiano, mean good faith?
Gra. Yes, faith, my lord.
Bass. Our feast shall be much honour'd in your marriage.
Gra. We'll play with them the first boy for a thousand ducats.
Ner. What, and stake down?
[Stake down.
Gra. No: we shall ne'er win at that sport, and
But who comes here? Lorenzo and his in-hold?
What, and my old Venetian friend Salerio?
Enter Lorenzo, Jessica, and Salerio, a Messenger from Venice.
Bass. Lorenzo and Salerio, welcome hither;
If that the youth of my new interest here
Have power to bid you welcome. By your leave,
I bid my very friends and countrymen,
Sweet Portia, welcome.
Por. So do I, my lord:
They are entirely welcome.
Lor. I thank your honour. Form my part, my lord,
My purpose was not to have seen you here;
But meeting with Salerio by the way,
He did intreat me, past all saying: nay,
To come with him along.
Saler. I did, my lord;
And I have reason for it. Signor Antonio
Commends him to you. [Gives Bassanio a letter.
Bass. Enraged at the letter, I pray you, tell me how my good friend doth.
Saler. Not sick, my lord, unless it be in mind;
Nor well, unless in mind: his letter there
Will show you his estate.
Gra. Nerissa, cheer you stranger: bid her wel!
Your hand, Salerio: what's the news from Venice?
How doth that royal merchant, good Antonio?
I know he will be glad of our success;
We are the Jasons, we have won the fleece.
Saler. I would you had won the fleece that he hath lost. [Paper, paper.
Por. There are some shrewd contents in this same
That steals the colour from Bassanio's cheek:
Some dear friend dead; else nothing in the world
Could turn so much the constitution
Of any constant man. What, worse and worse!
With leave, Bassanio; I am half myself;
And I must freely have the half of anything
That this same paper brings you.
Bass. O sweet Portia,
Here are a few of the unpleasant'st words
That ever blotter paper! Gentle lady,
When I did first impart my love to you,
I freely told you all the plain truth:
I ran in my veins, I was a gentleman;
And then I told you true: and yet, dear lady,
Rating myself at nothing, you shall see
How much I was a braggart. When I told you
My state was nothing, I should then have told you
That I was worse than nothing: for, indeed,
I have engaged myself to a dear friend,
Engaged my friend to his mere enemy,
To feed my means. Here is a letter, lady,
The paper as the body of my friend,
And every word in it a gapping wound,
Issuing life-blood. But is it true, Salerio?
Have all his ventures fail'd? What, not one hit?
From Tripolis, from Mexico and England,
From Lisbon, Barbary and India?
And not one vessel 'scape the dreadful touch
Of merchant-marrying rocks?
Saler. Not one, my lord.
Por. Besides, it should appear, that if he had
The present money to discharge the Jew,
He would not take it. Never did I know
A creature, that did bear the shape of man,
So keen and greedy to confound a man:
He plies the duke at all hours and night,
And doth impeach the freedom of the state,
If they deny him justice: twenty merchants,
The duke himself, and the magnificos
Of greatest port, have all persuaded with him;
But none can drive him from the envious plea
Of forfeiture; justice aye has the game.
Jes. When I was with him I have heard him swear
To Tubal and to Chus, his countrymen,
That he would rather have Antonio's flesh
Than twenty times the value of the sum
That he did give him: and I know my lord,
If law, authority and power do not,
It will go hard with poor Antonio.
Por. Is it your dear friend that thus in trouble?
Bass. The dearest friend to me, the kindest man,
ACT III.

THE MERCHANT OF VENICE.

SCENE IV.

Well, gaoler, on. Pray God, Bassanio come
To see me pay his debt, and then I care not! \[Exeunt.\]

SCENE IV.—Belmont. A room in Portia's house.

Enter Portia, Nerissa, Lorenzo, Jessica, and Balthasar.

Lor. Madam, although I speak it in your presence,
You have a noble and a true conceiver
Of god-like amity; which appears most strongly
In bearing thus the absence of your lord.
But if you knew to whom you show this honour,
How true a lover you are to relief
How dear a lover of my lord your husband,
I know you would be prouder of the work
Than customary bounty can enforce you.

Por. I never did repent for doing good,
Nor shall not now: for in companions
That do converse and waste the time together,
Whose souls do bear an equal yoke of love,
There must be needs a like proportion
Of lineaments, of manners and of spirit;
Which makes me think that this Antonio,
Being the bosom lover of my lord,
Must needs be like my lord. If it be so,
How little is the cost I have bestow'd
In purchasing the semblance of my soul
From out the state of hellish misery!
This comes too near the praising of myself;
Therefore no more of it:—hear other things.
Lorenzo, I commit into your hands
The husbandry and manage of my house
Until my lord's return: for mine own part,
I have toward heaven breathed a secret vow
To live in prayer and contemplation,
Only attended by Nerissa and myself,
Until her husband and my lord's return:
There is a monastery two miles off;
And there will we abide. I do desire you
Not to deny this imposition;
The which my love and some necessity
Now lays upon you.

Por. Madam, with all my heart;
I shall obey you in all fair commands.

Por. My people do already know my mind,
And will acknowledge you and Jessica
In place of Lord Bassanio and myself.
And so farewell, till we shall meet again.

Lor. Fair thoughts and happy hours attend on you!
Jes. I wish your ladyship all heart's content.

Por. I thank you for your wish, and am well pleased
To wish it back on you: fare you well, Jessica.

[Exeunt Jessica and Lorenzo.

Now, Balthasar,
As I have ever found thee honest-true,
So let me find thee still. Take this same letter,
And use thou all the endeavours of a man
In speed to Padua: see thou rendest this Into my cousin's hand, Doctor Bellario;
And look, what notes and curiosities he doth give thee,
Bring them, I pray thee, with imagined speed
Unto the transect, to the common ferry
Which trades to Venice. Waste no time in words,
But get thee gone: I shall be there before thee.

Balth. Madam, I go with all convenient speed.

[Exit.}

Por. Come on, Nerissa; I have work in hand
That you yet know not of: we'll see our husbands
Before they think of us.

Por. Shall we see us?

Por. They shall, Nerissa; but in such a habit,
That they shall think we are accomplished
With that we lack. I'll hold thee any wager,
When we are both accoutred like young men,
I'll prove the prettier fellow of the two,
And wear my dagger with the braver grace,
And speak between the change of man and boy
ACT IV.

THE MERCHANT OF VENICE.

SCENE I.

Venice. A court of justice.

Enter the Duke, the Magnificoes, Antonio, Bassanio, Gratiano, Salerio, and others.

Duke. What, is Antonio here?

Ant. Ready, so please your grace. [sweat

Duke. I am sorry for thee: thou art come to an

A stony adversary, an inhuman wretch

Uncapable of pity, void and empty

No drop of mercy. [sweat

Ant. I have heard

Your grace hath ta'en great pains to qualify

His rigorous course; but since he stands obdurate of the commonwealth, for in converting Jews to Christians, you raise the price of pork.

Lor. I shall answer that better to the commonwealth that you can the getting up of the negro's belly: the Moor is with child by you, Launcelot.

Lau. It is much that the Moor should be more than reason: but if she be less than an honest-woman, she is indeed more than I took her for.

Lor. How every fool can play upon the word!

I think the best grace of wit will shortly turn into silence, and discourse grow commendable in none only but parrots. Go in, sirrah; bid them prepare for dinner.

Lau. That is done, sir; they have all stomachs.

Lor. Godly Lord, what a wit-snapper are you!

then bid them prepare dinner.

Lau. That is done too, sir; only 'cover' is the word.

Lor. Will you cover then, sir?

Lau. Not so, sir; neither; I know my duty.

Lor. Yet more quarrelling with occasion! Wilt thou show the whole wealth of thy wit in an instant?

I pray thee, understand a plain man in his plain meaning: go to thy fellows; bid them cover the table, serve in the meat, and we will come in to dinner.

Lau. For the table, sir, it shall be served in;

for the meat, sir, it shall be covered; for your coming to dinner, sir, why, let it be as humours and conelcts shall govern.

[Exeunt.

Lor. O dear discretion, how his words are suited!

The fool hath planted in his memory

An army of good words; and I do know

A many fools, that stand in better place,

Garnish'd like him, that for a tricksy word

Defy the matter. How cheer'st thou, Jessica?

And now, good sweet, say thy opinion,

How dost thou like the Lord Bassanio's wife?

Jes. Past all expressing. It is very meet

The Lord Bassanio live an upright life;

For, having such a blessing in his lady,

He finds the joys of heaven here on earth;

And if on earth he do not mean it, then

In reason he should never come to heaven.

Why, if two gods should play some heavenly match

And on the wager lay two earthly women,

And Portia one, there must be something else

Pawn'd with the other, for the poor rude world

Hath not her fellow.

Even such a husband

Hast thou of me as she is for a wife.

Jes. Nay, but ask my opinion too of that.

Lor. I will anon; first, let us go to dinner.

Jes. Nay, let me praise you while I have a stomach.

Lor. No, pray thee, let it serve for table-talk;

Then, howsoever thou speak'st, 'mong other things

I shall digest it.

Jes. Well, I'll set you forth. [Exeunt.

SCENE V.—The same. A garden.

Enter Launcelot and Jessica.

Lau. Yes, truly; for, look you, the sins of the father are to be laid upon the children: therefore,

I promise ye, I fear ye! I was always plain with you, and so now I speak my agitation of the matter:

therefore be of good cheer, for truly I think you are damned. There is but one hope in it that can do you any good; and that is but a kind of bastard hope neither.

Jes. And what hope is that, I pray thee?

Lau. Marry, you may partly hope that your father got you not, that you are not the Jew's daughter.

Jes. That were a kind of bastard hope, indeed: so the sins of my mother should be visited upon me.

Lau. Truly then I fear you are damned both by father and mother: thus when I shun Scylla, your father, I fall into Charybdis, your mother: well, you are gone both ways.

Jes. I shall be saved by my husband; he hath made me a Christian.

Lau. Truly, the more to blame he: we were Christians now before; e'en as many as could well live, one by another. This making of Christians will raise the price of hogs: if we grow all to be pork-eaters, we shall not shortly have a rasher on the coals for money.

Enter Lorenzo.

Jes. I'll tell my husband, Launcelot, what you say: here he comes.

Lor. I shall grow jealous of you shortly, Laun-celot, if you thus get my wife into corners.

Jes. Nay, you need not fear us, Lorenzo: Laun-celot and I are out. He tells me flatly, there is no mercy for me in heaven, because I am a Jew's daughter: and he says, you are no good member and that no lawful means can carry me

Out of his envy's reach, I do oppose

My patience to his fury, and am arm'd

To suffer, with a quietness of spirit,

The very tyranny and rage of his.

Duke. Go one, and call the Jew into the court.

Saler. He is ready at the door: he comes, my lord.

Enter Shylock.

Duke. Make room, and let him stand before our

Shylock, the world thinks, and I think so too, [face

ACT IV.

THE MERCHANT OF VENICE.

SCENE I.

Thou 'lt show thy mercy and remorse more strange
Than is thy strange apparent cruelty;
And where thou now exact'st the penalty,
Which is a pound of flesh, which I demand of thee,
Thou wilt not only lose the forfeit,
But, touch'd with human gentleness and love,
Forgive a moity of the principal:
Glancing an eye of pity on his losses,
That have of late so irritated on his back,
Ere now a royał; and by thy tender,
And pluck commiseration of his state
From brassy bosoms and rough hearts of flint,
From stubborn Turks and Tartars, never skill'd
To offices of tender courtesy.

We all expect a gentle answer, Jew.
[pose;
Sly. I have possess'd your grace of what I pur-
And by our holy Sabbath have I sworn
To have the due and forfeit of my bond:
If you deny it, let the danger light
Upon your charter and your city's freedom.
You 'll ask me, why I rather choose to have
A weight of carriion flesh than to receive
Three thousand ducats: I'll not answer that:
But, say, it is my humour: is it answer'd?
What if my house be troubled with a rat
And I be pleased to give ten thousand ducats
To have it, are you answer'd yet?
Some men there are love not a gaping pig;
Some, that are mad if they behold a cat;
And others, when the bagpipe sings i' the nose,
Cannot contain their urine: for affection,
Mistress of passion, sways it to the mood
Of what his end.

There is no firm reason to be render'd,
Why he cannot abide a gaping pig;
Why he, a harmless necessary cat;
Why he, a woolen bag-pipe; but of force
Must yield to such inevitable shame
As to offend, himself being offended;
So can I give no reason, nor I will not,
More than a lodged hate and a certain loathing
I bear Antonio, that I follow thus
A losing suit against him. Are you answer'd?
Bass. This is no answer, thou unfeeling man.
To excuse the current of thy cruelty.
Sly. I am not bound to please thee with my an-
Bass. Do all men kill the things they do not love?
Sly. Hates any man the thing he would not kill?
Bass. Every offence is not a hate at first.
[Sly. Shall I then answer thee as thou dost answer the Ant. I pray thee, think you question with the Jew:
You may as well go stand upon the beach
And bid the main flood hate his usual height;
You may as well use question with the wolf
Why he hath made the ewe bleat for the lamb;
You may as well forbid the mountain pines
To wag their high tops and to make no noise,
When they are fretten with the gusts of heaven;
You may as well do any thing most hard,
As seek to soften that,—than which what's harder?—
His Jewish heart: therefore, I do beseech you,
Make not the offer, use no further means,
But with all brief and plain conveniency
Let me have judgment and the Jew his will.
Bass. For thy three thousand ducats here is six.
Sly. If every ducat in six thousand ducats
Were hur'd away a, every part a ducat,
I would not draw them; I would have my bond.

Duke. How shalt thou hope for mercy, rendering none?
Sly. What judgment shall I dread, doing no
You have among you many a purchased slave,
Which, like your asses and your dogs and mules,
You use in abject and in slavish parts,
Because you bought them: shall I say to you,
Let them be free, marry them to your heirs?
Why sweat they under burthen's? let their beds

Be made as soft as yours and let their palates
Be season'd with such viands? You will answer
'The slaves are ours?' so do I answer you:
The pound of flesh, which I demand of him,
Is dearly bought: 'tis mine and I will have it.
If you deny me, lie upon your law!
There is no force in the decrees of Venice.
I stand for judgment: answer; shall I have it?
Duke. Upon my power I may dismiss this court,
Unless Bellario, a learned doctor,
Whom I have sent for to determine this,
Come here to-day.

Saler.

My lord, here stays without
A messenger with letters from the doctor,
New come from Padua.

Duke. Bring in the letters; call the messenger.
Bass. Good cheer, Antonio! What, man, courage yet!

The Jew shall have my flesh, blood, bones and all,
Ere thou shalt lose for me one drop of blood.
Ant. I am a ta'en in the snare of the book's
Meetest for death: the weakest kind of fruit
Drops earliest to the ground; and so let me:
You cannot better be employed, Bassanio,
Than to live still and write mine epitaph.

Enter Norissa, dressed like a lawyer's clerk.

Duke. Came you from Padua, from Bellario?
Ner. From both, my lord. Bellario greets your grace.

[Presenting a letter.
Bass. Why dost thou whet thy knife so earnestly?
Sly. To cut the forfeiture from that bankrupt grace.

Gra. Not on thy sole, but on thy soul, harsh Jew,
Thou makest thy knife keen; but no metal can,
No, not the hangman's axe, bear half the keenness
Of thy sharp envy. Can no prayers pierce thee?
Sly. No, none that thou hast wit enough to make.

Gra. O, be thou damned, inscrutable dog!
And for thy life let justice be accused.
Thou almost makest me waver in my faith
To hold opinion with Pythagoras,
That souls of animals infuse themselves
Into the trunk of meagre carrion spirits
Govern'd a wolf, who, hang'd for human slaughter,
Even from the gallows did his fell soul fleet,
And, whilst thou lay'st in thy unhallow'd dam,
Infused itself in thee; for thy desires
Are wolvish, bloody, starved and ravenous.
Sly. Till the black soul be burnt, and the deal scorch'd
Thou but offend'st thy lungs to speak so loud:
Repair thy wit, good youth, or it will fall
To cureless ruin. I stand here for law.

Duke. This letter from Bellario doth commend;
A young and learned doctor to our court.
Where is he?

Ner. He attended here hard by,
To know your answer, whether you 'll admit him.
Duke. With all my heart. Some three or four of Go give him courteous conduct to this place.
You Mean time the court shall hear Bellario's letter.

Clerk. [Reads.]

My lord, I have understand that at the receipt of your letter I am very sick: but in the instant that your messenger came, in loving visitation was with me a young doctor of Rome; his name is Balthasar. I acquainted him with the cause in controversy between the Jew and Antonio the merchant; we turned our books together; he is furnished with my opinion; which, bettered with his own learning, the greatness whereof I cannot enough commend, comes with him, at my importunity, to fill up your grace's request in my stead. I beseech you, let his lack of years be no impediment to let him have a reverent ear; and, for I never knew so young a body with so old a head, I leave him to your gracious acceptance, whose trial shall better publish his commendation.
Duke. You hear the learner Bellario, what he
And here, I take it, is the doctor come. [writes:
Enter Portia, dressed like a doctor of laws.
Give me your hand. Come you from old Bellario?
Por. I did, my lord.
Duke. You are welcome: take your place.
Are you acquainted with the difference
That holds this present question in the court?
Por. I am informed throughly of the cause.
Which is the merchant here, and which the Jew?
Duke. Antonio and old Shylock, both stand forth.
Por. Is your name Shylock?
Shy. It is my name.
Por. Of a strange nature is the suit you follow:
Yet in such rule that the Venetian law
Cannot impugn you as you do proceed.
You stand within his danger, do you not?
Ant. Ay, so he says.
Por. Do you confess the bond?
Shy. Then must the Jew be merciful.
Por. On what compulsion must I? tell me that.
Por. The quality of mercy is not strain’d,
It appears in all actions of perfect heaven.
Upon the place beneath: it is twice blest;
It blesseth him that gives and him that takes:
’Tis mightiest in the mightiest: it becomes
The throned monarch better than his crown:
His sceptre shows the force of temporal power,
The attribute to awe and majesty.
Wherein deth sit the dread and fear of kings;
But mercy is above this sceptred sway;
It is enthroned in the hearts of kings;
It is an attribute to God himself;
And earthly power doth then show likest God’s
When mercy季节s justed. Therefore, Jew,
Though justice be thy plea, consider this,
That, in the cause of justice, none of us
Should see salvation: we do pray for mercy;
And that same prayer doth teach us all to render
The deeds of mercy. I have spoke thus much
To mitigate the justice of thy plea;
Which if thou follow, this strict court of Venice
Must needs give sentence ’gainst the merchant there.
Shy. My deeds upon my head! I crave the law,
The penalty and forfeit of my bond,
Por. Is he not able to discharge the money?
Bass. Yes, here I tender it for him in the court;
Yea, twice the sum: if that my willingness,
I will be bound to pay it ten times o’er,
On forfeit of my hands, my head, my heart:
If this will not suffice, it must appear
That malice bears down truth. And I beseech you,
Wrest once the law to your authority:
To do a great right, do a little wrong,
And curb this cruel devil of his will.
Por. It must not be; there is no power in Venice
Can alter a decree established:
’Twill be recorded for a precedent,
And lay an example on the same example
Will rush into the state: it cannot be.
Shy. A Daniel come to judgment! yea, a Daniel!
O wise young judge, how do I honour thee!
Por. I pray you, let me look upon the bond.
Shy. Here ’tis, most reverend doctor, here it is.
Por. Shylock, there’s thrice thy money offered thee.
Shy. An oath, an oath, I have an oath in heaven;
Shall I lay perjury upon my soul?
No, not for Venice.
Por. Why, this bond is forfeit;
And lawfully by this the Jew can claim
A pound of flesh, to be by him cut off
Nearest the merchant’s heart. Be merciful
Take thrice thy money; bid me tear the bond.
Shy. When it is paid according to the tenour.
It doth appear you are a worthy judge;
You know the law, your exposition
Hath been most sound: I charge you by the law,
Whereof you are a well-deserving pillar,
Proceed to judgment: by my soul I swear
There is no power in the tongue of man
To alter none; I stay here on my bond.
Ant. Most heartily I do beseech the court
To give the judgment.
Por. Why then, thus it is:
You must prepare your bosom for his knife.
Shy. O noble judge! O excellent young man!
Por. For the intent and purpose of the law
Hath full relation to the penalty
Which here appeareth due upon the bond.
Shy. ’Tis very true: O wise and upright judge!
How much more elderly art thou than thy looks!
Por? Therefore lay bare thy bosom.
Shy. Ay, his breast.
So says the bond: doth it not, noble judge?
’Nearest his heart’: those are the very words.
Por. It is so. Are there balance here to weigh
The flesh?
Shy. I have them ready. [charge,
Por. Have by some surgeon, Shylock, on your
To stop his wounds, lest he do bleed to death.
Shy. Is it so nominated in the bond?
Por. It is not so express’d: but what of that?
’Twere good you do so much for charity.
Shy. I cannot find it; ’t is not in the bond,
Por. You, merchant, have you any thing to say?
Ant. But little: I am arm’d and well prepared.
Give me your hand, Bassanio: fare you well!
Grieve not that I am fallen to this for you;
For herein Fortune shows herself more kind
Than is her custom; it is still her use;
To let the rich man with his wealth,
To view with hollow eye and wrinkled brow
An age of poverty; from which lingers penance
Of such misery doth she cut me off.
Commend me to your honourable wife:
Tell her the process of Antonio’s end;
Say how I loved you, speak me fair in death;
And, when the tale is told, bid her be judge
Whether Bassanio had not once a love.
Repent but you that you shall lose your friend,
And repent not that he pays your debt;
Por. For if the Jew do cut but deep enough,
I’ll pay it presently with all my heart.
Bass. Antonio, I am maruis, my wife
Which is as dear to me as life itself:
But life itself, my wife, and all the world,
Are not with me esteeem’d above thy life:
I would lose all, ay, sacrifice them all
Here to this devil, to deliver you. [aside.
[that,
Por. Your wife would give you little thanks for
If she were by, to hear you make the offer.
Gra. I have a wife, whom, I protest, I love:
I would she were in heaven, so she could
Entreat some power to change this currish Jew.
Ner. ’Tis well you offer it behind her back;
The wish would make the unquiet house.
Shy. These be the Christian husbands. I have a
Would any of the stock of Barabas
[daughter;
Hath been her husband rather than a Christian!
[aside.
We tride time: I pray thee, pursue sentence.
Por. A pound of that same merchant’s flesh is thine:
The court awards it, and the law doth give it.
Shy. Most rightful judge! [breast,
Por. And you must cut this flesh from off his
The law allows it, and the court awards it.
Shy. Most learned judge! A sentence! Come, prepare!
Por. Tarry a little; there is something else.
This bond doth give thee here no jot of blood;

ACT IV. THE MERCHANT OF VENICE. SCENE I.
The words expressly are 'a pound of flesh;' Take thou thy bond, take thou thy pound of flesh; But, in the cutting it, if thou dost shed
One drop of Christian blood, thy lands and goods Are, by the laws of Venice, confiscate Unto the state of Venice. [Judge] [Gra. O upright judge! Mark, Jew: O learned Shy. Is that the law?] [Por. Thyself shalt see the act: For, as thou urg'st justice, before God Thou shalt have justice, more than thou desirest. Gra. O learned judge! Mark, Jew: a learned judge! Shy. I take this offer, then; pay the bond thrice
And let the Christian go. Here is the money. [Por. Soft!] The Jew shall have all justice; soft! no hushe:
He shall have nothing but the penalty. Gra. O Jew! an upright judge; a learned judge! [Por. Therefore prepare thee to cut off the flesh. Shed thou no blood, nor cut thou less nor more
But just a pound of flesh: if thou cut'st more
Or less than a just pound, be it but so much
As makes it light or heavy in the substance,
Or the division of the twentieth part
Of one poor scrap, nay, if the scale do turn
But in the estimation of a hair,
Thou diest and all thy goods are confiscate.
Gra. A second Daniel, a Daniel, Jew!
Now, infidel, I have you on the hip, [feiture.]
[Por. Why doth the Jew pause? take thy for-
Shy. Give me my principal; and let me go.
Bass. I have it ready for thee: here it is.
Por. He hath refused it in the open court:
He shall have merely justice and his bond.
Gra. A Daniel, still say I, a second Daniel! I thank thee, Jew, for teaching me that word. Shy. Shall I not have barely my principal?
Por. Thou shalt have nothing but the forfeiture,
To be so taken at thy peril, Jew.
Shy. Why, then the devil give him good of it!
I'll stay no longer question.
Por. Tarry, Jew:
The law hath yet another hold on you.
It is enacted in the laws of Venice,
If it be proved against an alien
That by direct or indirect attempts
He seek the life of any citizen,
The party 'gainst the which he doth contrive
Shall pay the costs of his goods: the other half
Comes to the privy coffer of the state;
And the offender's life lies in the mercy
Of the duke only, 'gainst all other voice.
In which predicament, I say, thou stand'st;
For it appears, by manifest proceeding,
That indirectly and directly too
Thou hast contrived against the very life
Of the defendant; and thou hast incur'd
The danger formerly by me rehearsed.
Down therefore and beg mercy of the duke.
Gra. I hear that thou mayst have leave to hang thyself:
And yet, thy wealth being forfeit to the state,
Thou hast not left the value of a cord;
Therefore thou must be hang'd at the state's charge.
[Exit Brother Luke.]
Duke. That thou shalt see the difference of our Punishments by this, you and the Turk in:
[sprits, For half thy wealth, it is Antonio's;
The other half comes to the general state,
Which humbleness may drive unto a fine.
[Por. Ay, for the state, not for Antonio.
Shy. Nay, take my life and all; pardon not that:
You take my house when you do take the pay
That doth sustain my house: you take my life
When you do take the means whereby I live.
Por. What mercy can you render him, Antonio?

Gra. A halter gratis; nothing else, for God's sake.
Ant. So please my lord the duke and all the court
To quit the fine for one-half of his goods,
I can content: so he will let me have
The other half in use, to render it.
Upon his death, unto the gentleman
That lately stole his daughter:
Two things provided more, that, for this favour,
He presently become a Christian;
The other, that he do repent, and,
Here in the court, of all he dies possess'd,
Unto his son Lorenzo and his daughter.
Duke. He shall do this, or else I do recant
The pardon that I late pronounced here. [say?]
Por. Art thou contented, Jew? what dost thou
Shy. I am content. Clerk, draw a deed of gift.
Shy. I pray you, give me leave to go from hence;
I am not well: send the deed after me,
And I will sign it.
Duke. Get thee gone, but do it.
Gra. In christening shalt thou have two godfathers:
Had I been judge, thou shouldst have had ten more,
To bring thee to the gallows, not the font.
[Exit Shylock.
Duke. Sir, I entreat you home with me to dinner.
Por. I humbly do desire your grace of pardon:
I must away this night toward Padua,
And it is meet I presently set forth.
Duke. I am sorry that your leisure serves you not.
Antonio, gratify this gentleman,
For, in my mind, you are much bound to him.
[Exeunt Duke and his train.
Bass. Most worthy gentleman, I and my friend
Have by your wisdom been this day acquitted
Of grievous penalties; in lieu whereof,
Three thousand ducats, due unto the Jew,
We freely cope your courteous palms withal.
Ant. And stand indebted, over and above,
In love and service to you evermore.
Por. He is well paid that is well satisfied;
And I, delivering you, am satisfied
And therein do account myself well paid:
My mind was never yet more mercenary.
I pray you, know me when we meet again;
I wish you well, and so I take my leave.
Bass. Dear sir, of force I must attempt you further:
Take some remembrance of us, as a tribute,
Not as a favor: grant me two things, I pray you,
Not to deny me, and to pardon me. [yield.
Por. You press me far, and therefore I will
[To Ant.] Give me your gloves, I'll wear them for your sake;
[To Bass.] And, for your love, I'll take this ring
from you:
Do not draw back your hand; I'll take no more;
And you in love shall not deny me this.
Bass. This ring, good sir, alas, it is a trifle!
I will not shame myself to give you this.
Por. I would have nothing else, I would have this;
And now methinks I have a mind to it. [value.
Bass. There's more depends on this than on the Dearest ring in Venice will I give you,
And find it out by proclamation:
Only for this, I pray you, pardon me.
Por. I see the thing: thou art in offers;
You taught me first to beg; and now methinks
You teach me how a beggar should be answer'd.
Bass. Good sir, this ring was given me by my
And when she put it on, she made me vow [wife;
That I should neither sell nor give nor lose it.
Por. That excuse serves many men to save their gifts.
An if your wife be not a mad-woman,
And know how well I have deserved the ring,
ACT V.

THE MERCHANT OF VENICE.

She would not hold out enemy for ever.
For giving it to me. Well, peace be with you!
[Exit Portia and Nerissa.

Ant. My Lord Bassanio, let him have the ring:
Let his deservings and my love withal
Be valued 'gainst your wife's commandment.
Bass. Go, Gratiano, run and overtake him;
Give him the ring, and bring him, if thou canst,
Into Antonio's house: away! make haste.
[Exit Gratiano.

Come, you and I will thither presently;
And in the morning early will we both
Fly toward Belmont: come, Antonio. [Exeunt.

SCENE II.—The same. A street.

Enter Portia and Nerissa.

Por. Inquire the Jew's house out, give him this
And let him sign it: we'll 'way to-night [deed
And be a day before our husbands home:
This deed will be well welcome to Lorenzo.

ACT V.

SCENE I.—Belmont. Avenue to Portia's house.

Enter Lorenzo and Jessica.

Lor. The moon shines bright: in such a night as this,
When the sweet wind did gently kiss the trees
And they did make no noise, in such a night
Trollus methinks mounted the Trojan walls
And sigh'd his soul toward the Grecian tents,
Where Cressid lay that night.

Jes. In such a night
Did Thisbe fearfully o'ertrip the dew
And saw the lion's shadow ere himself
And ran dismay'd away.

Lor. In such a night
Stood Dido with a willow in her hand.
Upon the wild sea banks and waft her love
To come again to Carthage.

Jes. In such a night
Medea gather'd the enchanted herbs
That did renew old Jason.

Lor. In such a night
Did Jessica steal from the wealthy Jew
And with an unthrift love did run from Venice
As far as Belmont.

Jes. In such a night
Did young Lorenzo swear he loved her well,
Stealing her soul with many vows of faith
And ne'er a true one.

Lor. In such a night
Did pretty Jessica, like a little shrew,
Slender her love, and he forgave it her.

Jes. I would out-night you, did no body come;
But, hark, I hear the footing of a man.

Enter Stephano.

Lor. Who comes so fast in silence of the night?
Steph. A friend.

Lor. A friend! what friend? your name, I pray you, friend?
Steph. Stephano is my name; and I bring word
My mistress will before the break of day
Be here at Belmont: she doth stray about
By holy crosses, where she kneels and prays
For happy wedlock hours.

Lor. Who comes with her?
Steph. None but a holy hermit and her maid.
I pray you, is my master yet return'd?

Lor. He is not, nor we have not heard from him.
But go we in, I pray thee, Jessica,
Since sought so stockish, hard and full of rage,
But music for the time doth change his nature.
The man that hath no music in his heart,
Nor is not moved with concord of sweet sounds,
Is fit for treasons, stratagems and spoils;
The motions of his spirit are dull as night
And his affections dark as Erebus:
Let no such man be trusted. Mark the music.

Enter Portia and Nerissa.

Por. That light we see is burning in my hall.
How far that little candle throws his beams! So shines a good deed in a naughty world.

Ner. When the moon shines, we did not see the candle.

Por. So doth the greater glory dim the less:
A substitute shines brightly as a king Until a king be by, and then his state Empties itself, as doth an inland brook Into the main of waters. Music! hark! It is your music, madam, of the house.

Por. Nothing is good, I see, without respect: Methinks it sounds much sweeter than by day.

Ner. Silence bestows that virtue on it, madam. Por. The crow doth sing as sweetly as the lark When he is attended, and I thank The nightingale, if she should sing by day, When every goose is cackling, would be thought No better a musician than the wren. How many things by season season's are To their right praise and true perfection! Peace, ho! the moon sleeps with Endymion And would not be awaked. [Music ceases.]

Lor. That is the voice, Or I am much deceiv'd, of Portia. [cuckoo
Por. He knows me as the blind man knows the By the bad voice.

Lor. Dear lady, welcome home. Por. We have been praying for our husbands' healths, Which speed, we hope, the better for our words. Are they return'd?

Por. Madam, they are not yet;
But there is come a messenger before, To signify their coming.

Por. Go in, Nerissa; Give order to my servants that they take No note at all of our being absent hence; Nor you, Lorenzo; Jessica, nor you. [A tucket sounds.

Lor. Your husband is at hand; I hear his trumpet: We are no tell-tales, madam; fear you not. Por. This night methinks is but the daylight sick; It looks a little paler: 'tis a day Such as the day is when the sun is hid.

Enter Bassanio, Antonio, Gratiano, and their followers.

Bass. We should hold day with the Antipodes,
If you would walk in absence of the sun.

Por. Let me give light, but let me not be light; For a light wife doth make a heavy husband, And never be Bassanio so for me; [lord. But God sort all! Your are welcome home, my Bass. I thank you, madam. Give welcome to my This is the season, thou art Antipater's [friend, To whom I am so infinitely bound.

Por. You should in all sense be much bound to For, as I hear, he was much bound for you. [him,
Ant. No more than I am well acquitted of.

Por. You are very welcome to our house: It must appear in other ways than words, Therefore I scant this breathing courtesy.

Gra. [To Ner.] By yonder moon I swear you do In faith, I gave it to the judge's clerk: [me wrong;
Would he were gelt that had it, for my part, Since you do take it, love, so much at heart.

Por. A quarrel, ho, already! what's the matter? Gra. About a hoop of gold, a paistry ring That she did give me, whose posy was For all the world like cutler's poetry Upon a knife, 'Love me, and leave me not.' Ner. What talk you of the posy or the value? You swore to me, when I did give it you, That you would wear it till your hour of death And that it should lie with you in your grave: Though not for me, yet for your vehement oaths, You should have been respective and have kept it. Gra. He will wear it if he live to be a man.

Ner. Ay, if a woman live to be a man.

Gra. Now, by this hand, I gave it to a youth, A kind of boy, a little scrubbed boy, No higher than thyself, the judge's clerk, A prating boy, that begg'd it as a fee: I could not deny it but you see my finger.

Por. You were to blame! I must be plain with you, To part so slightly with your wife's first gift; A thing stuck on with oaths upon your finger And so riveted with faith unto your flesh. I gave my love a ring and made him swear Never to part with it; and he kept his word; I dare be sworn for him he would not leave it Nor pluck it from his finger, for the wealth That the world masters. Now, in faith, Gratiano, You give your wife too unkind a cause of grief: An't were to me, I should be mad at it. Bass. [Aside] Why, I were loath to cut my left And swear I lost the ring defending it. [hand off, Gra. My Lord Bassanio gave his ring away Unto the judge that begg'd it and indeed Deserved it too; and then, his boy, the clerk, That took such pains in writing, he begg'd mine; And neither man nor master would take aught But the two rings.

Por. What ring gave you, my lord? Not that, I hope, which you received of me. Bass. If I could add a lie unto a fault, I would deny it; but you see my finger Hath not the ring upon it; it is gone. Por. Even so void is your false heart of truth. By heaven, I will ne'er come in your bed Until I see the ring.

Ner. Till I again see mine. Bass. Sweet Portia, If you did know to whom I gave the ring, If you did know for whom I gave the ring, And would conceive for what I gave the ring, And how unwillingly I left the ring, When nought would be accepted but the ring, You would abate the strength of your displeasure. Por. If you had known the virtue of the ring, Or half her worthiness that gave the ring, Or your own honour to contain the ring, You would not then have parted with the ring. What man there is so much unreasonable, If you had pleased to have defended it With any terms of zeal, wanted the modesty To urge the thing held as a ceremony? Nerissa teaches me what to believe: I'll die for 'till she has worn the ring.

Bass. No, by my honour, madam, by my soul, No woman had it, but a civil doctor, Which did refuse three thousand ducats of me And begg'd the ring; the which I did deny him And suffer'd him to go displeased away; Even he that did uphold the very life Of my dear friend. What should I say, sweet lady? I was enforced to send it after him; I was best with shame and courtesy; My honour would not let ingratitude So much besmear it. Pardon me, good lady;
ACT V.

THE MERCHANT OF VENICE.

SCENE I.

For, by these blessed candles of the night,
Had you been there, I think you would have begg’d
The ring of me to give the worthy doctor.

Por. Let not that doctor e’er come near my house:
Since he hath got the jewel that I loved,
And that which you did swear to keep for me,
I will become as liberal as you:
I’ll not deny him any thing I have,
No, not my body nor my husband’s bed:
Know him I shall, I am well sure of it:
Lie not a night from home; watch me like Argus:
If you do not, if I be left alone,
Now, by mine honour, which is yet mine own,
I’ll have that doctor for my bedfellow.

Ner. And I his clerk; therefore be well advised
How you do leave me to mine own protection.

Gra. Well, do you so: let not me take him, then;
For if I do, I’ll mar the young clerk’s pen.

Ant. I am the unhappy subject of these quarrels.
Por. Sir, grieve not you; you are come not-withstanding.

Bass. Portia, forgive me this enforced wrong;
And, in the hearing of these many friends,
I swear to thee, even by thine own fair eyes,
Wherein I see myself—

Por. Mark you but that!
In both my eyes he doubly sees himself;
In each eye, one: swear by your double self,
And there’s an oath of credit.

Bass. Nay, but hear me:
Pardon this fault, and by my soul I swear
I never more will break an oath with thee.

Ant. I once did lend my body for his wealth;
Which, but for him, that had your husband’s ring,
Had quite miscarried: I dare be bound again,
My soul upon the forfeit, that your lord
Will never more break faith advisedly.

Por. Then you shall be his surety. Give him this
And bid him keep it better than the other.

Ant. Here, Lord Bassanio; swear to keep this ring,

Bass. By heaven, it is the same I gave the doctor!

Por. I had it of him; pardon me, Bassanio;
For, by this ring, the doctor lay with me.

Ner. And pardon me, my gentle Gratiano;
For that same scrubbed boy, the doctor’s clerk,
In lieu of this last night did lie with me.

Gra. Why, this is like the mending of highways

In summer, where the ways are fair enough:
What, are we cuckolds ere we have deserved it?

Por. Speak not so grossly. You are all amazed:
Here is a letter; read it at your leisure;
It comes from Padua, from Bellario:
There you shall find that Portia was the doctor,
Nerissa there her clerk: Lorenzo here
Shall witness I set forth as soon as you
And even but now return’d; I have not yet
Enter’d my house. Antonio, you are welcome;
And I have better news in store for you
Than you expect: unseal this letter soon;
There you shall find three of your argosies
Are richly come to harbour suddenly:
You shall not know by what strange accident
I chanced on this letter.

Ant. I am dumb.

Bass. Were you the doctor and I knew you not?

Gra. Were you the clerk that stolc me cucksold?

Ner. Ay, but the clerk that never means to do it,
Unless he live until he be a man.

Bass. Sweet doctor, you shall be my bedfellow:
When I am absent, then lie with my wife.

Ant. Sweet lady, you have given me life and living;
For here I read for certain that my ships
Are safely come to road.

Por. How now, Lorenzo!

My clerk hath some good comforts too for you.

Ner. Ay, and I’ll give them him without a fee.

There do I give to you and Jessica,
From the rich Jew, a special deed of gift,
After his death, of all he dies possess’d of.

Lor. Fair ladies, you drop mamma in the way
Of starved people.

Por. It is almost morning,
And yet I am sure you are not satisfied
Of these events at full. Let us go in;
And charge us there upon inter’gatories,
And we will answer all things faithfully.

Gra. Let it be so: the first inter’gatory
That my Nerissa shall be sworn on is,
Whether till the next night she had rather stay,
Or go to bed now, being two hours to day:
But were the day come, I should wish it dark,
That I were couching with the doctor’s clerk.

Well, while I live I’ll fear no other thing
So sore as keeping safe Nerissa’s ring. [Exeunt.

Solano. I never heard a passion so confus’d,
So strange, outrageous, and so variable,
As the dog Jew did utter in the streets:
“My daughter!—O my ducats!—O my daughter!
Fled with a Christian!—O my Christian ducats!
Justifies! the law! my ducats, and my daughter!

ACT I.

SCENE I.—Orchard of Oliver's house.

Enter Orlando and Adam.

Orl. As I remember, Adam, it was upon this fashion bequeathed me by will but poor a thousand crowns, and, as thou sayest, charged my brother, on his blessing, to breed me well: and there begins my sadness. My brother Jaques he keeps at school, and report speaks goldenly of his profit: for my part, he keeps me rustically at home, or, to speak more properly, stays me here at home unkept; for call you that keeping for a gentleman of my birth, that differs not from the stalling of an ox? His horses are bred better; for, besides that they are fair with their feeding, they are taught their manage, and to that end riders dearly hired: but I, his brother, gain nothing under him but growth; for the which his animals on his dunghills are as much bound to him as I. Besides this nothing that he so plentifully gives me, the something that nature gave me his countenance seems to take from me: he lets me feed with his hinds, bars me the place of a brother, and, as much as in him lies, mines my gentility with my education. This is it, Adam; that grieves me; and the spirit of my father, which I think is within me, begins to mutiny against this servitude: I will no longer endure it, though yet I know no wise remedy how to avoid it.

Adam. Yonder comes my master, your brother.

Orl. Go apart, Adam, and thou shalt hear how he will shake me up.

Enter Oliver.

Orl. Now, sir! what make you here?

Orl. Nothing: I am not taught to make anything.

Orl. What man are you then, sir?

Orl. Marry, sir. I am helping you to mar that which God made, a poor unworthy brother of yours, with idleness.

Orl. Marry, sir, be better employed, and be naught awhile.

Orl. Shall I keep your logs and cat husks with them? What prodigal portion have I spent, that I should come to such penury?

Orl. Know you where you are, sir?

Orl. O, sir, very well: here in your orchard.

Orl. Know you before whom, sir?

Orl. Ay, better than him I am before knows me. I know you are my eldest brother; and, in the gentle condition of blood, you should so know me. The courtesy of nations allows you my better, in that you are the first-born; but the same tradition takes not away my blood, were there twenty brothers betwixt us: I have as much of my father in me as you; albeit, I confess, your coming before me is nearer to his reverence.

Orl. What, boy?

Orl. Come, come, elder brother, you are too young in this.

Orl. Wilt thou lay hands on me, villain?

Orl. I am no villain; I am the youngest son of Sir Rowland de Boys; he was my father, and he is thrice a villain that says such a father begot villains. Wilt thou not my brother, I would not take this hand from thy throat till this other had pulled out thy tongue for saying so: thou hast milled on thyself.

Adam. Sweet masters, be patient: for your father's remembrance, be at accord.

Orl. Let me go, I say.

Orl. I will not, till I please: you shall hear me. My father charged you in his will to give me good education: you have trained me like a peasant, obscuring and hiding from me all gentleman-like qualities. The spirit of my father grows strong in me, and I will no longer endure it: therefore allow me such exercises as may become a gentleman, or give me the poor allotrary my father left me by testament; with that I will go buy my fortunes.

Orl. And what will thou do? beg, when that is spent? Well, sir, get you in: I will not long be troubled with you; you shall have some part of your will: I pray you, leave me.

Orl. I will no further offend you than becomes me for my good.

Orl. Get you with him, you old dog.

Adam. Is 'old dog' my reward? Most true, I have lost my teeth in your service. God be with my old master! He would not have spoke such a word. [Exit Orlando and Adam.]

Oli. Is it even so? begin you to grow upon me? I will disyse my rankness, and yet give no thousand crowns neither. Holla, Dennis!

Enter Dennis.

Den. Calls your worship?

Oli. Was not Charles, the Duke's wrestler, here to speak with me?

Den. So please you, he is here at the door and importunes access to you.

Oli. Call him in. [Exit Dennis.] 'T will be a good way; and to-morrow the wrestling is.

Enter Charles.

Cha. Good morrow to your worship. Oli. Good Monsieur Charles, what's the new news at the new court?

Cha. There's no news at the court, sir, but the old news: that is, the old Duke is banished by his younger brother the new Duke: and three or four loving lords have put themselves into voluntary exile with him, whose lands and revenues enrich the new Duke; therefore he gives them good leave to wander. Oli. Can you tell if Rosalind, the Duke's daughter, be banished with her father?

Cha. O, no; for the Duke's daughter, her cousin, so loves her, being ever from their cradles bred together, that she would have followed her exile, or have died to stay behind her. She is at the court, and no less beloved of her uncle than his own daughter; and never two ladies loved as they do.

Oli. Where will the old Duke live?

Cha. They say he is already in the forest of Arden, and a many merry men with him; and there they live like the old Robin Hood of England: they say many young gentlemen flock to him every day, and fleet the time carelessly, as they did in the golden world.

Oli. What, you wrestle to-morrow before the new Duke?

Cha. Marry, do I, sir; and I came to acquaint you with a matter. I am given, sir, secretly to understand that your younger brother Orlando hath a design against thee by poison, entwined in his appear to try a fall. To-morrow, sir, I wrestle for my credit; and he that escapes me without some broken limb shall acquit him well. Your brother is but young and tender; and, for your love, I would be loath to foil him, as I must, for my own honour, if he come in: therefore, out of due love to you, I came hither to acquaint you withal, that either you might stay him from his intention or brook such disgrace well as he shall run into, in that it is a thing of his own search and altogether against my will.

Oli. Charles, I thank thee for thy love to me, which thou shalt find I will most kindly requite. I had myself notice of my brother's purpose herein and have by underhand means laboured to dissuade him from it, but he is resolute. I'll tell thee, Charles: it is the stoutest young fellow of France, full of ambition, an envious emulator of every man's good parts, a secret and villainous contriver against me his natural brother: therefore use thy discretion; I had as lie then didst break his neck as his finger. And thou wert best look to 't; for if thou dost him any slight disgrace or if he do not mightily grace himself on thee, he will put such a device as he by some treacherous device and never leave thee till he hath taken thy life by some indirect means or other; for, I assure thee, and almost with tears I speak it, there is not one so young and so villainous this day living. I speak but brotherly of him; but should I anaomize him to thee as he is, I must blush and weep and thou must look pale and wonder.

Cha. I am heartily glad I came hither to you. If he come to-morrow, I'll give him his payment: if ever he go alone again, I'll never wrestle for prize money, and I'll keep my word.

Oli. Farewell, good Charles. [Exit Charles.] Now will I stir this gamerster: I hope I shall see an end of him; for my soul, yet I know not why, hates nothing more than he. Yet he's gentle, never schooled and yet learned, full of noble device, of all sorts engagingly disposed, and indeed so much in the heart of the world, and especially of my own people, who best know him, that I am altogether misprised: but it shall not be so long: this wrestler shall clear all: nothing remains but that I kindle the boy thither; which now I'll go about. [Exit.

SCENE II.—Lawn before the Duke's palace.

Enter Celia and Rosalind.

Cel. I pray thee, Rosalind, sweet my coz, be merry. Ros. Dear Celia, I show more mirth than I am mistress of; and would you yet I were merrier? Unless you could teach me to forget a banished father, you must not learn me how to remember any extraordinary pleasure.

Cel. Herein I see thou lov'est me not with the full weight that I love thee. If my uncle, thy banished father, had disdained thee but now as I did, thou hadst been still with me, I could have taught my love to take thy father for mine: so wouldest thou, if the truth of thy love to me were so rigorously tempered as mine is to thee.

Ros. Well, I will forget the condition of my estate, to rejoice in yours.

Cel. You know my father hath no child but I, nor none is like to have: and, truly, when he dies, thou shalt be his heir, for what he hath taken away from thy father perforce, I will render thee again in affection; by mine honour, I will; and when I break that oath, let me burn monster: therefore, my sweet Rose, my dear Rose, be merry.

Ros. From henceforth I will, coz, and devise sports. Let me see: what think you of falling in love?

Cel. Marry, I prithee, do, to make sport withal: but love no man in good earnest, nor no further in all sport neither; for I do see before me to try a fall. To-morrow, sir, I wrestle for my credit; and he that escapes me without some broken limb shall acquit him well. Your brother is but young and tender; and, for your love, I would be loath to foil him, as I must, for my own honour, if he come in: therefore, out of due love to you, I came hither to acquaint you withal, that either you might stay him from his intention or brook such disgrace well as he shall run into, in that it is a thing of his own search and altogether against my will.

SCENE II.

Touch. No, by mine honour, but I was bid to come for you.

Ros. Where learned you that oath, fool?

Touch. Of a certain knight that swore by his honour they were good pancakes and swore by his honour the mustard was naught: now I'll stand to it, the pancakes were naught and the mustard was good, and yet was not the knight forsworn.

Cei. How prove you that, in the great heap of your knowledge?

Ros. Ay, marry, now unnuzzle your wisdom.

Touch. Stand you both forth now: stroke your chins, and swear by your beards that I am a knave.

Cei. By our beards, if we had them, thou art.

Touch. By my knavery, if I had it, then I were; but if you swear by that that is not, you are not forsworn: no more was this knight, swearing by his honour, for he never had any; or if he had, he had sworn it away before ever he saw those pancakes or that mustard.

Cei. Well said, who is't thou meanest?

Touch. One that old Frederick, your father, loves.

Cei. My father's love is enough to honour him: enough! speak no more of him; you'll be whipped for taxation one of these days.

Touch. The more pity, that fools may not speak wisely what wise men do foolishly.

Cei. By my troth, thou sayest true; for since the little wit that fools have was silenced, the little foolery that wise men have makes a great show.

Here comes Monsieur Le Beau.

Ros. With his mouth full of news. [young.

Cei. Which he will put on us, as pigeons feed their Ros. Then shall we be news-crumped. [able.

Cei. All the better; we shall be the more market-

Enter Le Beau.

Bon jour, Monsieur Le Beau: what's the news?

Le Beau. Fair princess, you have lost much good Cei. Sport! of what colour? [sport.

Le Beau. What colour, madam! how shall I answer Ros. As wit and fortune will. [you?

Touch. Or as the Destinies decree.

Cei. Which is, as I say, a little matter.

Touch. Nay, if I keep not my rank,— Ros. Thou lostest thy old smell.

Le Beau. You amaze me, ladies: I would have told you of good wrestling, which you have lost the sight of.

Ros. Yet tell us the manner of the wrestling.

Le Beau. I will tell you the beginning; and, if it please your ladyships, you may see the end; for the best is yet to do; and here, where you are, they are coming to perform it.

Cei. Well, the beginning, that is dead and buried. Le Beau. There comes an old man and his three sons.— Cei. I could match this beginning with an old tale.

Le Beau. Three proper young men, of excellent growth and presence.

Ros. With bills on their necks, 'Be it known unto all men by these presents,' Le Beau. The eldest of the three wrestled with Charles, the duke's wrestler; which Charles in a moment threw him and broke three of his ribs, that there is little hope of life in him: so he served the second, that is, the crudest. Youonder they lie; the poor old man, their father, making such pitiful dole over them that all the beholders take his part with weep- Ros. Alas! [ing.

Touch. But what is the sport, monsieur, that the ladies have lost?

Le Beau. Why, this that I speak of.

Touch. Thus men may grow wiser every day: it is the first time that ever I heard breaking of ribs was sport for ladies.

Cei. Or I, I promise thee.

Ros. But is there any else longs to see this broken music in his sides? is there yet another dotes upon rib-breaking? Shall we see this wrestling, cousin? Le Beau. You must, if you stay here: for here is the place appointed for the wrestling, and they are ready to perform it.

Cei. Yonder, sure, they are coming: let us now stay and see it.

Flourish. Enter Duke Frederick, Lords, Orlando, Charles, and Attendants.

Duke F. Come on: since you the youth will not be entreated, his own peril on his forwardness.

Ros. Is yonder the man?

Le Beau. Even he, madam. [fully.

Cei. Alas, he is too young! yet he looks successes.

Duke F. How now, daughter and cousin! are you crept hither to see the wrestling?

Ros. Ay, my liege, so please you give us leave.

Duke F. You will take little delight in it. I can tell you; there is such odds in the man. In pity of the challenger's youth I would fain dissuade him, but he will not be entreated. Speak to him, ladies; see if you can move him.

Cei. Call him hither, good Monsieur Le Beau.

Duke F. Well done: I'll not be by.

Le Beau. Monsieur the challenger, the princesses call for you.

Orl. I attend them with all respect and duty.

Ros. Young man, have you challenged Charles the wrestler?

Orl. No, fair princess; he is the general challenger: I come but in, as others do, to try with him the strength of your youth.

Cei. Young gentleman, your spirits are too bold for your years. You have seen cruel proof of this man's strength: if you saw yourself with your eyes and knew yourself with your judgment, the fear of your adventure would counsel you to a more equal enterprise. We pray you, for your own sake, to embrace your own safety and give over this attempt.

Ros. Do, young sir; your reputation shall not therefore be misprised: we will make it our suit to the duke that the wrestling might be put forward.

Orl. I beseech you, punish me not with your hard thoughts; wherein I confess me much guilty, to deny so fair and excellent ladies any thing. But let your fair eyes and gentle wishes go with me to my trial: wherein if I be foiled, there is but one shame that was never triumph; if killed, but one dead that is willing to be so: I shall do my friends no wrong, for I have none to lament me, the world no injury, for in it I have nothing: only in the world I fill up a place, which may be better supplied when I have made it empty.

Ros. The little strength that I have, I would it were with you.

Cei. And mine, to eke out hers. [in you!

Ros. Fare you well: pray heaven I be deceived Cei. Your heart's desires be with you!

Char. Come, where is this young gallant that is so desirous to lie with his mother earth?

Orl. Ready, sir; but his will hath in it a more modest working.

Duke F. You shall try but one fall.

Orl. Nay, I warrant your grace, you shall not entreat him to be more: these, that have so mightily persuaded him from a first.

Orl. An you mean to mock me after, you should not have mocked me before: but come your ways.

Ros. Now Hercules be thy speed, young man!

Cei. I would I were invisible, to catch the strong fellow by the hand. [They wrestle.

Ros. O excellent young man!

Cei. If I had a thunderbolt in mine eye, I can tell who should down. [Shout. Charles is thrown.

Duke F. No more, no more.
Ovl. Yes, I beseech your grace; I am not yet well breathed.

_Duke F._ How dost thou, Charles?

_Le Beau._ He cannot speak, my lord.

_Duke F._ Bear him away. What is thy name, young man?

Ovl. Orlando, my liege; the youngest son of Sir Rowland de Boys.

[man else:]

_Duke F._ I would thou hast been son to some

The world esteem'd thy father honourable,
But I did find him still mine enemy; [deed,
Thou shouldst have better pleased me with this
Hast thou not come another day in another house,
But fare thee well; thou art a gallant youth:
I would thou hast told me of another father.

_[Exeunt Duke Fred., train, and Le Beau._

_Cel._ Were I my father, coz, would I do this?

_Ovl._ I am more proud to be Sir Rowland's son,
His youngest son; and would not change that call
To be adopted heir to Frederick. [ing,

_Ros._ My father loved Sir Rowland as his soul,
And all the world was of my father's mind:
Had I before known this young man his son,
I should have given him tears unto entreaties,
Ere he should thus have ventured.

_Cel._ Gentle cousin,

Let us go thank him and encourage him:
My father's rough and envious disposition
Sticks me at heart. Sir, you have well deserved:
If you do keep your promises in love
But justly, as you have exceeded all promise,
Your mistress shall be happy.

_Ros._ Gentleman,

[Giving him a chain from her neck.

Wear this for me, one out of suits with fortune,
That could give more, but that her hand lacks
Shall we go, cousin? [means.

_Cel._ Ay. Fare you well, fair gentleman.

_Ovl._ Can I not say, I thank you? My better _parts

Are all thrown down, and that which here stands
Is but a quaintain, a mere lifeless block. [fortunes;

_Ros._ He calls me back: my pride fell with my
I'll ask him what he would. 'Did you call, sir?
Sir, you have wrestled well and overthrown
More than your enemies.

_Cel._ Will you go, coz?

_Ros._ Have we with you. Fare you well.

_[Exeunt Rowland and Celia._

_Ovl._ What passion hangs these weights upon my tongue?

I cannot speak to her, yet she urged conference.
O poor Orlando, thou art overthrown!
Or Charles or something weaker masters thee.

_[Re-enter Le Beau._

_Le Beau._ Good sir, I do in friendship counsel you
To leave this place. Albeit you have deserved
High commendation, true applause and love,
Yet such is now the duke's condition
That he mustabuse all that you have done.
The duke is humourous! what he is indeed,
More suits you to conceive than I to speak of.

_Ovl._ I thank you, sir: and, pray you, tell me this;
Which of the two was daughter of the duke
That here was at the wrestling? [manners;

_Le Beau._ Neither his daughter, if we judge by
But yet indeed the lesser is his daughter:
The other is daughter to the banish'd duke,
And here detain'd by her usurping uncle,
To keep his daughter company; whose loves
Are dearer than the natural bond of sisters.
But I, and every one of you, my lord.
Hath ta'en displeasure 'gainst his gentle niece,
Grounded upon no other argument
But that the people praise her for her virtues
And pity her for her good father's sake;

And, on my life, his malice 'gainst the lady
Will suddenly break forth. Sir, fare you well:
Hereafter, in a better world than this,
I shall desire more love and knowledge of you.

_Ovl._ I rest much bounden to you: fare you well.

_[Exit Le Beau._

Thus must I from the smoke into the smoother;
From tyrant duke unto a tyrant brother:
But heavenly Rosalind!

_[Exit._

SCENE III.—A room in the palace.

_Enter Celia and Rosalind._

_Cel._ Why, cousin! why, Rosalind! Cupid have have mercy! not a word?

_Ros._ Not one to throw at a dog.

_Cel._ No, thy words are too precious to be cast away upon curs; throw some of them at me; come, lame me with reasons.

_Ros._ Then there were two cousins laid up: when the one should be lame with reasons and the other mad without any.

_Cel._ But is all this for your father?

_Ros._ No, some of it is for my child's father.
O, how full of briers is this working-day world!

_Cel._ They are but burs, cousin, thrown upon thee in holiday foolery: if we walk not in the trodden paths, our very petticoats will catch them.

_Ros._ I could shake them off my coat: these burs
are in my heart.

_Cel._ Hem them away. [him.

_Ros._ I would try, if I could cry 'hem' and have _Cel._ Come, come, wrestle with thy affections.

_Ros._ O, they take the part of a better wrestler than myself!

_Cel._ O, a good wish upon you! you will try in time, in despite of a fall. But, turning these jests out of service, let us talk in good earnest: is it possible, on such a sudden, you should fall into so strong a liking with old Sir Rowland's youngest son?

_Ros._ The duke my father loved his father dearly.

_Cel._ Doth it therefore ensue that you should love his son dearly? By this kind of cliese, I should hate him, for my father hated his father dearly;
yet I hate not Orlando.

_Ros._ No, faith, hate him not, for my sake.

_Cel._ Why should I not? doth he not deserve well?

_Ros._ Let me love him for that, and do you love him because I do. Look, here comes the duke.

_Cel._ With his eyes full of anger.

_[Enter Duke Frederick, with Lords._

_Duke F._ Mistress, dispatch you with your safest
And get you from our court. [haste

_Ros._ Me, uncle.

_Duke F._ You, cousin;

Within these ten days if that thou be'st found
So near our public court as twenty miles,
Then diest for it.

_Ros._ I do beseech your grace,
Let me the knowledge of my fault bear with me;
If with myself I hold intelligence
Or have acquaintance with mine own desires,
If that I do not dream or be not frantic,—
As I do trust I am not,—then, dear uncle,
Never so much as in a thought unborne
Did I offend your highness.

_Duke F._ Thus do all traitors:
If their purgation did consist in words,
They are as innocent as grace itself;
Let it suffice thee that I trust thee not.

_Ros._ Yet your mistrust cannot make me a traitor:
Tell me whereon the likelihood depends: enough.

_Duke F._ Thou art thy father's daughter; there's

_Ros._ So was I when your highness took his duke—
So was I when your highness banish'd him: [dom;

_Treason is not inherited. my lord;_
Or, if we did derive it from our friends,
What's that to me? my father was no traitor:
Then, good my liege, mistake me not so much
To think my poverty is treacherous.
Cel. Dear sovereign, hear me speak.
Duke F. Ay, Celia; we stay'd her for your sake,
Else she had with her father ranged along.
Cel. I did not then entreat to have her stay;
It was your pleasure and your own remorse:
I was too young then to value her;
But now I know her: if she be a traitor,
Why so am I; we still have slept together,
Rose at an instant, learn'd, play'd, cat together,
And whereas'er we went, like Juno's swans,
Still we went coupled and inseparable:
She is too subtle for thee; and her
Very silence and her patience [smoothness].
Speak to the people, and they pity her.
Thou art a fool: she robs thee of thy name;
And thou wilt show more bright and seem more
When she is gone. Then open not thy lips:
Firm and irrevocable is my doom.
Which I have passed upon her; she is banish'd.
Cel. Pronounce that sentence then on me, my
I cannot live out of her company. [Verse: Duke:]
If you oust the time, upon mine honour, [self:]
And in the greatness of my word, you die.
[Exeunt Duke Frederick and Lords.
Cel. O my poor Rosalind, whither wilt thou go?
Will thou change fathers? I will give thee mine.
I change thee; be not thou more grieved than I am.
Ros. I have more cause.
Cel. Thou hast not, cousin;
Prithee, be cheerful: know'st thou not, the duke
Hath banish'd me, his daughter?
Ros. That he hath not.
Cel. No, hath not? Rosalind lacks then the love
Which teacheth thee that thou and I am one:
Shall we be sunder'd? shall we part, sweet girl?

No: let my father seek another heir.
Therefore devise with me how we may fly,
Whither to go and what to bear with us;
And do not seek to take your change upon you,
To bear your griefs yourself and leave me out;
For, by this heaven, now at our sorrows pale,
Say what thou canst, I'll go along with thee.
Ros. Why, wilt thou shall we go?
Cel. To seek my uncle in the forest of Arden.
Ros. Alas, what danger will it be to us,
Maid's as we are, to travel forth so far!
Beauty provoketh thieves sooner than gold.
Cel. I'll put myself in poor and mean attire
And with a kind ofumber smirch my face,
The like you: that we pass along
And never stir assailants.
Ros. Were it not better,
Because that I am more than common tall,
That I did suit me all points like a man?
A gallant curtle-axe upon my thigh,
A bow-spear in my hand; and — in my heart
Lie there what hidden woman's fear there will —
We'll have a swashing and a martial outside,
As many other mannish cowards have
That do outface it with their semblances.
Cel. What shall I call thee when thou art a man?
Ros. I'll have no worse a name than Jove's own
And therefore look you call me Ganymede. [Page:
But what will you be call'd?
Cel. Something that hath a reference to my state;
No longer Celia, but Alleena.
Ros. But, cousin, what if these assay'd to steal
The clearness in a fool out of your father's court?
Would he not be a comfort to our travel?
Cel. He'll go along o'er the wide world with me;
Leave me alone to woo him. 'Let's away,
And get our jewels and our wealth together,
Devise the fittest time and safest way
To hide us from pursuit that will be made
After my flight. Now go we in content
To liberty and not to banishment.

ACT II.

SCENE I.—The Forest of Arden.

Enter Duke senior, Amiens, and two or three Lords, like foresters.

Duke S. Now, my co-mates and brothers in exile, Hath not old custom made this life more sweet
Than that of painted pomp? Are not these woods
More free from peril than the curvius court?
Here feel we but the penalty of Adam,
The seasons' difference, as the icy frag
And shrill chiding of the winter's wind,
Which, when it bites and blows upon my body,
Even till I shrink with cold, I smile and say
This is no slattery: these are counsellors
That feelingly persuade me I am am.
Sweet are the uses of adversity,
Which, like the toad, ugly and venemous,
Wears yet a precious jewel in his head:
And this our life exempt from public haunt
Finds tongues in trees, books in the running brooks,
Sermons in stones and good in every thing,
I would not change it.

Ami. Happy is your grace,
That can translate the stubbornness of Fortune
Into so quiet and so sweet a style
Duke S. Come, shall we go and kill us venison?
And yet it irks me the poor dappled foals,
Being native burghers of this desert city,
Should in their own confines with forked heads
Have their round haunches gored.

ACT II.
And never stays to greet him; 'Ay,' quoth Jaques, 'Sweep on, you fat and greasy citizens; 'Tis just the fashion: wherefore do you look Upon that poor and broken bankrupt there? Thus most of the virtuous live and thrive Through the body of the country, city, court. Yea, and of this our life, wearing that we Are mere usurpers, tyrants, and what 's worse, To fright the animals and to kill them up In their assign'd and native dwelling-place. [tion? Duke F. And did you leave him in this contemplation? Sec. Lord. We did, my lord, weeping and com- Upon the sobbing deer. [menting

Duke S. Show me the place:
I love to cope him in these sullen fits,
For then he's full of matter.

First Lord. I'll bring you to him straight.

[Exeunt.

SCENE II. — A room in the palace.

Enter Duke Frederick, with Lords.

Duke F. Can it be possible that no man saw them? It cannot be: some villains of my court Are of consent and sufferance in this.

First Lord. I cannot hear of any that did see her. The ladies, her attendants of her chamber, Saw her a-bed, and in the morning early They found the bed unmade and of their mistress.

Sec. Lord. My lord, the roynish clown, at whom so Your grace was wont to laugh, is also missing. [loft Hisperia, the princess' gentlewoman, Confesses that she secretly overheard Your daughter and her cousin much commend The part did in, and how he most distinguished That did but lately foil the sinnewy Charles; And she believes, wherever they are gone, That youth is surely in their company. [hither;

Duke F. Send to his brother; fetch that gallant If he be absent, bring his brother to me; I'll make him find him: do this suddenly, And let not search and inquisition quail To bring again these foolish runaways. [Exeunt.

SCENE III. — Before Oliver's house.

Enter Orlando and Adam, meeting.

Orl. Who's there? [master!
Adam. What, my young master? O my gentle O my sweet master! O you memory Of old Sir Rowland! why, what make you here? Why are you virtuous? why do people love you? And wherefore are you gentle, strong and valiant? Why would you be so fond to overcome The bonny priser of the humours duke? Your praise is come too swiftly home before you. Know you not, master, to some kind of men Their graces serve them but as enemies? No more do yours; your virtues, gentle master, Are sanctified and holy traitors to you. O, what a world is this, when what is comely Envenoms him that bears it!

Orl. Why, what's the matter? Adam. O unhappy youth! Come not within these doors; within this roof The enemy of all your graces lives: Your brother — no, no brother; yet the son — Yet not the son, I will not call him son Of him I was about to call his father — Hath beat his brains, and this night he means To burn the lodging where you now do lie And you within it: if he fall of that, He will have other means to cut you off. I overheard him and his practices. This is no place; this house is but a butchery: About it, fear it, do not enter it. [go? Orl. Why, whither, Adam, wouldst thou have me Adam. No matter whither, so you come not here. Orl. What, wouldst thou have me go and beg my food? Or with a base and boisterous sword enforce A thievish living on the common road? This I must do, or know not what to do: Yet this I will not do, do how I can; I rather will subject me to the malice Of a diverted blood and bloody brother. [crows, Adam. But do not so. I have five hundred The thrifty hire I saved under your father, Which I did store to be my foster-nurse When service should in my old limbs lie lame And unregarded age in corners thrown: Take that, and He that doth the ravens feed, Yea providently caters for the swallow Be comfort to my age? Here is the gold; All this I give you. Let me be your servant: Though I look old, yet I am strong and lusty; For in my youth I never did apply Hot and rebellious liquors in my blood, Nor did not with unashamed foreheads woo The means of weakness and delity; Therefore my age is as a lusty winter, Frosty, but kindly: let me go with you; I'll do the service of a younger man In all your business and necessities.

Orl. O good old man, how well in thee appears The constant service to the graceful world, When service sweet for duty, not for meal! Thou art not for the fashion of these times, Where none will sweet but for promotion, And having that, do chose their service up Even with the having: it is not so with thee. But, poor old man, thou prunest a rotten tree, That cannot so much as a blossom yield In lieu of all thy pains and husbandry. But come thy ways; we'll go along together, And ere we have thy youthful wages spent, We'll light upon some settled low content. Adam. Master, go on, and I will follow thee, To the last gasp, with truth and loyalty. From seventeen years till now almost fourscore Here lived I, but now live here no more. At seventeen years many their fortunes seek; But at fourscore it is too late a week: Yet fortune cannot recompense me better Than to die well and not my master's debtor.

SCENE IV. — The Forest of Arden.

Enter Rosalind for Ganymede, Celia for Aliena, and Touchstone.

Ros. O Jupiter, how weary are my spirits! Touch. I care not for my spirits, if my legs were not weary.
Ros. I would find in my heart to disgrace my man's apparel and to cry like a woman; but I must comfort the weaker vessel, as doublet and hose ought to show itself courageous to petticoat: therefore courage, good Aliena! Cel. I pray you, bear with me; I can go no further. Touch. For my part, I had rather bear with you than bear you; yet I should bear no cross if I did bear you, for I think you have no money in your purse.

Ros. Well, this is the forest of Arden. Touch. Ay, now am I in Arden; this is more fool 1 when I was at home, I knew in a better place: but travellers must be content.

Ros. Ay, be so, good Touchstone.

Enter Corin and Silvius.

Look you, who comes here; a young man and an old in solemn talk.
Cor. That is the way to make her seem you still.
Sil. O Corin, that thou know'st how I do love her!
Cor. I partly guess; for I have loved ere now.
Sil. No, Corin, being old, thou canst not guess,
Though in thy youth thou wast as true a lover
As ever sign'd upon a midnight pillow:
But if thy love were ever like to mine—
I assure I think did never man love so—
How many actions most ridiculous
Hast thou been drawn to by thy fantasy?
Cor. Into a thousand that I have forgotten.
Sil. O, thou dost then ne'er love so heartily!
If then remember'st not the slightest folly
That ever love did make thee run into,
Thou hast not loved:
Or if thou hast not sat as I do now,
Wearying thy hearer in thy mistress' praise,
Thou hast not loved:
Or if thou hast not broke from company
Abruptly, as my passion now makes me,
Thou hast not loved.
O Phebe, Phebe, Phebe! [Exit.
Ros. Alas, poor shepherd! searching of thy wound,
I have by hard adventure found mine own.
Touch. And I mine. I remember, when I was in love
I broke my sword upon a stone and bid him take that for coming a-night to Jane Smile; and I remember the kissing of her battlet and the cow's dugs that her pretty chotl hands had milked; and I remember the wearing of a peascod instead of her, from whom I took two coals and, giving her them again, said with weeping tears 'Wear these for my sake.'
We that are true lovers run into strange capers; but as all is mortal in nature, so is all nature in love mortal in folly.
Ros. Thou speak'st wiser than thou art ware of.
Touch. Nay, I shall ne'er be ware of mine own wit till I break my shins against it.
Ros. Jove, Jove! this shepherd's passion
Is much upon my fashion.
Touch. And mine; but it grows something stale in me.
Cel. I pray you, one of you question yond man
If he for gold will give us any food:
I faint almost to death.
Touch. Holla, you clown!
Ros. Peace, fool: he's not thy kinsman.
Cel. His name?
Ros. Jove, Jove! this shepherd's passion
Is much upon my fashion.
Cel. I pray you, one of you question yond man
If he for gold will give us any food:
I faint almost to death.
Touch. Holla, you clown!
Ros. Peace, fool: he's not thy kinsman.
Cel. His name?
Ros. Peace, I say. Good even to you, friend.
Cel. And to you, gentle sir, and to you all.
Ros. I prithee, shepherd, if that's my cue or gold
Can in this desert place buy entertainment.
Bring us where we may rest ourselves and feed;
Here's a young maid with travel much oppress'd
And faints for succour.
Cel. Fair sir, I pity her
And wish, for her sake more than for mine own,
My fortunes were more able to relieve her;
But I am shepherd to another man
And do not shear the fleeces that I graze:
My master is of churlish disposition
And little recks to find the way to heaven
By doing deeds of hospitality:
Besides, his cote, his flocks and bounds of feed
Are now on sale, and at our sheepevote now,
By reason of his absence, there is nothing
That you will feed on; but what is, come see,
And in my voice most welcome shall you be.
Ros. What is he that shall buy his flock and pasture
And now will mend thy wages. I like this
And willingly could waste my time in it. [place,
Cor. Assuredly the thing is to be sold;
Go with me: if you like upon report
The soil, the profit and this kind of life,
I will your very faithful feeder be
And buy it with your gold right suddenly. [Exeunt.

SCENE V.—The forest.

Enter Amiens, Jaques, and others.

SONG.

Ami. Under the greenwood tree
Who loves to lie with me,
And turn his merry note
Unto the sweet bird’s throat,
Come hither, come hither, come hither:
Here shall he see
No enemy.
But winter and rough weather.

Jaq. More, more, I prithee, more.

Ami. It will make you melancholy, Monsieur Jaques.

Jaq. I thank it. More, more, more. I can suck melancholy out of a song, as a weasel sucks eggs.

Ami. My voice is ragged: I know I cannot please you.

Jaq. I do not desire you to please me; I do desire you to sing. Come, more; another stanza: call you 'em stanzas?

Ami. What you will, Monsieur Jaques.

Jaq. Nay, I care not for their names; they owe me nothing. Will you sing?

Ami. More at your request than to please myself.

Jaq. Well then, if ever I thank any man, I'll thank you; but that they call compliment is like the encounter of two dog-apes, and when a man thanks me heartily, methinks I have given him a penny and he reads me the beggarly thanks. Come, sing; and you that will not, hold your tongues.

Ami. Well, I'll end the song. Sirs, cover the while; the duke will drink under this tree. He hath been all this day to look you.

Jaq. And I have been all this day to avoid him.

He is too disputable for my company: 'Tis I think of as many matters as he, but I give heaven thanks and make no boast of them. Come, warble, come.

SONG.

Who doth ambition shun [All together here
And loves to live i' the sun,
Seeking the food he eats
And pleased with what he gets.
Come hither, come hither, come hither;
Here shall he see
No enemy.
But winter and rough weather.

Jaq. I'll give you a verse to this note that I made yesterday in despite of my invention.

Ami. And I'll sing it.

Jaq. Thus it goes:

If it do come to pass
That any man turn ass,
Leaving his wealth and case,
A stubborn will to please,
Ducdame, ducdame, ducdame:
Here shall he see
Gross fools as he.
An if he will come to me.

Ami. What's that 'ducdame'?

Jaq. 'Tis a Greek Invocation, to call fools into a circle. I'll go sleep, if I can; if I cannot, I'll rail against all the first-born of Egypt.
    Ami. And I'll go seek the duke: his banquet is prepared.
    [Exeunt severally.

SCENE VI.—The forest.

Enter Orlando and Adam.

Adam. Dear master, I can go no further: O, I die for food! Here lies a down, and measure out my grave. Farewell, kind master.

Orl. Why, how now, Adam! no greater heart in thee? Live a little; comfort a little; cheer thyself a little. If this uncouth forest yield any thing savage, I will either be food for it or bring it for food to thee. Thy conceit is nearer death than thy powers. For my sake be comfortable: hold death awhile at the arm's end: I will here be with thee presently; and if I bring thee not something to eat, I will give thee leave to die: but if thou diest before I come, thou art a mocker of my labour. Well said! thou lookest cheerily, and I'll be with thee quickly. Yet thou liest in the bleak air: come, I will bear thee to some shelter; and thou shalt not die for lack of a dinner, if there live any thing in this desert.

Cheerily, good Adam!
    [Exeunt.

SCENE VII.—The forest.

A table set out. Enter Duke senior, Amiens, and Lords like outlaws.

Duke S. I think he be transform'd into a beast;

For I can no where find him like a man.

First Lord. My lord, he is but even now gone.

Here was he merry, hearing of a song.

Here he was merry, hearing of a song.

Duke S. If he, compact of jars, grow musical,

We shall have shortly discord in the spheres.

Go, seek him: tell him I would speak with him.

Enter Jaques.

First Lord. He saves my labour by his own approach.

Duke S. Why, how now, monsieur! what a life

That your poor friends must woo your company?

What, you look sober?

Jaq. A fool, a fool! I met a fool i' the forest,

A motley fool; a miserable world!

As I do live by food, I met a fool:

Who laid him down and bask'd him in the sun,

And rai'd on Lady Fortune in good terms,

In good set terms and yet a motley fool.

'Good morrow, fool,' quoth I.

'No, sir,' quoth he,

'Call me no fool till heaven hath sent me fortune.'

And then he drew a dial from his poke,

And, looking on it with lack-lustre eye,

Says very wisely, 'It is ten o'clock;

Thus we may see, quoth he, 'how the world wags:

'It is but an hour ago since it was nine,

And after one hour more 'twill be eleven;

And so, from hour to hour, we ripec and ripe,

And then, from hour to hour, we rot and rot;

And thereby hangs a tale.' When I did hear

The motley fool thus moral on the dial,

My lungs began to crow like chanticleer,

That fools should be so deep-contemplative,

And I did laugh sans intermission

An hour by his dial. O noble fool!

A worthy fool! Motley's the only wear.

Duke S. What is this?

Jaq. O worthy fool! One that hath been a court-

And says, if ladies be young and fair,

They have the gift to know it; and in his brain,

Which is as dry as the remainder biscuit

After a voyage, he hath strange places cramm'd

With observation, which he winces, and pens

In mangled forms. O that I were a fool!

I am ambitious for a motley coat.

Duke S. Thou shalt have one.

Jaq. It is my only suit;

Provided that you weed your better judgments

Of all opinions that grow rank in them.

That I am wise, I must have charity

Withal, as large a charter as the wind,

To blow on whom I please; for so fools have;

And they that are most galled with my folly,

They most must laugh. And why, sir, must they so?

The 'why' is plain as way to parish church:

He that a fool doth very wisely hit

Doth very foolishly, although he smart,

Not to seem senseless of the bob: if not,

The wise man's folly is anonymized

Even by the squandering glimpses of the fool.'

I must give my name to one leave

To speak my mind, and I will through and through

Cleanse the foul body of the infected world,

If they will patiently receive my medicine.

[Do.

Duke S. Fie on thee! I can tell what thou wouldst

Jaq. What, for a counter, would I do but good?

Duke S. Most mischievous foul sin, in chiding

For thou thyself hast been a libertine,

As sensual as the brutish stint itself;

And all the embossed sores and headed evils,

That thou with license of free foot hast caught,

Wouldst thou discharge into the general world.

Jaq. Who is the wight that cries out Thus can there in any private party?

Doth it not flow as hugely as the sea,

Till that the weary very means do ebb?

What woman in the city do I name,

When that I say the city-woman bears

The cost of princes on unworthy shoulders?

Who can come in and say that I mean her,

When such a one as she she is her neighbour?

Or what is he of basest function

That says his bravery is not on my cost,

Thinking that I mean him, but therein suits

His folly to the metre of his speech?

Therein there; how then? what then? Let me see

My tongue hath wrong'd him: if it do him right,

Then he hath wrong'd himself: if he be free,

Why then my taxing like a wild-goose flies,

Unclaim'd of any man. But who comes here?

Enter Orlando, with his sword drawn.

Orl. Forbear, and eat no more.

Jaq. Why, I have eat none yet.

Orl. Nor shalt not, till necessity be served.

Jaq. Of what kind should this cock come of?

Duke S. If he be mad, man, by thy

Or else a rude despiser of good manners.

Duke S. What would you have? Your gentleness shall force

More than your force move us to gentleness.

Orl. I almost die for food; and let me have it.

Duke S. Sit down and feed, and welcome to our table.

Orl. Speak, you so gently? Pardon me. I pray you:

I thought that all things had been savage here;

And therefore put I on the countenance

Of stern commandment. But whate'er you are

That in this desert inaccessible,

Under the shade of melancholy boughs,

Lose and neglect the creeping hours of time;

If ever you were lock'd in a darksome cage,

If ever been where bells have knoll'd to church,
ACT III.

AS YOU LIKE IT.

If ever sat at any good man's feast,
And ever from your eyelids wiped a tear
That gentle was my strong enforcement be:
In the which hope I blush, and hide my sword.

_Duke S._ True is it that we have seen better days,
And have with holy bell beno knoll'd to church
And sat at good men's feasts and wiped our eyes
Of drops that sacred pity hath engender'd:
And therefore sit you down in gentleness
And take upon command what help we have
That to your wanting may be minister'd.

_Orl._ Then but forbear your food a little while,
Whiles, like a dox, I go to find my fawn
And give it food. There is an old poor man,
Who after me hath many a weary step
Limp'd in pure love: till he be first sufficed,
Oppress'd with two weak evils, age and hunger,
I will not touch a bit.

_Duke S._ Go find him out,
And we will nothing waste till you return.

_Orl._ I thank ye; and be bést for your good comfort! [Exit.

_Duke S._ Thou seest we are not all alone unhappy:
This wide and universal theatre
Presents more woeful pageants than the scene
Wherein we play in.

_Joe._ All the world's a stage,
And all the men and women merely players:
They have their exits and their entrances;
And one man in his time plays many parts,
His acts being seven ages. At first the infant,
Mewing and puking in the nurse's arms,
And then the whining school-boy, with his satchel
And shining morning face, creeping like snail
Unwillingly to school. And then the lover,
Sighing like furnace, with a woeful ballad
Made to his mistress' eyebrow. Then a soldier,
Full of strange oaths and bearded like the pard,
Jealous in honour, sudden and quick in quarrel,
Seeking the bubble reputation
Even in the cannon's mouth. And then the justice,
In fair round belly with good capon lined,
With eyes severe and beard of formal cut,
Full of wise saws and modern instances;
And so he plays his part. The sixth age shifts
Into the lean and slipper'd pantaloon,
With spectacles on nose and pouch on side,
His youthful hose, well sav'd, a world too wide
For his shrunk shank; and his big manly voice,
Turning again toward childish treble, pipes
And whistles in his sound. Last scene of all,
That ends this strange eventful history,
Is second childishness and mere oblivion,
Sans teeth, sans eyes, sans taste, sans every thing.

_Re-enter Orlando, with Adam._

_Duke S._ Welcome. Set down your venerable
And let him feed. [Burthen.

_Orl._ I thank you most for him.

_Adam._ So had you need;
I scarce can speak to thank you for myself.

_Duke S._ Welcome; fall to! I will not trouble you
As yet, to question you about your fortunes.
Give us some music; and, good cousin, sing.

_Song._

_Ami._ Blow, blow, thou winter wind,
Thou art not so unkind
As man's ingratitude;
Thy tooth is not so keen,
Because thou art not seen,
Although thy breath be rude.

Heigh-ho! sing, heigh-ho! into the green holly:
Most friendship is felning, most loving mere folly:
Then, heigh-ho, the holly!
This life is most jolly.

Freeze, freeze, thou bitter sky,
That dost not bite so nigh
As benefits forgot:
Though thou the waters warp,
Thy sting is not so sharp
As friend remember'd not.

Heigh-ho! sing, &c.

_Duke S._ If that you were the good Sir Rowland's
As you have whisper'd faithfully you were, [son
And as mine eye doth his effigies witness
Most truly liam'd and living in your face,
Be truly welcome hither: I am the duke
That loved your father: the residue of your fortune,
Go to my cave and tell me. Good old man,
Thou art right welcome as thy master is.
Support him by the arm. Give me your hand,
And let me all your fortunes understand. [Exeunt.

SCENE I. — A room in the palace.

_Enter Duke Frederick, Lords, and Oliver._

_Duke F._ Not see him since? Sir, sir, that cannot be:
But were I not the better part made mercy,
I should not seek an absent argument
Of my revenge, thou present. But look to it:
Find out thy brother, where soever he is;
Seek him with candle; bring him dead or living
Within this twelvemonth, or turn thou no more
To seek a living in our territory.
Thy lands and all things that thou dost call thine
Worth seizure do we seize into our hands,
Till thou canst quit thee by thy brother's mouth
Of what we think against thee.

_Ol._ O that your highness knew my heart in this!
I never loved my brother in my life!

_Duke F._ More villain thou. Well, push him out of doors;
And let my officers of such a nature
Make an extent upon his house and lands:
Do this expediently and turn him going. [Exeunt.

SCENE II. — The forest.

_Enter Orlando, with a paper._

_Orl._ Hang there, my verse, in witness of my love:
And thou, thrice-crowned queen of night, survey
With thy chaste eye, from thy pale sphere above,
Thy huntress' name that my full life doth sway.
O Rosalind! these trees shall be my books
And in their barks my thoughts I'll character;
That every eye which in this forest looks
Shall see thy virtuous witness'd every where.
Run, run, Orlando; carve on every tree
The fair, the chaste and unexpressive she. [Exit.

_Enter Corin and Touchstone._

_Cor._ And how like you this shepherd's life, Master Touchstone?

_Touch._ Truly, shepherd, in respect of itself, it is a good life; but in respect that it is a shepherd's life, it is naught. In respect that it is solitary, I like it very well; but in respect that it is private, it is a very vile life. Now, in respect it is in the fields, it pleases me well; but in respect it is not in the court, it is tedious. As it is a spare life, look you, it fits my humour well; but as there is no more plenty in it, it goes much against my stomach. How any the shepherd? Or if I the plenty of art and though I the property of rain is to wet and fire to burn; that good posture makes fat sheep, and I a great cause of the night is lasting of the sun; that he that hath learned no wit by nature nor art may complain of good breeding or comes of a very dull kindred.
ACT III.

SCENE II.

Touch. Such a one is a natural philosopher. Wast ever in court, shepherd? Cor. No, truly.

Touch. Then thou art damned.

Cor. Nay, I hope.

Touch. Truly, thou art damned like an ill-roasted egg, all on one side.

Cor. For not being at court? Your reason.

Touch. Why, if thou never wast at court, thou never sawest good manners; if thou never sawest good manners, then thy manners must be wicked; and wickedness is sin, and sin is damnation. Thou art in a jallous state, shepherd.

Cor. Not so. Touchstone; those that are good manners at the court are as ridiculous in the country as the behaviour of the country is most mockable at the court. Thou told me you salute not at the court, but you kiss your hands: that courtesy would be uncleanly, if courtiers were shepherds.

Touch. Instance briefly; come, instance.

Cor. Why, we are still handling our ewes, and their fells, you know, are greasy.

Touch. Why, do not your courtier's hands sweat? and is not the grease of a mutton as wholesome as the sweat of a man? Shallow, shallow. A better instance, I say; come, come.

Cor. Besides, our hands are hard.

Touch. Your lips will feel them the sooner. Shall again. A more sounder instance, come.

Cor. And they are often tarred over with the surgery of our sheep; and would you have us kiss tar? The courtier's hands are perfumed with civet.

Touch. Most shallow man! thou worms-meat, in respect of a good piece of flesh indeed! Learn of the wise, and suspend: civet is of a baser birth than tar, the very uneasily flux of a cat. Mend the instance, shepherd.

Cor. You are too courtly a wit for me: I'll rest.

Cor. Sir, I am a true labourer; I earn that I eat, get that I wear, owe no man hate, envy no man's happiness, glad of other men's good, content with my harm, and the greatest of my pride is to see my ewes graze and my lambs suck.

Touch. That is another simple sin in you, to bring the ewes and the rams together and to offer to get your living by the copulation of cattle; to be bazed to a bell-wether, and to betray a she-lamb of a twelve-month to a crooked-pated, old, euckoldly ram, out of all reasonable match. If thou beest not damned for this, the devil himself will have no shepherds; I cannot see else how thou shouldst scape.

Cor. Here comes young Master Ganymede, my new mistress's brother.

Enter Rosalind, with a paper, reading.

Ros. From the east to western Ind, No jewel is like Rosalind. Her worth, being mounted on the wind, That as the world-bears Rosalind, All the pictures fairest lined Are but black to Rosalind.

[Exeunt Corin and Touchstone.

Celn. Didst thou hear these lines?

Ros. O, yes, I heard all the toil, and more too; for some of them had in them more feet than the verses would bear.
ACT III.

AS YOU LIKE IT.

SCENE II.

Cel. That's no matter: the feet might bear the verses.

Ros. Ay, but the feet were lame and could not bear themselves without the verse and therefore stood lamely in the verse.

Cel. Didst thou ever hear without wondering how thy name should be hanged and carved upon these trees?

Ros. I was seven of the nine days out of the wonder before you came; for here look what I found on a palm-tree. It was never so berhymed since Pythian ages' time, that I was an Irish rat, which I can hardly remember.

Cel. Trow you who hath done this?

Ros. Is it a man?

Cel. And a chain, that you once wore, about his neck. Change you colour?

Ros. I prithee, who?

Cel. O Lord, Lord! is it a hard matter for friends to meet; but mountains may be removed with earthquakes and so encounter.

Ros. Nay, but who is it?

Cel. Is it possible?

Ros. Nay, I prithee now with most petitionary vehemence, tell me who it is.

Cel. O wonderful, wonderful, and yet again wonderful, and after that out of all as high as my heart.

Ros. Good my complexion! dost thou think, though I am carriaphile like a man, I have a doublet and hose in my disposition? One inch of delay more is a South-sea of discovery: I prithee, tell me who is it quickly, and speak apace. I would thou cou'dst answer, that thou might'st pour this concealed man out of thy mouth, as wine comes out of a narrow-mouthed bottle, either too much at once, or none at all. I prithee, take the cork out of thy mouth that I may drink thy tidings.

Cel. So you may put a man in your belly.

Ros. Be he of God's making? What manner of man? Is his head worth a hat, or his chin worth a

Cel. Nay, he hath but a little beard. [beard?

Ros. Why, God will send more, if the man will be thankful: let me stay the growth of his beard, if thou delay not the knowledge of his chin.

Cel. It is young Orlando, that tripped up the wrestler's heels and your heart in an instant.

Ros. Nay, but the devil take mocking: speak, sad brow and true maid.

Cel. I' faith, coz, 'tis he.

Ros. Orlando?

Cel. Orlando.

Ros. Alas the day! what shall I do with my doublet and hose? What did he when thou sawest him? What said he? How looked he? Wherein went he? What makes he here? Did he ask for me? Where remains he? How parted he with thee? and when shalt thou see him again? Answer me in one word.

Cel. You must borrow me Gargantua's mouth first: 'tis a word too great for any mouth of this age's size. To say ay and no to these particulars is more than to answer in a catechism.

Ros. But doth he know that I am in this forest and in man's apparel? Looks he as fresh as he did the day he wrestled?

Cel. It is as easy to count atoms as to resolve the propositions of a lover; but take a taste of my finding him, and relish it with good observance. I found him under a tree, like a dropped acorn.

Ros. It may well be called Jove's tree, when it drops forth such fruit.

Cel. Give me audience, good madam.

Ros. Proceed.

Cel. There lay he, stretched along, like a wounded knight.

Ros. Though it be pity to see such a sight, it well becomes the ground.

Cel. Cry 'holla!' to thy tongue, I prithee; it curves unseasonably. He was furnished like a hunter.

Ros. O, ominous! he comes to kill my heart.

Cel. I would sing my song without a burden: thou bringest me out of tune.

Ros. Do you not know I am a woman? when I think, I must speak. Sweet, say on.

Cel. You bring me out. Soft! comes he not here?

Enter Orlando and Jaques.

Ros. 'Tis he: blink by, and note him.

Jac. I thank you for your company; but, good faith, I had as lief have been myself alone.

Orl. And so had I; but yet, for fashion sake, I thank you too for your society.

Jac. God be wi' you; let 's meet as little as we can.

Orl. I do desire we may be better strangers.

Jac. I pray you, mar no more trees with writing love-songs in their barks.

Orl. I pray you, mar no more of my verses with reading them ill-favourably.

Jac. Rosalind is your love's name?

Orl. Yes, just.

Jac. I do not like her name.

Orl. There was no thought of pleasing you when she was christened.

Jac. What stature is she of?

Orl. Just as high as my heart.

Jac. You are full of pretty answers. Have you not been acquainted with goldsmiths' wives, and conned them out of rings?

Orl. Not so; but I answer you right painted cloth, from whence you have studied your questions.

Jac. You are very human; I think 'twas made of Alarico's heels. Will you sit down with me? and we two will rail against our mistress the world and all our misery.

Orl. I will chide no breather in the world but myself, against whom I know most faults.

Jac. The worst fault I have is to be in love.

Orl. 'T is a fault I will not change for your best virtue. I am weary of you.

Jac. By my troth, I was seeking for a fool when I found you.

Orl. He is drowned in the brook: look but in, and you shall see him.

Jac. There I shall see mine own figure.

Orl. Which I take to be either a fool or a cipher.

Jac. I'll fancy no longer with you: farewell, good Signior Love.

Orl. I'll bid you the glad of your departure; adieu, good Monsieur Melancholy.

[Exit Jaques.

Ros. [Aside to Celia] I will speak to him like a saucy lackey and under that habit play the knave with him. Do you hear, forestier?

Orl. Very well; what would you?

Ros. I pray you, what is 't o'clock?

Orl. You should ask me what time o' day: there's no clock in the forest.

Ros. Then there is no true lover in the forest; else seeing every minute and groaning every hour would detect the lazy foot of Time as well as a clock.

Orl. And what may not the swift foot of Time? had not that been as proper?

Ros. By no means, sir; Time travels in divers paces with divers persons. 'I'll tell you who Time ambles withal, who Time trots withal, who Time gallops withal and who he stands still withal.

Orl. I love thee, who doth he trot withal?

Ros. Marry, he trots hard with a young maid between the contract of her marriage and the day it is solemnized: if the interim be but a se'might, Time's pace is so hard that it seems the length of seven years.

Orl. Who ambles Time withal?

Ros. With a priest that lacks Latin and a rich man that hath not the gout, for the one sleeps easily because he cannot study and the other lives merrily because he feels no pain, the one lacking the burden of labor, the other knowing no burden of heavy tedious penny; these Time ambles withal.

Orl. Who doth he gallop withal?

Ros. With a thief to the gallows, for though he go as softly as foot can fall, he thinks himself too soft. With a shepherdess, my sister; here in the skirts of the forest, like fringe upon a petticoat.

Orl. Are you native of this place? [Is kindled.

Ros. As the coy that you see dwell where she hangs their pretty finery, their sister, here; in the curls of the forest, like fringe upon a petticoat.

Orl. Where dwell you, pretty youth?

Ros. I am that no shepherd, no shepherdess, my sister; here in the skirts of the forest, like fringe upon a petticoat.

Orl. Are you native of this place? [Is kindled.

Ros. Have I been told so of many; but indeed an old religious uncle of mine taught me to speak, who was in his youth an inland man; one that knew courtship too well, for there he fell in love.

I have heard him read many lectures against it, and I thank God I am not a woman, to be touched with such sensitiveness as he hath generally taxed their whole sex withal.

Orl. Can you remember any of the principal evils that he laid to the charge of women?

Ros. There were none principal; they were all like one another as half-pence are, every one fault seeming monstrous till his fellow-fault came to match it.

Orl. I prithee, recount some of them.

Ros. No, I will not cast away my physic but on those that are sick. There is a man haunts the forest, that abuses our young plants with carving Rosalin'd on their barks; hangs odes upon hawthorns and elegies on brambles, all forsooth, defacing the name of Rosalind: if I could meet that fop, I would give him some good counsel, for he seems to have the quotient of love upon him.

Orl. I am he that is so love-shaked: I pray you, tell me your remedy.

Ros. There is none of my uncle's marks upon you; he taught me how to know a man in love, in which cage of rushes I am sure you are not pris-

Orl. What were his marks? [oner.

Ros. A lean cheek, which you have not, a blue eye upon it, which you have not, an unquestionable spirit, which you have not, a beard neglected, which you have not; but I pardon you for that, for simply your having in beard is a younger brother's revenue: then your horse should be ungartered, your bonnet unbanded, your sleeve unbut- tuned, your shoe untied, and everything about you demonstrating a careless desolation; but you are no such man; you are rather point-device in your apparel, as loving yourself than seeming the lover of any other.

Orl. Fair youth, I would I could make thee believe.

Ros. Me believe it! you may as soon make her that you love believe it; which, I warrant, she is apter to do than to confess she does: that is one of the points in the which women still give the lie to their consciences. But, in good sooth, are you then so unskillful in all the verses on the trees, wherein Rosalind is so admired?

Orl. I swear to thee, youth, by the white hand of Rosalind, I am that lie, that unfortunate he.

Ros. But are you so much in love as your rhymes show? [ouch.

Orl. Neither rhyme nor reason can express how.

Ros. Love is merely a madness, and, I tell you, deserves as well a dark house and a whip as mad- men do: and the reason why they are not so punished and cured, is, that the lunacy is so ordinary that the whipper-ins are in love too. Yet I profess caring it by three knees, and, if I were to choose anyone, no burden of heavy tedious penny; these Time ambles withal.

Orl. Did you ever cure any so?

Ros. Yes, one, and in this manner. He was to imagine me his love, his mistress; and I set him every day to woo me: at which time would I, being but a moonish youth, grieve, be effeminate, changeable, longing and liking, proud, fantastical, apish, shallow, inconsistent, full of tears, full of smiles, for every passion something and for no pass-

Ros. I would cure him; and this way will I take upon me to wash your liver as clean as a sound sheep's heart, that there shall not be one spot of love in't.

Orl. I would not be cured, youth.

Ros. I would cure you, if you would but call me Rosalind and come every day to my cote and woo me.

Orl. Now, by the faith of my love, I will: tell me where it is.

Ros. Go with me to it and I'll show it you; and by the way you shall tell me where in the forest you live. Will you go?

Orl. With all my heart, good youth.

Ros. Nay, you must call me Rosalind. Come, sister, will you go?

[Exeunt.

SCENE III.—The forest.

Enter Touchstone and Audrey; Jaques behind.

Touch. Come apace, good Audrey; I will fetch up your goats, Audrey. And how, Audrey? am I the man yet? doth my simple feature content you? Aud. Your features! Lord warrant us! what features?

Touch. I am here with thee and thy goats, as that capricious poet, honest Ovid, was among the Goths.

Aud. [Aside] O knowledge ill-inhabited, worse than Jove in a thatched house!

Touch. When a man's verses cannot be understood, nor a man's good wit seconded with the for-

Aud. Your tedious verse doth make me want patience; truly, I would the gods had made thee poetical.

Touch. Do you not know what 'poetical' is: is it honest in deed and word? is it a true thing?

Aud. No, truly; for the truest poetry is the most feigning; and lovers are given to poetry, and what they swear in poetry may be said as lovers do feign.

Touch. Do you wish then that the gods had made me poetical?

Aud. I do, truly; for thou swearest to me thou art honest; now, if thou wert a poet, I might have some hope thou didst feign.

Aud. Would you not have me honest?

Aud. No, truly, unless thou wert hard-favoured; for honesty coupled to beauty is to have honey a sauce to sugar.

Aud. [Aside] A material fool!

Aud. I am not fair; and therefore I pray the gods make me honest.

Touch. Truly, and to cast away honesty upon a foul suit were to put good meat into an unclean dish.

Aud. I am not a slut, though I thank the gods I am foul.

Touch. Well, praised be the gods for thy foulness! sluttishness may come hereafter. But be it as it may be, I will marry thee, and to that end I have been with Sir Oliver Martext, the vicar of the next village, who had promised to meet me in this place of the forest and to couple us.

Jaq. [Aside] I would fain see this meeting.

And. Well, the gods give us joy.

Touch. Jaq is man enough, if he were of a fearful heart, stagger in this attempt; for here we have no temple but the wood, no assembly but hornbeasts. But what though? Courage! As horns are odious, they are necessary. It is said, 'many a man knows no end of his goods;' right; many a man has good horns, and knows no end of them. Well, that is the dowry of his wife; 'tis none of his own getting. Horns? Even so. Poor men alone? No, no; the noblest deer hath them as huge as the rascal. Is the single man therefore blessed? 'No: as a walled town is more worshipful than a village, so is the forehead of a married man more honourable than the bare brow of a bachelor; and by how much defence is better than no skill, by so much is a horn more precious than to want. Here comes Sir Oliver.

Enter Sir Oliver Martext.

Sir Oliver Martext, you are well met: will you dispatch us here under this tree, or shall we go with you to your chapel?

Sir Ol. I am none here to give the woman?

Touch. I will not take her on gift of any man.

Sir Ol. Truly, she must be given, or the marriage is not lawful.

Jaq. [Aside] Proceed, proceed: I'll give her.

Touch. Good even, good Master What-ye-call't: how do you, sir? I was very well met; God had you for your last company; I am very glad to see you: even a toy in hand here, sir: may, pray be cov.

Jaq. Will you be married, motley? [cred.

Touch. As the ox hath his bow, sir, the horse his curb and the falcon her bells, so man hath his desires; and as pigeons bill, so wedlock would be nibbling.

Jaq. And will you, being a man of your breeding, be married under a bush like a beggar? Get you to church, and have a good priest that can tell you what marriage is: this fellow will but join you together as they join wasp-cast: then one of you will prove a shrivum panel and, like green timber, warp, warp.

Touch. [Aside] I am not in the mind but I were better to be married of him than of another; for he is a most honest master marry me well; and not being well married, it will be a good excuse for me hitherfor to leave my wife.

Jaq. Go thou with me, and let me counsel thee.

Touch. Come, sweet Audrey:

We must be married, or we must live in bawdry.

Farewell, good Master Oliver: not,—

O sweet Oliver,
O brave Oliver,

Leave me not behind thee;

but,—

Wind away.

Begone, I say,
I will not to wedding with thee.

[Sir Oliver Martext, Touchstone and Audrey.]

[Exit Jaques, Touchstone and Audrey.]

Sir Ol. 'Tis no matter: ne'er a fantastical knife of them all shall flout out of my calling. [Exit.]

SCENE IV.—The forest.

Enter Rosalind and Celia.

Ros. Never talk to me: I will weep.

Cel. Do, I prithee: but yet have the grace to consider that Angora do not become a man.

Ros. But have I not cause to weep? [weep.

Cel. As good cause as one would desire: therefore

Ros. His very hair is of the dissembling colour.

Cel. Something browner than Judas's: marry, his kisses are Judas's own children.

Ros. 1 faith, his hair is of a good colour.

Cel. An excellent colour: your chestnut was ever the only colour.

Ros. And his kissing is as full of sanctity as the touch of holy bread.

Cel. He hath bought a pair of cast lips of Diana: a nun of winter's sisterhood kisses not more religiously; the very ice of chastity is in them.

Ros. But why did he swear he would come this morning, and comes not?

Cel. Nay, certainly, there is no truth in him.

Ros. Do you think so?

Cel. Yes; I think he is not a pick-purse nor a horse-stealer, but for his verity in love, I do think him as concave as a covered goblet or a worm-eaten Ros. Not true in love?

Cel. Yes, when he is in; but I think he is not in.

Ros. You have heard him swear downright he was.

Cel. 'Was 'is not; 'tis besides, the oath of a lover is no stronger than the word of a tapster; they are both the confirmer of false reckonings.

Cel. I met the duke yesterday and had much question with him: he asked me of what parentage I was; I told him, of as good as he; so he laughed and let me go. But what talk we of fathers, when there is such a man as Orlando?

Cel. O, that's a brave man! he writes brave verses, speaks brave words, swears brave oaths, and breaks them bravely, quite traverse, atwight the heart of his lover; as a pulsy tilter, that spurs his horse but on one side, breaks his staff like a noble goose: but all's brave that youth mounds and folly guides.

Who comes here?

Enter Corin.

Cor. Mistress and master, you have oft inquired After the shepherd that complain'd of love, Who you saw sitting here on the turf, Praising the proud disdainful shephersse That was his mistress.

Cel. Well, and what of him?

Cor. If you will see a pageant truly play'd, Between the pale complexion of true love And the new row of scorn and proud disdain, Go hence a little and I shall conduct you, If you will mark it.

Ros. O, come, let us remove: The sight of lovers feedeth those in love. Bring us to this sight, and you shall say I'll prove a busy actor in their play. [Exit.]

SCENE V.—Another part of the forest.

Enter Silvius and Phoebe.

Sil. Sweet Phoebe, do not scorn me; do not, Say that you love me not, but say not so [Phoebe; In bitterness. The common executioner, Whose heart the accustam'd sight of death makes Falls not the axe upon the hallowed neck [hard, But first begs pardon; will you sterner be Than he that dies and lives by bloody drops?

Enter Rosalind, Celia, and Corin, behind.

Phoe. I would not be thy executioner: I fly thee, for I would not injure thee.

Thou tell'st me there is murder in mine eye: 'Tis pretty, pure, and very probable, That eyes, that are the frailst and softest things, Who shut their coward gates on atomies, Should be call'd tyrants, butchers, murderers! Now I do frown on thee with all my heart, And if mine eyes can wound, now let them kill thee: Now counterfeit to swoon; why now fall down; Or if thou canst not, O, for shame, for shame, Lie not, to say mine eyes are murderers! Now show the wound mine eye hath made in thee: Scratch thee but with a pin, and there remains SCENE I. — The forest.

Enter Rosalind, Celia, and Jaques.

Ros. They say you are a melancholy fellow.

Jaq. I am so; I do love it better than laughing.

Ros. Those that are in extremity of either are afflicted, and betray themselves to every modern censure worse than drunkards.

Phe. Dead shepherd, now I find thy saw of might.

Rosal. Who ever loved that loved not at first sight?

Phe. Sweet Phebe,

Rosal. And, what say'st thou, Silvius?

Phe. Sweet Phebe, pity me.

Rosal. Why, I am sorry for thee, gentle Silvius.

Phe. Wherever sorrow is, relief would be:

Rosal. If you do sorrow at my grief in love,

Phe. By giving love your sorrow and my grief

Rosal. Were both exterminated.

Phe. Thou hast lost my love: is that not neighbourly?

Rosal. I would have you.

Phe. Why, that were covetousness.

Rosal. Silvius, the time was that I hated thee,

Phe. And yet it is not that I bear thee love;

Rosal. But since that thou canst talk of love so well,

Phe. Thy company is more to me,

Rosal. I will endure, and I'll employ thee too:

Phe. But do not look for further recompense

Rosal. Than thine own goodness that thou art employ'd.

Phe. So holy and so perfect is my love,

Rosal. And I in such a poverty of grace,

Phe. That I shall think it a most pitiful crop

Rosal. To glean the broken ears after the man

Phe. That the main harvest reaps: loose now and then

Rosal. A scatter'd smile, and that I'll live upon.

Phe. Know'st thou the youth that spake to me ere Rosal. Not very well, but I have met him oft;

Rosal. And he hath bought the cottage and the bounds

Phe. That the old carpion once was master of.

Rosal. Think not I love him, though I ask for him;

Phe. 'Tis but a peevish boy; yet he talks well.

Rosal. But what care I for words? yet words do well

Phe. When he that speaks them pleases those that hear.

Rosal. It is a pretty youth: not very pretty.

Phe. But, sure, he's proud, and yet his pride becomes him:

Rosal. He'll make a proper man: the best thing in him

Rosal. Is his complexion; and faster than his tongue

Phe. Did make offence his eye did heal it up.

Rosal. He is not very tall; yet for his years he is tall.

Rosal. His leg is but so so; and yet it is well:

Phe. There was a pretty redness in his lip,

Rosal. A little riper and more lusty red

Rosal. Than that mix'd in his cheek; 'twas just the diff-

Phe. Betwixt the constant red and mingled damask.

Rosal. There be some women, Silvius, had they mark'd him

Phe. I had rather hear you chide than this man woo.

Ros. He's fallen in love with your foulness and she'll fall in love with my anger. If it be so, as fast as she answers thee with frowning looks, I'll sance her with bitter words. Why look you so upon me?

Phe. For no ill-will do I bear you.

Ros. I pray you, do not fall in love with me,

Phe. For I am failer than vows made in wine:

Ros. Besides, I like you not. If you will know my house,

Phe. 'Tis at the tuft of olives here hard by.

Ros. Will you go, sister? Shepherd, ply her hard.

Phe. Come, sister. Shepherdess, look on him better,

Ros. And be not proud; though all the world could see,

Phe. None could be so abused in sight as he.

Ros. Come to our flock.

[Exeunt Rosalind, Celia and Corin.

Jaq. Why, 'tis good to be sad and say nothing.

Ros. Why then, 'tis good to be a post.

Jaq. I am neither the scholar's melancholy,

Ros. Which is emulation, nor the musician's, which is fantastical,

Jaq. Nor the courtier's, which is proud,

Ros. Nor the soldier's, which is ambitious,

Jaq. Nor the lawyer's, which is politic,

Ros. Nor the lady's, which is nice,

Jaq. Nor the lover's, which is all these:

Ros. But it is a melancholy

Jaq. Of mine own, composed of many simples, extracted from many objects, and indeed the sundry in contemplation of my travels, in which my often ramble and ramble was in a most humorous sadness.

183

Ros. A traveller! By my faith, you have great reason to be sad: I fear you have sold your own hands to see other men's; then, to have seen much and to have nothing, is to have rich eyes and poor hands.

Jug. Yes, I have gained my experience.

Ros. But your experience was soon: I had rather have a fool to make me merry than experience to make me sad; and to travel for it too!

Enter Orlando.

Orl. Good day and happiness, dear Rosalind!

Jug. Nay, then, God be wi' you, an you talk in blank verse.

[Exit.

Ros. Farewell, Monsieur Traveller: look you lisp and wear strange suits, disable all the benefits of your own country, be out of love with your nativity and almost chide God for making you that countenance you are, or I will scarce think you have swam in a gondola. Why, how now, Orlando! where have you been all this while? You a lover! An you serve me such another trick, never come in my sight more.

Orl. My fair Rosalind, I come within an hour of my promise.

Ros. Break an hour's promise in love! He that will divide a minute into a thousand parts and break but a part of the thousandth part of a minute in the affairs of love, it may be said of him that Cupid hath clapped him o' the shoulder, but I'll warrant him Orlando is Rosalind. [heart-whole.

Ros. Nay, an you be so tardy, come no more in my sight: I had as lief be wood of a snail.

Orl. Of a snail?

Ros. Ay, of a snail; for though he comes slowly, he builds his house on his head; a better jointure, I think, than you make a woman: besides, he brings his destiny with him.

Orl. What's that?

Ros. Why, horns, which such as you are fain to be beholding to your wives for: but he comes armed in his fortune and prevents the slander of his wife.

Orl. Virtue is no horn-maker; and my Rosalind is virtuous.

Cel. It please him to call you so; but he hath a Rosalind of a better leer than you.

Ros. Come, woo me, woo me, for now I am in a holiday to spare no barren words: all is as good as it is. Would you say to me now, an I were your very very

Orl. I would kiss before I spoke. [Rosalind?

Ros. Nay, you were better speak first, and when you were gravelled for lack of matter, you might take occasion to kiss. Very good orators, when they hang, find themselves, and for lovers lacking — God warn us! — matter, the cleanliest shift to

Orl. How if the kiss be denied?

Kiss. Ros. Then she puts you to entreaty, and there begins new matter.

Orl. Who could be out, being before his beloved mistress?

Ros. Marry, that should you, if I were your mistress, or I should think my honesty ranker than my

Orl. What, of my suit?

Ros. Not out of your apparel, and yet out of your suit, no Rosalind.

Orl. I take some joy to say you are, because I would be talking of her.

Ros. Well in her person I say I will not have you.

Orl. Then in mine own person I die.

Ros. No, faith, die by attorney. The poor world is almost six thousand years old, and in all this time there was not any man died in his own person, vide-licit, in a love-case. Troilus had his brains dashed out with a Grecian club; yet he did what he could to die before, and he is one of the patterns of love. Leander, he would have lived many a fair year, though Hero had turned him; and if it had not been for a hot midsummer night; for, good youth, he went but forth to wash him in the Hellespont and being taken with the cramp was drowned; and the foolish coroners of that age found it was 'Hero of Sestos.' But these are all lies: men have died from time to time and worms have eaten them, but not for love.

Orl. I would not have my right Rosalind of this mad, for, I protest, her brown might kill me.

Ros. By the love of God, I tell you so: but come, now I will be your Rosalind in a more coming-on disposition, and ask me what you will, I will grant it.

Orl. Then love me, Rosalind.

Ros. Yes, faith, will I, Fridays and Saturdays.

Orl. And wilt thou have me? [and all.

Ros. Ay, and twenty such.

Ros. Why then, can one desire too much of a good thing? Come, sister, you shall be the priest and marry us. Give me your hand, Orlando. What do you say, sister?

Orl. Pray thee, marry us.

Cel. I cannot say the words.

Ros. You must begin, 'Will you, Orlando—'

Cel. Go to. Will you, Orlando, have to wife this Orlando.

Ros. Ay, but when?

Orl. Why now; as fast as she can marry us.

Ros. Then you must say 'I take thee, Rosalind, for wife. Orl. I take thee, Rosalind, for wife.

Ros. I might ask you for your commission; but I do take thee, Orlando, for my husband; there's a girl goes before the priest; and certainly a woman's thought runs before her actions.

Orl. So do the thoughts they are winged.

Ros. Now tell me how long you would have her after you have possessed her.

Orl. For ever and a day.

Ros. Say 'a day,' without the 'ever.' No, no, Orlando: men are April when they woo, December when they wed: maids are May when they are maids, but the sky changes when they are wives. I will be more jealous of thee than a Barbary cock-pigion over his hen, more clamorous than a parrot against rain, more new-fangled than an ape, more greedy in my desires than a monkey: I will weep for nothing, like Diana in the fountain, and I will do that when you are disposed to be merry; I will laugh like a hyen, and that when thou art inclined to sleep.

Orl. But will my Rosalind do so?

Ros. By my life, she will do as I do.

Orl. O, but she is wise.

Ros. Or wise? She can: not have the wit to do this: the wiser, the waywarder: make the doors upon a woman's wit and it will out at the casement; shut that and 't will out at the keyhole; stop that, 't will fly with the smoke out of the chimney.

Orl. A man that had a wife with such a wit, he might say 'Wit, whither wilt? Ros. Nay, you might keep that check for it till you met your wife's wit going to your neighbour's bed. [that?

Orl. And what wit could wit have to excuse

Ros. Mary, to say she came to seek you there. You shall never take her without her answer, unless you take her without her tongue. O, that woman that cannot make her fault her husband's occasion, let her never nurse her child herself, for she will breed it like a fool.

Orl. For these two hours, Rosalind, I will leave thee.

[hours.

Ros. Alas! dear love, I cannot lack thee two

Orl. I must attend the drak at dinner: by two o'clock I will be with thee again.

Ros. Ay, go your ways, go your ways; I knew what you would prove: my friends told me as much, and I thought no less: that flattering tongue of yours won me: 'tis but one cast away, and so, come, death! Two o'clock is your hour?

Orl. Ay, sweet Rosalind.

Ros. By my troth, and in good earnest, and so God mend me, and by all pretty oaths that are not dangerous, if you break one jot of your promise or come one minute behind your hour, I will think you the most pithatical break-promis and the most hollow lover and the most unworthy of her you call Rosalind that may be chosen out of the gross band of the unfaithful: therefore beware my censure and keep your promise.

Orl. With no less religion than if thou wert indeed my Rosalind: so adieu.

Ros. Well, Time is the old justice that examines all such offenders, and let Time try: adieu.
[Exit Orlando.

Col. You have simply misused our sex in your love-prate: we must have our doublet and hose plucked over our head, and show the world what the bird hath done to her own nest.

Ros. O coz, coz, coz, my pretty little coz, that thou didst know how many fathoms deep I am in love!
But it cannot be sounded: my affection hath an unknown bottom, like the bay of Portugal.

Col. Or rather, bottomless, that as fast as you pour affection in, it runs out.

Ros. No, that same with a bastard of Venus that was begotten of thought, out of conceit of spleen and born of madness, that blind rascally boy that abuses every one's eyes because his own are out, let him be judge how deep I am in love. 'I'll tell thee, Aliena, I cannot be out of the sight of Orlando: I'll go find a shadow and sit till he come.

Col. And I'll sleep. [Exeunt.

SCENE II. The forest.

Enter Jaques, Lords, and Foresters.

Jaq. Which is he that killed the deer?

A Lord. Sir, it was I.

Jaq. Let's present him to the duke, like a Roman conqueror; and it would do well to set the deer's horns upon his head, for a branch of victory. Have you no song, forester, for this purpose?

Fore. Yes, Sir.

Jaq. Sing it: 'tis no matter how it be in tune, so it make noise enough.

SONG.

For. What shall he have that kill'd the deer?

His leather skin and horns to wear.

And him my love to bear.

[The rest shall bear this burden.

Take thou no scorn to wear the horn;
It was a crest ere thou wast born:
Thy father's father wore it,
And thy father bore it:
The horn, the horn, the lusty horn
Is not a thing to laugh to scorn. [Exeunt.

SCENE III. The forest.

Enter Rosalind and Celia.

Ros. How say you now? Is it not past two o'clock? and here much Orlando!

Col. I warrant you, with pure love and troubled brain, he hath ta'en his bow and arrows and is gone forth to sleep. Look, who comes here.

Enter Silvius.

Sil. My errand is to you, fair youth;
My gentle Phebe bid me give you this:
I know not the contents; but, as I guess
By the stern brow and waspish action
Which she did use as she was writing of it,
It bears an angry tenour: pardon me;
I am but as a guiltless messenger.

Ros. Patience herself would startle at this letter
And play the swaggerer; bear this, bear all:
She says I am not fair, that I lack manners;
She calls me proud, and that she could not love me,
Were I man as rare as phoenix. 'Od my will!
Her love is not the hare that I do hunt:
Why writes she so to me? Well, shepherd, well,
This is a letter of your own device.

Sil. No, I protest, I know not the contents:
Phebe did write it.

Ros. Come, come, you are a fool
And turn'd into the extremity of love.
I saw her hand: she has a leathern hand,
A freestone-colour'd hand; I verily did think
That her old gloves were on, but 'twas her hands:
She has a husband's hand: 'tis no matter:
I say she never did invent this letter;
This is a man's invention and his hand.

Sil. Sure, it is hers.

Ros. Why, 'tis a boisterous and a cruel style,
A style for challengers; why, she defies me,
Like Turk to Christian: women's gentle brain
Could not stop forth such a harsh and rude invention,
Such Ethiope words, blacker in their effect
Than in their countenance. Will you hear the letter?

Sil. So please you, for I never heard it yet;
Yet heard too much of Phebe's cruelty.

Ros. She Phebe's me: mark how the tyrants writes.

Art thou god to shepherd turn'd,
That a maiden's heart hath burn'd?

Can a woman rail thus?

Sil. Call you this railing?

Ros. [Reads] Why, thy godhead laid apart,
Warr'st thou with a woman's heart?

Did you ever hear such railing?

Whilest the eye of man did woo me,
That could do no vengeance to me.

Meaning me a beast.

If the scorn of your bright eyne
Have power to raise such love in mine,
Alack, in me what strange effect
Would they work in mild aspect!

Whilest you chide me, I did love;

How then might your prayers move!

If these that brings this love to me
Little knows this love in me:

And by him seal up thy mind;

Whether that thy youth and kind
Will the faithful offer take
Of me and all that I can make;

And then I'll study how to die.

Sil. Call you this chiding?

Col. Alas, poor shepherd!

Ros. Do you pity him no, he deserves no pity.

Wilt thou love such a woman? What, to make thee an instrument and play false strains upon thee not to be endured! Well, go your way to her, for I see love hath made thee a tame snake, and say this to her: that if she love me, I charge her to love thee;
if she will not, I will never have her unless thou entreat for her. If you be a true lover, hence; and not a word; for here comes a company. [Exeunt Silvius.

Enter Oliver.

Oli. Good morrow, fair ones: pray you, if you know,

Where in the pursuice of this forest stands

A sheepe-cote fenced about with olive trees?

Col. West of this place, down in the neighbour bottom:

The rank of osiers by the murmuring stream

Left on your right hand brings you to the place.

But at this hour the house cloth keep itself;

There's none within.

Oli. If that an eye may profit by a tongue,
Then should I know you by description;
Such garments and such years: 'The boy is fair,
Of female favor, and bestows himself
Like a ripe sister: the woman low
And browner than her brother.' Are not you
The old house of the house I did inquire for?
Cel. It is no boast, being ask'd, to say we are.
Oli. Orlando doth commend him to you both,
And to that youth he calls his Rosalind
He sends this bloody napkin. Are you he?
Oli. Some of my shame; if you will know of me
What man I am, and how, and why, and where
This handkercher was stain'd.
Cel. I pray you, tell it.
Oli. When last the young Orlando parted from you
He left a promise to return again
Within an hour, and pacing through the forest,
Chewing the food of sweet and bitter fancy,
Lo, what befell! he threw his eye aside,
And mark what object did present itself:
Under an oak, whose boughs were moss'd with age
And high top bald with dry antiquity,
A wretched ragged man, o'ergrown with hair,
Lay sleeping on his back: about his neck
A green and gilded snake had wreathed itself,
Who with his head nimble in threats approach'd
The opening of his mouth; but suddenly,
Seeing Orlando, it unliink'd itself,
And with indented glides did slip away
Into a bush: under which bush's shade
A lioness, with elders all drawn dry,
Lay couching, head on ground, with catlike watch,
When that the sleeping man should stir; for 'tis
The royal disposition of that beast
To prey on nothing that doth seem as dead:
This seen, Orlando did approach the man
And found it was his brother, his elder brother.
Cel. O, I have heard him speak of that same brother;
And he did render him the most unnatural
That lived amongst men.
Oli. And well he might so do,
For well I know he was unnatural.
Ros. But, to Orlando: did he leave him there,
Food to the suck'd and hungry lioness?
Oli. Twice did he turn his back and purposed so;
But kindness, nobler ever than revenge,
And nature, stronger than his just occasion,
Made him give battle to the lioness,
Who quickly fell before him: in which hurrying
From miserable slumber I awaked.
Cel. Are you his brother?
Ros. Was't you he rescued?
ACT V.

AS YOU LIKE IT.

SCENE II.

Touch. Why, thou sayest well. I do now remember a saying, 'The fool doth think he is wise, but the wise man knows himself to be a fool.' The heathen philosopher, when he had a desire to eat a grape, would open his lips when he put it into his mouth; meaning thereby that grapes were made to eat and lips to open. You do love this maid?

Will. I do, sir.

Touch. Give me your hand. Art thou learned?

Will. No, sir.

Touch. Then learn this of me: to have, is to have; for it is a figured in rhetoric that drink, being poured out of a cup into a glass, by filling the one doth empty the other; for all your writers do consent that ipse is he; now, you are not ipse, for I am he.

Will. Which is I?

Touch. He, sir, that must marry this woman. Therefore, you clown, abandon,—which is in the vulgar leave,—the society,—which in the boorish is company,—of this female,—which in the common is woman; which together is, abandon the society of her, or, clown, thouliest; or, to thy better understanding, diest; or, to wit, I kill thee, make thee away, translate thy life into death, thy liberty into bondage: I will deal in poison with thee, or, in bastinado, or in steel; I will bandy with thee in faction; I will o'er-run thee with policy: I have a hundred and fifty ways: therefore tremble, and depart.

Aud. Do, good William.

Will. God rest you merry, sir. [Exit.

Enter Corin.

Cor. Our master and mistress seek you; come, away, away!

Touch. Trip, Audrey! trip, Audrey! I attend, I attend.

SCENE II.—The forest.

Enter Orlando and Oliver.

Orl. Is't possible that on so little acquaintance you should like her? that but seeing you should love her? and loving wo? and, woeing, she should grant? and will you persever to enjoy her?

Ol. Neither call the godliness of it in question, the property of her, the small acquaintance, my sudden wooing, nor her sudden consenting; but say with me, I love Aliena; say with her, that she loves me; consent with both that we may enjoy each other: it shall be to your good; for my father's house and all the revenue that was old Sir Rowland's will I esteem no more, either live and die a shepherd.

Orl. You have my consent. Let your wedding be to-morrow: thither will I invite the duke and all the contented followers. Go you and prepare Aliena; for look you, here comes my Rosalind.

Enter Rosalind.

Ros. God save you, brother.

Oli. And you, fair sister.

Ros. O, my dear Orlando, how it grieves me to see thee wear thy heart in a scarf!

Orl. It is my answer.

Ros. I thought thy heart had been wounded with the claws of a lion.

Orl. Wounded it is, but with the eyes of a lady.

Ros. Did your brother tell you how I counterfeited to swoon when he showed me your handkerchief?

Orl. Ay, and greater wonders than that.

Ros. O, I know where you are: 'tis true: there was never anything so sudden but the sight of two rams and Caesar's thronasional brag of 'I came, saw, and overcame;' for your brother and my sister no sooner met but they looked, no sooner looked but they loved, no sooner loved but they sighed, no sooner sighed but they asked one another the reason, no sooner knew the reason but they sought the remedy; and in these degrees have they made a pair of stairs to marriage which they will climb incontinent, or else be incontinent before marriage. Here are they in the very wrath of love and they will together: clubs cannot part them.

Orl. They shall be married to-morrow, and I will bid the duke to the nuptial. But, O, how bitter a thing it is to look into happiness through another man's eyes! By so much the more shall I to-morrow be at the height of heart-heaviness, by how much I shall think my brother happy in having what he wishes for.

Ros. Why then, to-morrow I cannot serve your turn for Rosalind?

Orl. I can live no longer by thinking.

Ros. I am weary of the infinite, with idle talking. Know of me then, for now I speak to some purpose, that I know you are a gentleman of good conceit: I speak not this that you should bear a good opinion of my knowledge; insomuch I say I know you are; neither do I labour for a greater esteem than may in some little measure draw a belief from you, to do yourself good and not to grace me. Believe then, if you please, that I can do strange things: I have, since I was three years old, conversed with a magician, most profound in his art and yet not damnable. If you do love Rosalind and so near your heart's desire cries it out, when your brother marries Aliena, shall you marry her: I know into what straits of fortune she is driven; and it is not impossible to me, if it appear not inconvenient to you, to set her before your eyes to-morrow human as she is and without any danger.

Orl. Speakest thou in sober meanings?

Ros. By my life, I do; which I tender dearly, though I say I am a magician. Therefore, put you in your best array; bid your friends; for if you will be married to-morrow, you shall, and to Rosalind, if you will.

Enter Silvius and Phoebe.

Phoe. Look, here comes a lover of mine and a lover of hers.

Phoe. Youth, you have done me much ungentleness. To show the letter that I writ to you.

Ros. I care not if I have: it is my study To seem despiteful and ungenteel to you: But you are a good forsworn; by a faithful shepherd; Look upon him, love him; he worships you. I love. Phoe. Good shepherd, tell this youth what 'tis to Sil. It is to be all made of sighs and tears; And so am I for Phoebe.

Phoe. And I for Ganymede.

Orl. And I for Rosalind.

Ros. And I for no woman.

Sil. It is to be all made of faith and service; And so am I for Phoebe.

Phoe. And I for Ganymede.

Orl. And I for Rosalind.

Ros. And I for no woman.

Sil. It is to be all made of fantasy, All made of passion and all made of wishes, All adoration, duty, and observance, All humbleness, all patience and impatience, All purity, all trial, all observance; And so am I for Phoebe.

Phoe. And so am I for Ganymede.

Orl. And so am I for Rosalind.

Ros. And so am I for no woman.

Sil. It is to be all made of fantasy, All made of passion and all made of wishes, All adoration, duty, and observance, All humbleness, all patience and impatience, All purity, all trial, all observance; And so am I for Phoebe.

Phoe. If this be so, why blame you me to love you? Sil. If this be so, why blame you me to love you? Orl. If this be so, why blame you me to love you? Ros. Who do you speak to? 'Why blame you me to love you?' Orl. To her that is not here, nor doth not hear. Ros. Pray you, no more of this; 'tis like the howling of Irish wolves against the moon. [To Sil.] I will help you, if I can: [To Phoe.] I would love you, if I could. To-morrow meet me all together. [To Phoe.] I will marry you, if ever I marry woman, and I'll be married to-morrow: [To Orl.] I will satisfy you, if ever I satisfied you, and you shall be married to-morrow: [To Sid.] I will content you, if what pleases you content you, and you shall be married to-morrow. [To Orl.] As you love Rosalind, meet: [To Sid.] as you love Phebe, meet; and as I love no woman, I'll meet. So fare you well: I have left you commands.

Sid. I'll not fail, if I live.

Phe. Nor I.

Orl. Nor I.

[Exeunt.]

SCENE III.—The forest.

Enter Touchstone and Audrey.

Touch. To-morrow is the joyful day, Audrey; to-morrow will we be married.

And I do desire it with all my heart; and I hope it is no dishonest desire to desire to be a woman of the world. Here come two of the banished duke's pages.

Enter two Pages.

First Page. Well met, honest gentleman.

Touch. By my troth, well met. Come, sit, sit, and a song.

Sec. Page. We are for you: sit i' th' middle.

First Page. Shall we clap into 't roundly, without hawking or splitting or saying we are hoarse, which are the only prolongs to a bad voice?

Sec. Page. I' faith, i' faith; and both in a tune, like two gipsies on a horse.

SONG.

It was a lover and his lass,

With a hey, and a ho, and a hey nonino,

That o'er the green corn-field did pass

In the spring time, the only pretty ring time,

When birds do sing, hey ding a ding, ding:

Sweet lovers love the spring.

Between the acres of the rye,

With a hey, and a ho, and a hey nonino,

These pretty country folks would lie,

In spring time, &c.

This carol they began that hour,

With a hey, and a ho, and a hey nonino,

How that a life was but a flower

In spring time, &c.

And therefore take the present time,

With a hey, and a ho, and a hey nonino;

For love is crowned with the prime

In spring time, &c.

Touch. Truly, young gentlemen, though there was no great matter in the ditty, yet the note was very unmatrixable.

First Page. You are deceived, sir: we kept time, we lost not our time.

Touch. By my troth, yes; I count it but time lost to hear such a foolish song. God be wi' you; and God mend your voices! Come, Audrey. [Exeunt.

SCENE IV.—The forest.

Enter Duke senior, Amiens, Jaques, Orlando, Oliver, and Celia.

Duke S. Dost thou believe, Orlando, that the boy Can do all this that he hath promised?

Orl. I sometimes do believe, and sometimes do not; As those that fear they hope, and know they fear.

Enter Rosalind, Silvius, and Phebe.

Ros. Patience once more, whiles our compact is urged: You say, if I bring in your Rosalind, You will bestow her on Orlando here?

Duke S. That would I, had I kingdom to give with her.

Ros. And you say, you will have her, when I bring Orlando, that would I, were I of all kingdoms king.

Ros. You say, you will marry me, if I be willing?

Phe. That will I, should the hour after.

Ros. But if you do refuse to marry me, You'll give yourself to this most faithful shepherd?

Phe. So is the bargain.

Ros. You say, that you'll have Phebe, if she will?

Sid. Though to have her and death were both one thing.

Ros. I have promised to make all this matter even. Keep your word, O duke, to give your daughter; You yours, Orlando, to receive his daughter: Keep your word, Phebe, that you'll marry me, Or else refusing me, to wed this shepherd: Keep your word, Silvius, that you'll marry her, If she refuse me: and from hence I go, To make these doubts all even. [Exeunt Rosalind and Celia.

Duke S. I do remember in this shepherd boy Some lively catches of my daughter's favour.

Orl. My lord, the first time that I ever saw him Methought he was a brother to your daughter: But, my good lord, this boy is forest-born, And hath been tutor'd in the rudiments Of many desperate studies by his uncle, Whom he reports to be a great magician, Obscured in the circle of this forest.

Enter Touchstone and Audrey.

Jaq. There is, sure, another flood toward, and these couples are coming to the ark. Here comes a pair of very strange beasts, which in all tongues are called fools.

Touch. Salutation and greeting to you all!

Jaq. Good my lord, bid him welcome: this is the motley-minded gentleman that I have so often met in the forest: he hath been a courtier, he swears.

Touch. To which man doubt that, let him put me to my purgation. I have trod a measure: I have flaunted a lady; I have been politic with my friend, smooth with mine enemy; I have undone three tutors; I have had four quarrels, and like to have fought one.

Jaq. And how was that ta'en up?

Touch. Faith, we met, and found the quarrel was upon the seventh cause.

Jaq. How seventh cause? Good my lord, like this fellow.

Duke S. I like him very well.

Touch. God 'did you, sir; I desire you of the like, I press in here, sir, amongst the rest of the country copulative, to swear and forswear; according as marriage binds and blood breaks; a poor virgin, sir, an ill-favoured thing, sir, but mine own; a poor humour of mine, sir, to take that that no man else will: rich honesty dwells like a miser, sir, in a poor house; as your pearl in your foil ouster.

Duke S. By my faith, he is very swift and sententious.

Touch. According to the fool's bolt, sir, and such droll diseases.

Jaq. But, for the seventh cause; how did you find the quarrel on the seventh cause?

Touch. Upon a lie seven times removed:—bear your body more seeming, Audrey:—as thus, sir. I did dislike the cut of a certain courtier's beard: he sent me word, if I said his beard was not cut well, he was in the mind it was: this is called the Retort Conteous. If I sent him word again 'it was not well cut,' he would send me word, he cut it to please himself: this is called the Quip Moste. If again 'it was not well cut,' he disabled my judgment: this is called the Reply Churlish. If again 'it was not well cut,' he would answer, I spoke not true: this is called the Reproof Vulant. If again 'it was not well cut," he would say; I lied: this is called the Counterclock Quarrelsome: and so to the Lie Circumstantial, and the Lie Direct.

Jaq. And how oft did you say his beard was not well cut?

Touch. I durst go no further than the Lie Circumstantial, nor he durst not give me the Lie Direct; and so we measured swords and parted.

Jaq. Did you nominate in order now the degrees of the lie?

Touch. O sir, I quarrel in print, by the book; as you have books for good manners: I will name you the degrees. The first, the Retort. Courteous; the second, the Quip Modest; the third, the Reply Churlish; the fourth, the Reproof Valiant; the fifth, the Counterclock Quarrelsome; the sixth, the Lie with Circumstance; the seventh, the Lie Direct. All these you may avoid but the Lie Direct; and you may avoid that too, with an If. I knew when seven justices could not take up a quarrel, but when the parties were met themselves, one of them thought but of an If, as, 'If you said so, then I said so;' and they shook hands and swore brothers. Your If is the only peace-maker; much virtue in If.

Jaq. Is not this a rare fellow, my lord? he's as good at any thing, but the law Division:

Duke S. He uses his folly like a stalking-horse and under the presentation of that he shoots his wit.

Enter Hymen, Rosalind, and Celia.

Still Music.

Hym. Then is there mirth in heaven, When earthly things made even.

Atoned together.

Good duke, receive thy daughter: Hymen from heaven brought her,

Yea, brought her hither.

The thou mightst join her hand with his Whose heart within his bosom is.

Ros. [To Duke] To you I give myself, for I am yours.

[To Orl.] To you I give myself, for I am yours.

Duke S. If there be truth in sight, you are my daughter.

Orl. If there be truth in sight, you are my Rosalind.

Phe. If sight and shape be true,

Why then, my love adieu!

Ros. I'll have no father, if you be not he:

I'll have no husband, if you be not he:

Nor ne'er a wed woman, if you be not she.

Hym. Peace, ho! I say,

'Tis I must make conclusion

Of these most strange events:

Here's eight that must take hands

To join in Hymen's bands,

If truth, holds true contents,

You and you no cross shall part:

You and you are heart in heart:

You to his love must accord,

Or have a woman to your lord:

You and you are sure together,

As the winter to foul weather.

Whiles a wedlock-hymn we sing,

Feed yourselves with questioning;

That reason wonder may diminish,

How thus we met, and these things finish.

SONG.

Wedding is great Juno's crown:

O blessed bond of board and bed!

'Tis Hymen peoples every town;

High wedlock then be honoured;

Honour, high honour and renown,

To Hymen, god of every town!

Duke S. O my dear niece, welcome thou art to Even daughter, welcome, in no less degree. [me!]

Phe. I will not eat my word, now thou art mine;

Thy faith my fancy to thee doth combine.

Enter Jaques de Boys.

Jaq. de B. Let me have audience for a word or I am the second son of old Sir Rowland. [two:

That bring these tidings to this fair assembly.

Duke Frederick, hearing how that every day Men of great worth resorted to this forest,

Address'd a mighty power; which were on foot, In his own judgment, public and preposterous.

His brother here and put him to the sword:

And to the skirts of this wild wood he came;

Where meeting with an old religious man,

After some question with him, was converted

Both from his enterprise and from the world,

His crown bequeathing to his banish'd brother,

And all their lands restored to them again.

That were with him exiled. This to be true,

I do engage my life.

Duke S. Welcome, young man:

Thou offer'st fairly to thy brothers' wedding:

To one his lands withheld, and to the other:

A land itself at large, a potent dukedom.

First, in this forest let us do those ends

That here were well begun and well begot:

And after, every of this happy number

That have endured shame and good fortunes with us

Shall share the good of our returned fortune,

According to the measure of their states.

Meantime, forget this new-fall'n dignity

And fall into our rustic revelry.

Play, music! And you, brides and bridgemen all,

With measure heap'd in joy, to the Duke.

Jaq. Sir, by your patience. If I heard you rightly,

The duke hath put on a religious life

And thrown into neglect the pompous court?

Jaq. de B. He hath.

Jaq. To him will I: out of these convertites

There is much matter to be heard and heard.

[To Duke] You to your former honour I beseech you;

Your patience and your virtue well deserves it:

[To Orl.] You to a love that your true heart doth merit:

[To Phe.] To you of love and land and love.

[To Sil.] You to a long and well-deserted:

[To Touch.] And you to wrangling; for thy loving voyage

Is but for two months victual'd. So, to your pleasure I am for other than for dancing measures.

Duke S. Stay, Jaques, stay.

Jaq. To no person common; what you would have

I'll stay to know at your abandon'd cave. [Exit.

Duke S. Proceed, proceed: we will begin these

As we do trust they 'll end, in true delights. [rites.

[Enter Jaques de Boys.

EPilogue.

Ros. It is not the fashion to see the lady the epilogue: but it is no more unhandsome than to see the lord the prologue. If it be true that good wine needs no bush, 'tis true that a good play needs no epilogue; yet to good wine they do use good bushies, and good plays prove the better by the help of good epilogues. What a case am I in then, that am neither a good epilogue nor cannot insinuate with you in the behalf of a good play! I am not furnished like a beggar, therefore to beg will not become me: my way is to conjure you; and I'll begin with the women. I charge you, O women, for the love you bear to men, to like as much of this play as I have said you: I charge you, O men, for the love you bear to women—as I perceive by your simpering, none of you hates them—that between you and the women the play may please. If I were a woman I would kiss as many of you as had bad things that were past you, compiled that liked me and breaths that I defied not: and, I am sure, as many as have good beards or good faces or sweet breaths will, for my kind offer, when I make curtsey, bid me farewell.

[Exeunt.

INDUCTION.

SCENE I.—Before an alcohole on a heath.

Enter Hostess and Sly.

Host. A pair of stocks, you rogue! Sly. Ye are a baggage: the Slys are no rogues; look in the chronicles; we came in with Richard Conqueror. Therefore paucas pullabris; let the world slide: sessa! [burst? Host. You will not pay for the glasses you have Sly. No, not a denier. Go by, Jeronimy: go to thy cold bed, and warm thee.

Host. I know my remedy; I must go fetch the third- borough. [Exit. Sly. Third, or fourth, or fifth borough, I'll an- swer him by law: I'll not budge an inch, boy; let him come, and kindly. [Falls asleep.

Horns winded. Enter a Lord from hunting, with his train.

Lord. Huntsman, I charge thee, tender well my hounds:
Brach Merriman, the poor cur is emboss'd; And couple Cloudder with the deep-mouth'd brach. Saw'st thou not, boy, how Silver made it good At the hedge-corner, in the coldest fault? I would not lose the dog for twenty pound. [lord; First Hun. Why, Behman is as good as he, my He cried upon it at the merest loss And twice to-day pick'd out the dullest scent: Trust me, I take him for the better dog. Lord. Thou art a fool: if Echo were as fleet, I would esteem him worth a dozen such,
But sum them well and look unto them all:
To-morrow I intend to hunt again.
First Hun. I will, my lord.
Lord. What's here? one dead, or drunk? See, doth he breathe?
Sec. Hun. He breathes, my lord. Were he not warn'd with ale,
This were a bed but cold to sleep so soundly. [lies! Lord. O monstrous beast! how like a swine he Grim death, how foul and loathsome is thine image! Sirs, I will practise on this drunken man. What think you, if we were convey'd to bed, Wrapp'd in sweet clothes, rings put upon his fingers, A most delicious banquet by his bed,

And brave attendants near him when he wakes,
Would not the beggar then forget himself? [choose.
First Hun. Believe me, lord, I think he cannot Sec. Hun. It would seem strange unto him when he waked. [fancy.

Lord. Even as a flattering dream or worthless Then take him up and manage well the jest: Carry him gently to my fairest chamber And hang it round with all my wanton pictures: Balm his foul head in warm distilled waters And burn sweet wood to make the lodging sweet: Procure me music ready when he wakes, To make a dulcet and a heavenly sound; And if he chance to speak, be ready straight And with a low submissive reverence Say 'What is it your honour will command?' Let one attend him with a silver basin Pull of rose-water and bestrew'd with flowers; Another bear the ewer, the third a diaper, And say 'Will't please your lordship cool your Some one be ready with a costly suit [hands?] And ask him what apparel he will wear; Another tell him of his hounds and horse, And that his lady mourns at his disease: Persuade him that he hath been lunatic; And when he says he is, say that he dreams, For he is nothing but a mighty lord. This do and do it kindly, gentle sirs: It will be pastime passing excellent, If he be husbanded with modesty.

First Hun. My lord, I warrant you we will play As he shall think by our true diligence [our part, He is no less than what we say he is.

Lord. Take him up gently to bed with him; And each one to his office when he wakes. [Some hear out Sly. A trumpet sounds. Sirrah, go see what trumpet's that sounds: [Exit Servingman.

Beliike, some noble gentleman that means, Travelling some journey, to repose him here.

Re-enter Servingman.

How now! who is it?

Serr. An't please your honour, players That offer service to your lordship.

Lord. Bid them come near.
Enter Players.

Now, fellows, you are welcome. Players. We thank your honour. Lord. Do you intend to stay with me to-night? A Player. So please your lordship to accept our Lord. With all my heart. This fellow I remember, since once he play’d a farmer’s eldest son: ‘T was where you wou’d the gentlewoman so well: I have forgot your name; but, sure, that part Was aptly fitted and naturally perform’d. [means. A Player. Fear not, my lord; I will contain our Lord. ’Tis very true: thou didst it excellent. Well, you are come to me in happy time; The rather for I have some sport in hand Wherein your cunning can assist me much. There is a lord will hear you play to-night: But I am doubtful of your modesties; Lest over-eyeing of his odd behaviour,— For yet his honour never heard a play,— You break into some merry passion And so offend him; for I tell you, sirs, If you should smile he grows impatient. [selves, A Player. Fear not, my lord; I will contain our Were he the veriest antic in the world. Lord. Go, sirrah, take them to the buttery, And give them friendly welcome every one: Let them want nothing that my house affords. [Exit one with the Players. Sirrah, go you to Bartholomew my page, And see him dress’d in all suits like a lady: That done, conduct him to the drunkard’s chamber; And call him ‘madam,’ do him obeisance. Tell him from me, as he will win my love, He bear himself with honourable action, Such as a knight is hold and observed in noble ladies Unto their lords, by them accomplished: Such duty to the drunkard let him do With soft low tongue and lowly courtesy, And say ‘What is’t your honour will command, Wherein your lady and your humble wife May show her duty and make known her love?’ And then with kind embracements, tempting kisses, And with declining head into his bosom, Bid him shed tears, as being overjoy’d To see her noble lord restored to health, Who for this seven years hath esteemed him No less than king and lord, his beggar: And if the boy have not a woman’s gift To rain a shower of commanded tears, An onion will do well for such a shift, Which in a napkin being close convey’d Shall in despite enforce a watery eye, See this dispatch’d with all the haste thou canst: Anon I’ll give thee more instructions. [Exit a Serv’man. I know the boy will well usurp the grace, Voice, gait and action of a gentlewoman; I long to hear him call the drunkard husband, And how my men may use them with ease from laughter When they do homage to this simple peasant. I’ll in to counsel them; have my presence May well abate the over-merry spleen Which otherwise would grow into extremes. [Exeunt. SCENE II. — A bedchamber in the Lord’s house. Enter not at Sly, with Attendants; some with apparel, others with basin and ever and other appurtenances; and Lords. Sly. For God’s sake, a pot of small ale. First Serv. Will’t please your lordship drink a cup of such? Sec. Serv. Will’t please your honour taste of these conserves? Third Serv. What raiment will your honour wear today? Sly. I, Christopher Sly; call me not ‘honour’ nor ‘lordship’; I ne’er drunk sack in my life; and if you give me any conserves, give me conserves of beef; ne’er ask me what raiment I’ll wear; for I have no more doublets but the that I have this morning on them, oftentimes than legs, nor no more shoes than feet; my, sometime more feet than shoes, or such shoes as my toes look through the over-leather. Lord. Heaven cease this idle humour in your O, that a mighty man of such descent, [honour! Of such possessions and so high esteem, Should be infused with so foul a spirit! Sly. What, would you make me mail? Am not I Christopher Sly, old Sly’s son of Burton-leas, by birth a pedlar, by education a cardmaker, by transmutation a bear-herd, and now by present profession a tinker? Ask Marian Hacket, the fat alewife of Wincholfe, if she know me not: if she say I am not fourteen pence on the score for sheer ale, score me up for the liest knave in Christendom. What! I am not bestrawed: here’s— Third Serv. O, this is it that makes your lady Play? I mean, sirs, your lordship shall have them! [droop! Sec. Serv. O, this is it that makes your servants Lord. Hence comes it that your kindred shuns your house, As beaten hence by your strange lunacy. O noble lord, be think thee of thy birth Call home thy ancient thoughts from banishment And banish hence these abject lowly dreams. Look how thy servants do attend on thee, Each in his office ready at thy beck. Wilt thou have music? hark! Apollo plays [Music. And twenty caged nightingales do sing: Or wilt thou play? we’ll bring to a couch Softer and sweeter than the lustful bed On purpose trimm’d up for Semiramis. Say thou wilt walk; we will bestrew the ground: Or wilt thou ride? thy horses shall be trapp’d, Their harness studed all with gold and pearl. Dost thou love hawking? thou hast hawks will soar Above the morning lark: or wilt thou hunt? Thy hounds shall make the welkin answer them And fetch shrill echoes from the hollow earth. First Serv. Say thou wilt course; thy greyhounds are as swift As breather deer, ay, fleeter than the roe. Sec. Serv. Dost thou love pictures? we will fetch thee straight Adonis painted by a running brook, And Cythera all in sedges hid, Which seem to move and wanton with her breath, Even as the waving sedges play with wind. Lord. We’ll show thee Io as she was a maid, And how she was beguiled and surprised, As lively painted as the deed was done. [wood, Third Serv. Or Daphne running through a thorny Scratching her legs that one shall swear she bleeds, And at that sight shall all and gods stop, So workmanly the blood and tears are drawn. Lord. Thou art a lord and nothing but a lord: Thou hast a lady far more beautiful Than any woman in this waning age. [for the First Serv. And till the tears that she hath shed Like curious floods e’er-run her lovely face, She was the fairest creature in the world; And yet she is inferior to none. Sly. Am I a lord? and have I such a lady? Or do I dream? or have I dream’d till now? I do not sleep; I see, I hear, I speak: I smell sweet savours and I eat sweet things: Upon my life, I am a lord indeed And not a tinker nor Christopher Sly. Well, bring our lady hither to our sight; And once again, a pot o’ the smallest ale.
ACT I.

THE TAMING OF THE SREWH.  SCENE I.

See. Serv. Will 't please your mightiness to wash your hands?
O, how we joy to see your wit restored!
O, that once more you knew but what you are!
These five years you have been in a dream;
Or when you waked, so waked as if you slept.
Sly. These five years! by my fay, a goodly nap.
But did I need to speak of all that time?

First Serv. O, yes, my lord, but very idle words:
For though you lay here in this goodly chamber,
Yet would you say ye were beaten out of door;
And rail upon the hostess of the house;
And say you would present her at the last,
Because she brought stone jars and no seal'd quarts:
Sometimes you would call out for Cicely Hacket.
Sly. Ay, the woman's maid of the house.

Third Serv. Why, sir, you know no house nor such maid,
Nor no such men as you reckon'd up,
As Stephen Sly and old John Naps of Greece
And Peter Turph and Henry Pinmergev
And twenty more such names and men as these
Which never were nor no man ever saw.
Sly. Now Lord be thanked for my good amends!
All. Amen.
Sly. I thank thee: thou shalt not lose by it.

Enter the Page as a lady, with Attendants.

Page. How fares my noble lord?
Sly. Marry, I fare well; for here is cheer enough.
Where is my wife?
Page. Here, noble lord: what is thy will with her?
Sly. Are you my wife and will not call me husband?

My wife should call me 'lord': I am your good-
Page. My husband and my lord, my lord and hus-
I am your wife in all obedience.

Sly. I say it well. What must I call her?

Lord. Madam.
Sly. All madam, or Joan madam? [ladies.
Lord. 'Madam,' and nothing else: so Lord calls
Sly. Madam, wife say, that I have dream'd
And slept above some fifteen year or more.
Page. Ay, and the time seems thirty unto me,
Being all th' time about forty years by bed.
Sly. 'Tis much. Servants, leave me and her alone.

Madam, undress you and come now to bed.

Page. Thrice-noble lord, let me entreat you
To pardon me yet for a night or two,
Or, if not so, until the last sound of yawning,
For your physicians have expressly charged,
In peril to incur your former malady,
That I should yet absent me from your bed:
I hope this reason stands for my excuse.
Sly. Ay, it stands so that I may hardly tarry so long. But I would be loath to fall into my dreams again: I will therefore tarry in despite of the flesh and the blood.

Enter a Messenger.

Mess. Your honour's players, hearing your amend-
Are come to play a pleasant comedy.
I come, For so your doctors hold it very meet.
Seeing too much sadness hath congeal'd your blood,
And melancholy is the nurse of frenzy:
Therefore they thought it good you hear a play
And frame your mind to mirth and merriment.
With which they bring a thousand and lengthens life.
Sly. Marry, I will, let them play it. Is not a comenity a Christmas gambold or a tumbling-trick?
Page. No, my good lord: it is more pleasing stuff.
Sly. What, household stuff?
Page. It is a kind of history.
Sly. Well, we'll see 't. Come, madam wife, sit by my side and let the world slip: we shall ne'er be younger.

Flourish.

ACT I.

SCENE I.—Padua. A public place.

Enter Lucentio and his man Tranio.

Luc. Tranio, since for the great desire I had
To see fair Padua, nursery of arts,
I am arrived for fruitful Lombardy,
The pleasant garden of great Italy;
And by my father's love and leave am arm'd
With his good will and thy good company,
My trusty servant, well approved in all,
Here let us breathe and haply institute
A course of learning and ingenious studies.
Pisa renowned for grave citizens
Gave me my being and my father first,
A merchant of great tracity through the world,
Lucentio, come of the Bentivoli,
Lucentio's son brought up in Florence
It shall become to serve all hopes conceived,
To deck his fortune with his virtuous deeds:
And therefore, Tranio, for the time I study,
Virtue and that part of philosophy
Will I apply that treats of happiness
By virtue specially to be achieved.
Tell me thy mind; for I have Pisa left
And am to Padua come, as he that leaves
A shallow wish to plunge him in the deep
And with satiety seeks to quench his thirst.

Tra. Mi perdono, gentle master mine,
I am in all affected as yourself;
Glad that you thus continue your resolve
To seek the sweets of sweet philosophy.
Only, good master, while we do admire
This virtue and this moral discipline,

Let 's be no stoics nor no stocks, I pray;
Or so devote to Aristotle's checks
As Ovid be an outcast quits a beloved Balk logic with acquaintance that you have
And practise rhetoric in your common talk;
Music and poesy use to quicken you;
The mathematics and the metaphysics,
Fall to them as you find your stomach serves you;
No profit grows where wills and desires
In brief, sir, study what you most affect.

Luc. Gramercies, Tranio, well dost thou advise.
If, Bianccllo, thou wert come ashore,
We could at once put us in readiness,
And take a lodging fit to entertain
Such friends as time in Padua shall beget.
But stay a while: what company is this?

Tra. Master, some show to welcome us to town.

Enter Baptista, Katharina, Bianca, Gremio, and Hortensio. Lucentio and Tranio stand by.

Bap. Gentlemen, importune me no further,
For how I firmly am resolved you know;
That is, not to bestow my youngest daughter
Before I have a husband for the elder;
If either of you both love Katharina,
Because I know you well and love you well,
Leave shall you have to court her at your pleasure.

Grc. [Aside] To cart her rather: she's too rough for me.

There, Tranio, Hortensio, will you any wife?

Kath. I pray you, sir, is it your will
To make a state of me amongst these mates?
Hor. Mates, maid! how mean you that? no mates
Under this sun, this golden hour and mould. [for you,
Kath. I' faith, it be, you shall never need to fear:
Wis it is not half way to her heart;
But if it were, doubt not her care should be
To comb your noddle with a three-leg'd stool
And paint your face and use you like a fool.
Hor. Yet our till such devils, good Lord deliver us!
Gre. And me too, good Lord! [ward:
Tra. Hush, master! here's some good pastime to,
That wench is stark mad or wonderful froward.
Luc. But in the other's silence do I see
Maid's mild behaviour and sobriety.
Hor. Peace, peace.
Tra. Well said, master; mum! and gaze your fill.
Bap. Gentlemen, that I may soon make good
What I have said, Bianca, get you in:
And let it not displease thee, good Bianca,
For I will love thee ne'er the less, my girl.
Keth. A pretty peat! it is best
Put finger in the eye, an she knew why.
Bieta. Sister, content you in my discontent.
Sir, to your pleasure humbly I subscribe:
My books and instruments shall be my company,
On them to look and practise by myself. [speak.
Luc. Poor Bianca! thou may'st bear Minerva's
Hor. Signior Baptista, will you be so strange?
Sorry am I that our good will effects
Bianca's grief.
Gre. Why will you mew her up,
Signior Baptista, for this fiend of hell,
And make her bear the penance of her tongue?
Bap. Gentlemen, content ye: I am resolved:
Go in, Bianca: [Exit Bianca.
And for I know she taketh most delight
In music, instruments and poetry,
Schoolmasters will I keep within my house,
Fit to instruct her well by me.
Hor. Or Signior Gremio, you, know any such,
Prefer them hither; for to cunning men
I will be very kind, and liberal
To mine own children in good bringing up:
And so farewell. Katharina, you may stay;
For I have more to commune with Bianca. [Exit.
Keth. Why, and I trust I may go too, may I not?
What, shall I be appointed hours; as though, belike, I knew not what to take, and what to leave, ha! [Exit.
Gre. You may go to the devil's dam: your gifts are so good, here's none will hold you. Their love is not so great, Hortensio, but we may blow our nails together, and fast it fairly out: our cake's dough on both sides.
Farwell: yet, for the love I bear my sweet Bianca, if I can by any means light on a fit man to teach her that wherein she delights, I will wish him to her father.
Hor. So will I, Signior Gremio: but a word, I pray,
Though the nature of our quarrel yet never brooked parole, know now, upon advice, it toucheth us both, that we may yet again have access to our fair mistress and be happy rivals in Bianca's love, to labour and encourage the good specialally.
Gre. What's that, I pray?
Hor. Marry, sir, to get a husband for her sister.
Gre. A husband! a devil.
Hor. I say, a husband.
Gre. I say, a devil. Thinkest thou, Hortensio, that there be so very rich, any man is so very a fool to be married to hell?
Hor. Tush, Gremio, thou knowest not how, for thou couldst not light a candle, would he take her with all faults, and lovingly?
Gre. I cannot tell; but I had as lief take her dowry with this condition, to be whipted at the high cross every morning.

Hor. Faith, as you say, there's small choice in rotten apple; but consider; since this bar in law makes us friends, it shall be so far forth friendly maintained till by helping Baptista's eldest daughter to a husband we set his youngest free for a husband, and then have to 't refresh. Sweet Bianca! Happy man be his dole! He that runs fastest gets the ring.
How say you, Signior Gremio?
Gre. I am agreed; and would I had given him the best horse in Padua to begin his wooing that would thoroughly woo her, wed her and bed her and rid the house of her! Come on.

[Exeunt Gremio and Hortensio.

Tra. I pray, sir, tell me, is this possible?
That love should of a sudden take such hold?
Luc. O Tranio, till I found it to be true,
I never thought it possible or likely;
But see, while idly I stood looking on,
I found the effect of love in idleness;
And now in plainness do confess to thee,
That art to me as secret and as dear
As Anna to the Queen of Carthage was,
Tranio, I burn, I pine, I perish, Tranio,
If I achieve not this young modest girl.
Counsel me, Tranio, for I know thou canst;
Assist me, Tranio, for I know the servant
Tra. Master, it is no time to chide you now;
Affection is not rated from the heart:
If love have touch'd you, nought remains but so,
'Redime te captam quam quaes minimo.'
Luc. Gramercies, lad, go forward; this contents:
The rest will comfort, for thy counsel's sound.
Tra. Master, you look'd so longly on the maid,
Perhaps you mark'd not what 's the pith of all.
Luc. O yes, I saw sweet beauty in her face,
Such as the daughter of Agenor had,
That made great Jove to humble him to hand,
When with the kynde she kiss'd the Cretan strand.
Tra. Saw you no more? mark'd you not how her
Began to scold and raise up such a storm [sister
That mortal ears might hardly endure the din?
Luc. Tranio, I saw her coral lips to move
And with her breath she did perfume the air:
Sacred and sweet was all I saw in her. [trance.

Tra. Nay, then, 'tis time to stir him from his
I pray, awake, sir: if you love the maid, [stands:
Bend thoughts and wits to achieve her. Thus it
Her eldest sister is so curst and shrewd
That till the father rid his hands of her,
Master, you must live a maid at home;
And therefore has he closely mew'd her up,
Because she will not be annoy'd with suitors.
Luc. Ah, Tranio, what a cruel father's he! But art thou not advised, he took some care
To get her cunning schoolmasters to instruct her?
Tra. Ay, marry, am I, sir; and now 'tis plotted.
Luc. I have it, Tranio. [Exit.

Tra. Master, for my hand,
Both our inventions meet and jump in one.
Luc. Tell me thine first.

Tra. You will be schoolmaster
And undertake the teaching of the maid:
That's your device.
Luc. It is: may it be done?

Tra. Not possible; for who shall bear your part.
And be in Padua here Vincentio's son,
Keep house and ply his book, welcome his friends,
Visit his countrymen and banquet them. [Luc. Basic, content thee, Luc. I have it full.
We have not yet been seen in any house,
Nor can we be distinguished by our faces
For man or master; then it follows thus;
Thou shalt be master, Tranio, in my stead,
Keep house and part and pay thy son:
I will some other be, some Florentine,
Some Neapolitan, or meaner man of Pisa.

'1's hatch'd and shall be so: Tranio, at once

13
Uncase thee; take my colour'd hat and cloak:
When Biondello comes, he waits on thee;
But I will charm him first to keep his tongue.

Tru. So had you need.
In brief, sir, sith it your pleasure is,
And I am fied to be obedient;
For so your father charged me at our parting,
'Be serviceable to my son,' quoth he,
Although I think 't was in another sense;
I am content to be Lucentio.

Enter Tranio.

Luc. Tranio, be so, because Lucentio loves;
And let me be a slave, to achieve that mad
Whose sudden sight hath thrall'd my wounded eye.
Here comes the rogue.

Enter Biondello.

Sirrah, where have you been?
Bion. Where have I been! Nay, how now! where are you? Master, has my fellow Tranio stolen your clothes? Or you stolen his? or both? pray, what's the news?

Luc. Sirrah, come hither: 'tis no time to jest,
And therefore frame your manners to the time.
Your fellow Tranio here, to save my life,
Puts my apparel and my countenance on,
And I for my escape have put on his;
For I quarrel since I came ashore.
I kill'd a fish to-day; and fear I was deserv'd;
Wait you on him, I charge you, as becomes,
While I make way from hence to save my life:
You understand me?

Bion. Luc. And not a jot of Tranio in your mouth;
Tranio is changed into Lucentio.
Bion. The better for him: would I were so too!
Tru. So could I, faith, boy, to have the next wish after,
[daughter.
That Lucentio indeed had Baptista's youngest But, sirrah, not for my sake, but your master's,
I advise.

You use your manners discreetly in all kind of company.
When I am alone, why, then I am Tranio;
But in all places else your master Lucentio.

Luc. Tranio, let's go: one thing more rests, that Thyself execute, to make one among these wooers;
If thou ask me why, sufficient, my reasons are both good and weighty.

[Exeunt.

The presenters above speak.

First Serv. My lord, you not; you do not mind the play.
Sly. Yes; by Saint Anne, do I. A good matter, surely: comes there any more of it?
Page. My lord, 'tis but begun.
Sly. 'Tis a very excellent piece of work, madam lady: would 't were done! [They sit and mark.

Enter Petruchio and his man Grumio.

Pet. Verona, for a while I take my leave,
To see my friends in Padua, but of all
My best beloved and approved friend,
Hortensio; and I trow this is his house.
Here, sirrah Grumio; knock, I say.
Grum. Knock, sir! whom should I knock? is there any at home to bestow your worship?
Pet. Villain, I say, knock me soundly.
Grum. Knock you here, sir! why, sir, what am I, sir, that I should knock you here, sir?
Pet. Villain, I say, knock me at this gate
And rap me well, or I'll knock your knave's gate.
Grum. Why is my master grown quarrelsome. I should knock you first.
And then I know after who comes by the worst.
Pet. Will it not be?
And shrewd and froward, so beyond all measure, The very image of a woman, neither more nor less. I would not wed her for a mine of gold. [jeffet: Pet. Hortensio, peace! thou know'st not gold's Tell me her father's name and 'tis enough; For I will board her, though she chide as loud As thunder when the clouds in autumn crack. Hort. She is Baptista Minola, An affable and courteous gentleman: Her name is Katharina Minola, Renown'd in Padua for her scolding tongue. Pet. I know her father, though I know not her; And he knew my deceased father well. I will call her Hortensio; 'tis no time to venture my To give you over at this first encounter, Unless you will accompany me thither. Gru. I pray you, sir, let him go while the humour lasts. O' my word, an she knew him as well as I do, she would think scolding would do little good upon him: she may perhaps call him half a score knaves or so: why, that's nothing; an he begin once, he'll rail in his rope-tricks. I'll tell you what, sir, an she stand him but a little, he will throw a figure in her face and disfigure her with it that should make her eyes to see withal than a cat. You know him not, sir. Hor. Tarry, Petruchio, I must go with thee, For in Baptista's keep my treasure is: He hath the jewel of my life in hold, His youngest daughter, beautiful Bianca, And her withholdst from me and other more, Suitors to her and rivals in my love, Supposing it a thing impossible, For those defects I have before rehearsed, That ever Katharina will be woor'd; Therefore this order hath Baptista ta'en, That none shall have access into Bianca Till Katharine the curst have got a husband. Gru. Katharine the curst! A title for a maid of all titles the worst. Hor. Now shall my friend Petruchio do me grace, And offer me disguised in sober robes To go to Baptista as a gentleman, Well seen in music, to instruct Bianca; That so I may, by this device, at least Have leave and leisure to make love to her And unsuspected court her by herself. Gru. Here's no knavery! See, to beguile the old folk, how the young folks lay their heads together! Enter Gremio, and Lucentio disguised. Master, master, look about you: who goes there, ha? Hor. Peace, Grumio! it is the rival of my love. Petruchio, stand by a while. Gru. A proper striding and an amorous! Gre. O, very well, I have perused the note. Harsh you, sir; I'll have them very fairly bound: All books of love, see that at any hand; And see you read no other lectures to her: You understand me: over and beside Signior Hortensio, the curst; I'll mend it with a largess. Take your paper too, And let me have them very well perfumed: For she is sweeter than perfume itself To whom they go to. What will you read to her? Luc. What'er I read to her, I'll plead for you As for your patron, and you and me, As firmly as yourself were still in place: Yea, and perhaps with more successful words Than you, unless you were a scholar, sir. Gre. O this learning, what a thing it is! Gre. O this woodcock, what an ass it is! [Pet. Petruchio, sir! Hor. Hortensio, mum! God save you, Signior Hortensio. And you are well met, Signior Hortensio. Trow you whither I am going? To Baptista Minola, I promised to inquire carefully About a schoolmaster for the fair Bianca: And by good fortune I have lighted well On this young man, for learning and behaviour Fit for her turn, well read in poetry And other books, good ones, I warrant ye. Hor. 'Tis well; and I have met a gentleman Hath promised me to help me to another, A fine musician to instruct our mistress; So shall I no wit be behind in duty To fair Bianca, so beloved of me. [prove. Gre. Beloved of me; and that my deeds shall Gru. And that his bags shall prove. Hor. Greenes, how now time to vent our love? Listen to me, and if you speak me fair, I'll tell you news indifferent good for either. Here is a gentleman whom by chance I met, Upon agreement from us to his liking, Will undertake to woo curst Katharine, Yea, and to marry her, if her dowry please. Gre. So said, so done, is well. Hortensio, have you told him all her faults? Pet. I know she is an irksome brawling scold: If that be all, masters, I hear no harm. [man? Gre. No, say'st me so, friend? What country? Pet. Born in Verona, old Antonio's son: My father dead, my fortune lives for me; And I do hope good days and long to see. [strange! Gre. O sir, such a life, with such a wife, were But if you have a stomach, to 't I God's name: You shall have me assisting you in all. But will you woo this wild-cat? Pet. Will I live? Gru. Will he woo her? ay, or I'll hang her. Pet. Why came I hither but to that intent? Think you a little din can daunt mine ears? Have I not in my time heard lions roar? Have I not heard the sea puff'd up with winds Rage like an angry boar chafed with sweat? Have I not heard great ordinance in the field, And heaven's artillery thunder in the skies? Have I not in a pitched battle heard Loud 'larums, neighing steeds, and trumpets' clang? And do you think I am such a woman's tongue, That gives not half so great a blow to hear As will a chestnut in a farmer's fire? Tush, tush! fear boys with bugs. Gre. Hortensio, hark: This gentleman is happily arrived, My mind presumes, for his own good and ours. Hor. I promised we would be contributors And bear his charge of wooing, whatsoe'er. Gre. And so we will, provided that he win her. Gru. I would I were as sure of a good dinner. Enter Tranio brave, and Biondello. Tra. Gentlemen, God save you. If I may be bold, Tell me, I beseech you, which is the readiest way To the house of Signior Baptista Minola? Bion. He that has the two fair daughters: is 't Tra. Even he, Biondello, the man you mean? Gre. Harsh you, sir; you mean not her to— Tra. Perhaps, him and her, sir: what have you to do? Pet. Not her that chides, sir, at any hand, I pray. Tra. I love no chiders, sir. Biondello, let's away. Luc. Well begun, Tranio. Hor. Sir, a word ere you go; Are you a suitor to the maid you talk of, yea or no? Tra. And if I be, sir, is it any offence? Gre. No; if without more words you will get you hence. Hor. Tra. Why, sir, I pray, are not the streets as free For me as for you? Gre. But so is not she. Tra. For what reason, I beseech you? 195
ACT II.

THE TAMING OF THE SHREW.  SCENE I.

Bap. Was ever gentlewoman thus weighed as I? But who comes here?

Enter Gremio, Lucentio, with Hortensio in the habit of a mean man; Petruchio, with Hortensio as a musician; and Tranio, with Blondelio bearing a lute and books.

Gre. Good morrow, neighbour Baptista.
Bap. Good morrow, neighbour Gremio. God save you, gentlemen!

Petr. And, good sir! Pray, have you not a daughter call'd Katharina, fair and virtuous?

Bap. I have a daughter, sir, called Katharina.
Gre. You are too blunt: go to it orderly. [leave.

Petr. You wrong me, Signior Gremio: give me I am a gentleman of Verona, sir. That, hearing of her beauty and her wit, Her affability and bashful modesty, Her wondrous qualities and mild behaviour, Am bold to show myself a forward guest Within your house, to make mine eye the witness Of that report which I so oft have heard. And, for an entrance to my entertainment, I do present you with a man of mine, [Presenting Hortensio. Cunning in music and the mathematicks, To instruct her fully in those sciences, Whereof I know she is not ignorant:
Accept of him, or else you do me wrong:
His name is Licio, born in Mantua. [sake.
Bap. You're welcome, sir; and he, for your good But for my daughter Katharine, this I know, She is not to try your turn, the more my grief.
Petr. I see you do not mean to part with her, Or else you like not of my company.

Bap. Mistake me not; I speak but as I find.
Whence are you, sir? what may I call your name?

Petr. Petruchio is my name; Antonio's son.

Bap. Art thou a man well known throughout all Italy? [sake.

Petr. I know him well: you are welcome for his Gre. Saving your tale, Petruchio, I pray, Let us, that are poor petitioners, speak too: Baccare! you are marvellous forward.
Petr. O, pardon me, Signior Gremio; I would fain be doing. [wooning.

Gre. I doubt it not, sir; but you will curse your Neighbour, this is a gift very grateful, I am sure of it. To express the like kindness, myself, that have been more kindly beholding to you than any, freely give unto you this young scholar [presenting Luciento], that hath been long studying at Rheims; as cunning in Greek, Latin, and other languages, as the other in music and mathematics: his name is Cambio; pray, accept his service well.

Bap. A thousand thanks, Signior Gremio. Welcome, good Cambio. [To Tranio] But, gentle sir, methinks you walk like a stranger; may I be so bold to know the cause of your coming?

Tran. Pardon me, sir, the boldness is mine own, That in a little change call me a stranger here: Do make myself a suitor to your daughter, Unto Bianca, fair and virtuous.

Nor is your firm resolve unknown to me, In the preferment of the eldest sister. This liberty is all that I request, That, upon knowledge of my parentage, I may have welcome amongst the rest that woo Free access and favour as the rest: And, toward the education of your daughters, I here bestow a simple instrument, And this small packet of Greek and Latin books: If you accept them, then their worth is great.

Bap. Lucentio is your name; of whence, I pray?

Tran. Of Pisa, sir; son to Vincentio.

Bap. A mighty man of Pisa; by report I know him well: you are very welcome, sir. Take you the lute, and you the set of books; You shall go see your pupils presently.

Holla, within! Enter a Servant.

Sirrah, lead these gentlemen To your daughters; and tell them both, These are their tutors: bid them use them well. [Exit Servant, with Lucentio and Hortensio, Bianco following.

We will go walk a little in the orchard, And then to dinner. You are passing welcome, And so I pray you all to think yourselves.

Pet. Signior Baptista, my business asketh haste, And every day I cannot come to woo. You knew my father well, and in him me; Left solely heir to all his lands and goods, Which I have better'd rather than decreased: Then tell me, if I get your daughter's love, What dowry shall I have with her to wife?

Bap. After my small thesetting of my lands, And in possession twenty thousand crowns. Pet. And, for that dowry, I'll assure her of Her widowhood, be it that she survive me, In all my lands and leases whatsoever: Let specialties be therefore drawn between us, That covenants may be kept on either hand.

Bap. Ay, when the special thing is well obtained, That is, her love; for that is all in all. Pet. Why, that is nothing; for I tell you, father, I am as peremptory as she proud-minded; And where two raging fires meet together They do consume the thing that feeds their fury: Though little fire grows great with little wind, Yet extreme gusts will blow out fire and all: So to her and so she yields to me; For I am rough and woo not like a kinsman. [Speed! Pet. Ay, the proof; as mountains are for That shake not, though they blow perpetually. Re-enter Hortensio, with his head broke.

Bap. How now, my friend? why dost thou look so pale?

Hor. For fear, I promise you, if I look pale.

Bap. What, will my daughter prove a good musician?

Hor. I think she'll sooner prove a soldier: Iron may hold with her, but never hens. [lute? Bap. Why, then thou castst not break her to the Hor. Why, no; for she hath broke the lute to me. I did but tell her she mistook her frets, And bow'd her hand to teach her fingering; When, with a most impatient devilish spirit, 'Frets, call you these?' quoth she; 'I'll tune with them.' And, with that word, she struck me on the head, And through the instrument my pate made way; And there I stood amazed for a while, As on a pillow, looking through the lute: While she shrieked, and call'd me several names, And twangling Jack; with twenty such vile terms, As had she studied to misuse me so.

Pet. Now, by the world, it is a lusty wench; I love her ten times more than ever I did: O, how I long to have some chat with her! Bap. Well, go with me and be not so discomfited: Proceed in practice with my younger daughter; She's apt to learn and thankful for good turns. Signior Petruchio, will you go with us, Or shall I send my daughter Kate to you?

Pet. I pray you do. [Exit all but Petruchio. Bap. I will attend her here,

And woo her with some spirit when she comes. Say that she raih; why then I'll tell her plain How she sings as sweetly as a nightingale; Say that she frown; I'll say she looks as clear As morning roses newly wash'd with dew: Say she be mute and will not speak a word; Then I'll commend her volubility, And say she uttereth piercing eloquence; If she do bid me pack, I'll give her thanks, As though she bid me stay by her a week; If she deny to wed, I'll crave the day When I shall ask the bans and when be married. But here she comes; and now, Petruchio, speak.

Enter Katharine.

Good morrow, Kate; for that's your name, I hear. Kath. Well have you heard, but something hard of hearing:
They call me Katharine that do talk of me. Pet. You lie, in faith; for you are call'd plain Kate, And bonny Kate and sometimes Kate the curst; But Kate, the prettiest Kate in Christendom, Kate of Kate Hall, my super-dainty Kate, For daubing Kate and therefore, Kate, Take this of me, Kate of my consolations: Hearing thy mildness praised in every town, Thy virtues spoke of, and thy beauty sounded, Yet not so deeply as to thee belongs, Myself am moved to woo thee for my wife. Kath. Moved! in good time: let him that moved you hither Remove you hence: I knew you at the first You were a moveable.

Pet. What, what's a moveable? Kath. A join'd-fool. Pet. Thou hast hit it; come, sit on me. Kath. Asses are made to bear, and so are you. Pet. Women are made to bear, and so are you. Kath. No such jade as you, if you mean you. Pet. Alas! good Kate, I will not burden thee; For, knowing thee to be but young and light— Kath. Too light for such a swallow as you to catch; And yet as heavy as my weight should be. Pet. Should be! should—laugh! Kath. Well ta'en, and like a buzzard. Pet. O slow-wing'd turtle! shall a buzzard take thee? Kath. Ay, for a turtle, as he takes a buzzard. Pet. Come, come, you wassp; if faith, you are too angry. Kath. If I be waship, best beware my sting,
ACT II: THE TAMING OF THE SHREW

SCENE I

Pet. My remedy is then, to pluck it out.
Kath. Ay, if the fool could find it where it lies.
Pet. Who knows not where a wasp does wear its sting? In his tail.
Kath. In his tongue.
Pet. Whose tongue?
Kath. A lady's tongue is fit to talk of tails: and so farewell.
Pet. What, with my tongue in your tail? nay,
Good Kate; I am a gentleman. [come again,
Kath. That I'll try. [She strikes him.
Pet. I swear I'll cuff you, if you strike again.
Kath. So may you lose your arms;
If you are wise, you are no more a man;
And if no gentleman, why then no arms.
Pet. A herald, Kate? O, put me in thy books!
Kath. What is your crest? a cocchub?
Pet. A comely cock, so Kate will be my hen.
Kath. No cock of mine; you crow too like a raven.
Pet. Nay, come, Kate, come; you must not look so sour.
Kath. It is my fashion, when I see a crab.
Pet. Why, here's no crab; and therefore look not sour.
Kath. There is, there is.
Pet. Then show it me.
Kath. Had I a glass, I would.
Pet. What, you mean my face?
Kath. Well aim'd of such a young one.
Pet. Now, by Saint George, I am too young for you.
Kath. Yet you are a winder.
Pet. 'Tis with cares.
Kath. I care not.
Pet. Nay, hear you, Kate: in sooth you scape not Kath. I chafe you, if I tarry: let me go. [so.
Pet. No, not a whit: I find you passing gentle,
Thou art as pleasant, gamesome, passing courteous,
But slow in speech; yet sweet as spring-time flowers:
Thou canst not frown, thou canst not look askance,
Nor bite the lip, as angry wenches will,
Nor have thou pleasure to be cross in talk,
But thou with mildness entertain'st thy wooers,
With gentle conference, soft and affable.
Why does the world report that Kate doth limp?
O slanderous world! Kate like the hazel-twist
Is straight and slender and as brown in hue
As hazel nuts and sweeter than the kernels.
O, let me see thee walk: thou dost not halt.
Kath. Go, fool, and whom thou keepst command.
Pet. Did ever Dian so become a grove
As Kate this chamber with her princely gait?
O, be thou Dian, and let her be Kate;
And then let Kate be chase and Dian sportful!
Kath. Where did you study all this goodly speech?
Pet. It is extempore, from my mother-wit.
Kath. A witty mother! witless else her son.
Pet. Am I not wise?
Kath. Yes; keep you warm.
Pet. Marry, so I mean, sweet Katharine, in thy
And therefore, setting all this chat aside, [bed:
Thus in plain terms: your father hath consented
That you shall be my wife; your dowry 'greed on;
And, will you, nill you, I will marry you.
Now, was I told you you were rough and coy and sullen,
For, by this light, whereby I see thy beauty,
Thy beauty, that doth make me like thee well,
Thou must be married to no man but me;
For I am he am born to tame thee Kate,
And bring you from a wild Kate to a Kate
Comfierable as other ladies hold Kamtes.
Here comes your father: never make denial;
I must and will have Katharine to my wife.

Re-enter Baptista, Gremio, and Tranio.

Bap. Now, Signior Petruchio, how speed you with your daughter?

Pet. How but well, sir? how but well?
It were impossible I should speed amiss.
Bap. Why, how now, daughter Katharine! in your dumps?

Kath. Call you me daughter? now, I promise
You have show'd a tender fatherly regard,
To wish me well, and to one at home to write
A mad-cap ruffian and a swearing Jack,
That thinks with oaths to face the matter out.
Pet. Father, 'tis thus: yourself and all the world,
That talk'd of her, have talk'd amiss of her:
If she be curst, it is for folly only.
For she's so forward, but modest as the dove;
She is not hot, but temperate as the morn;
For patience she will prove a second Grissel,
And Roman Lucerce for her chastity:
And to conclude, we have 'greed so well together,
That upon Sunday is the wedding-day.

Kath. I'll see thee hang'd on Sunday first.
Gre. Hark, Petruchio; she says she'll see thee hang'd first.

Tra. Is this your speeding? nay, then, good night our part! [self:
Pet. Be patient, gentleman; I choose her for my-
If she and I be pleased, what's that to you?
'T is bargain'd twixt us twain, being alone,
That she shall still be curst in company.
I tell you, 'tis incredible to believe
How much she loves me: O, the kindest Kate!
She hung upon my neck and kissed me.
She vied so fast, protesting oath on oath,
That in a twink she won me to her love.
O, you are novices! 'tis a world to see,
How tame, when men and women are alone,
A meacoek wretch can make the curstest shrew.
Provide me thy hand, Kate; I will unto Venice,
To buy apparel 'gainst the wedding-day.
Provide the feast, father, and bid the guests;
I will be sure my Katharine shall be fine. [hands;
Bap. I know not what to say: but give me your God send you joy, Petruchio! 'tis a match.
Gre. Tra. Amen, say we: we will be witnesses.
Pet. Father, and wife, and gentlemen, adieu;
I will to Venice; Sunday comes apace:
We shall have rings and things and fine array;
And kiss me, Kate, we will be married o' Sunday.

[Exeunt Petruchio and Katharine severally.

Gre. What ever clapp'd so suddenly?
Bap. Faith, gentlemen, now I play a merchant's
And venture madly on a desperate mart. [part,
Tra. 'Twas a commodity lay frett'ring by you:
'Twill bring you gain, or perish on the seas.
Bap. The gain I seek is, quiet in the match.
Gre. No doubt but he hath got a quiet catch.
But now, Baptista, to your younger daughter:
Now is the day we have looked for:
I am your neighbour, and was suitor first.
Tra. And I am one that love Bianca more
Than words can witness, or your thoughts can guess.
Gre. You longling, thou canst not love so dear as I.
Tra. Greybeard, thy love doth freeze.
Gre. But thine doth fry.
Skipp. stand back; 'tis age that nourisheth.
Tra. But youth in ladies' eyes that flourisheth.
Bap. Content you, gentlemen: I will compound this strife:
'Tis deeds must win the prize; and he of both
That can assure my daughter greatest dower
Shall have my Bianca's love.

Suy. Signior Gremio, what can you assure her?
Pet. What can you offer her that liveth within
The city Basins and ewers to have her dainty hands;
My hangings all of Tyrian tapestry;
In ivory coffers I have stuff'd my crowns;
In cypress chests my arms counterpoints,
Costly apparel, tents, and canopies,
ACT III.

THE TAMING OF THE SHEREW.

SCENE I.

Fine linen, Turkey cushions bos’d with pearl,
Valance of Venice gold in needlework,
Powder and brass and all things that belong
To house or housekeeping: then, at my farm
I have a hundred milch-kine to the odd,
Sixscore fat oxen staidling in my stalls,
And all things answerable to this portion.
Myself am struck in years, I must confess;
And if I die to-morrow, this is hers;
If whilst I live she will be only mine.

Tra. That ’tis come well in. Sir, list to me:
I am my father’s heir and only son:
If I may have your daughter to my wife,
I’ll leave her houses three or four as good,
Within rich Pisa walls, as any one
Of Signior Gremio has in Padua:
Besides two thousand ducats by the year
Of fruitful land, all which shall be her jointure.
What, have I pinch’d you, Signior Gremio?

Grem. Two thousand ducats by the year of land!
My land amounts not so much in all:
That shall have; besides an argosy
That now is lying in Marseilles’ road.
What, have I chok’d you with an argosy?

Tra. Gremio, ’tis known my father hath no less Than three great argosies; besides two gallusses,
And twelve galleyes: these I will assure her,
And such a house as may her mind set next.

Grem. Nay, I have offer’d all, I have no more;
And she can have no more than all I have:
If you like me, she shall have me and mine.

Tra. Why, then the maid is mine from all the world,
By your firm promise: Gremio is out-vided.
Bap. Now, most corny of your offspring is the last;
And, let your father make her the assurance,
She is your own; else, you must pardon me,
If you should die before him, where’s her dowry?

Tra. That’s but a cavil: he is old, I young.

Grem. And may not young men die, as well as old?
Bap. Well, gentlemen.

I am thus resolved: on Sunday next you know
My daughter Katharine is to be married.
Now, on the Sunday following, shall Bianca
Be brink’d to you, if you make this assurance;
If not, to Signior Gremio:
And so, I take my leave, and thank you both.

Grem. Adieu, good neighbour. [Exit Baptista.

Now I fear thee not:
Sirrah young gentler, your father were a fool
To give thee all, and in his waning age
Set foot under thy table: tut, a toy!
An old Italian fox is not so kind, my boy. [Exit. Tra. A vengeance on your crafty wither’d! hide!
Yet I have faced it with a card of ten.
’T is in my head to do my master good:
I see no reason but supposed Lucentio
Must get a father, call’d supposed Vincenzo;
And that is a winch: fathers commonly
Do get their children: but in this case of wooing,
A child shall get a sire, if I fail not of my cunning.

[Exit.
THE TAMING OF THE SHREW.

ACT III.

Call you this gamut? tut, I like it not: Old fashions please me best: I am not so nice, To change true rules for old inventions.

Enter a Servant.

Serr. Mistress, your father prays you leave your And help to dress your sister’s chamber up. [books You know to-morrow is the wedding-day.

Bian. Farewell, sweet masters of both: I must be gone. [Exit Bianca and Servant.

Luc. Faith, mistress, then I have no cause to stay. [Exit.

Hor. But I have cause to pry into this pedant: Methinks he looks as though he were in love: Yet if thy thoughts, Bianca, be so humble To cast thy wandering eyes on every stale, Seize thee that list: if once I find thee ranging, Hortensius will be quit with thee by changing.

[Exit.

SCENE II. — Padua. Before Baptista’s house.

Enter Baptista, Gremio, Tranio, Katharine, Bianca, Lucentio, and others, Attendants.

Bap. [To Tranio] Signior Lucentio, this is the pointed day That Katharine and Petruchio should be married, And yet we hear not of our son-in-law. What will be said? what mockery will it be, To want the bridegroom when the priest attends To speak the ceremonial rites of marriage! What says Lucentio to this shame of ours? Kath. No shame but mine; I must, forsooth, be forced To give my hand opposed against my heart Unto a mad-brain rudesly full of spleen, Who wou’d in haste and means too wed at leisure. I told you, I, he was a frantic fool, Hiding his bitter jests in blunt behaviour: And, to be noted for a merry man, He ’ll woo a thousand, ’point the day of marriage, Make feasts, invite friens is, and proclaim the banes; Yet never means to wed where he hath wou’d. Now must the world point at poor Katharine, And say, ’Lo, there is mad Petruchio’s wife, If it would please him come and marry her!

Tra. Patience, good Katharine, and Baptista too. Upon my life, Petruchio means but well, Whatsoever fortune doth befall him from his word: Though he be blunt, I know him passing wise; Though he be merry, yet withal he’s honest. Kath. Would Katharine had never seen him though!

[Exit gossiping, followed by Bianca and others.

Bap. Go, girl; I cannot blame thee now to weep; For such an injury would vex a very saint, Much more a shrew of thy impatient humour.

Enter Bianello.

Bion. Master, master! news, old news, and such news as you never heard of! Bap. Is it new and old too? how may that be? Bion. Why, is it not news, to hear of Petruchio’s Bap. Is he come? [coming? Bion. Why, no, sir. I saw no thing then. Bion. He is coming. Bap. When will he be here? Bion. When he stands where I am and sees you Tra. But say, what to thine old news? [there. Bion. Why, Petruchio is coming in a new hat and an old jerkin, a pair of old breeches three times turned, a pair of boots that have been candle-cases, one buckled, another laced, an old rusty sword ta’en out of the town-armoury, with a broken hilt, and chapless; with two broken points; his horse hipped with an old motley saddle and stirrups of no kindred; besides, possessed with the glinders and like to more in the chine; and this, often burst, infected with the fashions, full of windgalls, spo’d with spavins, rayed with the yelows, past cure of the lives, stark spoiled with the staggers, begmwn with the bots, swayed in the back and shoulder-shotten; near-logged before and with a half-checked bit; and a head-stall of sleep’s leather which, being restrained to keep him from stumbling, hath been often burst and now repaired with knots; one girt six times pieced and a woman’s crupper of vulture, which hath two letters for her name fairly set down in sunds, and here and there pieced with packthread. Bap. Who comes with him? Bion. O, sir, his lackey, for all the world car-parsioned like the horse; with a linen stock on one leg and a kersey boot- hose on the other, gartered with a red and blue list; an old hat and the humour of forty fancies pricked in ’t for a feather; a monster, a very monster in apparel, and not like a Chris’tian footboy or a gentleman’s lackey.

Tra. ’Tis some old humour pricks him to this fashion; Yet oftentimes he goes but mean-apparel’d. Bap. I now glad he’s come, bowso’er he comes. Bion. Why, sir, he comes not. Bap. Didst thou not say he comes? Bion. Who? that Petruchio came? Bap. Ay, that Petruchio came. Bion. No, sir; I say his horse comes, with him on his back.

Bap. Why, that’s all one. Bion. Nay, by Saint Jamy, I hold you a penny, A horse and a man Is more than one, And yet not many.

Enter Petruchio and Grumio.

Pet. Come, where be these gallants? who’s at Bap. You are welcome, sir. [home? Pet. And yet I come not well. Tra. Not so well apparel’d As I wish you were. Pet. Were it better, I should rush in thus. But where is Kate? where is my lovely bride? How does my father? Gentles, methinks you from And wherefore gaze this goodly company, As if they saw some wondrous monument, Some comet or unusual prodigy? [day: Bap. Why, sir, you know this is your wedding- First were we sad, fearing you would not come; Now nother, that you come so unprompted. Fie, doff this habit, shame to your estate, An eye-sore to our solemn festival!

Tra. And tell us, what occasion of import Hath all so long detain’d you from your wife, And sent you hither so unlike yourself? Pet. Tedium it were to tell, and hard to hear: Sufficeth, I am come to keep my word, Though in some part enforced to digress; Which, at more leisure, I will so excuse As you shall well be satisfied withal. But where is Kate? I am longing from her: The morning wears, ’tis time we were at church. Tra. See not your bride in these unrevenerate robes: Go to my chamber; put on clothes of mine. Pet. Not I, believe me: thus I’l visit her. Bap. But thus, I trust, you will not marry her. Pet. Good sooth, even thus; therefore ha’ done with words: To me she’s married, not unto my clothes: 200
Could I repair what she will wear in me,
As I can change these poor accoutrements,
'Twere well for Kate and better for myself.
But what a fool am I to chat with you,
When I should bid him narrow my pride,
And seal the title with a lovely kiss!

[Exeunt Petruchio and Gremio.]

Tra. He hath some meaning in his mad attire:
We will persuade him, be it possible,
To put on better ere he go to church.

[Exeunt Baptista, Gremio, and attendants.]

Tra. But to her love concerneth us to add
Her father’s liking: which to bring to pass,
As I before imparted to your worship,
I am to get a man, whate’er he be.
It skills not much, we’ll fit him to our turn,—
And he shall be Vincentio of Pisu,
And make assurance here in Padua.
Of greater sums than I have promised.
So shall you quietly enjoy your hope,
And marry sweet Bianca with consent.

Luc. Were it not that my fellow-schoolmaster
Doth watch Bionca’s steps so narrowly,
’Twere good, methinks, to steal our marriage;
Which once performed, let all the world say no,
I’ll keep mine own, despite of all the world.

Tra. That by degrees we mean to look into,
And watch our vantage in the crowd:
We’ll over-reach the greybeard, Gremio,
The narrow-prying father, Minola,
The quaint musician, amorous Lucentio;
All for my master’s sake, Lucentio.

Re-enter Gremio.

Signior Gremio, came you from the church?
Grem. As willingly as e’er I came from school.

Tra. And is the bride and bridegroom coming home?
Grem. As a bridgroom say you? ’t is a groom indeed,
A grumbling groom, and that the girl shall find.

Grem. Why, he’s a devil, a devil, a very fiend.

Tra. Why, she’s a devil, a devil, the devil’s dam.

Grem. Tut, she’s a lamb, a dove, a fool to him!
I’ll tell you, Sir Lucentio: when the priest
Should ask, Is this your wife? shall I say
Ay, by gogs-wouns, quothe he; and swore so loud,
That, all-amazed, the priest let fall the book;
And, as he stoop’d again to take it up,
The mad-brain’d bridgroom took him such a cuff
That down fell priest and book and book and priest:
Now take them up, quothe he, if any list.

Tra. What said the wench when he rose again?

Grem. Trembled and shook: for why, he stamp’d
And swore,
As if the vicar meant to cozen him.

But after many ceremonies done
He calls for wine: ‘A health!’ quothe he, as if He had been afoar, carousing to his mates
After a storm; quaff’d off the muscadel
And threw the sops in all the sexton’s face;
Having no other reason.

But that his beard grew thin and hungerly
And seem’d to ask him sops as he was drinking.
This done, he took the bride about the neck
And kissed her lips with such a clamorous smack
That at the parting all the church did echo:
And I seeing this came thence for very shame;
And after me, I know, the rout is coming.
Such a mad marrying never was betwixt
Hark, hark! I hear the mistrels play.

[Music.

Re-enter Petruchio, Katharina, Bianca, Baptista, Hortensio, Grumio, and Train.

Pet. Gentlemen and friends, I thank you for your pains:
I know you think to dine with me to-day,
And have prepared great store of wedding cheer;
But so it is, my haste doth call me hence,
And therefore here I mean to take my leave.

Bap. Is’t possible you should be so hasty?

Pet. I must away to-day, before night come:
Make it no wonder; if you knew my business,
You would treat me rather go than stay.

And, honest company, I thank you all,
That have beheld me give away myself.
To this most patient, sweet, and virtuous wife:
Dine with my father, drink a health to me;
For I must hence; and farewell to you all.

Tra. Let us entreat you stay till after dinner.

Pet. It may not be.

Gre. Let me entreat you.

Pet. It cannot be.

Kath. ·Let me entreat you.

Pet. I am content.

Kath. ·Are you content to stay?

Pet. I am content you shall entreat me stay;
But yet not stay, entreat me how you can.

Kath. Now, if you love me, stay.

Grem. Ay, sir, they be ready: the oats have eaten the horses.

Kath. Nay, then,

Do what thou canst, I will not go to-day:

No, nor tomorrow, not till I please myself.
The door is open, sir; there lies your way:
You may be jagging whiles your boots are green;
For me, I ’ll not be gone till I please myself:
’T is like you ’ll prove a jolly surly groom,
That take it on you at the first so roundly.

Pet. O Kate, content thee; prithee, be not angry.

Kath. I will be angry: what hast thou to do?

Father, be quiet: he shall stay my leisure.

Gre. Ay, marry, sir, now it begins to work.

Kath. Gentlemen, forward to the bridal dinner:

I see a woman may be made a fool,
If she had not a spirit to resist.

[mand.

Pet. They shall go forward, Kate, at thy com-

Obey the bride, you that attend on her;
Go to the feast, revel and dominate,
Carouse full measure to her maidenhead,
Be mad and merry, or go hang yourselves.
But for my bonny Kate, she must with me.

Nay, look not big, nor stamp, nor stare, nor fret;
I will be master of what is mine own:
She is my goods, my chattels; she is my house,
My household stuff, my field, my barn,
My horse, my ox, my ass, my any thing;
And here she stands, touch her whoever dare;
I’ll bring mine action on the proudest he
That stops my way in Padua.

Grumio,
Draw forth thy weapon, we are beset with thieves;
Rescue thy mistress, if thou be a man.

Fear not, sweet wench, they shall not touch thee,

Kate: I’ ll buckler thee against a million.

[Exeunt Petruchio, Katharina, and Grumio.

Bap. Nay, let them go, a couple of quiet ones.

Gre. Went they not quickly, I should die with laughing.

Tra. Of all mad matches never was the like.

Luc. Mistresses, what’s your opinion of your sister?

Bianca. That, being mad herself, she’s madly nated.

Gre. I warrant him, Petruchio is Kated.

Bap. Neighbours and friends, though bride and bridegroom wants
For to supply the places at the table,
You know there wants no junks at the feast.
Lucentio, you shall supply the bridegroom’s place;
And let Bianca take her sister’s room.

Tra. Shall sweet Bianca practise how to bride it?

Bap. She shall, Lucentio. Come, gentlemen, let’s go.

[Exeunt.

ACT III.

THE Taming OF THE SHREW.

SCENE II.
SCENE I.—Petruchio's country house.

Enter Grumio.

Gru. A piece of ice: if thou dost hurt the horses, I will ask the wages of thy hand.

Curts. Come, thou hast trod my carpet three times.

Gru. Am I not a very poor old man? I am about six months old.

Curts. Is it too hot?

Gru. Is it the weather? Good Grumio, tell me, how goes the world?

Curts. A cold world.

Gru. What! a cold world? Is it cold in every office, and therefore fire; do thy duty, and have thy master and mistress are almost frozen to death.

Curts. There's fire ready; and therefore, good Grumio, the news.

Gru. Why, 'Jack, boy! lo! boy!' and as much news as will thaw.

Curts. Come, you are so full of cony-catching!

Gru. Why, therefore fire; for I have caught extreme cold. Where's the cook? is supper ready, the house trimmed, rushes strewn, cobwebs swept; the serving-men in their new fustian, their white stockings, and every officer his wedding-garment on? Be the jacks fair within, the jills fair without, the carpets laid, and every thing in order?

Curts. All ready; and therefore, I pray thee, news.

Gru. First, know, my horse is tired; my master and mistress fallen out.

Curts. How?

Gru. Out of their saddles into the dirt; and thereby hangs a tale.

Curts. Let's ha't, good Grumio.

Gru. Lead thine ear.

Curts. Here.

Gru. [Strikes him.] Curts. This is to feel a tale, not to hear a tale.

Gru. And therefore 't is called a sensible tale: and this cuff was but to knock at your ear, and beseech listening. Now I begin: Imprimis, we came down a foul hill, my master riding behind my mistress.—

Curts. Both of one horse?

Gru. What's that to thee?

Curts. Why, a horse.

Gru. Tell thou the tale: but hadst thou not crossed me, thou shouldst have heard how her horse fell and she under her horse; thou shouldst have heard in how miry a place, how she was bemoiled, how he left her with the horse upon her, how he beat me because her horse stumbled, how she washed through the dirt to pluck him off me, how he swore, how she prayed, that never prayed before, how I cried, how the horses ran away, how her bridle was burst, how I lost my crupper, with many things of worthy memory, which now shall die in oblivion and thou return unexperienced to thy grave. [She.]

Curts. By this reckoning he is more shrew than Ay; and that thou and the proudest of you all shall find when he comes home. But what talk I of this? Call forth Nathaniel, Joseph, Nicholas, Philip, Walter, Sugarsop and the rest: let their hearts below; you number their blue coats brushed and their garters of an indifferent knit; let them curtsy with their left legs and not presume to touch a hair of my master's horsestail till they kiss their hands. Are they all ready?

Curts. They are.

Gru. Call them forth.

Curts. Do you hear, ho? you must meet my master to countenance my mistress.

Gru. Why, she hath a face of her own.

Curts. Who knows not that?

Gru. Thou, it seems, that calls for company to countenance her.

Curts. I call them forth to credit her.

Gru. Why, she comes to borrow nothing of them.

Enter four or five Servingmen.

Nath. Welcome home, Grumio!
Phil. How now, Grumio!
Jos. What, Grumio!
Nich. Fellow Grumio!
Nath. How now, old lad?
Gru. Welcome, you:—how now, you:—what, you—we have had this much for greeting. Now, my spruce companions, is all ready, and all things neat?

Nath. All things is ready. How near is our master?

Gru. E'en at hand, alighted by this: and therefore be not—Cock's passion, silence! I hear my master.

Enter Petruchio and Katharina.

Pet. Where be these knives? What, no man at To hold my stirrup nor to take my horse! [Door Where is Nathaniel, Gregory, Philip?

All Serv. Here, here, sir; here, sir.

Pet. Here, sir! here! sir! here, sir! here, sir! You logger-headed and unpolish'd grooms! What, no attendance? no regard? no duty? Where is the foolish knife I sent before?

Gru. Here, sir; as foolish as I was before.

Pet. You peasant swain! you whoreson malt-horse drudge! Did I not bid thee meet me in the park, And bring along these rascal knives with thee?

Gru. Nathaniel's coat, sir, was not fully made. And Gabriel's pumps were all unpink'd the heel; There was no link to colour Peter's hat, And Walter's dagger was not come from sheathing; These were none fine but Adam, Ralph, and Gregory: The rest were ragged, old, and beggarly; Yet, as they are, here are they come to meet you.

Pet. Go, rascals, go, and fetch my supper in.

[Exeunt Servants.

[Singing] Where is the life that late I led— Where are those—Sit down, Kate, and welcome. —Soud, soud, soud, soud!
Why, when, I say? Nay, good sweet Kate, be merry.
Off with your boots, you rogues! you villains, when?
[Sings] It was the friar of orders grey,
As he forth walked on his way:—
Out, you rogues! you prick my foot avry.
Take that, and mend the plucking off the other. [Strikes him.]

Be merry, Kate. Some water, here; what, ho!
Where's my spaniel Troilus? Sirrah, get you hence,
And bid my cousin Ferdinand come hither:
One, Kate, that you must kiss, and be acquainted with.
Where are my slippers? Shall I have some water?

Enter one with water.

Come, Kate, and wash, and welcome heartily.
You whoreson villain! will you let it fall?

Kath. Patience, I pray you; 'twas a fault unwilling.

Pet. A whoreson beetle-headed, flap-eared knife!
Come, Kate, sit down; I know you have a stomach.
Will you give thanks, sweet Kate; or else shall I?

What's this? mutton?

First Serv. Ay.

Pet. Who brought it? I.

Pet. 'Tis burnt; and so is all the meat.

What dogs are these! Where is the rascal cook?
How durst you, villains, bring it from the dresser,
And serve it thus to me that love it not?
There, take it you, trenchers, cups, and all:
[Throws the meat, &c., about the stage.]

You needless jollheads and unmanner'd slaves!
What, do you grumble? I'll be with you straight.

Kath. I pray you, husband, be not so disquiet:
The meat was well, if you were so contented.

Pet. I tell thee, Kate, 'tis burnt and dried away:
And I expressly am forbid to touch it,
For it engenders choler, planteth anger:
And better 't were that both of us did fast,
Since, of ourselves, ourselves are choleric,
Than feed it with such over-roasted flesh.
Be patient; to-morrow 't shall be mended,
And, for this night, we'll fast for company:
Come, I will bring thee to thy bridal chamber.

[Exit.]

Nath. Peter, didst ever see the like?

Pet. He kills her in her own humour.

[Exit.]

Enter Curtis.

Gru. Where is he?

Curt. In her chamber, making a sermon of continency to her;
And rails, and swears, and rates, that she, poor soul, knows not which way to stand, to look, to speak,
And sits as one new-risen from a dream.
Away, away! for he is coming hither. [Exit.]

Enter Petruchio.

Pet. Thus have I politicly begun my reign,
And 'tis my hope to end successfully.
My falcon now is sharp and passing empty;
And till she stoop she must not be full-gorged,
For the sharp end will not take the other.
Another way I have to man my haggard,
To make her come and know her keeper's call,
That is, to watch her, as we watch these kites
That bake and beat and will not be obedient.
She eat no meat to-day, nor none shall eat;
I last night she slept not, nor to-night she shall not;
As with the meat, some undeserved fault.
I'll find about the making of the bed;
And here I'll fling the pillow, there the bolster,
This way the coverlet, another way the sheets:
Ay, and amid this hurly I intend...
That all is done in reverend care of her;
And in conclusion she shall watch all night:
And if she chance to nod I'll rail and bawl
And with the clamour keep her still awake.
This is a way to kill a wife with kindness:
And thus I'll curb her mad and headstrong humour.
He that knows better how to tame a shrew,
Now let him speak: 'tis charity to show.
Enter Biondello.

Bion. O master, master, I have watch'd so long That I am dog-weary: but at last I spied An ancient angel coming down the hill, Will serve the turn.

Tru. What is he, Biondello?

Bion. Master, a mercantante, or a pedant, I know not what; but from all apparel, In guilt and appearance surely like a father. Luc. And what of him, Tranio?

Tru. If he be credulous and trust my tale, I'll make him glad to seem Vincentio, And give assurance to Baptista Minola, As if he were the right Vincentio. Take in your love, and then let me alone. [Exit Lucentio and Bianca.]

Enter a Pedant.

Ped. God save you, sir!

Tru. And you, sir; you are welcome. Travel you far on, or are you at the farthest?

Ped. Sir, at the farthest for a week or two: But then up further, and as far as Rome; And so to Tripoli, if God lend me life. Tru. What countryman, I pray?

Ped. One of Mantua, sir? marry, God forbid! And come to Padua, careless of your life?

Tru. 'Tis death for any one in Mantua To come to Padua. Know you not the cause? Your ships are at sea, and the duke, For private quarrel 'twixt your duke and him, Hath publish'd and proclaim'd it openly: 'Tis marvellous, but that you are but newly come, You might have heard it else proclaim'd about.

Ped. Alas! sir, it is worse for me than so; For I have bills for money by exchange From Florence and must here deliver them. Tru. Well, sir, to do you courtesy, This will I do, and this I will advise you: First, tell me, have you ever been at Pisa?

Ped. Ay, sir, in Pisa have I often been, Pisa I have, and grave cities I have seen. Among them know you one Vincentio?

Ped. I know him not, but I have heard of him; A merchant of incomparable wealth.

Tru. He is my father, sir; and, sooth to say, In countenance somewhat doth resemble you. Dis. [Aside] As much as an apple doth an oyster, and all one.

Tru. To save your life in this extremity, This favour will I do you for his sake; And think it not the worst of all your fortunes That you are like to stay at Venice, and the duke, His name and credit shall you undertake, And in my house you shall be friendly lodger: Look that you take upon you as you should; You understand me, sir: so shall you stay Till you have done your business in the city: If this be courtesy, sir, accept of it.

Ped. O sir, I do: and will repute you ever The patron of my life and liberty.

Tru. Then go with me to make the matter good. This, by the way, I let you understand; My father is here look'd for every day, To pass penn's of a dowry in marriage 'Twixt me and one Baptista's daughter here; In all these circumstances I'll instruct you: Go with me to clothe you as becomes you. [Exit.]

Scene III. — A room in Petruchio's house.

Enter Katharina and Grumio.

Gru. No, no, forsooth; I dare not for my life.

Kath. The more my wrong, the more his spite is vast, What did he marry me to famish me? [Hears] Beggars, that come unto my father's door, Upon entreaty have a present alms; If not, elsewhere they meet with charity: But I, who never knew how to entreat, Nor never needed that I should entreat, Am starved for meat, giddily for lack of sleep, With oaths kept waking and with brawling fed: And that which spites me more than all this wants, He does it under name of perfect love; As who should say, if I should sleep or eat, 'Twere deadly sickness or else present death. I prithee go and get me some repast; I care not what, so it be wholesome food.

Gru. What say you to a neat's foot?

Kath. 'Tis passing good: I prithee let me have it. Gru. I fear it is too choleric a meat. How say you to a fat tripe finely broil'd?

Kath. I like it well; good Grumio, fetch it me. Gru. I cannot tell; I fear 't is choleric. What say you to a piece of beef and mustard?

Kath. A dish that I do love to feed upon. Gru. And you, the mustard is too hot a little. Kath. Why then, the beef, and let the mustard rest. Gru. Nay then, I will not: you shall have the mush. Or else you get no beef of Grumio. [tard. Kath. Then both, or one, or anything thou wilt. Gru. Why then, the mustard without the beef. Kath. Go, get thee gone, thou false deluding slave, [Beats him. That feed'st me with the very name of meat: Sorrow on thee and all the jack of you, That triumph thus upon my misery! Go, get thee gone, I say.

Enter Petruchio and Hortensio with meat.

Pet. Plead up thy spirit, and look cheerfully upon me. Here, love; thou see'st how diligent I am To dress thy meat myself and bring it thee: I am sure, sweet Kate, this kindness merits thanks. What, not a word? Nay, then thou lov'st not it; And all my pains is sorted to no proof. I'll take away this dish.

Kath. I pray you, let it stand. Pet. The poorest service is repaid with thanks; And so shall mine, before you touch the meat. Kath. I thank you, sir.

Hor. Signior Petruchio, fie! you are to blame. Come, Mistress Kate, I'll hear you company. [He. Pet. [Aside] Eat it up all, Hortensio, if thou lov'st Much good do it unto thy gentle heart! Kate, eat asleep: and now, my honey love, Will we return unto thy father's house And revel it as bravely as the best, With silk'd coats and caps and golden rings, With ruffs and cuffs and fardingales and things: With scarfs and fans and double change of bravery, With amber bracelets, beads and all this knavery. What, hast thou dined? The tailors stays thy leisure, To deck thy body with his ruffling treasure.

Enter Taillor.

Come, tailor, let us see these ornaments; Lay forth the gown.

Enter Haberdasher.

What news with you, sir?

Hab. Here is the cap your worship did bespeak. Pet. Why, this was moulded on a perringer;
TAMING OF THE SHREW.—Act IV., Scene iii.
A velvet dish: fie, fie! ’tis lewd and filthy: Why, ’tis a cockle or a walnut-shell, A knuckle with a twist, a baby’s crumb; Away with it! come, let me have a bigger.
Kath. I’ll have no bigger: this doth fit the time, And gentlewomen wear such caps as these.
Pet. When you are gentle, you shall have one too, And not till then.
Hor. [Aside] That will not be in haste.
Kath. Why, sir, I trust I may have leave to speak; And speak I will; I am no child, no babe: Your betters have endured me say my mind, And if you cannot, best you stop your ears. My tongue will tell the anger of my heart, Or else I’ll go and blast my courtesy to death, And rather than it shall, I will be free
Even to the uttermost, as I please, in words.
Pet. Why, thou say’st true; it is a pultry cap, A custard-collar, a bauble, a silken pie: I love thee well, in that thou likest it not.
Kath. Love me or love me not, I like the cap; And it I will have, or I will have none.
[Exit Haberdasher.
Pet. Thy gown? why, ay: come, tailor, let us see’t. O mercy, God! what masquing stuff is here? What ’s this? a sleeve? ’tis like a demi-cannon: What is this? a gown, carved like an apple-tart? Here’s snip and nip and cut and slish and slash, Like to a censer in a barber’s shop.
Why, what, ’tis devil’s name, tailor, call’st thou this?
Hor. [Aside] I see she’s like to have neither cap nor gown.
Tai. You bid me make it orderly and well, According to the fashion and the time.
Pet. Marry, and did; but if you be remember’d, I did not bid you mar it to the time.
Go, hop me over every kennel home, For you shall hop without my custom, sir: I’ll none of it: hence! make your best of it.
Kath. I never saw a better-fashion’d gown, More quaint, more pleasing, nor more commend-Belike you mean to make a puppet of me. [able.
Pet. Why, true; he means to make a puppet of me.
Tai. She says your worship means to make a puppet of her.
Pet. O monstrous arrogance! Thou liest, thou thread, thou thimble!
Thou yard, three-quarters, half-yard, quarter, nall, Thou flax, thou nit, thou winter-cricket thou! Braved in the town, carded like an apple-tart! Here away, thou rag, thou quantity, thou remnant: Or I shall so be-meet thee with thy yard As thou shalt think on prating whilst thou livest! I tell thee, I, that thou hast marred her gown.
Tai. Thy worship is deceived; the gown is made Just as my master had direction: Grumio gave order how it should be done.
Gru. I gave him no order; I gave him the stuff.
Tai. But how did you desire it should be made?
Gru. Marry, sir, with needle and thread.
Tai. But did you not request to have it cut?
Gru. Thou hast faced many things.
Tai. I have.
Gru. Face not me: thou hast braved many men; brave not me; I will neither be faced nor braved.
I say unto thee, I bid thy master cut out the gown; but I did not bid him cut it to pieces: ergo, thou liest.
Tai. Why, here is the note of the fashion to test.
Pet. Read it.
Tafi. [Reads] "With a small compassed cape;" Gru. I confess the cape.
Tai. [Reads] "With a thick sleeve;" Gru. I confess two sleeves.
Gru. Error! the bill, sir; error! I the bill. I commanded the sleeves should be cut out and sewed up again; and that I’ll prove upon thee, though thy little finger be armed in a thimble.
Tai. This is true that I say: an I had thee in place where, thou shouldst know it.
Gru. I am for thee straight: take thou the bill, give me thy mete-yard, and spare not me.
[odds.
Hor. God-a-mercy, Gruino! thou hast no Pet. Well, sir, in brief, the gown is not for me.
Gru. You are ’t the right, sir: ’tis for my mis-
Pet. Go, take it up unto thy master’s use. [tress.
Gru. Villain, not for thy life: take up my mis-stress’ gown for thy master’s use!
Pet. Why, sir, what’s your conceit in that? [for:
Gru. O, sir, the conceit is deeper than you think
Take up my mistress’ gown to his master’s use!
O, fie, fie, fie!
[Paid.
Pet. [Aside] Hortensio, say thou wilt see the tailor
Go take it hence: be gone, and say no more.
Hor. Tailor.
Pet. Well, come, my Kate; we will unto your Even in these honest mean habiliments: [father’s Our purses shall be proud, our garments poor; For ’tis the mind that makes the body rich; And as the sun breaks through the darkest clouds, So honour peareth in the meanest habit. What is the jay more precious than the lark, Because his feathers are more beautiful? Or is theadder better than the edel, Because his painted skin contents the eye? O, no, good Kate; neither art thou the worse For this poor furniture and mean array. If thou account’st it shame, lay it on me; And therefore frollic: we will hence forthwith, To feast and sport us at thy father’s house. Go, call my men, and let us straight to him; And bring our horses unto Long-lane-end; There will we mount, and thither walk on foot. Let’s see; I think ’tis now some seven o’clock, And well we may come there by dinner-time.
Kath. I dare assure you, sir, it is almost two: And ’twill be supper-time ere you come there. Pet. It shall be seven ere I go to horse: Look, what I speak, or do, or think to do, You are still crossing it. Sirs, let ’t alone: I will not go to-day; and ere I do, It shall be what o’clock I say it is.
Hor. [Aside] Why, so this gallant will command the sun.
[Exeunt.

SCENE IV.—Padua. Before Baptista’s house.

Enter Tranio, and the Pedant dressed like Vincentio.

Tra. Sir, this is the house: please you that I call?
Pet. Ay, what else? and but I be deceived Signior Baptista may remember me, Near twenty years ago. In Genoa, Where we were lodgers at the Pegasus.
Tra. ’Tis well; and hold your own, in any case, With such austerity as ’longeth to a father.
Pet. I warrant you.

Enter Biondello.

But, sir, here comes your boy;
’Twere good he were school’d.
ACT IV: "THE TAMING OF THE SHREW"

SCENE V.

Luc. I pray thee, moralize them.
Bion. Then thus. Baptista is safe, talking with the deceiving father of a deceitful son.
Luc. And what of him?
Bion. His daughter is to be brought by you to the supper.
Luc. And then?
Bion. The old priest of Saint Luke's church is at your command at all hours.
Luc. And what of all this?
Bion. I cannot tell; expect they areibus about a counterfeit assurance: take you assurance of her, 'cum prius loco ad impluritem solum,' to the church; take the priest, clerk, and some sufficient honest witnesses:
If this be not that you look for, I have no more to Bid but Bianca farewell for ever and a day. \[say,\]
Luc. Hearest thou, Biondello?
Bion. I cannot err: I know a wenches married in an afternoon as she went to the garden for parsley to stuff a rabbit; and so may you, sir: and so, adieu, sir. My master hath appointed me to go to Saint Luke's, to bid the priest be ready to come against you with your appendix. \[Exit.\]
Luc. I trust, and so you said: she will be pleased; then wherefore should I doubt?
Hap what hap may, I'll roundly go about her:
It shall go hard if Cambio go without her. \[Exit.\]

SCENE V.—A public road.

Enter Petruchio, Katharina, Hortensio, and Servants.

Pet. Come on, 'tis God's name; once more toward our fathers.'

Good Lord, how bright and goodly shines the moon!
Kath. The moon! the sun: it is not moonlight now.
Pet. I say it is the moon that shines so bright.
Kath. I know it is the sun that shines so bright.
Pet. Now, by my mother's son, and that's myself,
It shall be moon, or star, or what I list,
Or else I journey to your father's house.
Go on, and fetch our horses back again.
Every cross'd and cross'd; nothing but cross'd!
Hor. Say as he says, or we shall never go.
Kath. Forward, I pray, since we have come so far, And be it moon, or sun, or what you please:
An if you please to call it a rush-candle,
Henceforth I vow it shall be so for me.
Pet. I say it is the moon.
Kath. The moon.
Pet. Nay, then you lie: it is the blessed sun.
Kath. Then, God be bless'd, it is the blessed sun;
But sun it is not, when you say it is not;
And the moon changes even as your mind.
What you will have it named, even that it is;
And so it shall be so for Katharine.
Hor. Petruchio, go thy ways; the field is won.
Pet. Well, forward, forward! thus the bowl should
And not unluckily against the bias. \[run,\]
But, soft! company is coming here.

Enter Vincentio.

[To Vincentio.] Good morrow, gentle mistress: where Tell me, sweet Kate, and tell me truly too; jayaw? Hast thou beheld a fresher gentlewoman?
Such war of white and red within her cheeks!
What stars do spangle heaven with such beauty,
As these two eyes become that heavenly face?
Fair lovely maid, once more when good day to thee.
Sweet Kate, embrace her for her beauty's sake.
Hor. A' will make the man mad, to make a woman of him.

Kath. Young budding virgin, fair and fresh and Whither away, or where is thy abode? \[sweet,\]
Happy the parents of so fair a child;
ACT V.

THE TAMING OF THE SHREW.

SCENE I.

Padua. Before Lucentio's house.

Gremio discovered. Enter behind Biondello, Lucentio, and Bianca.

Bion. Softly and swiftly, sir; for the priest is ready.

Luc. I fly, Biondello; but they may chance to need thee at home; therefore leave us.

Bion. Nay, faith, I'll see the church o' your back; and then come back to my master as soon as I can.

[Exeunt Lucentio, Bianca, and Biondello.

Gre. I marvel Cambio does not come this while.

Enter Petruchio, Katharina, Vincentio, Grumio, and Attendants.

Pet. Sir, here's the door, this is Lucentio's house: My father's bears more toward the market-place; Thither must I, and here I leave you, sir.

Vin. You shall not choose but drink before you go:
I think I shall command your welcome here. And, by all likelihood, some cheer is toward.

[Knocks.

Gre. They're busy within; you were best knock louder.

Ped. What's he that knocks as he would beat down the gate?

Vin. Is Signor Lucentio within, sir?

Ped. He's within, sir, but not to be spoken withal.

Vin. What if a man bring him a hundred pound or two, to make merry withal?

Ped. Keep your hundred pounds to yourself: he shall need none, so long as I live.

Pet. Nay, I told you your son was well beloved in Padua. Do you hear, sir? To leave frivolous circumstances, I pray you, tell Signor Lucentio that his father is come from Pisa and is here at the door to speak with him.

Pet. Thou liest; his father is come from Padua and here looking out at the window.

Vin. Art thou his father?

Ped. Ay, sir; so his mother says, if I may believe her.

Pet. [To Vincentio] Why, how now, gentleman! why, this is flat knavery, to take upon you another man's name.

Pet. Lay hands on the villain: I believe 'n means to cozen somebody in this city under my countenance.

And now by law, as well as reverend age, I may entitle thee my loving father; The sister to my wife, this gentlewoman, Thy son by this hath married. Wonder not, Nor be not grieved: she is of good esteem, Her dowry wealthy, and of worthy birth;

Vin. Do I assure thee, father, so it is. Pet. Come, go along, and see the truth hereof; For our first erriment hath made thee jealous.

Pet. What is his name?

Vin. Lucentio, gentle sir.

Pet. Happily met; the happier for thy son.

Re-enter Biondello.

Bion. I have seen them in the church together: God send 'em good shipping! But who is here? mine old master Vincentio! now we are undone and brought to nothing.

Vin. [Seeing Biondello] Come hither, crack hempest. Bion. I hope I may choose, sir. [Get me?]

Vin. Come hither, you rogue. What, have you for- Bion. Forget you no, sir: I could not forget you, for I never saw you before in all my life.

Vin. What, you notorious villain, didst thou never see thy master's father, Vincentio?

Bion. What, my old worshipful old master? yes, marry, sir: see where he looks out of the window.

Vin. Is't so, indeed? [Beats Biondello. Bion. Help, help, help! here's a madman will murder me.

[Exit.

Ped. Help, son! help, Signior Baptista!

Pet. Prithee, Kate, let's stand aside and see the end of this controversy.

[They retire.

Re-enter Pedant below; Tranio, Baptista, and Servants.

Tru. Sir, what are you that offer to beat my ser vant?

Vin. What am I, sir! nay, what are you, sir? O immortal gods! O fine villain! A silken doublet! a velvet hose! a scarlet cloak! and a copatain hat! O, I am undone! I am undone! while I play the good husband at home, my son and my servant spend all at the university.

Tru. How now! what's the matter?

Bap. What, is the man lunatic?

Tru. Sir, you seem a sober ancient gentleman by your habit, but your words show you a madman. Why, sir, what 'cerns it you if I wear pearl and gold? I thank my good father, I am able to maintain it.

Vin. Thy father! O villain! he is a sail-maker in Bap. You mistake, sir, you mistake, sir. Pray, what do you think is his name?

Vin. His name! as if I knew not his name: I have brought him up ever since he was three years old, and his name is Tranio.

Ped. Away, away, mad ass! his name is Lucentio; and he is mine only son, and heir to the lands of me, Signior Vincentio.

207
THE TAMING OF THE SHREW. SCENE II.

Luc. At last, though long, our jarring notes agree:
And time is ripe when ringer leads. I'll smile
To smile at snares and perils overthrown.
My fair Bianca, bid my father welcome,
While I with self-same kindness welcome thine.
Brother Petruchio, sister Katharina,
And thou, Hortensio, with thy loving widow,
I feast with the best, and welcome to my house:
My banquet is to close our stomachs up,
After our great good cheer. Pray you, sit down;
For now we sit to chat as well as eat.

PET. Nothing but sit and sit, and eat and eat!

Bap. Padua affords this kindness, son Petruchio.
PET. Padua affords nothing but what is kind.

HOR. For both our sakes, I would that word were true.

PET. Now, for my life, Hortensio fears his widow.
WID. Then never trust me, if I be afeard.

PET. You are very sensible, but yet you miss my mean, Hortensio is afeard of you.

PET. Roundly replied.

WID. No more, but that you talk too much.
PET. Conceive by me! How like is Hortensio that?
HOR. My widow says, thus she conceives her tale.
PET. Very well mended. Kiss him for that, good widow.

WID. [Round:] Kath. 'He that is giddy thinks the world turns,
I pray you, tell me what you mean by that.
WID. You husband, being troubled with a shrew,
Measures my husband's sorrow by his wee:
And now you know my meaning,

Kath. A very mean meaning.

WID. Right, I mean you.
Kath. And I am mean indeed, respecting you.

PET. To her, Kate!
HOR. To her, widow!
PET. A hundred marks, my Kate does put her
HOR. That's my office.
PET. Spoke like an officer: ha to thee, lad!

Drinks to Hortensio.

Bap. How likest Gremio these quick-witted folks?
GRE. Believe me, sir, they butt together well.
Bian. Head, and butt! an haughty-witted body
Would say your head and butt were head and horn.
VIN. Ay, mistress bride, hath that awaken'd you?
Bian. Ay, but not frightened me; therefore I'll sleep again.

PET. Nay, that you shall not: since you have behave at you for a bitter jest or two!
Bian. Am I your bird? I mean to shift my bush;
And then pursue me as you draw your bow.

You are welcome all.

Bian. Katharina, and Widow.

PET. She lath prevented me. Here, Signior Tranio,
This bird you aim'd at, though you hit her not;
Therefore a health to all that shot and miss'd;

O, sir, Lucentio to slip'p'd me like his greyhound,
Which runs its head itself and catches for his master.

PET. A good swift simple, but something curriish.

KATH. 'Tis well, sir, that you hunted for yourself:
'Tis thought your deer does hold you at a bay.

PET. O ho, Petruchio! Tranio hits you now.
LUC. I thank thee for that girl, good Tranio,
HOR. Confess, confess, hath he not hit you here?

PET. 'N has a little gall'd me, I confess;
And, as the jest did glance away from me,
'Tis ten to one it main'd thee to out right.

PET. Now, in good sadness, son Petruchio,
I think thou hast the veriest shrew of all.

Enter Biondello, with Lucentio and Bianca.

Luc. Enter Biondello, with Lucentio and Bianca.

Bian. O! we are spoiled and — yonder he is: deny him, forswear him, or else we are all undone.

Luc. [Kneeling] Pardon, sweet father.

VIN. Lives my sweet son?

PET. [Execut Biondello, Tranio, and Petrant, as fast as may be.

Bian. Pardon, dear father.

PET. How hast thou offended?

Luc. Where is Lucentio?

PET. Here's Lucentio, Right son to the right Vincentio;
That have by marriage made thy daughter mine,
While counterfeit supposes bear'd thine eye.

GRE. Here's packing, with a witness, to deceive us all!

VIN. Where is that damned villain Tranio,
That faced and braved me in this matter so?

PET. Why, tell me, is not this my Cambio?

Bian. Cambio is changed into Lucentio.

Luc. Love wrought these miracles. Bianca's love
Made me exchange my state with Tranio,
While he to Cambio his own countenance gave;
And happily I have arrived at the last
Unto the wished haven of my bliss.
What Tranio did, myself enforced him to;
Then pardon him, sweet father, for my sake.

VIN. I'll slit the villain's nose, that would have sent me to the gaol.

PET. But do you hear, sir? have you married my daughter without asking my good will?

VIN. Fear not, Baptista; we will content you, go to: but I will in, to be revenged for this villain.

PET. And I, to sound the depth of this knavery.

Luc. Look not pale, Bianca; thy father will not frown.

PET. Lucentio and Bianca.
GRE. My cake is dought; but I'll in among the

Out of hope of all, but my share of the feast. [Exit.]

Kath. Husband, let's follow, to see the end of this

PET. First kiss me, Kate, and we will. [ado.

Kath. What, in the midst of the street?

PET. What, art thou ashamed of me?

Kath. No, sir; God forbid: but ashamed to kiss.

PET. Why, then let's home again. Come, sirrah, let's away.

Kath. Nay, I will give thee a kiss: now pray thee, love, stay.

PET. Is not this well? Come, my sweet Kate,
Better once than never, for never too late. [Exit.
ACT V.

THE TAMING OF THE SHREW.

SCENE II.

Pet. Well, I say no: and therefore for assurance
Let's each one send unto his wife;
And he whose wife is most obedient
To come at first when he doth send for her,
Shall win the wager which we will propose.

Hor. Content. What is the wager?

Luc. Twenty crowns.

Pet. Twenty crowns!
I'll venture so much of my hawk or hound,
But twenty times so much upon my wife.

Luc. A hundred then. Content.

Hor. Who shall begin?

Luc. That will I.

Go, Biondello, bid your mistress come to me.

Bion. I go.

Bap. Son, I'll be your half, Bianca comes.

Luc. I'll have no halves; I'll bear it all myself.

Re-enter Biondello.

How now! what news?

Bion. Sir, my mistress sends you word
That she is busy and she cannot come.

Pet. How! she is busy and she cannot come!
Is that an answer?

Grce. Ay, and a kind one too:
Pray God, sir, your wife send you not a worse.

Pet. I hope, better.

Luc. Sirrah Biondello, go and entreat my wife
To come to me forthwith.

[Exit Bion.

Pet. O, ho! entreat her!

Nay, then she must needs come.

Hor. Do what you can, yours will not be entreated.

Re-enter Biondello.

Now, where's my wife?

Bion. She says you have some goodly jest in hand:
She will not come; she bids you come to her.

Pet. Worse and worse; she will not come! O vile,
Intolerable, not to be endured!

Sirrah Grumio, go to your mistress;
Say, I command her come to me. [Exit Grumio.

Hor. I know her answer.

Pet. She will not.

Hor. She will not.

Pet. The fouler fortune mine, and there an end.

Bap. Now, by my holidame, here comes Katharine!

Re-enter Katharine.

Kath. What is your will, sir, that you send for me?

Pet. Where is your sister, and Hortensio's wife?

Kath. They sit conferring by the parlour fire.

Pet. Go, fetch them hither; if they deny to come,
Swinge me them soundly forth unto their husbands:
Away, I say, and bring them hither straight.

[Exit Katharine.

Luc. Here is a wonder, if you talk of a wonder.

Hor. And so it is: I wonder what it bodes.

Pet. Marry, peace it bodes, and love and quiet life,
And awful rule and right supremacy;
And, to be short, what not, that's sweet and happy.

Bap. Now, fair beafal thee, good Petruchio!
The wished thou hast won; and I will add
Unto their losses twenty thousand crowns;
Another dowry to another daughter,
For she is changed, as she had never been.

Pet. Nay, I will win my wager better yet
And show more sign of her obedience,
Her new-won virtue and obedience.

See where she comes and brings your froward wives
As prisoners to her womanly persuasion.

Re-enter Katharine, with Bianca and Widow.

Katharine, that cap of yours becomes you not:
Off with that bauble, throw it under-foot.
ALL'S WELL THAT ENDS WELL.

DRAMATIS PERSONÆ.

King of France.
Duke of Florence.
Bertram, Count of Rousillon.
Lafeu, an old lord.
Parolles, a follower of Bertram.
Steward, servants to the Countess of Clown, Rousillon.
A Page.

Countess of Rousillon, mother to Bertram.

Helena, a gentlewoman protected by the Countess.
An old Widow of Florence.
Diana, daughter to the Dow.
Violents, neighbours and friends to the Mariana, Widow.

Lords, Officers, Soldiers, &c., French and Florentine.

SCENE — Roussillon; Paris; Florence; Marseilles.

ACT I.

SCENE I.— Roussillon. The Count's palace.

Enter Bertram, the Countess of Roussillon, Helena, and Lafeu, all in black.

Count. In delivering my son from me, I bury a second husband.

Ber. And I going, madam, weep o'er my father's death anew: but I must attend his majesty's command, to whom I am now in ward, evermore in subjection.

Laf. You shall find of the king a husband, madam; you, sir, a father: he that so generally is at all times good must of necessity hold his virtue to you; whose worthiness would stir it up where it wanted rather than lack it where there is such abundance.

Count. What hope is there of his majesty's amendment?

Laf. He hath abandoned his physicians, madam; under whose practices he hath persecuted time with hope, and finds no other advantage in the process but only the losing of hope by time.

Count. This young gentlewoman had a father — O, that 'twas! how sad a passage! — whose skill was almost as great as his honesty; had it stretched so far, would have made mature immortal, and death should have play for lack of work. Would, for the king's sake, he were living! I think it would be the death of the king's disease. [madam?]

Laf. How called you the man you speak of.

Count. He was famous, sir, in his profession, and it was his great right to be so: Gerard de Narbon.

Laf. He was excellent indeed, madam: the king very lately spoke of him admiringly and mourningly: he was skillful enough to have lived still, if knowledge could be set up against mortality.

Ber. What is it, my good lord, the king languishes

Laf. A fistula, my lord.

Ber. I heard not of it before.

Laf. I would it were not notorious. Was this gentlewoman the daughter of Gerard de Narbon?

Count. His sole child, my lord, and bequeathed to my overlooking. I have those hopes of her good that her education promises; her dispositions she inherits, which makes fair gifts fairer; for where an unclean mind carries virtuous qualities, there commendations go with pity: they are virtues and traits too: in her they are the better for their simplicities: she derives her honesty and achieves her goodness.

Laf. Your commendations, madam, get from her tears.

Count. 'Tis the best brine a maiden can season her praise in. The remembrance of her father never approaches her heart but the tyranny of her sorrows takes all livelihood from her cheek. No more of this, Helena; go to; no more: lest it be rather thought you affect a sorrow than have it.

Hel. I do affect a sorrow indeed, but I have it too.

Laf. Moderate lamentation is the right of the dead, excessive grief the enemy to the living.

Count. If the living be enemy to the grief, the excess makes it soon mortal.

Ber. Madam, I desire your holy wishes.

Laf. How understand we that? [father

Count. Be thou best, Bertram, and succeed thy manners, as in shape! thy blood and virtue.

Contend for empire in thee, and thy goodness

Share with thy birthright! Love all, trust a few,

Do wrong to none: be able for thine enemy

Rather in power than use, and keep thy friend

Under thy own life's key: be check'd for silence,

But never tax'd for speech. What heaven move will.

That thee may furnish and my prayers pluck down,

Fall on thy head! Farewell, my lord;

'Tis an unseason'd courtier: good my lord,

Advise him.

Laf. He cannot want the best

That shall attend his love.

Count. Heaven bless him! Farewell, Bertram.

[Exit.

Ber. [To Helena] The best wishes that can be forged in your thoughts be servants to you! Be comfortable to my mother, your mistress, and make much of her.

Laf. Farewell, pretty lady: you must hold the credit of your father.

Count. Bertram and Lafeu.

Hel. O, were that all! I think not on my father; And these great tears grace his remembrance more Than those I shed for him. What was he like? I have forgot him: my imagination Carries no favour in 't but Bertram's.

I am undone: there is no living, none,

If Bertram be away. 'Twere all one

That I should love a bright particular star

And think to wed it, he is so above me:

In his bright radiance and collateral light

Must I be comforted, not in his sphere.
Enter Parolles.

[Aside] One that goes with him: I love him for his sake;
And yet I know him a notorious liar,
Think him a great way fool, solely a coward;
Yet these fix'd evils sit so fit in him,
That they take place, when virtue's steely bones
Look bleak 't the cold wind: withal, full oft we see
Cold wisdom waiting on superfluous folly.

Par. Save you, fair queen!
Hel. And you, monarch!
Par. No.
Hel. And no.

Par. Are you meditating on virginity?
Hel. Ay. You have some stain of soldier in you:
let me ask you a question. Man is enemy to virginity;
how may we barriède it against him?

Par. Keep him out.
Hel. But he be in; and our virginity, though valiant, in the defence yet is weak: unfold to us
some warlike resistance.

Par. There is none: man, sitting down before you, will undermine you and blow you up.

Hel. Bless our poor virginity from underminers and blowers up! Is there no military polley, how virgins might blow up men?

Par. Virginity being blown down, man will quicklier be blown up; marry, in blowing him down again, with the breach yourselves made, you lose your city. It is not politic in the common wealth of nature to preserve virginity. Loss of virginity is rational increase and there was never virgin got till virginity was first lost. That you were made of is metal to make virgins. Virginity by being once lost may be ten times found; by being ever kept, it is ever lost: 't is too cold a companion;
avoid with it.

Hel. I will stand for 't a little, though therefore
I die a virgin.

Par. There's little can be said in 't; 't is against the rule of nature. To speak on the part of virginity, is to accuse your mothers; which is most infallible disobedience. He that hangs himself is a virgin: virginity murders itself; and should be buried in highways out of all sanctified limit, as a desperate offender against nature. Virginity breeds mites, much like a cheese; consumes itself to the very jarring, and so dies with feeding his own stomach. Besides, virginity is peevish, proud, idle, made of self-love, which is the most inhibited sin in the canon. Keep it not: you cannot choose but lose by 't: out with 't! within ten year it will make itself ten, which is a goodly increase: and the principal itself not much the worse; away with 't!

Hel. How might one do, sir, to lose it to her own liking?

Par. Let me see: marry, ill, to like him that were it likes. 'Tis a commodity will lose the gloss with lying; the longer kept, the less worth; off with 't while 't is vendible; answer the time of requittance by force, like an old courtier, wears her cap out of fashion: richly suited, but unsuitable:
just like the brooch and the tooth-pick, which wear not now. Your date is better in your pie and your porridge than in your cheek: and your virginity, your old virginity, is like one of our French with-cred pears, it looks ill, it eats dryly; marry, 't is a withered pear; it was formerly better; marry, yet
't is a withered pear; will you anything with it?

Hel. Not my virginity yet... There shall your master have a thousand loves.
A mother and a mistress and a friend,
A phoenix, a conqueror, and too capable
Of every line and trick of his sweet favour:
But now he's gone, and my idolatrous fancy
Must sanctify his reliques. Who comes here?

Page. Monsieur Parolles, my lord calls for you.

Par. Little Helen, farewell: if I can remember thee, I will think of thee at court.

Hel. Monsieur Parolles, you were born under a charitable star.

Par. Under Mars, I.

Hel. I especially think, under Mars.

Par. Why under Mars?

Hel. Thou hast supposed me to keep under that you must needs be born under Mars.

Par. When he was predominant.

Hel. When he was retrograde, I think, rather.

Par. Why think you so?

Hel. You go much backward when you fight.

Par. That's for advantage.

Hel. So is running away, when fear proposes the safety: but the composition that your valour and fear makes in you is a virtue of a good wing, and I like the wear well.

Par. I am so full of businesses, I cannot answer these acutely: but will return a perfect courtier; in the which, my instruction shall serve to naturalize thee, so thou wilt be capable of a courtier's counsel and understand what advice shall thrust upon thee;
else thou diest in thine unthankfulness, and thine ignorance makes thee away: farewell. When thou hast leisure, say thy prayers; when thou hast none, remember thy friends: get thee a good husband,
and use him as he uses thee: so, farewell.

[Exit.]

Hel. Our remedies oft in ourselves do lie,
Which we ascribe to heaven: the fated sky
Gives us free scope, only doth backward pull
Our slow designs when we ourselves are dull.
What power is it which mounts my love so high,
That makes me see, and cannot feed mine eye?
The mightiest space in fortune nature brings
To join like likes and kiss like native things.
Impossible be strange attempts to those
That weigh their chains in sense and do suppose
What hath been cannot be: who ever strove
To show her merit, that did miss her love?
The king's disease—my project may deceive me,
But my intents are fix'd and will not leave me.

SCENE II.—Paris. The king's palace.

Flourish of cornets. Enter the King of France, with letters, and divers Attendants.

King. The Florentines and Senoys are by the ears;
Have fought with equal fortune and continue
A braveing war.
First Lord. So 'tis reported, sir.

King. Nay, 'tis most credible; we here receive it.

A certainty, vouche'd from our cousin Austria.

With caution that the Florentine will move us

For speedy aid; wherein our dearest friend

Prejudicates the business and would seem

To pursue our denial.

First Lord. His love and wisdom,

Approved so to your majesty, may please

For ampest credence.

King. He hath arm'd our answer,

And Florence is denied before he comes:

Yet, for our gentlemen that mean to see

The Tuscan service, freely have they leave

To stand on either part.

Sec. Lord. It well may serve

A nursery to our gentry, who are sick

For breathing and exploit.

King. What 's he comes here?

Enter Bertram, Lafeu, and Parolles.

First Lord. It is the Count Ronsillon, my good

Young Bertram. [lord,

Kneel.] Yon youth thou hearest thy father's face;

Frank nature, rather curious than in haste;

Hath well composed thee. Thy father's moral parts

Mayst thou inherit too! Welcome to Paris.

Ber. My thanks and duty are your majesty's.

First Lord. I trust that prudence, which now,

As when thy father and myself in friendship

First tried our soldiership! He did look far

Into the service of the time and was

Discipled of the bravest: he lasted long;

But on us both did haggish age steal on

And would not out of art. It much repairs me

To talk of your good father. In his youth

He had the wit which I can well observe

To-day in your young lords; but they may jest

Till their own scorn return to them unnoted.

For they can hide their levity in honour:

So like a courtier, contemn nor bitterness

Were in his pride or sharpness; if they were,

His equal had awaked them, and his honour,

Clock to itself, knew the true minute when

Exceptions bid him speak, and at this time

His less hand: who were below him

He used as creatures of another place

And bow'd his eminent top to their low ranks,

Making them proud of his humility,

In their poor praise he humbled. Such a man

Might be a copy to these younger times;

If he had follow'd well, would demonstrate them now

But goes backward.

Ber. His good remembrance, sir,

Lies richer in your thoughts than on his tomb;

So in approv'd lives not his epitaph

As in your royal speech. [say—

King. Would I were with him! He would always

Methinks I hear him now; his plausive words

He scatter'd not in ears, but grafted them,

To grow there and to bear,—Let me not live;—

This his good melancholy oft began,

On the catastrophe and heel of pastime,

When it was out,—Let me not live,' quoth he,

'After my flame lacks oil, to be the snuff

Of younger spirits, whose apprehensive senses

All but new things disdain; whose judgments are

Mere fathers of their garments; whose constancies

Expire for fashions. This he wish'd: I after he do after him wish too.

Since I nor wax nor honey can bring home,

I quickly were dissolved from my hive,

To give some labourers room.

Sec. Lord. You are loved, sir;

They that least lend it you shall lack you first.

King. I fill a place, I know 't. How long is 't, count.

Since the physician at your father's died?

He was much famed.

Ber. Some six months since, my lord.

King. If he were living, I would try him yet.

Lend me an arm; the rest have worn me out

With several applications: nature and sickness

Debate it at their leisure. Welcome, count;

My son 's no dearer.

SCENE III.—Rousillon. The Count's palace.

Enter Countess, Steward, and Clown.

Count. I will now hear; what say you of this gentlewoman?

Stew. Madam, the care I have had to even your content, I wish might be found in the calendar of my past endeavours: for then we wound our modesty and make fould the clearness of our deservings, when of ourselves we publish them.

Count. What does this knave here? Get you gone,

Sirrah; the complaints I have heard of you I do not all believe: It is my slowness that I do not;

for you know you lack not folly to commit them, and have ability enough to make such knaverys yours.

Clo. 'Tis not unknown to you, madam, I am a poor

Count. Well, sir. [fellow.

Clo. No, madam; 'tis not so well that I am poor, though many of the rich are damned: but, if I may have your ladyship's good will to go to the world,

Isbel the woman and I will do as we may.

Count. Wilt thou needs be a beggar?

Clo. I do beg your good will in this case.

Count. In what then?

Clo. In Isbel's case and mine own. Service is no heritage: and I think I shall never have the blessing of God till I have issue o' my body; for they say barnes are blessings.

Count. Tell me thy reason why thou wilt marry.

Clo. My poor body, madam, requires it: I am driven on by the flesh; and he must needs go that the devil drives.

Count. Is this all your worship's reason?

Clo. Faith, madam, I have other holy reasons, such as they have.

Count. May the world know them?

Clo. I have been, madam, a wicked creature, as you and all flesh and blood are; and, indeed, I do marry that I may repent.

Count. Thy marriage, sooner than thy wickedness.

Clo. I am out o' friends, madam; and I hope to have friends for my wife's sake.

Count. Such friends are thine enemies, knave.

Clo. You're shallow, madam, in great friends; for the knaves come to do that for me which I am aware of. He that ears my land spares my team and gives me leave to in the crop; if I be his cuck-old, he's my drudge; he that comforts my wife is the cherisher of my flesh and blood; he that cherishes my flesh and blood loves my flesh and blood; he that loves my flesh and blood is my friend: ergo, he that kisses my wife is my friend. If men could be contented to be what they are, there were no fear in marriage: for young Charbon the puritan and old Pousyan the papist, howsoever their hearts are severed in religion, their heads are both one;

they may foul horns together, like my deer i' the heath.

Count. Wilt thou ever be a foul-mouthed and calumnious knave?

Clo. A prophet I, madam; and I speak the truth the next way:

For all the ballad will repeat.

Clo. Which men full true shall find;

Your marriage comes by destiny; Your cuckoo sings by kind.
ACT I.  ALL'S WELL THAT ENDS WELL.  SCENE III.

Count. Get you gone, sir; I'll talk with you more anon.

Stew. May it please you, madam, that he bid me come to you: of her I am to speak.

Count. Sirrah, tell my gentlewoman I would speak with her; Helen, I mean.

Clo. Was this fair face the cause, quoth she, why the Grecians sacked Troy?

Count. And done, done done, was this King Priam's joy?

Clo. With that she sighed as she stood, with that she sighed as she stood, and gave this sentence then; among nine bad if it be good, and in the world, and in this world, there's yet one good in ten.

Count. What, one good in ten? you corrupt the song, sirrah.

Clo. One good woman in ten, madam; which is a purifying o' the song: would God would serve the world so all the year! we'd find no fault with the tithe-woman, if I were the parson. One in ten, quoth a! An we might have a good woman born but one every blazing star, or at an earthquake, 'twould mend the lottery well: a man may draw his heart out, ere a 'pluck one.

Count. You'll be gone, sir, kneave, and do as I command you.

Clo. That man should be at woman's command, and yet no hurt done! though honesty be no purity, yet it will do no hurt; it will wear the surplice of humility over the black gown of a big heart. I am going, forsooth: the business is for Helen to come hither. [Exit.

Count. Well, now.

Stew. I know, madam, you love your gentlewoman entirely.

Count. Faith, I do: her father bequeathed her to me; and she herself, without other advantage, may lawfully make title to as much love as she finds; there is more owing her than is paid; and more shall be paid her than she'll demand.

Stew. Madam, I was very late more near her than I think she wished me; alone she was; and did communicate to herself her own words to her own ears; she thought, I dare vow for her, they touched not any stranger sense. Her matter was, she loved your son: Fortune, she said, was no goddess, that had put such difference betwixt their two estates: Love no god, that would not extend his might, only where qualities were equal: Dian no queen of virgins, that would suffer her poor knights surprised, without rescue in the first assault or ransom afterward. This she delivered in the most bitter touch of sorrow that ever I heard virgin exclaim in: which I held my duty speedily to acquaint you withal; sithence, in the loss that may happen, it concerns you something to know it.

Count. You have discharged this honestly; keep it to yourself; many likelihoods informed me of this before, which hung so tottering in the balance that I could neither believe nor misdoubt. Pray you, leave me: stall this in your bosom; and I thank you for your honest care; I will speak with you further anon. [Exit Steward.

Enter Helena.

Count. You know, Helen, I am a mother to you.

Hel. Mine honourable mistress.

Count. Nay, a mother:

Hel. Why not a mother? When I said 'a mother,' Methought you saw a serpent: what's in 'mother,' That you start at it? I say, I am your mother; and put you in the catalogue of those That were enwrapped mine: 'tis often seen / Adoption strives with nature, and choice breeds

Count. A native slip to us from foreign seeds:

Hel. You ne'er oppress'd me with a mother's groan, Yet I express to you a mother's care;

Count. God's mercy, madam! does it curl thy blood To say I am not another? Where is the matter, That this distemper'd messenger of wet, The many-colour'd Iris, rounds thine eye? Why? that you are my daughter?

Hel. That I am not.

Count. I say, I am your mother.

Hel. Pardon, madam; the Count Rousillon cannot be my brother: I am from humble, he from honour'd name; no note upon my parents, his all noble; my master, my dear lord he is; and I His servant live, and will his vassal die: Count must not be my brother.

Hel. Nor I your mother?

Count. You are my mother, madam; would you were,— So that my lord your son were not my brother,— Indeed my mother! or were you both our mothers, I care no more for it than I do for heaven, So I were not his sister. Can't no other, But, your daughter, he must be my brother? [Law:

Count. Yes, Helen, you might be my daughter-in-God shield you mean it not! daughter and mother So strive upon your pulse. What, pale again? My fear hath catch'd your fondness: now I see The mystery of your loneliness, and find Your salt tears' head: now to all sense 'tis gross You love my son; invention is ashamed, Against the proclamation of thy passion, To say thou dost not: therefore tell me true: But tell me then, 'tis so: for, look, thy cheeks Confess it, th' one to th' other; and thine eyes See it so grossly shown in thy behaviours That in their kind they speak it: only sin And hellish obstinacy tie thy tongue, That truth should be suspected. Speak, is't so? If it be so, you have a goodly clue: If it be not, forswear it: lowe'er, I charge thee, As heaven shall work in me for thine avail, To tell me truly.

Hel. Good madam, pardon me!

Count. Do you love my son?

Hel. Your pardon, noble mistress!

Count. Love you my son?

Hel. Do not you love him, madam?

Count. Go not about; my love lieth in 't a bond, Whereof the world takes note: come, come, disclose The state of your affection; for your passions Hang to the full apprehend.

Hel. Then, I confess, here on my knee, before high heaven and you, That before you, and next unto high heaven, I love your son.

Count. My friends were poor, but honest: so's my love: Be not offended; for it harms but him That he is loved of me: I follow him not By any token of presumptuous suit; nor would I have him till I do deserve him; yet never know how that desert should be. I know I love in vain, strive against hope; yet in this curst leam and intemperate love I still pour in the waters of my love And lack not to lose still: thus, Indian-like,
Religious in mine error, I adore
The sun, that looks upon his worshipper,
But knows of him no more. My dearest madam,
Let not your hate encounter with my love.
For loving where you do: but if yourself,
Whose aged honour cites a virtuous youth,
Did ever in so true a flame of liking
Wish chastely and love dearly, that your Dion
Was both herself and love: O, then, give pity
To her, whose state is such that cannot choose
But lend and give where she is sure to lose;
That seeks not to find that her search implies,
But riddle-like lives sweetly where she dies!

Count. Had you not lately an intent,—speak
To go to Paris? [truly,

Hel. Madam, I had.

Count. Wherefore? tell true.

Hel. I will tell truth; by grace itself I swear.
You know my father left me some presciptions
Of rare and proved effects, such as his reading
And manifest experience had collected
For general sovereignty; and that he will'd me
In headfull'st reservation to bestow them,
As notes whose faculties inclusive were
More than they were in note: amongst the rest,
The king was in receipt of a rare
To cure the desperate languishings whereof
The king isrender'd lost.

Count. For Paris, was it? speak.

Par. An thy mind stand to't, boy, steal away bravely.
Ber. I shall stay here the forchese to a smock,
Creaking my shoes on the plain masonry,
Till honour be bought up and no sword worn
But one to dance with! By heaven, I 'll steal away.

First Lord. There's honour in the theft.

Par. Commit it, count.

Sec. Lord. I am your necessary; and so, farewell.

Ber. I grow to you, and our parting is a tortured

First Lord. Farewell, captain.

Sec. Lord. Sweet Monsieur Paroles!

Par. Noble heroes, my sword and yours are kin.
Good sparks and lustrous, a word, good metals: you shall find in the regiment of the Spirit one Captain Spurio, with his cicatrice, an emblem of war, here on his sinister cheek; it was this very sword entrenched it: say to him, I live; and observe his reports for me.

First Lord. We shall, noble captain.

Par. Mars dote on you for his novices! what will
Ber. Stay: the king.

Sec. Lord. Exit Lords.

Par. [To Ber.] Use a more spacious ceremony to the noble lords; you have restrained yourself within the list of too cold an adian; be more expressive to them: for they wear themselves in the cup of the time, there do muster true gait, eat, speak, and move under the influence of the most received star; and though the devil lead the measure, such are to be followed: after them, and take a more dilated farewell.

Ber. And I will do so.

Par. Worthy fellows; and like to prove most sinewy sword-men.

Enter Lafau.

Laf. [Kneeling] Pardon, my lord, for me and for
King. I'll fee thee to stand up.
ACT II.  ALL'S WELL THAT ENDS WELL.  SCENE I.

Laf. Then here's a man stands, that has brought this pardon. I would not have kneel'd, my lord, to ask me mercy, and that at my bidding you could so stand up.

King. I would I had; so I had broke thy pate, and ask'd thee mercy for't. [Thus;

Laf. Good faith, across: but, my good lord, 'tis
Will you be cured of your infirmity?

King. No, O, will you eat no grapes, my royal fox? Yes, but you will my noble grapes, an if [medicine
My royal fox could reach them: I have seen a
That's able to breathe life into a stone,
Quicken a rock, and make you dance canary
With swiftly fire and motion; whose simple touch
Is powerful to arouse King Pepin, nay,
To give great Charlemann a pen in 's hand
And write to her a love-line.

King. What 'her' is this?

Laf. Why, Doctor Sce; my lord, there's one arrived;
If you will see her: now, by my faith and honour,
If seriously I may convey my thoughts
In this my light deliverance, I have spoke
With one that, in her sex, her years, profession,
Wisdom and constancy, hath amazed me more
Than I dare blame my worship; wilt you see her,
For that is her demand, and know her business?
That done, laugh well at me.

King. Now, good Lafau, bring in the admiration; that we with thee
May spend our wonder too, or take off thine
By wondering how thou tookst it.

Laf. Nay, I'll flit you,
And not be all day neither. [Exit. King. Thus he his special nothing ever prologues.

Re-enter Lafau, with Helena.

Laf. Nay, come your ways.
King. This haste hath wings indeed.
Laf. Nay, come your ways;
This is his majesty; say your mind to him:
A traitor you do look like; but such traitors
His majesty seldom fears; I am Cressid's uncle,
That dare leave two together; fare you well. [Exit.

King. Now, fair one, does your business follow us?
Hel. Ay, my good lord.
Gerard de Narbon was my father;
In what he did profess, well found.

King. I knew him.

Hel. The rather will I spare my praises towards Knowing him is enough. On 's bed of death [him;
Many receipts he gave me; chiefly one,
Which, as the dearest issue of his practice,
And of his old experience the only darling,
He bade me store up, as a triple eye;
Safer than mine own two, more dear; I have so;
And, hearing your high majesty is touch'd
With that malignant cause wherein the honour
Of my dear father's gift stands chief in power,
I come to tender it and my appliance
With all bound humbleness.

King. We thank you, maiden;
But may not be so credulous of cure,
When our most learned doctors leave us and
The congregated college have concluded
That labouring art can never ransom nature
From those complaintable state, say we must not
So stain our judgment, or corrupt our hope,
To prostitute our past-cure malady
To empirics, or to dissever so
Our great self and our credit, to esteem
A senseless help when help past sense we deem.

Hel. I shall then pay me for my pains;
I will no more enforce mine own consent;
Humbly entreating from your royal thoughts
A modest one, to bear me back again.

King. I cannot give thee less, to be call'd grateful:
Thou thought'st to help me; and such thanks I give
As one near related to the will of him live:
But what at full I know, thou know'st no part,
I knowing all my peril, thou no art.

Hel. What I can do can do no hurt to try,
Since you set up your rest 'gainst remedy.
He that of greatest works is finisher
Of does them by the greatest minister:
So holy writ in babies hath judgment shown, [flown
When judges have been babies; great floods have
From simple sources, and great seas have dried
When miracles have by the greatest been denied.
Oft expectation fails and most oft there
Where most it promised, and it is his
Where hope is coldest and despair most fits. [maid;

King. I must not hear thee; fare thee well, kind
Thy pains not used must by thyself be paid:
Proffers not took reep thanks for their reward.

Hel. Inspired merit so by breath is barr'd:
It is not so with him that all things knows
As 't is with us that square our guess by shows;
But most it is presumption in us when
The help of heaven we count the act of men.
Dear sir, to my endeavours give consent;
Of heaven, not me, make an experiment.
I am not and must not be so bold that I may Myself against the level of mine aim;
But know I think and think I know most sure
My art is not past power nor you past care.

King. Art thou so confused? within what space
Hopes thou thy cure?

Hel. The great'st grace lending grace,
Ere twice the horses of the sun shall bring
Their fiery torcher his diurnal ring,
Ere twice in murk and occidental damp
Moist Hesperus hath quench'd his sleepy lamp,
Or four and twenty times the pilot's glass
Hath told the thousands minutes how they pass,
What is infirm from your sound parts shall fly,
Health shall live free and sickness freely die.

King. Upon thy certainty and confidence
What darest thou venture?

Hel. Tax of impudence,
A trumpet's boldness, a divulged shame
Traduced by odious ballads: my maiden's name
Scar'd otherwise; nay, worse—if worse—extended
With vilest torture let my life be ended. [speak

King. Methinks in thee some blessed spirit doth
His powerful sound within an organ weak;
And what impossibility
In common sense, sense saves another way.
Thy life is dear; for all that life can rate
Worth name of life in thee hath estimate,
Youth, beauty, wisdom, courage, all
That happiness and prime can happy call:
 Thou this to hazard needs must intimate
Skill infinite or monstrous desperate.
Sweet practiser, thy physic I will try,
That ministers thine own death if I die.

Hel. If I break time, or flinch in property
Of what I spoke, unpitied let me die,
And well deserved: not helping, death's my fee;
But, if I help, what do you promise me?

King. Make thy demand.

Hel. But will you make it even?

King. Ay, by my sceptre and my hopes of heaven.

Hel. Then shall thou give me with thy kindly hand
What business is in thy power to command;
Exempted be from me the arrogance
To choose from forth the royal blood of France,
My low and humble name to propagate
With any branch or image of thy state;
But such a one, thy vassal, whom I know
Is free for me to choose as thou dost.

King. Here is my hand; the premises observed,
Thy will by my performance shall be served;
ACT II.  ALL'S WELL THAT ENDS WELL.  SCENE III.

So make the choice of thy own time, for I, Thy resolved patient, on thee still rely.
More should I question thee, and more I must. Though more to know could not be more to trust, From whence thou camest, how tended on: but rest.
Umquestion'd welcome and undoubted blest.
Give me some help here, ho! If thou proceed As high as word, my deed shall match thy need.  [Flourish.  Exit.]

SCENE II.—Rousillon.  The Count's palace.

Enter Countess and Clown.

Count.  Come on, sir; I shall now put you to the height of your breeding.
Clo.  I will show myself highly fed and slowly taught: I know my business is but to the court.
Count.  To the court! why, what place make you special, when you put off that with such contempt? But to the court!
Clo.  'Tis my wish, madam, if God have lent a man any manners, he may easily put it off at court: he that cannot make a leg, put off 's cap, kiss his hand and say nothing, has neither leg, hands, lip, nor cap; and indeed such a fellow, to say precisely, were not for the court; but for me, I have an answer will serve all questions.
Count.  Marry, that's a bountiful answer that fits
Clo.  It is like a barber's chair that fits all buttocks, the pin-buttock, the quatch-buttock, the brawn buttock, or any buttock.
Count.  Will your answer serve not to all questions?
Clo.  As fit as ten grats is for the hand of an attorney, as your French crown for your taffeta punk, as Tib's rush for Tom's forefinger, as a pancake for Shrove Tuesday, a morris for May-day, as the nail to his hole, the buckold to his horn, as a scolding quene to the nun's knife, as the nun's lip to the friar's mouth, nay, as the puddling to his skin.
Count.  Have you, sir, an answer of such fitness for all questions?
Clo.  From below your duke to beneath your constable, it will fit any question.
Count.  It must be an answer of most monstrous size that must fit all demands.
Clo.  But a trifle neither, in good faith, if the learned should speak truth of it: here it is, and all that belongs to 't. Ask me if I am a courtier: it shall do you no harm to learn.
Count.  To be bagging again, if we could: I will be a fool in question, hoping to be the wiser by your answer. I pray you, sir, are you a courtier?
Clo.  O Lord, sir! There's a simple putting off. More, more, a hundred of them.  [you.]
Count.  Sir, I am a poor friend of yours, that loves
Clo.  O Lord, sir! Thick, thick, spare not me.
Count.  I think, sir, you can eat none of this homely meat.  [you.
Clo.  O Lord, sir! Nay, put me to 't, I warrant Count.  You were lately whipped, sir, as I think.
Clo.  O Lord, sir! spare not me.
Count.  Do you cry, 'O Lord, sir!' at your whipping, and 'scape not me? Indeed your 'O Lord, sir!' is very sequent to your whipping: you would answer very well to a whipping, if you were but bound to.
Clo.  I ne'er had worse luck in my life in my 'O Lord, sir!' I see things may serve long, but not serve ever.
Count.  I play the noble housewife with the time, To entertain 't so merrily with a fool.
Clo.  O Lord, sir! why, there 't serves well again.
Count.  To be your end: to your business, Give Ellen
And urge her to a present answer back:  [this,
Commend me to my kinsmen and my son:
This is not much.
Clo.  Not much commendation to them.

Count.  Not much employment for you: you understand me?
Clo.  Most fruitfully: I am there before my legs.
Count.  Haste you again.  [Exit severally.

SCENE III. — Paris.  The King's palace.

Enter Bertram, Lafeu, and Parolles.

Laf.  They say miracles are past; and we have our philosophical persons, to make modern and familiar, things supernatural and causeless. Hence is it that we make trifles of terros, ensconcing ourselves into seeming knowledge, when we should submit ourselves to an unknown fear.
Par.  Why, 'tis the rarest argument of wonder that hath shot out in our latter times.
Ber.  And so 'tis.
Laf.  To be relinquished of the artists,—
Par.  So I say.
Laf.  Both of Galen and Paracelsus.
Par.  To Right; so I say.
Laf.  Of all the learned and authentic fellows,—
Par.  Right; so I say.
Laf.  That gave him out incurable,—
Par.  Why, there 'tis; so say I too.
Laf.  Not to be helped,—
Par.  Right: as 'twere, a man assured of a —
Laf.  Uncertain life, and sure death.
Par.  Just, you say well; so would I have said.
Laf.  I may truly say, it is a novelty to the world.
Par.  It is, indeed: if you will have it in showing,
You shall read it in—what do ye call there?
Laf.  A showing of a heavenly effect in an earthly actor.
Par.  That 's it; I would have said the very same.
Laf.  Why, your dolphin is not hustier: 'fore me, I speak in respect.
Par.  Why, 'tis strange, 'tis very strange, that is the brief and the tedious of it; and he's of a most facinerous spirit that will not acknowledge it to be Laf.  Very hand, of heaven.  [the—
Par.  Ay, so I say.
Laf.  In a most weak—[pausing] and debile minister, great power, great transcendence: which should, indeed, give us a further use to be made than alone the recovery of the king, as to be—[pausing] generally thankful.
Par.  I would have said it; you say well. Here comes the king.

Enter King, Helena, and Attendants.

Lafeu and Parolles retire.

Laf.  Lustig, as the Dutchman says: I'll like a maid the better, whilst I have a tooth in my head: why, he's able to lend her a coranto.
Par.  Mort du vinigre! is not this Helen?
Laf.  'Fore God, I think so.
King.  Go, call before me all the lords in court.
Sit, my preserver, by thy patient's side: And with this healthful hand, whose banish'd I sense Thou hast repel'd, a second time receive The confirmation of my promised gift,
Which but attends thy naming.

Enter three or four Lords.

Fair maid, send forth thine guests: this youthful
Of noble backs and at my beslowing, [parcel
O'er whom both sovereign power and father's voice I have to use: thy frank election make;  [sake.
Thou hast power to choose, and they none to for—
Hel.  To each of you one fair and virtuous mistress Fall, when Love please! marry, and they none to for—
Laf.  I'd give my Curial and his furniture.
My mouth no more were broken than these boys',
And writ as little beard.
King.  Peruse them well:
Not one of those but had a noble father.
Hel. Gentlemen,
Heaven hath through me restored the king to health.
All. We understand it, and thank heaven for you.
I have been made wealthy, and therein wealthiest,
That I protest I simply am a maid.
Please it your majesty, I have done already;
The blushes in my cheeks thus whisper me, [fused,
We blush that thou shouldst choose; but, be re-
Let the white death sit on thy cheek for ever;
Wilt thou ever come there again?
King. Make choice; and, see,
Who shuns thy love shuns all his love in me.
Hel. Now, Dian, from thy altar do I fly,
And to imperial Love, that god most high,
Do my sighs stream. Sir, will you hear my suit?
First Lord. And grant it.
Hel. Thanks, sir; all the rest is mute.
Laf. I had rather be in this choice than throw ames-ace for my life.
Hel. The honour, sir, that flames in your fair eyes,
Before I speak, too threateningly replies:
Love make your fortunes twenty times above
Her that so wishes and her humble love!
Sec. Lord. No better, if you please.
Hel. My wish receive,
What great Love grant! and so, I take my leave.
Laf. Do all they deny her? An they were sons of mine, I'd have them whipped; or I would send them to the Turk, to make ennuons of.
Hel. Be not afraid that your hand should take;
I'll never do you wrong for your own sake:
Blessing upon your vows! and in your bed
Find fairer fortune, if you ever wed!
Laf. These boys are boys of ice, they'll none have her: sure, they are bastards to the English; the French ne'er got 'em.
Hel. You are too young, too happy, and too good,
To make yourself a son out of my blood.
Fourth Lord. Fair one, I think not so.
Laf. There's one grape yet: I am sure thy father drink wine; but if thou be'st not an ass, I am a youth of fourteen; I have known thee already.
Hel. [To Bertram] I dare not say I take you; but Me and my service, ever whilst I live, [I give Into your guiding power. This is the man.
King. Why, then, young Bertram, take her; she's thy wife.
[highness,
Ber. My wife, my liege! I shall beseech you
In such a business give me leave to use
The luxury of mine own discretion.
King. Know'st thou not, Bertram,
What she has done for me?
Ber. Yes, my good lord;
But never hope to know why I should marry her.
King. Thou know'st she has raised me from my sickly bed.
Ber. But follows it, my lord, to bring me down
Must answer for your raising? I know her well:
She had her breeding at my father's charge.
A poor physician's daughter! my wife! Disdain
Rather corrupt me ever! [which King. Thou only title thou disdain'st in her, the i can build up. Strange is it that our bloods,
Of colour, weight, and heat, pour'd all together,
Would quite confound distinction, yet stand off
In differences so mighty. If she be
All that is virtuous, save what thou disliks't,
A poor physician's daughter, and the least
Dislike of virtue for the name: but do not so:
From lowest place when virtuous things proceed,
The place is dignified by the doer's deed:
Where great additions swell's, and virtue none,
It is a dropped honour. Good alone
Is good; the meanest is the fairest;
The property by what it is should go,
Not by the title. She is young, wise, fair;
In these to nature she's immediate heir,
And these breed honour: that is honour's scorn,
Which changes itself to charm, and adorns
And is not like the sire: honours thrive,
When rather from our acts we them derive
Than our foregoers: the mere word's a slave
Debosh'd on every tomb, on every grave
A lying trophy, and as oft is dumb
Where dust and damn'd oblivion is the tomb
Of honour'd bones indeed. What should be said?
If thou canst like this creature as a maid,
I can create the rest: virtue and she
Is her own dower; honour and wealth for me.
Ber. I cannot love her, nor will strive to do't.
King. Then 'tis wrong'st thyself, if thou shouldst strive to choose.
Hel. That you are well restored, my lord, I'm glad:
Let the rest go.
King. My honour's at the stake; which to defeat,
I must produce my power. Here, take her hand,
Proud scornful boy, unworthy this good gift;
That dast in vile misprision shake up
My love and her desert; that canst not dream,
We, poising us in her defective scale,
Shall weigh thee to the beam; that wilt not know,
It is in us to plant thine honour where
We please to make it. If thou dost thy contempt:
Obey our will, which travails in thy good:
Believe not thy disdain, but presently
Do thine own fortunes that obedient right
Which both thy duty owes and our power claims;
Or I will throw thee from my care for ever
Into the staggerings and the careless base.
Of youth and ignorance; both my revenge and hate
Loosing upon thee, in the name of justice,
Without all terms of pity. Speak; thine answer.
Ber. Pardon, my gracious lord; for I submit
My fancy to your eyes: when I consider
What great creation and what dote of honour
Flies where you bid it, I find that she, which late
Was in my nobler thoughts most base, is now
The praised of the king; who, so ennobled,
Is as 'twere born so.
King. Take her by the hand,
And tell her she is thine: to whom I promise
A counterpoise, if not to thy estate
A balance more replete.
Ber. I take her hand.
King. Good fortune and the favour of the king
Smile upon this contract; whose ceremony
Shall seem the heraldry of this young brief,
And be perform'd to-night: the solemn feast
Shall more attend upon the coming space,
Expecting absent friends. As thou loveth her,
Thy love's to me religious: else, do's err.
[Exeunt all but Lafcien and Parolles.
Laf. [Advancing] Do you hear, monsieur? a word
Par. Your pleasure, sir?
[with you.
Laf. Your lord and master did well to make his recountation.
Par. Recantation! My lord! my master!
Laf. Ay; is it not a language I speak?
Par. A most harsh one, and not to be understood without bloody succeeding. My master!
Laf. Are you companion to the Count Rousillon?
Par. To any count, to all counts, to what is man.
Laf. To what is count's man: count's master is of another style.
Par. You are too old, sir; let it satisfy you, you are Laet. I must tell thee, sirrah, I write man; which title age cannot bring thee.
Par. What I dare too well do, I dare not do.
Laf. I did think thee, for two ordinaries, to be a pretty wise fellow; thou didst make tolerable vein
Of thy travel; it might not pass: but the scars and the battered plates about thee did manifestly dissuade me from believing thee a vessel of too great a burthen.

ACT II.

ALL'S WELL THAT ENDS WELL. SCENE IV.

I have now found thee; when I lose thee again, I care not: yet art thou good for nothing but taking up; and that thou'rt scarce worth. [Exit.

Par. He hath made the privilege of antiquity upon thee.

Laf. Do not plunge thyself too far in anger, lest thou hasten thy trial; which if — Lord have mercy on thee for a lien! So, my good window of lattice, fare thee well: thy casement I need not open, for I love it when I give me thy hand. [Exit.

Par. My lord, you give me most egregious indulgence.

Laf. Ay, with all my heart; and thou art worthy then.

Par. I have not, my lord, deserved it. [Exit.

Laf. Yes, good faith, every dram of it; and I will not bate thee a scruple.

Par. Well, I shall be wiser.

Laf. Even as soon as thou canst, for thou hast to pull at a snare o' the contrary. If ever thou be'st bound in thy scarf and beaten, thou shalt find what it is to be proud of thy bondage. I have a desire to hold my acquaintance with thee, or rather my knowledge, that I may say in the default, he is a man I know. [Exit.

Par. My lord, you do me most insupportable indulgence.

Laf. I would it were well-pains for thy sake, and my poor doing eternal: for doing I am past; as I will by thee, in what motion age will give me leave. [Exit.

Par. Well, thou hast a son shall take this disgrace off me; scurvy, old, filthy, scurvy lord! Well, I must be patient; there is no lording of authority. I'll beat him by my life, if I can meet him with any convenience, an he were double and double a lord. I'll have no more pity of his age than I would have of — I'll beat him, an I could but meet him again.

Re-enter Lafeu.

Laf. Sirrah, your lord and master's married; there's news for you; you have a new mistress.

Par. I most unfeignedly beseech your lordship to make some reservation of your wrongs: he is my good lord: whom I serve above is my master.

Laf. Who? God?

Par. Ay, sir.

Laf. The devil it is that's thy master. Why dost thou garter up thy arms o' this fashion? dost make hose of thy sleeves? do other servants so? Thou wert best set thy lower part where thy nose stands. By mine honour, if I were but two hours younger, I'd beat thee: neither art thou a general officer, and every man should beat thee: I think thou wast created for men to breathe themselves upon thee.

Par. This is hard and undeserved measure, my lord.

Laf. Go to, sir: you were beaten in Italy for picking a kernel out of a pomegranate: you are a vagabond and no true traveller: you are more saucy with lords and honourable personages than the commission of your birth and virtue gives you heraldry. You are not worth another word, else I'd call you knave. I leave you. [Exit.

Par. Good, very good; it is so then: good, very good; let it be concealed awhile.

Re-enter Bertram.

Ber. Undone, and forfeited to cares for ever!

Par. What is the matter, sweet-heart? [sworn,

Ber. Although before the solemn priest I have I will not bed her.

Par. What, what, sweet-heart?

Ber. O my Paroles, they have married me! I'll to the Tuscan wars, and never bed her.

Par. France is a dog-dole, and it no more merits The tread of a man's foot; to the wars!

Ber. There's letters from my mother: what the import is, I know not yet.

Par. Ay, that would be known. To the wars, my boy, to the wars!

He wears his honour in a box unseen,
That hugs his kicky-wicky here at home;
Spending his manly marrow in his arms,
Which should sustain the bound and high curvet
Of Mars's fiery steed. To other regions
France is a stable; we that dwell in 't jades;
Therefore, to the war!

Ber. It shall be so: I'll send her to my house,
Acquaint my mother with my hate to her,
And wherefore I am fled; write to the king
That which I durst not speak: his present gift
Shall furnish me to those Italian fields,
Where noble fellows strike: war is no strife
To the dark house and the detested wife.

Par. Will this cupricice hold in thee? art sure?

Ber. Go with me to my chamber, and advise me.

I'll send her straight away: to-morrow
I'll to the wars, she to her single sorrow.

Par. Why, these balls bound; there's noise in it.

'Tis hard:

A young man married is a man that's marr'd:
Therefore away, and leave her bravely; go:

The king has done you wrong; but, hush, 'tis so.

[Exeunt.

SCENE IV. — Paris. The king's palace.

Enter Helena and Clown.

Hel. My mother greets me kindly: is she well?

Clo. She is not well; but yet she has her health: she's very merry; but yet she is not well: but thanks be given, she is a very well, and wants nothing in the world; but yet she is not well.

Hel. If she be very well, what does she all, that she's not very well?

Clo. Truly, she's very well indeed, but for two things.

Hel. What two things?

Clo. One, that she's not in heaven, whither God send her quickly! the other, that she's in earth, from whence God send her quickly!

Enter Parolles.

Par. Bless you, my fortunate lady!

Hel. I hope, sir, I have your good will to have mine own good fortunes.

Par. You had my prayers to lead them on; and to keep them on, have them still. O, my knife, how does my valiant officer, when he is under a general offence, and every man should beat thee: I think thou wast created for men to breathe themselves upon thee.

Par. This is hard and undeserved measure, my lord.

Laf. Go to, sir: you were beaten in Italy for picking a kernel out of a pomegranate: you are a vagabond and no true traveller: you are more saucy with lords and honourable personages than the commission of your birth and virtue gives you heraldry. ACT III.

ALL'S WELL THAT ENDS WELL.

SCENE I.

Par. That you will take your instant leave o'the king,
And make this haste as your own good proceeding,
Strengthen'd with what apology you think
May make it probable need.

Hel. What more commands he?
Par. That, having this obtain'd, you presently
Attend his further pleasure.

Hel. In every thing I wait upon his will.

Par. I shall report it so.

Hel. I pray you. [Exit Parolles.]

Come, sirrah. [Exit.

SCENE V.—Paris. The king's palace.

Enter Lafeu and Bertram.

Laf. But I hope your lordship thinks not him a soldier.

Ber. Yes, my lord, and of very valiant approb.

Laf. You have it from his own deliverance.

Ber. And by other warranted testimony.

Laf. Then my dial goes not true: I took this lark for a bunting.

Ber. I do assure you, my lord, he is very great in knowledge and accordingly valiant.

Laf. And have them sinned against his experience and transgressed against his valor; and my state that way is dangerous, since I cannot yet find in my heart to repent. Here he comes: I pray you, make us friends; I will pursue the amity.

Enter Parolles.

Par. [To Bertram] These things shall be done, sir.

Laf. Pray you, sir, who's his tailor?

Par. Sir?

Laf. O, I know him well, I, sir; he, sir, 's a good workman, a very good tailor.

Ber. [Aside to Par.] Is she gone to the king?

Par. She is.

Ber. Will she away to-night?

Par. As you 'll have her.

Ber. I have writ my letters, casketed my treasure,
Given order for our horses; and to-night,
When I should take possession of the bride,
End ere I do begin.

Laf. A good traveller is something at the latter end of a dinner; but one that flies three thirds and uses a known truth to pass a thousand nothings with, should be once heard and thrice beheld. God save you, captain.

Ber. Is there any unkindness between my lord and you, monsieur?

Par. I know not how I have deserved to run into my lord's displeasure.

Laf. You have made shift to run into 't, boots and spurs and all, like him that leaped into the custard; and out of it you'll run again, rather than suffer question for your residence.

Ber. It may be you have mistaken him, my lord.

Laf. And shall do so ever, though I took him at your prayers. Fare you well, my lord; and believe this of me, there can be no kernd in this light nut;

the soul of this man is his clothes. Trust him not in matter of heavy consequence; I have kept of them tame, and know their nature. Farewell, monsieur: I have spoken better of you than you have or will to deserve at my hand; but we must do good against evil.

Par. An idle lord, I swear.

Ber. I think so.

Par. Why, do you not know him?

Ber. Yes, I do know him well, and common speech
Gives him a worthy pass. Here comes my clog.

Enter Helena.

Hel. I have, sir, as I was commanded from you,
Spoke with the king and have procured his leave
For present parting; only he desires
Some private speech with you.

Ber. I shall obey his will.

You must not marvel, Helen, at my course,
Which holds not colour with the time, nor does
The ministerion and required office
On my particular. Prepared I was not
For such a business; therefore am I found
So much unsettled: this drives me to entreat you
That presently you take your way for home;
And rather muse than ask why I entreat you,
For my respects are better than they seem
And my appointments have in them a need
Greater than shows itself at the first view
To you that know them not. This to my mother:

[Giving a letter.

'Twill be two days ere I shall see you, so
I leave you to your wisdom.

Hel. Sir, I can nothing say,
But that I am your most obedient servant.

Ber. Come, come, no more of that.

Hel. And ever shall
With true observance seek to eke out that Wherein toward me my homely stars have fail'd
To equal my great fortune.

Ber. Let that go:
My haste is very great; farewell; hie home.

Hel. Pray, sir, your pardon.

Ber. Well, what would you say?

Hel. I am not worthy of the wealth I owe,
Nor dare I say 't is mine, and yet it is;
But, like a timorous thief, most fain would steal
What law does vouch mine own.

Ber. What would you have?

Hel. Something; and scarce so much: nothing, indeed.

I would not tell you what I would, my lord:
Faith, yes;
Strangers and foes do sunder, and not kiss.

Ber. I pray you, stay not, but in haste to horse.

Hel. I shall not break your bidding, good my lord.

Ber. Where are my other men, monsieur? Farewell.

[Exit Helena.

Go thou toward home; where I will never come
Whilst I can shake my sword or hear the drum.
Away, and for our flight.

Par. Bravely, coragio! [Exit.

ACT III.

Flourish. Enter the Duke of Florence, attended, the two Frenchmen, with a troop of soldiers.

Duke. So that from point to point now have you
The fundamental reasons of this war, [heard
Whose great decision hath much blood let forth
And more thirsts after.

First Lord. Holy seems the quarrel
Upon your grace's part; black and fearful
On the opposer. [France

Duke. Therefore we marvel much our cousin
Would in so just a business shut his bosom
Against our borrowing prayers.

Sec. Lord. Good my lord,
The reasons of our state I cannot yield,

ALL'S WELL THAT ENDS WELL.

SCENE II.

But like a common and an outward man,
That great figure of a counsellor frames
By self-unactive motion: therefore dare not Say what I think of it, since I have found Myself in uncertain grounds to fail
As often as I guess'd.

Duke. Be it his pleasure.

First Lord. But I am sure the younger of our na-
That surfeit on their ease, will day by day [ture,
Come here for physic.

Duke. Welcome shall they be:
And all the honours that can fly from us
Shall on them settle. You know your places well;
When better fall, for your avails they fell:
To-morrow to the field.

Flourish. Exeunt.

SCENE II.—Rousillon. The Count's palace.

Enter Countess and Clown.

Count. It hath happened all as I would have had it, save that he comes not along with her.
Clo. By my troth, I take my young lord to be a very melancholy man.

Count. By what observance, I pray you?

Clo. I have no mind to Isbel since I was at court:
our old ling and our Isbels o' the country are nothing like your old ling and your Isbels o' the court:
the brains of my Cupid's knocked out, and I begin to love, as an old man loves money, with no stom-Count. What have we here?

Clo. E'en that you have there.

Exit.

Count. [Reads] I have sent you a daughter-in-law:
she hath recovered the king, and undone me. I have waded her, not bedded her: and sworn to take the 'not' eternal. You shall hear I am run away:
know it before the report come. If there be breath enough in the world, I will hold a long distance. My duty to you.

Your unfortunate son,

BERTRAM.

This is not well, rash and unbridled boy,
To fly the favours of so good a king;
To pluck his indignation on thy head
By the misprision of a maid too virtuous
For the contempt of empire.

Re-enter Clown.

Clo. O madam, yonder is heavy news within between two soldiers and my young lady!

Count. What is the matter?

Clo. Nay, there is some comfort in the news, some comfort: your son will not be killed so soon as I thought he would.

Count. Why should he be killed?

Clo. So say I, madam, if he run away, as I hear he does; the danger is in standing to 't; that's the loss of men, though it be the getting of children.
Here they move you to tell me: for my part, I only hear your son was run away.

[Exit.

Enter Helena and two Gentlemen.

First Gent. Save you, good madam.

Hel. Madam, my lord is gone, for ever gone.

Sec. Gent. Do not say so. [men,

Count. Think upon patience. Pray you, gentle-
I have felt so many quirks of joy and grief,
That the first face of neither, on the start, [upon
Can woman me unto 't: where is my son, I pray Sec. Gent. Madam, he's gone to serve the duke of Florence:

We met him thitherward; for thence we came,
And, after some dispatch in hand at court,
There we bend again. [port.

Hel. Look on his letter, madam: here's my pass-which never shall come off, and show me a child begotten of thy body that I am father to, then

I am a man: but in such a 'then' I write a
This is a dreadful sentence: [never?

Count. Brought you this letter, gentlemen?

First Gent. Ay, madam;

And for the contents' sake are sorry for our pains.
Count. I prithee, lady, have a better cheer;
If thou engrossest all the griefs are thine,
Thou robb'st me of a moiety; he was my son;
But I do wash his name out of my blood,
And thou art all my child. Towards Florence is he?

Sec. Gent. Ay, madam.

Count. And to be a soldier?

Sec. Gent. Such is his noble purpose: and, believe't,
The duke will lay upon him all the honour
That good convenience claims.

Count. Return you thither?

First Gent. Ay, madam, with the swiftest wing
Of speed. [in France.

Hel. [Reads] Till I have no wife, I have nothing
'Tis better.

Count. Find you that there?

Hel. Ay, madam.

First Gent. 'Tis but the boldness of his hand, hard, which his heart was not consenting to.

Count. Nothing in France, until he have no wife!
'There's nothing here that is too good for him
But only she; and she deserves a lord
That twenty such rude boys might tend upon
And call her hourly mistress. Who was with him?

First Gent. A servant, lady, and a gentleman
Which I have sometime known.

Count. Paroles, was it not?

First Gent. Ay, my good lady, he. [niss.

Count. A very tamed fellow, and full of wicked-
My son corrupts a well-derived nature
With his indiscipline.

First Gent. Indeed, good lady,
The fellow has a deal of that too much,
Which holds him much to have.

Count. You're welcome, gentlemen.
I will entreat you, when you see my son,
To tell him that his sword can never win
The honour that he loses: more I'll entreat you
Written to bear along.

Sec. Gent. We serve you, madam,
In that and all your worthiest affairs.

Count. Not so, but as we change our courtesies.
Will you draw near?

[Exeunt Countess and Gentlemen.

Hel. 'Till I have no wife, I have nothing in France?
Nothing in France, until he has no wife!
Thou shalt have none, Rousillon, none in France;
Then hast thou all again. Poor lord! is 't I,
That chase thee from thy country and expose
Those tender limis of thine to the event
Of the none-sparing war? and is it I
That drive thee from the sportive court, where thou
Wast shot at with fair eyes, to be the mark
Of smoky muskets? O you leaden messengers,
That ride upon the violent speed of fire
Fly with false aim: move the still-peering air,
That sings with piercing: do not touch my lord.
Whoever shoots at him, I set him there;
I am the counterfeit that do hold him to 't;
And, though I kill him not, I am the cause
His death was so effected: better 't were
I met the rav'n lion when he roar'd
With sharp constraint of hunger; better 't were
That all the miseries which nature owes

SCENE V.

Were mine at once. No, come thou home, Rousil. Whence honour but of danger wins a scar; [lon, As oft it loses all: I will be gone: My being here it is that holds thee hence: Shall I stay here to do 't no, no, although The air of paradise did fan the house And angels offered all: I will be gone, That pitiful rumour may report of his flight, To consolation thine ear. Come, night; end, day! For with the dark, poor thief, I'll steal away. [Exit.

Flourish. Enter the Duke of Florence, Bertram, Parolles, Soldiers, Drum and Trumpets.

Duke. The general of our horse thou art; and we, Great in our hope, lay our best love and credence Upon thy promising fortune.

Ber. Sir, it is A charge too heavy for my strength, but yet We'll strive to bear it for your worthy sake To the extreme edge of hazard.

Duke. Then go thou forth; And fortune play upon thy prosperous helm, As thy auspicious mistress! [Exit. This very day, Great Mars, I put myself into thy file: Make me but like my thoughts, and I shall prove A lover of thy drum, hater of love. [Exit.

SCENE IV.—Rousillon. The Count's palace.

Count. Alas! and would you take the letter of her? Might you not know she would do as she has done, By sending me a letter? Read it again.

Stew. [Reads]

I am Saint Jaques's pilgrim, thither gone: Ambitions love hath so in me offended, That barefoot plod I the cold ground upon, With sainted vow my faults to have amended.

Write, write, that from the bloody course of war My dearest master, your dear son, may live: Bless him at home in peace, whilst I from far His name with zealous fervour sanctify: His taken labours bid him me forgive: I, his despicable Juno, sent him forth From courtly friends, with camping foes to live, Where death and danger doges the heels of worth: He is too refined and fair for death like me: Whom I myself embrace, to set him free.

Count. Ah, what sharp stings are in her mildest words! Rinaldo, you did never lack advice so much, As letting her pass so: had I spoke with her, I could have well diverted her intents, Which thus she hath prevented.

Stew. Pardon me, madam: If I had given you this at over-night, She might have been o'erta'en; and yet she writes, Pursuit would be but vain.

Count. What angel shall Bless this unworthy husband? he cannot thrive, Unless her prayers, whom heaven delights to hear And loves to grant, reprove him from the wrath Of greatest justice. Write, write, Rinaldo, To this unworthy husband of his name: Let every word weigh heavy of her worth That he doth weigh too light: my greatest grief, Though little he does feel it, set down sharply. Dispatch the most convenient messenger: When haply he shall hear that she is gone, He will retire: and hope for death once more: Hearing so much, will speed her foot again, Led hither by pure love: which of them both Is nearest to me, I have no skill in sense

To make distinction: provide this messenger: My heart is heavy and mine age is weak; Grief would have tears, and sorrow bids me speak. [Exit.

SCENE V.—Florence. Without the walls. A tucket after.

Enter an old Widow of Florence, Diana, Violanta, and Mariana, with other Citizens.

Wid. Nay, come; for if they do approach the city, we shall lose all the sight.

Dia. They say the French count has done most honourably by our service.

Wid. It is reported that he has taken their greatest commander; and that with his own hand he slew the duke's brother. [Tucket.] We have lost our labour; they are gone a contrary way: hark! you may know by their trumpets.

Mar. Come, let's return again, and suffice ourselves with the report of it. Well, Diana, take heed of this French earl: the honour of a maid is her name; and no legacy is so rich as honesty.

Wid. I have told my neighbour how you have been solicited by a gentleman his companion.

Mar. I know that knave; hang him! one Parolles; a filthy officer he is in those suggestions for the young earl. Beware of them, Diana; their promises, enticements, oaths, tokens, and all these engines of lust, are not the things they go under: many a maid hath been seduced by them; and the misery is, example, that so terrible shows in the breach of maidenhood, cannot for all that disuade succession, but that they are lined with the twigs that threaten them. I hope I need not to advise you further; but I hope your own grace will keep you where you are, though there were no further danger known but the modesty which is so lost.

Dia. You shall not need to fear me.

Wid. I hope so.

Enter Helena, disguised like a Pilgrim.

Look, here comes a pilgrim: I know she will lie at my house; thither they send one another: I'll question her. God save you, pilgrim! whither are you bound?

Hel. To Saint Jaques le Grand. Where do the palmers lodge, I do beseech you?

Wid. At the Saint Francis here beside the port.

Hel. Is this the way?

Wid. And I care not, 'tis. [A march a'fter.] Hark you! they come this way.

If you will tarry, holy pilgrim, But till the troops come by, I will conduct you where you shall be lodged; The rather, for I think I know your hostess As ample as myself.

Hel. Is it yourself?

Wid. If you shall please so, pilgrim.

Hel. I thank you, and will stay upon your leisure. Wid. You came, I think, from France?

Dia. I did so.

Wid. Here you shall see a countryman of yours.

That has done worthy service.

Hel. His name, I pray you.

Dia. The Count Ronsillon: know you such a one?

Hel. But by the ear, that bears most nobly of him: His face I know not.

Dia. Whate'er he is, He's bravely taken here. He stole from France, As 't is reported, for the king had married him Against his liking: think you it is so?

Hel. Ay, surely, mere the truth: I know his lady. There is a gentleman that serves the count Reports but coarsely of her.

Hel. What's his name?
ACT III. ALL'S WELL THAT ENDS WELL. SCENE VI.

Hel. O, I believe with him,
In argument of praise, or to the worth
Of the great count himself, she is too mean
To have her name repeated: all her deserving
Is reserved honesty, and that I have not heard examined.

Diu. Alas, poor lady!
'Tis a hard bondage to become the wife
Of a detesting lord.

Wil. I warrant, good creature, wheresoe'er she is,
Her heart weighs sadly; this young maid might do
A shrewd turn, if she pleased. [her
Hel. How do you mean?
May be the amorous count solicits her
In the unlawful purpose.

Mar. He does indeed;
And brokens with all that can in such a suit
Corrupt the tender honour of a maid:
But she is arm'd for him and keeps her guard
In honestest defence.

Wil. The gods forbid else!

Wil. So, now they come:

Drum and Colours.

Enter Bertram, Parolles, and the whole army.
That is Antonio, the duke's eldest son;
That Escalus.  Hel. Which is the Frenchman?

Diu. That with the plume: 'tis a most gallant fellow.
I would he loved his wife: if he were honest
He were much goodlier: is 't not a handsome gentle.

Wil. I like him well. [man?

Diu. 'Tis pity he is not honest: yond 's that same knife
That leads him to these places: were I his lady,
I would poison that vile rascal.

Hel. Which is he?

Diu. That jack-an-apes with scars: why is he melancholy?

Hel. Perchance he's hurt i' the battle.
Par. Lose our drum! well.

Mar. He's shrewdly vexed at something: look,
he has spied us.

Wil. Marry, hang you!

Mar. And your courtesy, for a ring-carrier!

Diu. The troop is past. Come, pilgrim, I will sing you
Where your host will host: of enjou'd penitents
There's four or five, to great Saint Jaques bound,
Already at my house.

Hel. I humbly thank you:

Please it this matron and this gentle maid
To eat with us to-night, the charge and thanking
Shall be for me; and, to requite you further,
I will bestow some precepts of this virgin
Worthy the note.

Both. We'll take your offer kindly. [Exeunt.

SCENE VI.—Camp before Florence.

Enter Bertram and the two French Lords.

Sec. Lord. Nay, good my lord, put him to 't: let him have his way.

First Lord. If your lordship find him not a biding, hold me no more in your respect.

Sec. Lord. On my life, my lord, a bubble.

Ber. Do you think I am so far deceived in him?

Sec. Lord. Believe it, my lord, in mine own direct knowledge, without any matter, but to speak of him as he is, he's a most notable coward, an infinite and endless liar, an hourly promise-breaker, the owner of no one good quality worthy your lordship's entertainment.

First Lord. It were fit you knew him; lest, reposing too far in his virtue, which he hath not, he might at some great and trusty business in a main danger fail you.

Ber. I would I knew in what particular action to try him.

First Lord. None better than to let him fetch off his drum, which you hear him so confidently un-take to do.

Sec. Lord. I, with a troop of Florentines, will suddenly surprise him; such I will have, whom I am sure he knows not from the enemy: we will bind and hoodwink him so that he shall suppose no other but that he is carried into the leaguer of the adversaries, when we bring him to our own tents. Be but your lordship present at his examination: if he do not, for the promise of his life and in the highest compulsion of base fear, offer to betray you and deliver all the intelligence in his power against you, and that with the divine forfeit of his soul upon oath, never trust my judgment in any thing.

First Lord. O, for the love of laughter, let him fetch his drum; he says he has a stratagem for 't:
when your lordship sees the bottom of his success in 't, and to what metal this counterfeit lump of cloth will be found, if you give him not John Drum's entertainment, your inclining cannot be removed.
Here he comes. Enter Parolles.

Sec. Lord. [Aside to Ber.] O, for the love of laugh-er, hinder not the honour of his design: let him fetch off his drum in any hand.

Ber. How now, monsieur! this drum sticks sorely in your disposition.

First Lord. A pox on 't, let it go; 't is but a drum.
Par. 'But a drum! 't is 't but a drum'? A drum so lost! There was excellent command,—to charge in with our horse upon our own wings, and to rend our own soldiers!

First Lord. That was not to be blamed in the command of the service: it was a disaster of war that Caesar himself could not have prevented, if he had been there to command.

Ber. Well, we cannot greatly condemn our success: some dishonour we had in the loss of that drum; but it is not to be recovered.

Par. It might have been recovered.

Ber. It might; but it is not now.

Par. It is to be recovered: that the merit of service is seldom attributed to the true and exact performer, I would have that drum or another, or 'his jaeet.'

Ber. Why, if you have a stomach, to 't, monsieur;
if you think your mystery in stratagem can bring this instrument of honour again into his native quarter, be magnanimous in the enterprise and go on; I will grace the attempt for a worthy exploit:
if you speed well in it, the duke shall both speak of it, and extend to you what further becomes his greatness, even to the utmost syllable of your worthiness.

Par. By the hand of a soldier, I will undertake it.

Ber. But you must not now slumber in it.

Par. 'Ill about it this evening: and I will presently pen down my dilemmas, encourage myself in my certainty, put myself into my mortal preparation: and by midnight look to hear farther from me.

Ber. May I be bold to acquaint his grace you are gone about it?

Par. I know not what the success will be, my lord: but the attempt I vow.

Ber. I know thon't valiant: and, to the possibility of thy soldiership, will subscribe for thee.

Par. Farewell.

Ber. I love not many words. [Exit.

Sec. Lord. No more than a fish loves water. Is not this a strange fellow, my lord, that so confidently seems to undertake this business, which he knows is not to be done; damns himself to do and dares better be damned than to do't?

First Lord. You do not know him, my lord, as we do; certain it is, that he will steal himself into a man's favor and for a week escape a great deal of discoveries: but when you find him out, you have him ever after.
Ber. Why, do you think he will make no deed at all of this that so seriously he does address himself unto?
Sec. Lord. None in the world; but return with an invention and clap upon you two or three probable lies: but we have almost embossed him: you shall see his full to-night; for indeed he is not for your lordship's respect.
First Lord. We'll make you some sort with the fox ere we case him. He was first smoked by the old lord Lafeu: when his disguise and he is parted, tell me what a sport you shall find him; which you shall see this very night.
Sec. Lord. I must go look my twigs: he shall be caught.
Ber. Your brother he shall go along with me.
Sec. Lord. As't please your lordship: I'll leave you. [Exit.
Ber. Now will I lead you to the house, and show you
The lass I spoke of.
First Lord. But you say she's honest.
Ber. That's all the fault: I spoke with her but once
And found her wondrous cold; but I sent to her,
By this same coxcomb that we have i'the wind,
Tokens and letters which she did re-send;
And this is all I have done. She's a fair creature:
Will you go see her?
First Lord. With all my heart, my lord. [Exit.

SCENE VII.—Florence. The Widow's house.
Enter Helena and Widow.
Hel. If you misdoubt me that I am not she,
I know not how I shall assure you further,
But I shall lose the grounds I work upon.
Wid. Though my estate be fallen, I was well born,
Nothing acquainted with these businesses;
And would not put my reputation now
In any staining act.
Hel. Nor would I wish you.
First, give me trust, the count he is my husband,
And what to your sworn counsel I have spoken
Is so from word to word; and then you cannot,
By the good aid that I of you shall borrow,
Err in bestowing it.
Wid. I should believe you;
For you have show'd me that which well approves
You're great in fortune.
Hel. Take this purse of gold,
And let me buy your friendly help thus far,
Which I will over-pay and pay again [daughter,
When I have found it. The count he woes your Lays down his wanton siege before her beauty,
Resolved to carry her: let her in fine consent,
As we'll direct her how 'tis best to bear it,
Now his important blood will nought deny
That she'll demand: a ring the county wears,
That downward hath succeeded in his house
From son to son, some four or five descents
Since the first father wore it: this ring he holds
In most rich choicest: yet in his idle fire,
To buy his will, it would not seem too dear,
Howerer repeated after.
Wid. Now I see
The bottom of your purpose.
Hel. You see it lawful, then: it is no more,
But that your daughter, ere she seems as won,
Desires this ring: appoints him an encounter;
In fine, delivers me to fill the time,
Herself most clastely absent: after this,
To marry her, I'll add three thousand crowns
To what is past already.
Wid. I have yielded:
Instruct my daughter how she shall persever,
That time and place with this deceit so lawful
May prove coherent. Every night he comes
With musics of all sorts and songs composed
To her unworthiness: it nothing steads us
To chide him from our ears: for he persists
As if his life lay on't.
Hel. Why then to-night
Let us assay our plot; which, if it speed,
Is wicked meaning in a lawful deed
And lawful meaning in a lawful act,
Where both not sin, and yet a sinful fact:
But let's about it. [Exit.

ACT IV.
SCENE I.—Without the Florentine camp.
Enter Second French Lord, with five or six other Soldiers in ambush.
Sec. Lord. He can come no other way but by this Hedge-corner. When you sally upon him, speak
What terrible language you will: though you understand it not yourselves, no matter; for we must not seem to understand him, unless some one among us whom we must produce for an interpreter.
First Sold. Good captain, let me be the interpreter.
Sec. Lord. Art not acquainted with him? knows he not thy voice?
First Sold. No, sir, I warrant you.
Sec. Lord. But what linsey-woolsey hast thou to speak to us again?
First Sold. Even such as you speak to me.
Sec. Lord. He must think us some band of strangers i'the adversary's entertainment. Now he hath, a smack of all neighbouring languages: therefore we must every one be a man of his own fancy, not to know what we speak one to another; so we seem to know, is to know straight our purpose: choughs' language, gabble enough, and good enough. As for you, interpreter, you must seem very politic. But couch, ho! here he comes, to beguile two hours in a sleep, and then to return and swear the lies he forges.

Enter Parolles.
Par. Ten o'clock: within these three hours 'twill be time enough to go home. What shall I say I have done? It must be a very plausible invention that carries it: they begin to smoke me; and dis-wishes have of late knocked too often at my door.
I find my tongue is too foolhardy; but my heart loath the fear of Mars before it and of his creatures, not daring the reports of my tongue.
Sec. Lord. This is the first truth that e'er thine own tongue was guilty of.
Par. What the devil should move me to undertake the recovery of this drum, being not ignorant of the impossibility, and knowing I had no such purpose? I must give myself some hurts, and say
I got them in exploit: yet slight ones will not carry it; they will say, 'Came you off with so little?' and great ones I are not given. Wherefore, what's the instance? Tongue, I must put you into a butter-woman's mouth and buy myself another of Bajazet's mule, if you prattle me into these perils.

Sec. Lord. Is it possible he should know what he is, and be that he is?

Par. Oh, would the cutting of my garments would serve the turn, or the breaking of my Spanish sword.

Sec. Lord. We cannot afford you so.

Par. Or the baring of my beard; and to say it was in straitagem.

Sec. Lord. 'Twould not do.

Par. Or to drown my clothes, and say I was stripped.

Sec. Lord. Hardly serve.

Par. Though I swore I leaped from the window of the citadel.

Sec. Lord. How deep?

Par. Thirty fathom.

Sec. Lord. Three great oaths would scarce make that be believed.

Par. If I would I had any drum of the enemy's: I would swear I recovered it.

Sec. Lord. You hear one anon.

Par. A drum now of the enemy's.—

[Alarum within.]

Sec. Lord. Throca movousus, cargo, cargo, cargo.

All. Cargo, cargo, cargo, villiana par corbo, cargo.

Par. O, ransom, ransom! do not hide mine eyes.

[They seize and blindfold him.]

First Sold. Boskos tromuliole boskos.

Par. I know you are the Muskos' regiment: And I shall lose my life for want of language: If there be here German, or Dane, low Dutch, Italian, or French, let him speak to me; I'll discover that which shall undo the Florentine.

First Sold. Boskos vauvado: I understand thee, and can speak thy tongue. Kerelybonto, sir, betake thee to thy faith, for seventeen poniards are at thy back.

Sec. Lord. Oscoribidechos volivorce. [yet; First Sold. The general is content to spare thee And thou art as thou art, will lead thee on To gather from thee: haply thou mayst inform Something to save thy life.

Par. O, let me live! And all the secrets of our camp I'll show, Their force, their purposes; nay, I'll speak that Which you will wonder at.

First Sold. But wilt thou faithfully?

Par. If I do not, damn me.

First Sold. Acedro linta. Come on; thou art granted space. [Exit, with Paroles guarded. A short altercation within.]

Sec. Lord. Go, tell the Count Rousillion, and my brother, [muffled We have caught the woodcock, and will keep him Till we do hear from them.

Sec. Sold. Captain, I will.

Sec. Lord. 'A' will betray us all unto ourselves:

Inform on that.

Sec. Sold. So I will, sir.

Sec. Lord. Till then I'll keep him dark and safely lock'd. [Exeunt.

SCENE II.—Florence. The Widow's house.

Enter Bertram and Diana.

Ber. They told me that your name was Fontibell.

Dial. No, my good lord, Diana. 224

Ber. Titled goddess; And worth it, with addition! But, fair soul, In your fine frame hath love no quality? If the quick fire of youth light not your mind, You are no maiden, but a monument:

When you are dead, you should be such a one As you are now, for you are cold and stern;

And now you should be as your mother was When your sweet self was got.

Dial. She then was honest.

Ber. So should you be.

Dial. My mother did but duty; such, my lord,

As you owe to your wife.

Ber. No more o' that;

I prithee, do not strive against my vows;

I was compell'd to her; but I love thee

By love's own sweet constraint, and will for ever

Do thee all rights of service.

Dial. Ay, so you serve us

Till we serve you; but when you have our roses,

You barely leave our thorns to prick ourselves

And mock us with our barreness.

Ber. How have I sworn!

Dial. 'Tis not the many oaths that makes the truth,

But the plain single vow that I wish'd on.

What is not holy, that we swear not by, [me,

But take the High'st to witness: then, pray you, tell

If I should swear by God's great attributes,

I loved you dearly, would you believe my oaths;

When I did love you ill? This has no holding,

To swear by whom I protest to love,

That I will work against him: therefore your caths

Are words and poor conditions, but unseal'd,

At least in my opinion.

Ber. Change it, change it;

Be not so holy-cruel: love is holy;

And my integrity ne'er knew the crafts

That you do charge men with. Stand no more off,

But give thyself unto my sick desires,

Who then recover: say thou art mine, and ever

My love as it begins shall so persever.

Dial. I see that men make rapes in such a scarf

That we 'll forsake ourselves. Give me that ring.

Ber. I'll lend it thee, my dear; but have no power

To give it from me.

Dial. Will you not, my lord?

Ber. It is an honour 'longing to our house,

Bequeathed down from many ancestors;

Which were the greatest obloquy i' the world

In me to lose.

Dial. Mine honour's such a ring:

My chastity's the jewel of our house,

Bequeathed down from many ancestors;

Which were the greatest obloquy i' the world

In me to lose: thus your own proper wisdom

Brings in the champion Honour on my part,

Against your vain assault.

Ber. Here, take my ring:

My house, mine honour, yea, my life, be thine,

And I'll be bid by thee.

[ber-window: Dial. When midnight comes, knock at my cham-

I'll order take my mother shall not hear.

Now will I charge you in the band of truth,

When you have conquer'd my yet maiden bed,

Remain there but an hour, nor speak to me: then

My reasons are most strong; and you shall know

When back again this ring shall be deliver'd:

And on your finger in the night I'll put

Another ring, that what in time proceeds

May taken to the future our past deeds.

Adieu, till then; then, fail not. You have won

A wife of me, though there my hope be done.

Ber. A heaven on earth I have won by wooing thee.

Dial. For which live long to thank both heaven

You may so in the end. [and me!}

ACT IV. ALL'S WELL THAT ENDS WELL. SCENE II.
ACT IV. A LL'S W ELL T HAT E NDS W ELL. SCENE III.

My mother told me just how he would woo,
As if she sat in 's heart; she says all me.
I have the like story; he had sworn to marry me
When his wife's dead; therefore I'll lie with him
When I am buried. Since Frenchmen are so brazen, Marry that will, I live and die a maid:
Only in this disguise I think 't no sin
To cozen him that would unjustly win. [Exit.

SCENE III.—The Florentine camp.

Enter the two French Lords and some two or three Soldiers.

First Lord. You have not given him his mother's letter?
Sec. Lord. I have delivered it an hour since; there is something in 't that stings his nature; for on the reading it he changed almost into another man.

First Lord. He has much worthily blazed upon him for shaking off so good a wife and so sweet a lady.

Sec. Lord. Especially he hath incurred the everlasting displeasure of the king, who had even tuned his bounty to sing happiness to him. I will tell you a thing, but you shall let it dwell darkly with you.

First Lord. When you have spoken it, 'tis dead, and I am the grave of it.

Sec. Lord. He hath perverted a young gentlewoman here in Florence, of a most chaste renown; and this night he flees his will in the spoil of her honour: he hath given her his monumental ring, and thinks himself made in the unchaste composition.

First Lord. Now, God delay our rebellion! as we are ourselves, what things are we!

Sec. Lord. Merely our own traitors. And as in the common course of all treasons, we still see them reveal themselves, till they attain to their abhorred ends, so he that in this action contrives against his own nobility, in his proper stream overflows himself.

First Lord. Is it not meant damnable in us, to be trumpeters of our unlawful intents? We shall not then have his company to-night?

Sec. Lord. Not till after midnight; for he is dictated to his hour.

First Lord. That approaches space: I would gladly have him see his company anatomized, that he might take a measure of his own judgments, wherein so curiously he had set this counterfeit.

Sec. Lord. We will not meddle with him till he comes for our presence must be the whip of the other.

First Lord. In the meantime, what hear you of these wars?

Sec. Lord. I hear there is an overture of peace.

First Lord. Nay, I assure you, a peace concluded.

Sec. Lord. What will Count Rousillon do then? will he travel higher, or return again into France?

First Lord. I perceive, by this demand, you are not altogether of his council.

Sec. Lord. Let it be forbid, sir; so should I be a great deal of his act.

First Lord. Sir, his wife some two months since fled from his house: her pretence is a pilgrimage to Saint Jaques le Grand; which holy undertaking with most austere sanctimony she accomplished; and, there residing, the tenderness of her nature became as a prey to her grief; in fine, made a groan of her last breath, and now she sings in heaven.

Sec. Lord. First Lord. The stronger part of it by her own letters, which makes her story true, even to the point of her death: her death itself, which could not be her office to say is come, was faithfullly confirmed by the rector of the place.

Sec. Lord. Hath the count all this intelligence?

First Lord. Ay, and the particular confirmations, point from point, to the full arming of the verity.

Sec. Lord. I am heartily sorry that he'll be glad of this.

First Lord. How mightily sometimes we make us comforts of our losses?

Sec. Lord. And how mightily some other times we drown our gain in tears! The great dignity that his valour hath here acquired for him shall at home be encountered with a shame as ample.

First Lord. The web of our life is of a mingled yarn, good and ill together: our virtues would be proud, if our faults whipped them not; and our crimes would despire, if they were not cherished by our virtues.

Enter a Messenger.

How now! where's your master?

Sec. His master. He met the duke in the street, sir, of whom he hath taken a solemn leave: his lordship will next morning for France. The duke hath offered him letters of commendations to the king.

Sec. Lord. They shall be no more than needful there, if they were more than they can command.

First Lord. They cannot be too sweet for the king's tartness. Here's his lordship now.

Enter Bertram.

How now, my lord! is't not after midnight?

Ber. I have to-night dispatched sixteen businesses, a month's length a-piece, by an abstract of success: I have congied with the duke, done my adieu with his nearest; buried a wife, mourned for her; writ to my lady mother I am returning; entertained my convoy; and between these main parcels of dispatch effected many nicer needs: the last was the greatest, but that I have not ended yet.

Sec. Lord. If the business be of any difficulty, and this morning your departure hence, it requires haste of your lordship.

Ber. I think, the business is not ended, as fearing to hear of it hereafter. But shall we have this dialogue between the fool and the soldier? Come, bring forth this counterfeit module, has deceived me, like a double-meaning prophet.

Sec. Lord. Bring him forth: has sat i' the stocks all night, poor gallant knave.

Ber. No matter; his heels have deserved it, in usurping his spurs so long. How does he carry himself?

Sec. Lord. I have told your lordship already, the stocks carry him. But to answer you as you would be understood; he weeps like a wench that had shed her milk: he hath confessed himself to Morgan, whom he supposes to be a friar, from the time of his remembrance to this very instant disaster of his setting i' the stocks: and what think you he hath confessed?

Ber. Nothing of me, has it?

Sec. Lord. His confession is taken, and it shall be read to his face: if your lordship be in 't, as I believe you are, you must have the patience to hear it.

Enter Parolles guarded, and First Soldier.

Ber. A plague upon him! muffled! he can say nothing of me: 'tis hard, hard.

First Lord. Hoodman comes! Portortarosa.

First Sold. He calls for the tortures: what will you say without 'em?

Par. I will confess what I know without constraint: if ye pinch me like a petty, I can say no

First Sold. Bosko chiumoro.

First Sold. You are a merciful general. Our general bids you answer to what I shall ask you out of a note.

Par. And truly, as I hope to live.

First Sold. [Reads] 'First demand of him how many horse the duke is strong.' What say you to that?

225
First Sold. Shall I set down your answer so?
Par. Do: I'll take the sacrament on 't, how and which way you will.

Ber. All's one to him. What a past-savingslave!
First Lord. You're deceived, my lord: this is Monsieur Parolles, the gallant militarist,—that was his own phrase,—that had the whole theoretie of war in the knot of his scarf, and the practice in the chapel of his dagger.

Sec. Lord. I will never trust a man again for keeping his sword clean, nor believe he can have every thing in him by wearing his apparel neatly.

First Sold. Well, that's set down.
Par. Five or six thousand horse, I said,—I will say true,—or thereabouts, set down, for I'll speak truth.

First Lord. He's very near the truth in this.
Ber. But I con him no thanks for 't, in the nature
he delivers it.
Par. For wrongs, I pray you, say.

First Sold. Well, that's set down.
Par. I humbly thank you, sir: a truth's a truth, the rogues are marvellous poor.

First Sold. [Reads] 'Demand of him, of what strength they are a-foo't. ' What say you to that?
Par. By a truth, sir, if I were to live this present hour, I will tell true. Let me see: Spurio, a hundred and fifty; Sebastian, so many; Corumbas, so many; Jaques, so many; Gallitian, Cosmo, Lodowick, and Gratif, two hundred and fifty each;
mine own company, Chistopher, Vaunond, Bellit, two hundred and fifty each: so that the muster-flower rotten and sound, upon my life, amounts not to fiften thousand poll; half of which dare not shake the snow from off their cascosk, lest they shake themselves to pieces.

Ber. What shall be done to him?
First Lord. Nothing, but let him have thanks.
Demand of him my condition, and what credit
I have with the duke.

First Sold. Well, that's set down. [Reads] 'You shall demand of him, whether one Captain Dauinim be there? That Frenchman: what his reputation is with the duke; what his valour, honesty, and expertness in wars; or whether he thinks it were not possible, with well-weighing sums of gold, to corrupt him to a revolt.' What say you to this?
Par. What do you know of it?
Ber. I beseech you, let me answer to the particular of the interrogatories: demand them singly.

First Sold. Do you know this Captain Dauinim?
Par. I know him: a was a butcher's prentice in Paris, from whence he was whipped for getting the shrieve's fool with child,—a dumb innocent, that could not say him na.

Ber. Nay, by your leave, hold your hands: though
I know his brains are forfeit to the next tile that falls.
First Sold. Well, is this captain in the duke of Flenges's camp?
Par. Upon my knowledge, he is, and lousy.

First Lord. Nay, look not so upon me; we shall hear of your lordship anon.

First Sold. What is his reputation with the duke?
Par. The duke knows him for no other but a paramour of mine: and writ to me this other day to turn him out o' the land: I think I have his letter in my pocket.

First Sold. Marry, we'll search.

Par. In good sadness, I do not know: either it is there, or it is upon a file with the duke's other letters in my tent.
cut the entail from all remainders, and a perpetual succession for it perpetually. [Dumain?]
First Sold. What's his brother, the other Captain Sec. Lord. Why does he ask of me?
First Sold. What's he be?
Par. E'er a crow o' the same nest; not altogether so great as the first in goodness, but greater a great deal in evil: he excels his brother for a coward, yet his brother is reputed one of the best that is: in a retreat he carries any lackey; marry, in courting on he has the cramp.
First Sold. If your life be saved, will you undertake to betray the Florentine? [Rousillon.] Par. Ay, and the captain of his horse; Count First Sold. I'll whisper with the general, and know his pleasure.
Par. [Aside] I'll no more drumming; a plague of all drums! Only to seem to deserve well, and to beguile the supposition of that lascivious young boy the count, have I run into this danger. Yet who would have suspected an ambush where I was taken?
First Sold. There is no remedy, sir, but you must die: the general says, you that have so traitorously discovered the secrets of your army and made such pestiferous reports of men very nobly held, can serve the world for no honest use; therefore you must unman yourself, and hie him head.
Par. O Lord, sir, let me live, or let me see my death! First Sold. That shall you, and take your leave of all your friends. [Unbinding him.]
SEME V.—Rousillon. The Count's palace. [Exeunt Bertram and Lords.]
First Sold. You are undone, captain, all but your scarf; that has a knot on 't yet.
Par. But who cannot be crushed with a plot?
First Sold. If you could find out a country where but women were that had received so much shame, you might begin an impudent nation. Fare ye well, sir: I am for France too: we shall speak of you there. [Exit, with Soldiers.]
Par. Yet am I thankful: if their thoughts were great, 'T would burst at this. Captain I'll be no more; But I will eat and drink, and sleep as soft As captain shall; simply the thing I am Shall make me live. Who knows himself a braggart, Let him fear this, for it will come to pass That every braggart shall be found an ass. Rust, sword! cool, blushes! and, Parolles, live Safest in shame! being fool'd, by foolery thrive! There's place and means for every man alive, I'll after them. [Exit.]
SCENE IV.—Florence. The Widow's house.
[Enter Helena, Widow, and Diana.
Hel. That you may well perceive I have not wrong'd you, One of the greatest in the Christian world Shall be the surety: 'fore whose throne 't is needful, Ere I can perfect mine intents, to kneel: Time was, I did him a desired office, Dear almost as his life; which gratitude Through flinty Tartar's bosom would peep forth, And answer, thanks: I duly am fafford'd His gold in pelfies; to which place We have convenient convoy. You must know, I am supposed dead: the army breaking,
My husband hits him home; where, heaven aiding, And by the leave of my good lord the king, We'll be before our welcome.
Hel. Gentle madam, You never had a servant to whose trust Your business was more welcome.
Hel. Ever a friend whose thoughts more truly labour To recompense your love: doubt not but heaven Hath brought me up to be your daughter's dowler, As it hath fated her to be my motive And helper to a husband. But, O strange men! That can such sweet use make of what they hate, When saucy trusting of the cozen'd thoughts Defiles the pitchy night: so just doth play With what it leathes for that which is away. But more of this hereafter. You, Diana, Under my poor instructions yet must suffer Something in my behalf.
Din. Let death and honesty Go with your impositions, I am yours Upon your will to suffer.
Hel. Yet I pray you: But with the word the time will bring on summer, When briers shall have leaves as well as thorns, And be as sweet as sharp. We must away; Our wagen is prepared, and time revives us: Hel.'s men. Swiss. We COUNTER THAT ENDS WELL: still the fine 's the crown; Whate'er the course, the end is the renown. [Exeunt.}
ACT V.

ALL'S WELL THAT ENDS WELL.

SCENE I.—Marseilles. A street.

Enter Helena, Widow, and Diana, with two Attendants.

Hel. But this exceeding posting day and night.

Must wear your spirits low; we cannot help it:

But since you have made the days and nights as one,

To wear your gentle limbs in my affairs,

Be bold you do so grow in my requital

As nothing can unroot you. In happy time;

Enter a Gentleman.

This man may help me to his majesty's ear,

If he would spend his power. God save you, sir.

Gent. And you.

Hel. Sir, I have seen you in the court of France.

Gent. I have been sometimes there.

Hel. I do presume, sir, that you are not fallen

From the report that goes upon your goodness;

And therefore, gauged with most sharp occasions,

Which lay nice manners by, I put you to

The use of your own virtues, for which

I shall continue thankful.

Gent. What's your will?

Hel. That it will please you

To give this poor petition to the king,

And aid me with that store of power you have

To come into his presence.

Gent. The king's not here.

Hel. Not here, sir! Not, indeed;

He hence removed last night and with more haste

Than is his use.

Wid. Lord, how we lose our pains!

Hel. All's well that ends well yet,

Though time seem so adverse and means unfruitful.

I do beseech you, whither is he gone?

Hel. He enquired after himself, and is with the French.
Enter Lafeu.
Here is a purr of fortune's, sir, or of fortune's cat,—but not a musk-cat,—that has fallen into the unclean fishpond of her displeasure, and, as he says, is muddied within: pray you, sir, use the carp as you may; for he looks like a poor, decayed, ingenious, foolish, rascally knave. I do pity his distress in my similes of comfort and leave him to your lordship.
[Exit.

Par. My lord, I am a man whom fortune hath cruelly scratched.

Laf. And what would you have me to do? 'Tis too late to pare her nails now. Wherein have you played the knave with fortune, that she should scratch you, who of herself is a good lady and would not have knaves thrive long under her? There's a quart d'écu for you: let the justices make you and fortune friends: I am for other business. [word.

Par. I beseech your honour to hear me one single

Laf. You beg a single penny more: come, you shall have 't; save your word.

Par. My name, my good lord, is Parolles.

Laf. You beg more than 'word, then. Cox my passion! give me your hand. How does your drum? O my good lord, you were the first that found me! *

Thee.

Laf. Was I, in sooth? and I was the first that lost Par. It lies in you, my lord, to bring me in some grace, for you did bring me out.

Laf. Out upon thee, knave! lost thou put upon me at once both the office of God and the devil? One brings thee in grace and the other brings thee out. [Trumpets sound.] The king's coming; I know by his trumpets. Sirrah, inquire further after me; I had talk of you last night: though you are a fool and a knave, you shall eat; go to, follow.

Par. I praise God for you.

[Exeunt.

SCENE III.—Housillon. The Count's palace.

Flourish. Enter King, Countess, Lafeu, the two French Lords, with Attendants.

King. We lost a jewel of her; and our esteem Was made much poorer by it: but your son, As mad in folly, lack'd the sense to know Her estimation home.

Count. 'Tis past, my liege; And I beseech your majesty to make it Natural rebellion, done I the blaze of youth; When oil and fire, too strong for reason's force, O'beares it and burns on.

King. My honour'd lady, I have forgiven and forgotten all; Though my revenges were high bent upon him, And wath'd the time to shoot.

Laf. This I must say, But first I beg my pardon, the young lord Did to his majesty, his mother and his lady Offence of mighty note; but to himself. The greatest wrong of all. He lost a wife Whose beauty did astonish the survey Of richest eyes, whose words all ears took captive, Whose dear perfection hearts that scorn'd to serve Humbly call'd mistress.

King. Praising what is lost Makes the remembrance dear. Well, call him hither; We are reconciled, and the first view shall kill All repetition: let him not ask our pardon; The nature of his great offence is dead, And deeper than oblivion we do bury The incensing relics of it: let him approach, A stranger, no offender; and inform him So't is our will he should.

Gent. I shall, my liege. [Exit.

King. What says he to your daughter? Have you spoke?

Laf. All that he is hath reference to your highness.

King. Then shall we have a match. I have letters sent me That set him high in fame.

Enter Bertram.

Laf. He looks well on't.

King. I am not a day of season,
For thou mayst see a sunshine and a hail In me at once: but to the brightest beams Distracted clouds give way; so stand thou forth; The time is fair again.

Ber. My high-repented blunders, Dear sovereign, pardon to me.

King. All is whole;
Not one word more of the consumed time.
Let's take the instant by the forward top;
For we are old, and on our quick'st decrees The inaudible and noiseless foot of Time
Steals ere we can effect them. You remember The daughter of this lord?

Ber. Admiringly, my liege, at first I stuck my choice upon her, ere my heart Durst make too bold a herald of my tongue Where the impression of mine eye influxing, Contempt his scornful perspective did lend me, Which wap'd the line of every other favour; Scorn'd a fair colour, or express'd it stolen; Extended or contracted all proportions To a most hideous object: thence it came That she whom all men praised and whom myself, Since I have lost, have loved, was in mine eye The dust that did offend it.

King. Well excused:
That thou didst love her, strikes some scores away From the great comp't: but love that comes too late, Like a renounceful pardon slowly carried To the great sender turns a sour offence, Crying, 'That's good that's gone.' Our rash faults Make trivial price of serious things we have, Not knowing them until we know their grave: Off our displeasures, to ourselves unjust, Destroy our friends and after weep their dust: Our own love waking cries to see what's done, While shame full late sleeps out the afternoon. Be this sweet Helen's knell, and now forget her. Send forth your amorous token for fair Maudlin: The main consents are had; and here we'll stay To see the widow's second marriage-day.

Count. Which better than the first, O dear heaven, Or, ere they meet, in me, O nature, cease! [Bless! Laf. Come on, my son, in whom my house's name Must be digested, give a favour from you To sparkle in the spirits of my daughter, That she may quickly come. [Bertram gives a ring. By my old beard. And every hair that's on't, Helen, that's dead, Was a sweet creature: such a ring as this. The last that e'er I took her leave at court, I saw upon her finger.

Ber. Hers it was not.

King. Now, pray you, let me see it; for mine eye, While I was speaking, oft was fasten'd to't. This ring was mine; and, when I gave it Helen, I bade her, if her fortunes ever stood Necessity to help, that by this token [her To would relieve that craft, to prove Of what should steal her most?

Ber. My gracious sovereign, How' er it pleases you to take it so, The ring was never hers.

Count. Son, on my life, I have seen her wear it; and she reckon'd it At her life's rate.

Laf. I am sure I saw her wear it.

Ber. You are deceived, my lord; she never saw it.
In Florence was it from a casement thrown me,
Wrapp'd in a paper, which contain'd the name
Of her that threw it: noble she was, and thought
I stood engaged: but when I had deserv'd
To the own fortune, and inform'd her fully
I could not answer in that course of honor
As she had made the overt're, she ceased
In heavy satisfaction and would never Receive the ring again.

Plutus,
That knows the tint and multiplying medicine,
Hath not in nature's mystery more science
Than I have in this ring; 't was mine, 't was Helen's, Whoever gave it you. Then, if you know
That you are well acquainted with yourself,
Confess 't was hers, and by what rough enforcement
You got it from her: call'd the saints to surety
That she would never put it from her finger
Unless she gave it to yourself in bed,
Where you have never come, or sent it us
Upon her great disaster.

Ber.
She never saw it.

King.
Thou speak'st it falsely, as I love mine honour;
And makest conjectural fears to come into me,
Which I would fain shut out. If it should prove
That thou art so inhuman, — and I shall prove so;
And yet I know them, thou dost hate her deadly,
And she is dead; which nothing, but to close
Her eyes myself, could win me to believe,
More than to see this ring. Take him away.

My forepast proofs, however the matter fall,
Shall tax my fears of little vanity,
Having vainly fear'd too little. Away with him!
We'll sift this matter further.

Ber.
If you shall prove
This ring was ever hers, you shall as easy
Prove that I husband'd her bed in Florence,
Where yet she never was. [Exit, guarded.

Enter a Gentleman.

But Gracious sovereign,
Whether I have been to blame or no, I know not:
Here's a petition from a Florentine,
Who hath for four or five removes come short
To tender it herself. I undertake it,
Vanquish'd thereto by the fair grace and speech
Of the poor suppliants, who by this I have
Is here attending: her business looks in her
With an importing visage: and she told me,
In a sweet verbal brief, it did concern
Your highness with herself.

King. [Reads] Upon his many protestations to marry me when his wife was dead, I blush to say it, he won me. Now is the Count Rousillon a widower:
his vows were forfeited to me, and my honour's paid to him. He stole from Florence, taking no leave, and I follow him to his country for justice:
grant it me, O king! in you I best lies; otherwise a seducer flourishes, and a poor maid is undone.

Diana Capilet.

Laf.
I will buy me a son-in-law in a fair, and toll for this: 't'll none of him.

Laf.
The heavens have thought well on thee,
To bring forth this discovery. Seek these suitors:
Go speedily and bring again the count.
I am afraid of Helen, lady,
Was fouly snatch'd.

Count.
Now, justice on the doors!

Enter Bertram, guarded.

King.
I wonder, sir, sith wives are monsters to you,
And that you fly them as you swear them lordship,
Yet you desire to marry.
ACT V.

ALL'S WELL THAT ENDS WELL.

SCENE III.

You, that have turn'd off a first so noble wife,
May justly diet me. I pray you yet;
Since I remain virtuous, I will lose a husband;
Send for your ring, I will return it home,
And give me mine again.

Ber. ... I have it not.
King. What ring was yours, I pray you?
Dier. Sir, much like
The same upon your finger.
Date.
King. Know you this ring? this ring was his of Dier. And this was it I gave him, being abed.
King. The story then goes false, you threw it him
Out of a casement.

Dier. I have spoke the truth.

• Enter Paroles.

Ber. My lord, I do confess the ring was hers.
King. You boggle shrewdly, every feather starts
Is this the man you speak of? [you.
Dier. Ay, my lord.
King. Tell me, sirrah, but tell me true, I charge
Not fearing the displeasure of your master, [you,
Which on your just proceeding I'll keep off,
By him and by this woman here what know you?
Par. So please your majesty, my master hath been an honourable gentleman: tricks he hath had in him, which gentlemen have.
King. Come, come, to the purpose: did he love this woman?
Par. Faith, sir, he did love her; but how?
King. How, I pray you? [woman.
Par. He did love her, sir, as a gentleman loves a King. How is that?
Par. He loved her, sir, and loved her not.
King. As thou art a knave, and no knave. What an equivocal companion is this! [mand.
Par. I am a poor man. and at your majesty's com-
Laf. He's a good drum, my lord, but a naughty orator.
Dier. Do you know he promised me marriage?
Par. Faith, I know more than I'll speak.
King. But wilt thou not speak all thou knowest?
Par. Yes, so please your majesty. I did go between them, as I said; but more than that, he loved her:
for indeed he was mad for her, and talked of Satan and of Limbo and of Furies and I know not what: yet I was in that credit with them at that time that I knew of their going to bed, and of other motions, as promising her marriage, and things which would derive me ill will to speak of; therefore I will not speak what I know.

King. Thou hast spoken all already, unless thou canst say they are married: but thou art too fine in thy evidence; therefore stand aside. This ring, you say, was yours?

Dier. Ay, my good lord.
King. Where did you buy it? or who gave it you?
Dier. It was not given me, nor I did not buy it.
King. Who lent it you?
Dier. It was not lent me neither.
King. Where did you find it then?
Dier. I found it not.
King. If it were yours by none of all these ways,
How could you give it him?

Dier. I never gave it him.
Laf. This woman's an easy glove, my lord; she goes off and on at pleasure.

King. This ring was mine: I gave it his first wife.
Dier. It might be yours or hers, for aught I know.
King. Take her away; I do not like her now;
To prison with her: and away with him.

Unless thou tell'st me where thou hast this ring,
Thou diest within this hour.

Dier. I'll never tell you.

King. Take her away.

Dier. I'll put in bail, my liege.
King. I think thee now some common customer.
Dier. By Jove, if ever I knew man, 'twas you.
King. Wherefore hast thou accused him all this while?

Dier. Because he's guilty, and he is not guilty:
He knows I am no maid, and he 'll swear to't;
I'll swear I am a maid, and he knows not.
Great king, I am no strumpet, by my life;
I am either maid, or else this old man's wife.

King. She does abuse our ears: to prison with her.

Dier. Good mother, fetch my bail. Stay, royal sir:

[Exit Widow.

The jeweller that owes the ring is sent for,
And shall surety me. But for this lord,
Who hath abused me, as he knows himself,
Though yet he never harm'd me, here I quit him:
He knows himself my bed he hath defiled;
And at that time he got his wife with child:
Dead though she be, she feels her young one kiek:
So there's my riddle: one that's dead is quick:
And now behold the meaning.

Re-enter Widow, with Helena.

King. Is there no exorcist
Beguiles the truer office of mine eyes?
Is't real that I see?

Hel. No, my good lord;
'Tis but the shadow of a wife you see,
The name and not the thing.

Ber. * Both, both. O, pardon!
Hel. O my good lord, when I was like this maid,
I found you wondrous kind. There is your ring;
And, look you, here's your letter; this it says:
'When from my finger you can get this ring
And are by me with child,' &c. This is done:
Will you be mine, now you are doubly won?

Ber. If she, my liege, can make me know this
I'll love her dearly, ever, ever dearly. [clearly,

Hel. If it appear not plain and prove intruce,
Deadly divorce step between me and you:
O my dear mother, do I see you living?

Laf. Mine eyes smell onions; I shall weep anon:
[To Paroles] Good Tom Drum, lend me a handkercher: so,

To Paroles [thee]: I thank thee; wait on me home, I'll make sport with Let thy courtesies alone, they are scurvy ones.

King. Let us from point to point this story know,
To make the even truth in pleasure flow.
[To Diana] If thou be'st yet a fresh uncropped flower,
Choose thou thy husband, and I'll pay thy dover;
For I can guess that by thy honest aid
Thou keepest a wife herself, thyself a maid.
Of that and all the progress, more or less,
Resolvedly more leisure shall express:
All yet seems well; and if it end so meet,
The better past, more welcome is the sweet.

[Flourish.

EPILOGUE.

King. The king's a beggar, now the play is done:
All is well ended, if this suit be won,
That you express content; which we will pay,
With strife to please you, day exceeding day.

Ours be your patience then, and yours our parts;
Your gentle hands lend us, and take our hearts.

[Exeunt.

231
TWELFTH NIGHT; OR, WHAT YOU WILL.

DRAMATIS PERSONÆ.

Orsino, Duke of Illyria.
Sebastian, brother to Viola.
Antonio, a sea captain, friend to Sebastian.
A Sea Captain, friend to Viola.
Valentine, friend to the Duke.
Curio,
Sir Toby Belch, uncle to Olivia.
Sir Andrew Aguecheek.
Malvolio, steward to Olivia.

Fabian, Feste, a Clown, servants to Olivia.
Olivia.
Viola.
Maria, Olivia's woman.
Lords, Priests, Sailors, Officers, Musicians, and other Attendants.

SCENE I.—The Duke's palace.

Enter Duke, Curio, and other Lords; Musicians attending.

Duke. If music be the food of love, play on;
Give me excess of it, that, surfeiting,
The appetite may sicken, and so die.
That strain again! It had a dying fall:
O, it came o'er my ear like the sweet sound,
That breathes upon a lank of violets,
Stealing and giving odour! Enough: no more:
'Tis not so sweet now as it was before.
O spirit of love! how quick and fresh art thou,
That, notwithstanding thy capacity
Receiveth as the sea, nought enters there,
Of what validity and pitch soe'er,
But falls into abatement and low price,
Even in a minute: so full of shapes is fancy
That it alone is high fantastical.
Cur. Will you go hunt, my lord?
Duke. What, Curio?
Cur. The hart.
Duke. Why, so I do, the noblest that I have:
O, when mine eyes did see Olivia first,
Methought she purged the air of pestilence!
That instant was I turn'd into a hart;
And my desires, like fell and cruel hounds,
E'er since pursue me.

Enter Valentine.

Val. So please my lord, I might not be admitted;
But from her handmaid do return this answer:
The element itself, till seven years' heat,
Shall not behold her face at ample view;
But, like a cloestress, she will veiled walk
And water once a day her chamber round
With eye-offending brine: all this to season
A brother's dead love, which she would keep fresh
And lasting in her sad remembrance.

Duke. O, she that hath a heart of that fine frame
To pay this debt of love but to a brother,
How will she love, when the rich golden shaft
 Hath kill'd the flock of all affections else
That live in her: when liver, brain and heart,
These sovereign thrones, are all supplied, and fill'd
Her sweet perfections with one self king!
Away before me to sweet beds of flowers:

Love-thoughts lie rich when canopied with bowers.

SCENE II.—The sea-coast.

Enter Viola, a Captain, and Sailors.

Vio. What country, friends, is this?
Cap. This is Illyria, lady.
Vio. And what should I do in Illyria?
Cap. My brother lies in Elysium.
Vio. Perchance he is not drown'd: what think you, sir?
Cap. It is perchance that you yourself were saved.
Vio. O my poor brother! and so perchance may he be.

Cap. True, madam: and, to comfort you with assure yourself, after our ship did split,
When you and those poor number saved with you
Hung on our driving boat, I saw your brother,
Most provident in peril, bind himself,
Courage and hope both teaching him the practice,
To a strong mast that lived upon the sea;
Where, like Arion on the dolphin's back,
I saw him hold acquaintance with the waves
So long as I could see.
Vio. For saying so, there's gold:
Mine own escape unfoldeth to my hope,
Whereeto thy speech servest for authority,
The like of him. Know'st thou this country?
Cap. Ay, madam, well; for I was bred and born
Not three hours' travel from this very place.
Vio. Who governs here?
Cap. A noble duke, in nature as in name.
Vio. What is his name?
Cap. Orsino.
Vio. Orsino! I have heard my father name him:
He was a bachelor then.
Cap. And so is now, or was so very late;
For but a month ago I went from hence,
And then 'twas fresh in murmurs,—as, you know,
What great ones do the less will prattle of,—
That he did seek the love of fair Olivia.
Vio. What's she?
Cap. A virtuous maid, the daughter of a count
That died some twelvemonth since, then leaving her
In the protection of his son, her brother,
Who shortly also died: for whose dear love,
They say, she hath abjured the company
And sight of men.
Vio. O that I served that lady
And might not be delivered to the world,
Till I had made mine own occasion mellow,
What my estate is!
Cap. That were hard to compass;
Because she will admit no kind of suit,
No, not the duke's.
Vio. There is a fair behaviour in thee, captain;
And though that nature with a beauteous wall
Doth oft close in pollution, yet 'tis the
I will make thee think, and keep my mind that suits
With this thy fair and outward character.
I prithee, and I'll pay thee bounteously,
Conceal me what I am, and be my aid
For such discourse as happily shall become
The form of my intent. I'll serve this duke;
Thou shalt present me as an enuch to him:
It may be worth thy pains; for I can sing
And speak to him in many sorts of music
That will allow me very worth his service.
What else may hap to time I will commit;
Only shape thou thy silence to my wit.
Cap. Be you his enuch, and your mate I'll be:
When my tongue blazes, then let mine eyes not see.
Vio. I thank thee: lead me on.
[Exeunt.

Scene III. — Olivia's house.

Enter Sir Toby Belch and Maria.

Sir To. What a plague means my niece, to take
The death of her brother thus? I am sure care's
My brother, Sir Toby, you must come in Earlier o' nights; your cousin, my lady, takes great
Exception to your ill hours.

Sir To. Why, let her except, before excepted.

Mar. Ay, but you must confine yourself within
The modest limits of order.

Sir To. Confine! I'll confine myself no finer than I am these clothes are good enough to drink in;
And so be these boots too: an they be not, let them
Hang themselves in their own straps.

Mar. That quaffing and drinking will undo you:
I heard my lady talk of it yesterday; and of a fool-Ish knight that you brought in one night here to be her guest.

Sir To. Who, Sir Andrew Aguecheek?

Mar. Ay, he.

Sir To. He's as tall a man as any 's in Illyria.

Mar. What's that to the purpose?

Sir To. Why, he has three thousand ducats a year.

Mar. Ay, but he'll have but a year in all these ducates; 'tis a very fool and a prodigal.

Sir To. Fie, that you'll say so! lie plays o' the viol-de-gamboys, and speaks three or four languages word for word without book, and hath all the good Gifts of nature.

Mar. He hath indeed, almost natural: for besides that he's a fool, he's a great quarreller; and but that he hath the gift of a coward to allay the gust he hath in quarrelling, 'tis thought among the prudent he would quickly have the gift of a grave.

Sir To. By this hand, they are scoundrels and Substactors that say so of him. Who are they?
Mar. They that add, moreover, he's drunk nightly in your company.

Sir To. With drinking healths to my niece: I'll Drink to her as long as there is a passage in my throat and drink in Illyria: he's a coward and a Covetous fellow that will not drink to my niece till his brains turn o' the toe like a parsi-top. What, Wench! Castillano vulgo! for here comes Sir Andrew Agueface.

Enter Sir Andrew Aguecheek.

Sir and. Sir Toby Belch! how now, Sir Toby
Sir To. Sweet Sir Andrew! [Belch!
Sir And. Bless you, fair shrew.
Sir And. And I think I have the back-trick simply as strong as any man in Illyria. Have there these things legs hid? wherefore have these gifts a curtain before 'em? are they like to take dust, like Mistress Mall's picture? why dost thou not go to church in a galliard and come home in a coranto? My very walk should be a jig; I would not so much as make water but in a sink-a-place. What dost thou mean? Is it a world to hide virtues in? I did think, by the excellent constitution of thy legs, it was formed under the star of a galliard.

Sir And. Ay, 'tis strong, and it does indifferent well in a flame-coloured stock. Shall we set about some revels?

Sir To. What shall we do else? were we not born under Taurus?

Sir And. Taurus! That's sides and heart.

Sir To. No, sir; it is legs and thighs. Let me see thee capper: ha! higher: ha! ha! excellent!

[Exit.

SCENE IV.—The Duke's palace.

Enter Valentine, and Violia in man's attire.

Val. If the duke continue these favours towards you, Cesario, you are like to be much advanced: he hath known you but three days, and already you are no stranger.

Vio. You either fear his humour or my negligence, that you call in question the continuance of his love: is he inconsistent, sir, in his favours? Val. No, believe me. Vio. I thank you. Here comes the count.

Enter Duke, Curio, and Attendants.

Duke. Who saw Cesario, ho?

Vio. On your attendance, my lord; here.

Duke. Stand you awhile afoot. Cesario, Thou know'st no less but all; I have unclasp'd To thee the book even of my secret soul: Therefore, good youth, address thy gait unto her; Be not denied access, stand at her doors, And tell them, there thy fixed foot shall grow Till thou have audience.

Vio. Sure, my noble lord, If she be so abandon'd to her sorrow As it is spoke, she never will admit me. This is the loveliest prelude to my love, Surprise her with discourse of my dear faith: It shall be the more to set my woe; She will attend it better in thy youth Than in a nuncio's of more grave aspect. Vio. I think not so, my lord.

Duke. Dear lad, believe it;

For they shall yet belie thy happy years, That say thou art a man: Diana's lip Is not more smooth and rubious; thy small pipe Is as the maiden's organ, shrill and sound, And all is semblative a woman's part. I know thy constellation is right apt For this affair. Some four or five attend him; All, if you will; for I myself am best When least in company. Prosper well in this, And thou shalt live as freely as thy lord, To call his fortunes thine.

Vio. I'll do my best. To woo your lady: [Aside] yet, a barbitile strife! Whose I woe, myself would be his wife. [Exeunt.

SCENE V.—Olivia's house.

Enter Maria and Clown.

Mar. Nay, either tell me where thou hast been, or I will not open my lips so wide as a bristle may enter in way of thy excuse: my lady will hang thee for thy absence. Clo. Let her hang me; he is that well hanged in this world needs to fear no colours.

Mar. Make that good.

Clo. He shall see none to fear.

Mar. A good lenten answer: I can tell thee where that sitting-born, or I fear no colours.'

Clo. Where, good Mistress Mary?

Mar. In the wars; and that may you be bold to say in your foolery.

Clo. Well, God give them wisdom that have it; and those that are fools, let them use their talents.

Mar. You will be hanged for being so long absent; or, to be turned away, is not that as good as a hanging to you?

Clo. Many a good hanging prevents a bad marriage; and, for turning away, let summer bear it out.

Mar. You are resolute, then? [Points. Clo. Not so, neither; but I am resolved on two things. That if one break, the other will hold; or, if both break, your gaskins fail.

Clo. Apt, in good faith; very apt. Well, go thy way; if Sir Toby would leave drinking, thou wert as happy a man of either flesh as any in Illyria.

Mar. Peace, you rogue, no more of that. Here comes my lady: make your excuse wisely, you were best. [Exit.

Clo. Wit, an't be thy will, put me into good fooling! Those wits, that think they have thee, do very well prove false; and I, the trustier fellow, may pass for a wise man: for what says Quinapius? 'Better a witty fool than a foolish wit.'

Enter Lady Olivia with Malvolio.

God bless thee, lady!

Oli. Take the fool away.

[Exit.

Oli. Do you not hear, fellows? Take away the fool. Go to, you're a dry fool; I'll no more of you: besides, you grow dishonest.

Clo. Two faults, madonna, that drink and good counsel will amend: for give the dry fool drink, then is the fool not dry: bid the dishonest mend himself; if he mend, he is no longer dishonest; if he cannot, let the better mend him. Any thing that's mended is but patched: virtue that transgresses is but patched with sin; and sin that amends is but patched with virtue. If this simple syllogism will serve, so; if it will not, what reigned? As there is no true cuckold but calanish, so beauty's a flower. The lady bade take away the fool; therefore, I say again, take her away.

Oli. Sir, I bade them take away you.

Clo. Misprision in the highest degree! Lady, eculesus non facet monachum; that's as much to say as I wear not motley in my brain. Good madonna, give me leave to prove you a fool.

Oli. Can you do it?

Clo. Dexteriously, good madonna.

Oli. Make your proof.

Clo. I must catechize you for it, madonna: good my mouse of virtue, answer me.

Oli. Well, sir, for want of other idleness, I'll bide your proof.

Clo. Good madonna, why mournest thou?

Oli. Good fool, for my brother's death.

Clo. I think his soul is in hell, madonna.

Oli. I know his soul is in heaven, fool.

Clo. The more fool, madonna, to mourn for your brother's soul being in heaven. Take away the fool, gentleman.

Oli. What think you of this fool, Malvolio? doth he not mend?

Mal. Yes, and shall do till the pangs of death shake him: infirmity, that decays the wise, doth ever make the better fool.

Clo. God send you, sir, a speedy infirmity, for the better increasing your folly! Sir Toby will be sworn that I am no fox; but he will not pass his word for two pence that you are no fool.

Oli. How say you to that, Malvolio?

Mal. Why, of mankind?

Oli. What manner of man?

Mal. Of very ill manner; he'll speak with you, will you or no.

Oli. Of what personage and years is he?

Mal. Not yet old enough for a man, nor young enough for a boy; as a squash is before 'tis a peascod, or a codling when 'tis almost an apple: 'tis with him in standing water, between boy and man. He is very well-favoured and he speaks very shrewishly; one would think his mother's milk were scarce out of him.

Re-enter Maria.

Oli. Give me my veil: come, throw it over my face. We'll once more hear Orsino's embassy.

Enter Viola, and Attendants.

Vio. The honourable lady of the house, which is she? [will?] Oli. Speak to me; I shall answer for her. Your Viola. Most radiant, exquisite and unmatchable beauty. — I pray you, tell me if this be the lady of the house, for I never saw her; I would be loath to cast away my speech, for besides that it is excellently well penned, I have taken great pains to con it. Good beattles, let me sustain no scorn; I am very comptible, even to the least sinister usage.

Oli. Whence came you, sir?

Vio. I can say little more than I have studied, and that question's out of my part. Good gentle one, give me modest assurance if you be the lady of the house, that I may proceed in my speech.

Oli. Are you a comedian?

Vio. No, my profound heart: and yet, by the very fangs of malice I swear, I am not that I play. Are you the lady of the house?

Oli. If I do not usurp myself, I am.

Vio. Most certain, if you are she, you do usurp yourself; for what is yours to bestow is not yours to reserve. But this is from my commission: I will go with my speech in your praise, and then show you the heart of my message.

Oli. Come to what is important in 't: I forgive you the praise. [poetical.

Vio. Alas, I took great pains to study it, and 't is Oli. It is the more like to be feigned: I pray you, keep it in. I heard you were saucy at my gates, and allowed your approach rather to wonder at you than to hear you. If you be not mad, be gone; if you have reason, be brief: 'tis not that time of moon with me to make one in so skipping a dialogue.

Mar. Will you hoist sail, sir? here lies your way.

Vio. No, good swabbet; I am to haul here a little longer. Some mollification for your giant, sweet lady. Tell me your mind: I am a messenger.

Oli. Sure, you have some hideous matter to deliver, when the courtesy of it is so fearful. Speak your office.

Vio. It alone concerns your ear. I bring no overture of war, no taxation of homage: I hold the olive in my hand; my words are as full of peace as matter.

Oli. Yet you began rudely. What are you? what would you?

Vio. The rudeness that hath appeared in me hath taught me more of your entertainment. What I am, and what I would, are as secret as maidenhead; to your ears, divinity, to any other's, profanation.

Oli. Give us the place alone: we will hear this divinity. [Exit Maria and Attendants.] Now, sir, what is your text?
ACT II. TWELFTH NIGHT; OR, WHAT YOU WILL. SCENE I.

Vio. Most sweet lady,—
Oli. A comfortable doctrine, and much may be said of it. Where lies your text?

Vio. In Orsino's bosom.
Oli. In his bosom! in what chapter of his bosom?

Vio. To answer by the method, in the first of his heart.
Oli. O, I have read it; it is heresy. Have you no more to say?

Vio. Good madam, let me see your face.
Oli. Have you any commission from your lord to negotiate with my face? You are now out of your text: but we will draw the curtain and show you the picture. Look you, sir, such a one I was this present: 'tis not well done?

Vio. Excellently done, if God did all.
Oli. 'Tis in grain, sir; 'twill endure wind and weather.

Vio. 'Tis beauty truly bent, whose red and white
Nature's own sweet and cunning hand laid on:
Lady, you are the cruelest she alive,
If you will lead these graces to the grave
And leave the world no copy.

Oli. O, sir, I will not be so hard-hearted; I will give out divers schedules of my beauty: it shall be inventoried, and every particle and utensil labelled to my will: as, item, two lips, indifferent red; item, two grey eyes, with lids to them; item, one neck, one chin, and so forth. Were you sent hither to praise me?

Vio. I see you what you are, you are too proud;
But, if you were the devil, you are fair.
My lord and master loves you: O, such love
Could be but recompensed, though you were crown'd
The nonpareil of beauty!

Oli. How does he love me?

Vio. With adorations, fertile tears,
With groans that thunder love, with sighs of fire.

Oli. Your lord does know my mind; I cannot love him:
Yet I suppose him virtuous, know him noble,
Of great estate, of fresh and stainless youth;
In voices so divulged, free, learn'd and valiant
And in dimension and the shape of nature
A gracious person; but yet I cannot love him;
He might have took his answer long ago.

Vio. If I did love you in my master's name,
With such a suffering, such a deadly life,
In your denial I would find no sense;
I would not understand it.

Oli. Why, what would you?
Vio. Make me a willow cabin at your gate,
And call upon my soul within the house;
Write loyal laudations of my name
And sing them loud even in the dead of night;
 HALLOO your name to the reverberate hills
And make the babbling gossip of the air
Cry out 'Olivia!' O, you should not rest
Between the elements of air and earth,
But you should pity me!

Oli. You might do much.

What is your parentage?
Vio. Above my fortunes, yet my state is well: I am a gentleman.

Oli. Get you to your lord;
I cannot love him: let him send no more;
Unless, perchance, you come to me again,
To tell me how he takes it. Fare you well:
I thank you for your pains: spend this for me.

Vio. I am no fee'd post, lady; keep your purse:
My master, not myself, lacks recompense.
Love make his heart of flint that you shall love;
And let your fervour, like my master's, be Placed in contempt! Farewell, fair cruelty.

Oli. 'What is your parentage?'

Vio. 'Above my fortunes, yet my state is well:
I am a gentlewoman.' I'll be sworn thou art;
Thy tongue, thy face, thy limbs, actions and spirit,
Do give thee five-fold blazon: not too fast:
soft, soft!
Unless the master were the man. How now!
Even so quickly may one catch the plague?
Methinks I feel this youth's perfections
With an invisible and subtle stealth
To creep in at mine eyes. Well, let it be.
What ho, Malvolio!

Re-enter Malvolio.

Mal. Here, madam, at your service.

Oli. Run after that same peevish messenger,
The county's man: he left this ring behind him,
Would I or not: tell him I'll none of it.
Desire him not to flatter with his lord,
Nor hold him up with hopes: I am not for him:
If that the youth will come this way to-morrow,
I'll give him reasons for 't: be he the, Malvolio.

Mal. Madam, I will.

Oli. I do I know not what, and fear to find
Mine eye too great a flatterer for my mind;
Fate, show thy force: ourselves we do not owe;
What is decreed must be, and be this so.

[Exit.]
mother, that upon the least occasion more mine eyes will tell tales of me. I am bound to the Count Orsino's court; farewell. [Exit. Ant. The gentleness of all the gods go with thee! I have many enemies in Orsino's court, Else would I very shortly see thee there. But, come what may, I do adore thee so, That danger shall seem sport, and I will go. [Exit.

SCENE II.—A street.

Enter Viola, Malvolio following.

Vi. Even now, sir; on a moderate pace I have since arrived but hither.

Mal. She returns this ring to you, sir; you might have saved me my pains, to have taken it away yourself. She adds, moreover, that you should put your lord into a desperate assurance she will none of him: and one thing more, that you be never so hardy to come again in his affairs, unless it be to report your lord's taking of this. Receive it so.

Vi. She took the ring of me; I'll none of it.

Mal. Sir, you peevishly threw it to her; and her will is, it shall be so returned; if it be worth stooping for, there it lies in your eye; if not, be it his that finds it. [Exit.

Vi. I left no ring with her: what means this lady? Fortune forbid my outside have not charm'd her! She made good view of me; indeed, so much, That sure methought her eyes had lost her tongue, For she did speak in starts distractedly.

She loves me, sure; the cunning of her passion Invites me in this churlish messenger.

None of my lord's ring! why, he sent her none. I am the man: if it be so, as 'tis,

Poor lady, she were better love a dream.

Disguise, I see, thou art a wickedness, Wherein the pregnant enemy does much,

How easy is it for the proper-false

In women's waxen hearts to set their forms!

Alas, our frailty is the cause, not we!

For such as we are made of, such we be.

How will this fadge? my master loves her dearly;

And I, poor monster, fond as much on him;

And she, mistaken, seems to dote on me.

What will become of this? As I am man,

My state is desperate for my master's love;

As I am lady, now alas to me!—

What thriftless sighs shall poor Olivia breathe!

O time! thou must untangle this, not I:

It is too hard a knot for me to untie! [Exit.

SCENE III.—Olivia's house.

Enter Sir Toby and Sir Andrew.

Sir To. Approach, Sir Andrew: not to be a-bed after midnight is to be up betimes; and 'diliculorum surgere,' thou know'st.

Sir And. Nay, by my troth, I know not: but I know, a-bed by late shall be by late.

Sir To. A false conclusion: I hate it as an unfilled can. To be up after midnight and to go to bed then, is early: so that to go to bed after midnight is to go to bed betimes. Does not our life consist of the four elements?

Sir And. As I may reasonably; but I think it rather consists of eating and drinking.

Sir To. Thou'rt a scholar; let us therefore eat and drink. Marian, I say! a stoup of wine! [Enter Clown.

Sir And. Here comes the fool, I' faith.

Clo. How now, my hearts! did you never see the picture of 'three'?

Sir To. Welcome, ass. Now let's have a catch.

Sir And. By my troth, the fool has an excellent breast. I had rather than forty shillings I had such a leg, and so sweet a breath to sing, as the fool has. In sooth, thou wast in very gracious footing last night, when thou spokest of Pigmoromitus, of the Vapians passing the equinoctial of Quebus; 'twas very good, I' faith. I sent thee sixpence for thy kindlihood, hadst not I?

Clo. I did importune thy gratification: for Malvolio's nose is no whiststock: my lady has a white hand, and the Myrmidons are no bottle-ale houses.

Sir And. Excellent! why, this is the best fooling, when all is done. Now, a song.

Sir To. Come on; there is sixpence for you: let's have a song.

Sir And. There's a testril of me too; if one knight give a—

Clo. Would you have a love-song, or a song of good life?

Sir To. A love-song, a love-song.

Sir And. Ay, ay: I care not for good life.

Clo. [Sings]

O mistress mine, where are you roaming?
O, stay and hear; your true love's coming,
That can sing both high and low:
Trip no more by moonlight,
To hear the birds singing,
Where the bee sucks,
There he has set me:
His eye made me derelict and bare
In every wise man's son doth know.

Sir And. Excellent good, i' faith.

Sir To. Good, good.

Clo. [Sings]

What is love? 'tis not hereafter;
Present mirth hath present laughter;

What 's to come is still unsure:
In delay there lies no plenty;
Then come kiss me, sweet and twenty,
Youth 's a stuff will not endure.

Sir And. A melodious voice, as I am true knight.

Sir To. A contagious breath.

Sir And. Very sweet and contagious, i' faith.

Sir To. To hear by the nose, it is dulce in contagion. But shall we make the welkin dance indeed? shall we rouse the night-owl in a catch that will draw three souls out of one weaver? shall we do that?

Sir And. An you love me, let's do't: I am dog at a catch.

Clo. By'r lady, sir, and some dogs will catch well.

Sir And. Most certain. Let our catch be, 'Thou know'st!' [Catch sung.

Clo. 'Hold thy peace, thou knave,' knight? I shall be constrained in 't to call thee knave, knight.

Sir And. 'Tis not the first time I have constrained one to call me knave. Begin, fool: it begins 'Hold thy peace.'

Clo. I shall never begin if I hold my peace.

Sir And. Good, i' faith. Come, begin. [Catch sung.

Enter Maria.

Mar. What a caterwauling do you keep here! If my lady have not called up her steward Malvolio and bid him turn you out of doors, never trust me. Sir To. My lady's a Catalan, we are politicians, Malvolio's a Peg-a-Ramsey, and 'Three merry men we be.' Am not I consanguineus? am I not of her blood? Tillyvally. Lady! [Sings] There dwell a man in Babylon, lady, lady! [Ing.

Clo. Beshrew me, the knight's in admirable fool.

Sir And. Ay, he does well enough if he be disposed, and so do I: too he does it with a better grace, but I do it more natural.

Sir To. [Sings] 'O the twelfth day of December,—
Mar. For the love o' God, peace!'

Enter Malvolio.

Mal. My masters, are you mad? or what are you?

Have you no wit, manners, nor honesty, but to gab-ide like tinkers at this time of night? Do ye make an alehouse of my lady's house, that ye squeak out your cozier's catches without any mitigation or remission of voice, as there is no respect of place, persons, nor time in you?

Sir To. We did keep time, sir, in our catches. Sneek up!

Mal. Sir Toby, I must be round with you. My lady bade me tell you, that, though she harbour you as her kinman, she's nothing allied to your disorder. If you can separate yourself and your misdeemours, you are welcome to the house; if not, an it would please you to take leave of her, she is very willing to bid you farewell.

Sir To. Farewell, dear heart, since I must needs be gone.

Mar. Nay, good Sir Toby,

Clo. 'Hys eyes do show his days are almost done.'

Mal. Is't even so?

Sir To. 'But I will never die.'

Clo. Sir Toby, there you lie.

Mal. This is much credit to you.

Sir To. 'Shall I bid him go?'

Clo. 'What an if you do?'

Sir To. 'Shall I bid him go, and spare not?'

Clo. 'No, you are not.'

Sir To. Out o' tune, sir: ye lie. Art any more than a steward? Dost thou think, because thou art virtuous, there shall be no more cakes and ale?

Clo. Yes, by Saint Anne, and ginger shall be hot i'the mouth too.

Sir To. Then 'tis the right. Go, sir, rub your chain with crums. A stoup of wine, Maria!

Mal. Mistress Mary, if you prized my lady's favour at anything more than contempt, you would not give means for this uncivil rule: she shall know of it, by this hand.

[Exit.]

Mar. Go shake your ears.

Sir And. 'Twere as good a deed as to drink when a man's a-hungry, to challenge him the field, and then to break promise with him and make a fool of him.

Sir To. Do't, knight: I 'll write thee a challenge; or I 'll deliver thy indignation to him by word of month.

Mar. Sweet Sir Toby, be patient for to-night: since the youth of the count's was to-day with my lady, she is much out of quiet. For Monsieur Malvolio, let me alone with him; if I do not guil him into a newyard, and make him a common recreation, do not think I have wit enough to lie straight in my bed: I know I can do it.

Sir To. Possess us, possess us; tell us something of him.

Mar. Marry, sir, sometimes he is a kind of puritan.

Sir And. O, if I thought that, I 'd beat him like a dog.

Sir To. What, for being a puritan? thy exquisite reason, dear knight?

Sir And. I have no exquisite reason for 't, but I have reason good enough.

Mar. The devil a puritan that he is, or any thing constantly, but a time-pleaser; an affected ass, that cons state without book and utters it by great swaiths: the best persuaded of himself, so crammed, as he thinks, with excellencies, that it is his grounds of faith that all that look on him love him; and on that vice in him will my revenge find notable cause.

Sir To. What wilt thou do? [To work.]

Sir And. To have it in my hands: I'll drop in his way some obscure epistles of love: wherein, by the colour of his beard, the shape of his leg, the manner of his gait, the expressness of his eye, forehead, and complexion, he shall find himself most feelingly personated. I can write very like my lady your niece; on a forgotten matter we hardly make distinction of our hands.

Sir To. Excellent! I smell a device.

Sir And. I have 't in my nose too.

Sir To. He shall think, by the letters that thou wilt drop, that they come from my niece, and that she's in love with him.

Mar. My purpose is, indeed, a horse of that colour.

Sir And. And your horse now would make him an ass.

Mar. Ass, I doubt not.

Sir And. 'T will be admirable!

Mar. Sport royal, I warrant you: I know my physic will work with him. I will plant you two, and let the fool make a third, where he shall find the letter: observe his construction of it. For this night, to bed, and dream on the event. Farewell.

[Exit To.]

Sir To. Good night, Peuthesilea.

Sir And. Before me, she's a good wench.

Sir And. O, 't will be admirable!

Mar. Sport royal, I warrant you: I know my physic will work with him. I will plant you two, and let the fool make a third, where he shall find the letter: observe his construction of it. For this night, to bed, and dream on the event. Farewell.

[Exit To.]

SCENE IV. — The Duke's palace.

Enter Duke, Viola, Curio, and others.

Duke. Give me some music. Now, good morrow, Now, good Cesario, but that piece of song, [friends] That old and antique song we heard last night: Methought it did relieve my passion much, More than light airs and recollected terms Of these. She's a beaute, true-bred, and one that adores me: what o' that? Sir And. I was adored once too. Sir To. Let's to bed, knight. Thou hadst need send for more money.

Sir And. If I cannot recover your niece, I am a foul way out. Sir To. Send for money, knight: if thou hast her not i'the end, call me cut. Sir And. If I do not, never trust me, take it how you will. Sir To. Come, come, I 'll go burn some sack: 'tis too late to go to bed now: come, knight; come, knight. [Exit.]}
ACT II.
TWELFTH NIGHT: OR, WHAT YOU WILL.  SCENE V.

Vio. I think it well, my lord.
Duke. Then let thy love be younger than thyself, Or thy affection cannot hold the bent; For women are as roses, whose fair flower Being once displayed, doth fall that very hour. Vio. And so they are: alas, that they are so; To die, even when to perfection grow!

Re-enter Curio and Clown.

Duke. O, fellow, come, the song I had last night. Mark it, Cesario, it is old and plain; The spinster and the knitter in the sun And the two maidens that weave their thread With do no to chant it: it is soothly, bones And dally with the innocence of love, Like the old age.

Clo. Are you ready, sir?

S O N G .

Clo. Come away, come away, death, And in sad cypress let me be laid; Fly away, fly away, breath, I am slain by a fair cruel maid,

My shroud of white, stuck all with yew, O, prepare it! My part of death, no one so true Did share it.

Not a flower, not a flower sweet, On my blacko cmn let there be strown; Not a friend, not a friend greet My poor corpse, where my bones shall be thrown:

A thousand thousand sighs to save, Lay me, O, lay me, where music was, Sad true lover never find my grave, To weep there!

Duke. There's for thy pains.

Duke. No pains, sir; I take pleasure in singing, sir. Duke. I'll pay thy pleasure then.

Clo. Truly, sir, and pleasure will be paid, one time or another.

Duke. Give me now leave to leave thee.

Clo. Now, the melancholy god protect thee; and the tailor make thy doublet of changeable taffeta, for thy mind is a very oap. I would have men of such constancy put to sea, that their business might be every thing and their intent everywhere; for that's it that always makes a good voyage of nothing. Farewell. [Exit.

Duke. Let all the rest give place.

[Cesario and Attendants retire. Once more, Cesario,

Get thee to yond same sovereign cruelty: Tell her, my love, more noble than the world, Prizes not quantity of dirty lands; The parts that fortune hath bestow'd upon her, Tell her, I hold as giddily as fortune; But 'tis that miracle and queen of gems That nature pranks her in attracts my soul.

Vio. But if she cannot love you, sir?

Duke. I cannot be so answer'd.

Sir To. Sooth, but you must.

Say that some lady, as perhaps there is, Hath for thy love as great a pang of heart As you have for Olivia; you cannot love her; You tell her so; must she not then be answer'd?

Duke. There is no woman's sides

Can hide the beating of so strong a passion As love doth give to woman's heart So big, to hold so much; they lack retention. Also, their love may be call'd appetite, No motion of the liver, but the palate, That suffer surfeit, cloyment and revolt; But mine is all as hungry as the sea, And can digest as much: make no compare Between that love a woman can bear me And that I owe Olivia.

Vio. Ay, but I know—

Duke. What dost thou know?

Vio. Too well what love is most to men may owe: In faith, they are as true of heart as we. My father had a daughter loved a man, As it might be, perhaps, were I a woman, I should your lordship.

Duke. And what? her history?

Vio. A blank, my lord. She never told her love, But let concealment, like a worm? the bud, Feed on her damask cheek: she pined in thought, And with a green and yellow melancholy She sat like patience on a monument, Smiling at grief. Was not this love indeed? We men may say more, swear more; but indeed Our shows are more than will; for still we prove Much in our vows, but little in our love.

Duke. But died thy sister of her love, my boy?

Vio. I am all the daughters of my father's house, And all the brothers too: and yet I know not. Sir To. Shall I to this lady?

Duke. Ay, that's the theme.

To her in haste; give her this jewel; say, My love can give no place, bide no denay. [Exeunt.

SCENE V. — Olivia's garden.

Enter Sir Toby, Sir Andrew, and Fabian.

Sir To. Come thy ways, Signior Fabian.

Fab. Nay, I'll come: if I lose a scruple of this sport, let me be boiled to death with melancholy.

Sir To. Wouldst thou not be glad to have the regardly rascally sheep-lifer come by some notable shame?

Fab. I would exult, man; you know, he brought me out o' favour with my lady about a bear-baiting here.

Sir To. To anger him we'll have the bear again; and we will fool him black and blue: shall we not, Sir Andrew?

Sir And. An we do not, it is pity of our lives.

Sir To. Here comes the little villain.

Enter Maria.

How now, my metal of India!

Mar. Get ye all three into the box-tree; Malvolio's coming down this walk: he has been yonder 't he sun practising behaviour to his own shadow this half hour: observe him, for the love of mockery; for I know this letter will make a contemplative pilot of him. Close, in the name of jesting! Lie thou there [throws down a letter]; for here comes the trout that must be caught with tickling. [Exit.

Enter Malvolio.

Mal. 'Tis but fortune; all is fortune. Maria once told me she did affect me: and I have heard herself come thus near, that, should she fancy, it should be one of my complexion. Besides, she uses me with a more exulted respect than any one else that follows her. What should I think on 't?

Sir To. Here's an overweening rogue!

Fab. O, peace! Contemplation makes a rare turkey-cock of him; how he jets under his advanced plumes!

Sir And. 'Slight, I could so beat the rogue!

Sir To. Peace, I say.

Mal. To be Count Malvolio!

Sir To. Ah, rogue!

Sir And. Pistol him, pistol him.

Sir To. Peace, peace!

Mal. There is example for 't; the lady of the Strocy married the yeoman of the wardrobe.

Sir And. He on him, Jezebel!

239
Act II.
Twelfth Night; Or, What You Will.
Scene V.

Mal. Having been three months married to her,
Sir To.  O, for a stone-bow, to hit him in the eye!
Mal. Calling my officers about me, in my branched velvet gown; having come from a day-bed, where I have left Olivia sleeping,—

Sir To.  Fire and brimstone!
Fab.  O, peace, peace!
Mal. And then to have the humour of state; and after a demure travel of regard, telling them I know my place as I would they should do theirs, to ask for my kinsman Toby,—

Sir To.  Bolts and shakles!
Fab.  O, peace, peace, peace! now, now.
Mal. Seven of my people, with an obedient start, make out for him: I frown the while; and perchance wind up my watch, or play with my—some rich jewel.  Toby approaches; courtesies there to Sir To. Shall fling their fellows live?  [me,—

Fab.  Though our silence be drawn from us with cars, yet peace.

Mal. I extend my hand to him thus, quenching my familiar smile with an austere regard of control.

Sir To.  And does not Toby take you a blow o' the lips then?

Mal. Saying, 'Cousin Toby, my fortunes having cast me on your niece give me this prerogative of Sir To.  What, what?  [speech,'—
Mal. You must amend your drunkenness.'
Sir To.  Out, scab!

Fab.  Nay, patience, or we will break the sinews of our
Mal. Besides, you waste the treasure of your time with a foolish knight,'—

Sir And.  That's me, I warrant you.

Mal.  'One Sc ме, malapert,'—[foul.
Sir And.  I knew 't was I; for many do call me
Mal.  What employment have we here?

[Taking up the letter.

Fab.  Now is the woodcock near the gin.

Sir To.  O, peace! and the spirit of humours intimate
Mal.  By my life, this is my lady's hand: these be her very C's, her U's and her T's; and thus makes she her great P's.  It is, in contempt of question, her hand.

Sir And.  Her C's, her U's and her T's: why that?

Mal.  [Heads] 'To the unknown beloved, this, and my good wishes;'—her very phrases! By your leave, wax.  Soft! and the impression her Lucrece, with which she uses to seal: 'tis my lady. To whom should this be?'

Fab.  This wins him, liver and all.

Mal.  [Heads] Jove knows I love:
But who?
Lips, do not move;
No man must know.

No man must know.  What follows? the numbers altered!  'No man must know:' if this should Sir To.  Marry, hang thee, brock!
Mal.  [Heads] I may command where I adore;
But silence, like a Lucrece knife,
With bloodless stroke my heart doth gore:
M, O, A, I, doth sway my life.

Fab.  A fustian riddle.

Sir To.  Face, or French, say I.
Mal.  'M, O, A, I, doth sway my life.'  Nay, but first, let me see, let me see, let me see.

Fab.  What dish o' poison has she dressed him!
Sir To.  And with what wing the staniel checks at it!

Mal.  'I may command where I adore.'  Why, she may command me: I serve her; she is my lady.  Why, this is evident to any formal capacity; there is no obstruction in this: and the end,—what should that alphabetical position portend? If I could make that re semble something in me,—Softly!  M, O, A, I,—

Sir To.  O, ay, make up that: he is now at a cold season.

Fab.  Sower will cry upon't for all this, though it be as rank as a fox.  [name.
Mal.  M.—Malvolio; M,—why, that begins my
Fab. Did not I say he would work it out? the ear  is excellent at faults.

Mal.  M,—but then there is no consonancy in the sequel; that suffers under probation: A should follow, but O does.

Fab.  And O shall end, I hope.  [cry O!
Sir To.  Ay, or I'll cudgel him, and make him
Mal.  And then I comes behind.

Fab.  Ay, an you had any eye here, you might see more distraction at your heels than fortunes before you.

Mal. M, O, A, I; this simulation is not as the former: and yet, to crush this a little, it would bow to many every one of these letters are in my name.  Soft! here's the postscript.

[Heads] 'If this fall into thy hand, resolve.  In my stars I am above thee; but be not afraid of greatness: some are born great, some achieve greatness, and some have greatness thrust upon 'em. Thy Fates open; let thy blood and spirits embrace them; and, to imbue thyself to what thou art like to be, cast thy humble slumber and appear fresh. Be opposite with a kinsman, surly with servants; let thy tongue tang arguments of state; put thyself into the trick of singularity; she thus adjured thee, and she sighs for thee. Remember who commended thy yellow stockings, and wished to see thee ever cross-gartered: I say, remember. Go to, thou art made, if thou desir'est to be; if not, let me see thee a steward still, the fellow of servants, and not worthy to touch Fortune's fingers. Farewell. She that would alter services.

The Fortunate-Unhappy!  Daylight and champain discovers not more: this is open. I will be proud, I will read politic authors, I will battle Toby, I will wash off gross acquaintance, I will be point-devise the very man. I do not now fool myself, to let imagination lead me; for every reason exciteth to this, that my lady loves me. She did commend my yellow stockings of late, she did praise my leg being cross-gartered; and in this she manifests herself to my love, and with a kind of injunction drives me to these habits of her liking. I thank my stars I am happy. I will be strange, stout, in yellow stockings, and cross-gartered, even with the swiftness of putting on. Jove and my stars be praised! Here is yet a postscript.

[Heads] 'Thou canst not choose but know who I am. If thou entertainest my love, let it appear in thy smiling; thy smiles become thee well; therefore in my presence still smile, dear my sweet, I prithee.'

Jove, I thank thee: I will smile; I will do everything that thou wilt have me.

[Exit.
Fab.  I will not give my part of this sport for a pension of thousands to be paid from the Soply.

Sir To.  I could marry this wench for this device.

Sir And.  So could I too.

Sir To.  And ask no other dowry with her but such another jest.
Sir And.  Nor I neither.

Fab.  Here comes my noble gull-catcher.

Re-enter Maria.

Sir To.  Will thou set thy foot o' my neck?

Sir And.  Or o' mine either?
TWELFTH NIGHT; OR, WHAT YOU WILL.—Act III., Scene i.
ACT III. TWELFTH NIGHT; OR, WHAT YOU WILL. SCENE I.

Sir To. Shall I play my freedom at tray-trip, and become thy bond-slave?
Sir And. I' faith, or neither?
Sir To. Why, thou hast put him in such a dream, that when the image of it leaves him he must run mad.

Mar. Nay, but say true; does it work upon him?
Sir To. Like aqua-vita with a midwife.
Mar. If you will then see the fruits of the sport, mark his first approach before my lady: he will come to her in yellow stockings, and 'tis a colour she abhors, and cross-gartered, a fashion she detests; and he will smile upon her, which will now be so unsuitable to her disposition, being addicted to a melancholy as she is, that it cannot but turn him into a notable contempt. If you will see it, follow me.

Sir To. To the gates of Tartar, thou most excellent devil of wit!

Sir And. I'll make one too. [Exit.

ACT III.

SCENE I.—Olivia's garden.

Enter Viola, and Clown with a tabor.

Vio. Save thee, friend, and thy music: dost thou live by thy tabor?
Clown. No, sir. I live by the church.
Vio. Art thou a churchman?
Clown. No such matter, sir: I do live by the church; for I do live at my house, and my house doth stand by the church.
Vio. So thou mayst say, the king lies by a beggar, if a beggar dwell near him; or, the church stands by thy tabor, if thy tabor stand by the church.

Clown. You have said, sir. To see this age! A sentence is but a cheveril glove to a good wit: how quickly the wrong side may be turned outward!
Vio. Nay, that's certain: they that dally nicely with words may quickly make them wanton.

Clown. I would, therefore, my sister had had no name, sir.
Vio. Why, man?
Clown. Why, sir, her name's a word; and to dally with that word might make my sister wanton. But indeed words are very rascals since bonds disgraced
Vio. Thy reason, man? [them.

Clown. Troth, sir, I can yield you none without words; and words are grown so false, I am loath to prove reason with them.
Vio. I warrant thou art a merry fellow and carest for nothing.

Clown. Not so, sir, I do care for something; but in my conscience, sir, I do not care for you: if that be to care for nothing, sir, I would it would make you invisible.

Vio. Art not thou the Lady Olivia's fool?

Clown. No, indeed, sir, the Lady Olivia has no folly: she will keep no fool, sir, till she be married; and fools are as like husbands as pilgrims are to her rings; the husband's the bigger: I am indeed not her fool, but her corrupter of words.
Vio. I saw thee late at the Count Orsino's.
Clown. Foolery, sir, does walk about the orb like the sun, it shines everywhere. I would be sorry, sir, but the fool should be as oft with your master as with your mistress: I think I saw your wisdom there.

Vio. Nay, an thou pass upon me, I'll no more with thee. Hold, there's expenses for thee.

Clown. Now Jove, in his next commodity of hair, send thee a beard!

Vio. By my troth, I'll tell thee, I am almost sick for one; [Aside though I would not have it grow on him, I am thy lady within?]

Clown. Would not a pair of these have bred, sir?
Vio. Yes, being kept together and put to use.

Clown. I would play Lord Pandarus of Phrygia, sir, to bring a Cressida to this Troilus.
Vio. I understand you, sir; 'tis well begg'd.

Clown. The matter, I hope, is not great, sir, begging but a beggar: Cressida was a beggar. My lady is within, sir. I will construe to them whence you come; who you are and what you would are out of my welkin, I might say 'element,' but the word is over-worn.

Vio. This fellow is wise enough to play the fool; And to do that well craves a kind of wit:
He must observe their mood on whom he jests,
The quality of persons, and the time,
And, like the haggard, check at every feather
That comes before his eye. This is a practice
As full of labour as a wise man's art:
For folly that he wisely shows is fit;
But wise men, folly-fall'n, quite taint their wit.

Exit Sir Toby and Sir Andrew.

Sir To. Save you, gentleman.

Vio. And you, sir.

Sir And. Dieu vous garde, monsieur.

Vio. Et vous aussi; votre serviteur.

Sir And. I hope, sir, you are; and I am yours.

Sir To. Will you encounter the house? my niece is desirous you should enter, if your trade be to her.

Vio. I am bound to your niece, sir; I mean, she is the list of my voyages.

Sir To. Taste your legs, sir: put them to motion.

Vio. My legs do better understand me, sir; than I understand what you mean by bidding me taste

Sir To. I mean, to go, sir, to enter. [my legs.

Vio. I will answer you with guilt and entrance.

But we are prevented.

Enter Olivia and Maria.

Most excellent accomplished lady, the heavens rain odours on you!

Sir And. That youth's a rare courtier: 'Rain odours;' well.

Vio. My matter lath no voice, lady, but to your most present and vouchsafed ear.

Sir And. 'Odours,' 'pregnant' and 'vouchsafed';
I'll get 'en all three all ready.

Olivia. Let the garden-door be shut, and leave me to my hearing. [Exit Sir Toby, Sir Andrew, and Maria.] Give me your hand, sir.

Vio. My duty, madam, and most humble service.

Olivia. What is your name?

Vio. Cesario is your servant's name, fair princess.

Olivia. My servant, sir! 'T was never merry world Since lowly feigning was call'd compliment:
You 're servant to the Count Orsino, youth. [yours.

Vio. And he is yours, and his must needs be Your servant's servant is your servant, madam.

Olivia. For him, I think not on him: for his thoughts, Would they were blanks, rather than fill'd with me!

Vio. Madam, I come to whet your gentle thoughts

On his behalf.

Olivia. O, by your leave, I pray you,
I bade you never speak again of him:

But, would you undertake another suit,
I had rather hear you to sollicit that
Than music from the spheres.

Vio. [Aside. Dear lady—

Olivia. Give me leave, beseech you. I did send,
After the last enchantment you did here,
A ring in chase of you: so did I abuse
Myself, my servant and, I fear me, you:
Under your hard construction must I sit,
To force that out of you, in a shameful cunning.
Which you knew none of yours: what might you think?
Have you not set mine honour at the stake
And baited it with all the unmuzzled thoughts
That tyrant wars heart can think? To one of your receiving Enough is shown: a cypress, not a bosom,
Hideth my heart. So, let me hear you speak.

Vio. I pity you.

Oli. That's a degree of love.

Vio. No, not a grize: for 'tis a vulgar proof,
That very oft we pitie enemies.

Oli. Why, then, methinks 'tis time to smile again.
O world, how apt the poor are to be proud!
If one should be a prey, how much the better
To fall before the lion than the wolf!

(Clock strikes. The clock upbraids me with the waste of time.
Be not afraid, good youth, I will not have you:
And yet, when wit and youth is come to harvest,
Your wife is like to reap a proper man:
This, for the day, due west.

Vio. Then westward-ho! Grace and good dispo-
Attend your ladyship!
You'll nothing, madam, to my lord by me?

Oli. Stay:
I prithee, tell me what thou think'st of me. [are.
Vio. And do you think you are not what you
Oli. If I think so, I think the same of you.
Vio. Then think you right: I am not what I am.
Oli. I would you were as I would have you be!
Vio. Would it be better, madam, than I am?
I wish it might, for now I am your fool.

Oli. O, what a deal of scorn looks beautiful
In the contempt and anger of his lip!
A murderous guilt shows not itself more soon
Than love that would seem hid: love's night is Casario, by the roses of the spring, (noon.
By maidhood, honour, truth and everything,
I love thee so, that, unguar all thy pride,
Nor wit nor reason can my passion hide.
Do not extort thy reasons from this clause,
For that I woo, thou therefore hast no cause;
But rather reason thus with reason fetter.
Love's child's good, but given unsought is better.

Vio. By innocence I swear, and by my youth,
I have one heart, one bosom and one truth,
And that no woman has; nor never none
Shall mistress be of it, save I alone.
And so adieu, good madam: never more
Will I my master's fears to you deplore.

[Exit Oli.]

SCENE II.--Olivia's house. [Exeunt.}

Enter Sir Toby, Sir Andrew, and Fabian.

Sir And. No, faith, I'll not stay a jot longer.

Sir To. Thy reason, dear venom, give thy reason.

Fab. You must needs yield your reason, Sir

Andrew.

Sir To. Sir And. Marry, I saw your niece do more favours to the count's serving-man than ever she bestowed upon me; I saw 't i' the orchard.

Sir To. Did she see thee the while, old boy? tell me that.

Sir And. As plain as I see you now.

Fab. This was a great argument of love in her toward you.

Sir And. 'Slight, will you make an ass o' me?

Fab. I will prove it legitimate, sir, upon the oaths of judgment and reason.
ACT III. TWELFTH NIGHT; OR, WHAT YOU WILL. SCENE IV.

SCENE III.—A street.

Enter Sebastian and Antonio.

Seb. I would not by my will have troubled you; But, since you make your pleasure of your pains, I will no further chide you.

Ant. I could not stay behind you: my desire, More sharp than flint steel, did spur me forth; And not all love to see you, though so much As might have drawn one to a longer voyage, But jealousy what might befall your travel. Being skillless in these parts: which to a stranger, Unguided and unfriended, often prove Rough and unhospital: my willing love, The rather by these arguments of fear, Set forth in your pursuit.

Seb. My kind Antonio, I can no other answer make but thanks, And thanks; and ever . . . oft good turns Are shuffled off with such uncertain pay: But, were my worth as is my conscience firm, You should find better dealing. What's to do? Shall we go see the reliques of this town? Ant. To-morrow, sir: best first go see your lodging. Seb. I am not weary, and 'tis long to-night: I pray you, let us satisfy our eyes With the memorials and the things of fame That do renown this city.

Ant. Would you 'd pardon me; I do not without danger walk these streets: Once, in a sea-fight, 'gainst the count his gallies I did some service; of such note indeed, That were I late here it would scarce be answer'd. Seb. Belike you shew great number of his people. Ant. The offence is not of such a bloody nature; Albeit the quality of the time and quarel Might well have given us bloody argument. It might have since been answer'd in repaying What we took from them; which, for traffic's sake, Most of our city dui: only myself stood out; For which, if I be lapsed in this place, I shall pay dear.

Seb. Do not then walk too open.

Ant. It doth not fit me. Hold, sir, here's my purse. In the south suburbs, at the Elephant, Is best to lodge to-morrow, and to please, Whiles you beguile the time and feed your knowledge With viewing of the town: there shall you have me.

Seb. Why your purse?

Ant. Haply your eye shall light upon some toy You have desire to purchase; and your store, think'st, is not for like markets, sir. Seb. I'll be your purse-bearer and leave you For an hour.

SCENE IV.—Olivia's garden.

Enter Olivia and Maria.

Oli. I have sent after him: he says he'll come; How shall I feast him? what bestow of him? For you is bright more oft than begg'd or bor'd. I speak too loud. [Frow'd. Where is Malvolio? he is sad and civil, And suits well for a servant with my fortunes: Where is Malvolio?

Mar. He's coming, madam; but in very strange manner. He is, sure, possessed, madam.

Oli. What should he make of him? he be rave?

Mar. No, madam, he does nothing but smile: your ladyship were best to have some guard about you, if he come; for, sure, the man is tainted in 's wit.

Oli. Go call him hither. [Exit Maria.] I am as mad as he, If sad and merry madness equal be.

Re-enter Maria, with Malvolio.

I sent for thee upon a sad occasion.

Mal. Sad, lady! I could be sad; this does make some obstruction in the blood, this cross-gartering; but what of that? if it please the eye of one, it is with me as the very true sonnet is, 'Please one, and please all.'

Oli. Why, how dost thou, man? what is the matter with thee?

Mal. Not black in my mind, though yellow in my legs. It did come to his hands, and commands shall be executed: I think we do know the sweet Roman hand.

Oli. Wilt thou go to bed, Malvolio? [thee. Mal. To bed! y, sweet-heart, and I'll come to Oli. God comfort thee! Why dost thou smile so And kiss thy hand so oft?

Oli. At your request! yes: nightingales answer Mar. Why appear you with this ridiculous boldness before my lady?

Mal. 'Be not afraid of greatness:' 't was well writ. Oli. What meanest thou by that, Malvolio?

Mal. 'Some are born great,'—

Oli. Ha!

Mal. 'Some achieve greatness,—

Oli. What sayest thou?

Mal. 'And some have greatness thrust upon them.' Oli. Heaven restore thee! [stockings,—

Mal. 'Remember who commended thy yellow Oli. Thy yellow stockings! Mal. 'And wished to see thee cross-gartered.' Oli. Cross-gartered! [be so;—

Mal. 'Go to, thou art made, if thou desirest to Oli. Am I made?

Mal. If not, let me see thee a servant still.'

Oli. Why, this is very midsummer madness.

Enter Servant.

Ser. Madam, the young gentleman of the Count Orsino's is returned: I could hardly entreat him back: he appeared to me very pleasure.

Oli. I'll come to him. [Exit Servant.] Good Maria, let this fellow be look'd to. Where's my cousin Toby? Let some of my people have a special care of him: I would not have him miscarry for the half of my dowry.

[Exeunt Olivia and Maria. Ser. O, ho! will you come no more? no worse man than Sir Toby to look to me! This conceits directly with the letter: she sends him on purpose, that I may appear stubborn to him; for she incites me to that in the letter. 'Cast thy humble slough,' says she; 'be opposite with a kinsman, surly with servants; let thy tongue touch with arguments of state; put thyself into the trick of singularity,' and consequently sets down the manner how; as, a sad face, a reverend carriage, a slow tongue, in the habit of some sir of note, and so forth. I have limed her; but it is Jove's doing, and Jove make me thankful. And when she went away now, 'Let this fellow be look'd to: 'fellow! not Malvolio, nor after my degree, but fellow. Why every thing adhers together, that no drum of a scruple, no scruple of a scruple, no obstacle, no incredulous or unsafe circumstance—What can be said? Nothing that adhers he can cut between, me and the full prospect of my hopes. Well, Jove, not I, is the doer of this, and he is to be thanked.

Re-enter Maria, with Sir Toby and Fabian.

Sir To. Which way is he, in the name of sanctity? If all the devils of hell be drawn in little, and Legion himself possessed him, yet I'll speak to him.
ACT III. TWELFTH NIGHT; OR, WHAT YOU WILL. SCENE IV.

Fab. Here he is, here he is. How is't with you, sir? how is't with you, man?
Mal. Go off; I discard you: let me enjoy my private: go off.
Sir To. I would, how hollow the fiend speaks within him! did not I tell you? Sir Toby, my lady prays you to have a care of him.
Mal. Ah, ha! does she so?
Sir To. Go to, go to; peace, peace; we must deal gently with him: let me alone. How do you, Malvolio? so, so, you? What, man! defy the devil; consider, he's an enemy to mankind.
Mal. Do you know what you say?
Mor. You, and you speak ill of the devil, how he takes it at heart! Pray God, he be not bewitched!
Fab. Carry his water to the wise woman.
Mor. Marry, and it shall be done to-morrow morning, if I live. My lady would not lose him for more than I'll say.
Mal. How now, mistress!
Mor. O Lord! Fab. Sir To, Prithee, hold thy peace; this is not the way; do you not see you move him? let me alone with him.
Fab. No way but gentleness; gently, gently: the fiend is rough, and will not be roughly used.
Sir To. Why, how now, my buckow! how dost thou, cheek?
Mal. Sir!
Sir To. Ay, Biddy, come with me. What, man! 't is not for gravity to play at cherry-pit with Satan: hang him, foul collier!
Mor. Get him to say his prayers, good Sir Toby, get him to pray.
Mal. My prayers, minx! [Liness.
Mor. No, I warrant you, he will not hear of god.
Mal. Go, hang yourselves all! you are idle shallow things: I am not of your element: you shall know more hereafter. [Exit.
Sir To. Is't possible?
Fab. If this were played upon a stage now, I could condemn it as an improbable fiction.
Sir To. His very genius hath taken the infection of the device, man. Nay, pursue him now, lest the device take air and taint.
Fab. Why, we shall make him mad indeed.
Mor. The house will be the quieter.
Sir To. Come, we'll have him in a dark room and bound. My niece is already in the belief that he is come, and may carry it thus, for our pleasure, and his penance, till our very pastime, tired out of breath, prompt us to have mercy on him: at which time we will bring the device to the bar and crown thee for a finder of madmen. But see, but see.

Enter Sir Andrew.

Fab. More matter for a May morning.
Sir And. Here's the challenge, read it: I warrant there's vinegar and pepper in 't.
Fab. Is't so saucy?
Sir And. Ay, is 't. I warrant him: do but read.
Sir To. Give me. [Reads] 'Youth, whatsoever thou art, thou art but a scurvy fellow.'
Fab. Good, and valiant.
Sir To. [Reads] 'Wonder not, nor admire not in thy mind, why I do call thee so, for I will show thee no more.'
Fab. A good note; that keeps you from the blow of the law.
Sir To. [Reads] 'Thou comest to the lady Olivia, and in my sight she uses thee kindly: but thou liest in thy throat; that is not the matter I challenge thee for.'
Fab. Very brief, and to exceeding good sense—Sir To. [Reads] 'I will waylay thee going home; where it be thy chance to kill me,'—

Fab. Good.
Sir To. [Reads] 'Thou killest me like a rogue and a villain.' [good.
Fab. Still you keep o' the windy side of the law.
Sir To. [Reads] 'Fare thee well; and God have mercy upon one of our souls! He may have mercy upon mine; but my hope is better, and so look to thyself. Thy friend, as thou usest him, and thy sworn enemy, ANDREW AGUECHEEK. If this letter move him not, bid him not: I'll give't him.
Mal. You may have very fit occasion for't: he is now in some commerce with my lady, and will by and by depart.
Sir To. Go, Sir Andrew; scout me for him at the corner of the orchard like a bum-baddy: so soon as ever thou seest him, draw; and, as thou savest, swear horrible; for it comes to pass oft that a terrible oath, with a swaggering accent sharply twanged off, gives mankind more approbation than ever proof itself would have earned him. Away!' Sir And. Nay, let me alone for swearing. [Exit. Sir To. Now will not I deliver his letter: for the behaviour of the young gentleman gives him out to be of good capacity and breeding; his employment between his lord and my niece confirms no less: therefore this letter, being so excellently ignorant, will breed no terror in the youth: he will find it comes from a clodpole. But, sir, I will deliver his challenge by word of mouth; set upon Aaguecheek a notable report of valour; and drive the gentleman, as I know his youth will aptly receive it, into a most hideous opinion of his rage, skill, fury and impetuous. This will so fright them both that they will kill one another by the look, like cockatrices.

Re-enter Olivia, with Viola.

Fab. Here he comes with your niece: give them way till he take leave, and presently after him.
Sir To. I will meditate the while upon some horrid message for a challenge.

[Exeunt Sir Toby, Fabian, and Maria.]
Oli. I have said too much unto a heart of stone And laid mine honour too unchary out:
There's something in me that reproves my fault:
But such a headstrong penitent fault it is,
That it but mocks reproof. [bears
Vio. With the same 'haviour that your passion
Goes on my master's grief.
Oli. Here, wear this jewel forme, 't is my picture;
Refuse it not; it hath no tongue to vex you;
And if you refuse it you come again to-morrow.
What shall you ask of me that I 'll deny,
That honour saved may upon asking give?
Vio. Nothing but this; your true love for my master.
Oli. How with mine honour may I give him that Which I have given to you?
Vio. I will acquit you.
Oli. Well, come again to-morrow: fare thee well:
A fiend like thee might bear my soul to hell. [Exit.

Re-enter Sir Toby and Fabian.

Sir To. Gentleman, God save thee.
Vio. And you, sir.
Sir To. That defence thou hast, betake thee to: of what nature the wrongs are thou hast done him. I know not; but thy interjester, full of despite, Brady as a headstrong penitent, at the orchardend; dismount thy tuck, be wary in thy preparation, for thy assailant is quick, skillful and deadly.
Vio. You mistake, sir; I am sure no man hath any quarrel to me: my remembrance is very free and clear from any image of offence done to any man.
Sir To. You'll find it otherwise, I assure you: therefore, if you hold your life at any price, betake you to your guard; for your opposite hath in him what youth, strength, skill and wrath can furnish man to deal.

244

Vio. I pray you, sir, what is he?
Sir To. He is knight, dubbed with unhatched rapier and on carpet consideration; but he is a devil in private brawl; souls and bodies hath he divorced three; and his inence at this moment is so implausible, that satisfaction can be none but by pangs of death and sepulchre. Hob, nob, is his word; give 't or take 't.

Vio. I will return again into the house and desire some conduct of the lady. I am no fighter. I have heard of some kind of men that put quarrels purposely to others, to taste their valour: belike this is a man of that quirk.

Sir To. Sir, no; his indignation derives itself out of a very competent injury: therefore, get you on and give him his desire. Back you shall not to the house, unless you undertake that with me which with as much safety you might answer him; therefore, on, or strip your sword stark naked; for meddle you must, that's certain, or forswear to wear iron about you.

Vio. The, as uncivil as strange. I beseech you, do me this courteous office, as to know of the knight the manner of his offence to him: it is something of my negligence, nothing of my purpose.

Sir To. I will do so. Signior Fabian, stay you by this gentleman till my return.

[Exit.]

Vio. Pray you, sir, do you know of this matter?
Fab. I know the knight is incensed against you, even to a mortal arbitrement; but nothing of the circumstance more.

Vio. I beseech you, what manner of man is he?
Fab. Nothing of that wonderful promise, to read him by his form, as you are like to find him in the proof of his valour. He is, indeed, sir, the most skillful blood, and lest you could possibly have found in any part of Illyria. Will you walk towards him? I will make your peace with him if I can.

Vio. I shall be much bound to you for't: I am one that had rather go with sir priest than sir knight; I care not who knows so much of my mettle.

[Exeunt.]

Re-enter Sir Toby, with Sir Andrew.

Sir To. Why, man, he's a very devil: I have not seen such a frago. I had a pass with him, rapier, sword and love, and he gives me the stunk in with such a mortal motion, that it is inevitable; and on the answer, he pays you as surely as your feet hit the ground they step on. They say he has been fencer to the Sophy.

Sir And. Fox on't, I'll not meddle with him.
Sir To. Ay, but he will not now be pacified: Fabian can scarce hold him yonder.

Sir And. Plague on't, an I thought he had been valiant and so cunning in fience, I'd have seen him damned ere I'd have challenged him. Let him let the matter slip, and I'll give him my horse, grey Capulet.

Sir To. I'll make the motion: stand here, make a good show on't; this shall end without the perdition of souls. [Aside] Marry, I'll ride your horse as well as I ride you.

Re-enter Fabian and Viola.

[To Fab.] I have his horse to take up the quarrel: I have persuaded him the youth 's a devil.
Fab. He is as horribly conceited of him; and pants and looks pale, as if a bear were at his heels.

Sir To. [To Vio.] There's no remedy, sir; he will fight with you for's oath sake: marry, he had better be thought of his quarrel, and he finds that now scarce to be worth talking of; therefore draw, for the supportance of his vow; he protests he will not hurt you.

Vio. [Aside] Pray God defend me! A little thing would make me tell them how much I lack of a man.

Fab. Give ground, if you see him furious.

Sir To. Come, Sir Andrew, there's no remedy; the gentleman will, for his honour's sake, have one bout with you; he cannot by the duello avoid it: but he has promised me, as lie is a gentleman and a soldier, he will not hurt you. Come on; to't.

Sir And. Pray God, he keep his oath!
Vio. I do assure you, 'tis against my will.

[They draw.]

Enter Antonio.

Ant. Put up your sword. If this young gentle-

Have done offence, I take the fault on me: [man
If you offend him, I for him defy you.

Sir To. You, sir! why, what are you? [man
Ant. One, sir, that for his love dares yet do more Than you have heard him brag to you he will.

Sir To. Nay, if you be an undertaker, I am for you.

[They draw.]

Enter Officers.

Fab. O good Sir Toby, hold! here come the officers.
Sir To. I'll be with you anon.
Vio. Pray, sir, put your sword up, if you please.

Sir And. Marry, will I, sir; and, for that I promised you, I'll be as good as my word: he will bear you easily and reins well.

First Off. This is the man; do thy office.
Sec. Off. Antonio, I arrest thee at the suit of Count Orsino.
Ant. You do mistake me, sir. [well,
First Off. No, sir, no jot; I know your favour Though now you have no sea-cap on your head.
Take him away: he knows I know him well.

Ant. I must obey. [To Vio.] This comes with seeking me.
But there's no remedy; I shall answer it.
What will you do, now my necessity
Makes me to ask you for my purse? It grieves me
Much more for what I cannot do for you
Than what befalls myself. You stand amaz'd;
But be of comfort.

Sec. Off. Come, sir, away.
Ant. I must entreat of you some of that money.
Vio. What money, sir?

For the fair kindless you have show'd me here,
And, part, being prompted by your present trouble,
But out of my love and loyalty,
I'll lend you something: my having is not much; I'll make division of my present with you:
Hold, there's half my coffee.

Ant. Will you deny me now?
Is't possible that my deserts to you
Can lack persuasion? Do not tempt my misery,
Lest that it make me so unsound a man
As to upbrand you with those kindless
That I have done for you.

Vio. I know of none;
Nor know I you by voice or any feature:
I hate ingratitude more in a man
Than lying, vainness, babbling, drunkenness,
Or any taint of vice whose strong corruption
Inhabits our frail blood.

Ant. O heavens themselves!
Sec. Off. Come, sir, I pray you, go. [see here
Ant. Let me speak a little. This youth that you
Snatch'd one half out of the jaws of death,
Relieved him with such sanctity of love,
And to his image, which methought did promise
Most venerable worth, did I devotion.

First Off. What's that to you? The time goes by:

But I hope vile and idol proves this god!
Thou hast, Sebastian, done good feature shame.
In nature there's no blemish but the mind:
None can be call'd deform'd but the unknow'd:

245
Virtue is beauty, but the beauteous evil
Are empty trunks o'er-lustful'd by the devil.

First Off. The man grows mad! away with him!

Come, come, sir.

Ant. Lead me on.

[Exit with Officers.

Vio. Methinks his words do from such passion fly,
That he believes himself: so do not I.
Prove true, imagination, O, prove true,
That I, dear brother, he now taken for you!
Sir To. Come hither, knight; come hither, Fabian:
we'll whisper o'er a couplet or two of most sage saws.

Vio. He named Sebastian: I my brother know
Yet living in my glass; even such and so
In favour was my brother, and he went
Still in this fashion, colour, ornament,

For him I imitate: O, if it prove,
Tempests are kind and salt waves fresh in love.

Sir To. A very dishonest paltry boy, and more a coward than a hare; his dishonesty appears in leaving his friend here in necessity and denying him; and for his cowardship, ask Fabian.

Fab. A coward, a most devout coward, religious in it.

Sir And. 'Slid, I'll after him again and beat him.
Sir To. Do; cuff him soundly, but never draw thy sword.'

Sir And. An I do not—

[Exit.

Fab. Come, let's see the event.

Sir To. I dare lay any money 'twill be nothing yet.

[Exit.

ACT IV.

SCENE I. — Before Olivia's house.

Enter Sebastian and Clown.

Clo. Will you make me believe that I am not sent for you?

Seb. Go to, go to, thou art a foolish fellow:
Let me be clear of thee.

Clo. Well held out, i' faith! No, I do not know you; nor I am not sent to you by my lady, to bid you come speak with her; nor your name is not Master Cesario; nor this is not my nose neither.

Nothing that is so is.

Seb. I prithee, vent thy folly somewhere else:
Thou know'st not me.

Clo. Vent my folly! he has heard that word of some page or other, and now applies it to a fool. Vent thy folly! I am afraid this great lubber, the world, will prove a cockney. I prithee now, ungird thy strangeness and tell me what I shall vent to my lady: shall I vent to her that thou art coming?

Seb. I prithee, foolish Greek, depart from me:
There's money for thee: if you tarry longer,
I shall give worse payment.

Clo. By my troth, thou hast an open hand.
These wise men that give fools money get themselves a good report —after fourteen years' purchase.

Enter Sir Andrew, Sir Toby, and Fabian.

Sir And. Now, sir, have I met you again? there's for you.

Seb. Why, there's for thee, and there, and there.

Are all the people mad?

Sir To. Hold, sir, or I'll throw your dagger o'er the house.

Clo. This will I tell my lady straight: I would not be in some of your coats for two pence. [Exit.

Sir To. Come on, sir: hold.

Sir And. Nay, let him alone: I'll go another way to work with him; I'll have an action of battery against him, if be any law in Illyria: though I struck him first, yet it's no matter for that.

Seb. Let go thy hand.

Sir To. Come, sir, I will not let you go. Come, my young soldier, put up your iron: you are well fleshed; come on.

Seb. I will be free from thee. What wouldst thou now?

If thou darest tempt me further, draw thy sword.

Sir To. What, what? Nay, then must I have an ounce or two of this mulatpont blood from you.

Enter Olivia.

Oli. Ho! Hold, Toby; on thy life I charge thee, hold! Sir To. Madam!

246

SCENE II. — Olivia's house.

Enter Maria and Clown.

Mar. Nay, I prithee, put on this gown and this beard; make him believe thou art Sir Topas the curate: do it quickly; I'll call Sir Toby the whilst.

[Exit.

Clo. Well, I'll put it on, and I will dissemble myself in 't; and I would I were the first that ever dissembled in such a gown. I am not tall enough to become the function well, nor lean enough to be thought a good student; but to be said an honest man and a good housekeeper goes as fairly as to say a careful man and a great scholar. The competitors enter.

Enter Sir Toby and Maria.

Sir To. Jove bless thee, master Parson.

Clo. Bonos dies, Sir Toby: for, as the old hermit of Prague, that never saw pen and ink, very witilly said to a niece of King Gorbothe, 'That that is'; so, I being master Parson, am master Parson; for, what is 'that but that,' and 'is but 'is'?

Sir To. To him, Sir Topas.

Clo. What, ho, I say! peace in this prison!

Sir To. The knave counterfeits well; a good Mal. [With] Who calls there?

[Knave.

Clo. Sir Topas the curate, who comes to visit Malvolio the lunatic.

Mal. Sir Topas, Sir Topas, good Sir Topas, go to my lady.
ACT IV.  TWELFTH NIGHT; OR, WHAT YOU WILL.  SCENE III.

Clo. Out, hyperbolical fiend! how vexest thou this man? talkest thou nothing but of ladies?
Sir To. Well said, master Parson.
Mal. Good fool, help me to some light and some paper; I tell thee, I am as well in my wits as any man in Illyria.
Clo. Well-a-day that you were, sir!
Mal. By this, I am not mad; Sir Topas: I say to you, this house is dark.
Clo. Madman, thou earnest: I say, there is no darkness but ignorance; in which thou art more puzzled than the Egyptians in their fog.
Mal. I say, this house is as dark as ignorance, though ignorance were as dark as hell; and I say, there was never man thus abused. I am no more mad than you are: make the trial of it in any constant question.
Clo. What is the opinion of Pythagoras concerning all this?
Mal. That the soul of our grandam might haply inhabit a bird.
Clo. What think'st thou of his opinion?
Mal. I think nobly of the soul, and no way approve his opinion.
Clo. Fare thee well. Remain thou still in darkness: thou shalt hold the opinion of Pythagoras ere I will allow of thy wits, and fear to kill a woodcock, lest thou dispossess the soul of thy grandam. Fare thee well.
Sir Topas, Sir Topas!
Sirs. My most exquisite Sir Topas!
Clo. Nay, I am for all waters.
Mai. Thou might'st have done this without thy beard and gown: he sees thee not.
Sir To. To him in thine own voice, and bring me word how thou findest him: I would we were well rid of this knavery. If he may be conveniently delivered, I would be were, for I am now so far in offence with my niece that I cannot pursue with any safety this sport to the upshot. Come by and by to my chamber. [Exeunt Sir Toby and Maria.
Clo. [Singing] Hey, Robin, jolly Robin,
Tell me how thy lady does.
Mal. Fool!
Clo. "My lady is unkind, perdy."
Mal. Fool!
Clo. "Alas, why is she so?"
Mal. Fool. I say!
Clo. "Sir cloves another — Who calls, ha?"
Mal. Good fool, as ever thou wilt deservre well at my hand, help me to a candle, and pen, ink and paper: as I am a gentleman, I will live to be thankful to thee for 't.
Clo. Master Malvolio?
Mal. Ay, good fool, whom shall I be, or, if I seem to be thy wits?
Mal. Fool, there was never man so notoriously abused: I am as well in my wits, fool, as thou art.
Clo. But as well? then you are mad indeed, if you be no better in your wits than a fool.
Mal. They have here propounded me; keep me in darkness, and ministers to me, ass, and do all they can to face me out of my wits.
Clo. Advise you what you say: the minister is here. Malvolio, Malvolio, thy wits the heavens restore! endeavour thyself to sleep, and leave thy vain bibble habbable.
Mal. Sir Topas!
Clo. Maintain no words with him, good fellow.

Mal. Fool, fool, fool, I say.
Clo. Ails, sir, be patient. What sayest you, sir? I am shent for speaking to you.
Mal. Good fool, help me to some light and some paper; I tell thee, I am as well in my wits as any man in Illyria.
Clo. Well-a-day that you were, sir!
Mal. By this, I am not mad; Sir Topas: I say to you, this house is dark.
Clo. Madman, thou earnest: I say, there is no darkness but ignorance; in which thou art more puzzled than the Egyptians in their fog.
Mal. I say, this house is as dark as ignorance, though ignorance were as dark as hell; and I say, there was never man thus abused. I am no more mad than you are: make the trial of it in any constant question.
Clo. What is the opinion of Pythagoras concerning all this?
Mal. That the soul of our grandam might haply inhabit a bird.
Clo. What think'st thou of his opinion?
Mal. I think nobly of the soul, and no way approve his opinion.
Clo. Fare thee well. Remain thou still in darkness: thou shalt hold the opinion of Pythagoras ere I will allow of thy wits, and fear to kill a woodcock, lest thou dispossess the soul of thy grandam. Fare thee well.
Sir Topas, Sir Topas!
Sirs. My most exquisite Sir Topas!
Clo. Nay, I am for all waters.
Mai. Thou might'st have done this without thy beard and gown: he sees thee not.
Sir To. To him in thine own voice, and bring me word how thou findest him: I would we were well rid of this knavery. If he may be conveniently delivered, I would be were, for I am now so far in offence with my niece that I cannot pursue with any safety this sport to the upshot. Come by and by to my chamber. [Exeunt Sir Toby and Maria.

SCENE III.—Olivia’s garden.

Enter Sebastian.

Seb. This is the air; that is the glorious sun; This pearl she gave me, I do feel ‘t and see ‘t; And though ‘t is wonder that enwraps me thus, Yet ‘t is not madness. Where’s Antonio, then? I could not find him at the Elephant: Yet there he was; and there I found this credit, That he did range the town to seek me out. His counsel now might do me golden service; For though my soul disputes well with my sense, That this may be some error, but no madness, Yet doth this accident and flood of fortune So far exceed all instance, all discourse, That I am ready to distrust mine eyes And wrangle with my reason that persuades me To any other trust but that I am mad. Or else the lady’s mad: yet, if ’twere so, flowers, She could not sway her house, command her foil-Take and give back affairs and their dispatch With such a smooth, discreet and stable bearing As I perceive she does: there’s something in ‘t That is deceivable. But here the lady comes.

Enter Olivia and Priest.

Oli. Blame not this haste of mine. If you mean well, Now go with me and with this holy man Into the chantry by: there, before him, And underneath that consecrated roof, Plight me the full assurance of your faith; That my most jealous and too doubtful soul May live at peace. He shall conceal it Whiles you are willing it shall come to note, What time we will our celebration keep According to my birth. What do you say?
Seb. I’ll follow this good man, and go with you; And, having sworn truth, ever will be true.
Oli. Then lead the way, good father; and heavens so shine, That they may fairly note this act of mine! [Exeunt.
ACT V.

SCENE I.—Before Olivia's house.

Enter Clown and Fabian.

Fab. Now, as thou lovest me, let me see his letter.

Clo. Good Master Fabian, grant me another re-

Fab. Anything; [quest.

Clo. Do not be in such haste to see this letter.

Fab. This is, to give a dog, and in recompense desire my dog again.

Enter Duke, Viola, Curio, and Lords.

Duke. Belong you to the Lady Olivia, friends?

Clo. As you live, sir; we are some of her trappings.

Duke. I know thee well; how dost thou, my good fellow?

Clo. Truly, sir, the better for my foes and the worse for my friends.

Duke. Just the contrary; the better for thy

Clo. No, sir, the worse. [friends.

Duke. How can that be?

Clo. Marry, sir, they praise me and make an ass of me; now my foes tell me plainly I am an ass: so that by my foes, sir, I profit in the knowledge of myself, and by my friends I am abused; so that conclusions to be as kisses, if your four negatives make your two affirmatives, why then, the worse for my friends and the better for my foes.

Duke. Why, this is excellent.

Clo. By my troth, sir, no; though it please you to be one of my friends.

Duke. Thou shalt not be the worse for me: there's gold.

Clo. But that it would be double-dealing, sir, I would you could make it another.

Duke. O, you give me ill counsel.

Clo. Put your graven in your pocket, sir, for this once, and let your flesh and blood obey it.

Duke. Well, I will be so much a sinner, to be a double-dealer; there's another.

Clo. Primo, secundo, tertio, is a good play; and the old saying is, the third pays for all; the triplex, sir, is a good tripping measure; or the bells of Saint Bennet, sir, may put you in mind; one, two, three.

Duke. You can fool no more money out of me at this throw: if you will let your lady know I am here to speak with her, and bring her along with you, it may make my bounty easier.

Clo. Marry, sir, lullaby to your bounty till I come again. I go, sir; but I would not have you to think that my desire of having is the sin of covetousness: but, as you say, sir, let your bounty take a nap, I will awake it anon. [Exit.

Vio. Here comes the man, sir, that did rescue me.

Enter Antonio and Officers.

Duke. That face of his I do remember well; Yet, when I saw it last, it was besmear'd As black as Vulcan in the smoke of war: A bawling vessel was he captain of, For shallow draught and bulk unprizeable; With which so many a goodly ship he made With the most noble bottom of our fleet, That very envy and the tongue of loss [iter? Cried famine out of so much market dried up; that's the matter. First Off. Orsino, this is that Antonio That took the Phenix and her fraught from Candy; And this is he that did the Tiger board, When your young nephew Titus lost his leg: Here in the streets, desperate of shame and state, In private habiliments we apprehended him.

Vio. He did me kindness, sir, drew on my side; But in conclusion put strange speech upon me: I know not what 't was but distraction.

Duke. Notable pirate! thou salt-water thief!

What foolish boldness brought thee to their mercies, Whom thou, in terms so bloody and so dear, Hast made thine enemies?

Ant. Orsino, noble sir, Be pleased that I shake off these names you give me: Antonio never yet was thief or pirate.

Though I confess, on base and ground enough, Orsino's enemy. A witchcraft drew me hither: That most ingrateful boy there by your side, From the rude sea's enraged and foamy mouth Did I redeem; a wreck past hope he was: His life I gave him and did thereto add My love, without retention or restraint, All his in dedication; for his sake Did I expose myself, pure for his love, Into the danger of this adverse town; Drew to defend him when he was beset; Where being apprehended, his false cunning, Not meaning to pertake with me in danger, Taught him to face me out of his acquaintance, And grew a twenty years removed thing While one would wink; denied me mine own purse, Which I had recommended to his use Not half an hour before.

Vio. How can this be?

Duke. When came he to this town? [fore.

Ant. To-day, my lord, and for three months be-

Vio. No intermin, not a minute's vacancy, Both day and night did we keep company.

Enter Olivia and Attendants.

Duke. Here comes the countess: now heaven walks on earth. [ness:

But for thee, fellow; fellow, thy words are mad Three months this youth hath tended upon me; But more of that anon. Take him aside. [have.

Vio. What would my lord, but that he may not Wherein Olivia may seem servicable? Cesario, you do not keep promise with me.

Oli. Madam!—

Vio. Gracious Olivia.—

Oli. What do you say, Cesario? Good my lord,—

Vio. My lord would speak; my duty burns me.

Oli. If it be sought to the old tune, my lord, It is as fat and fulsome to mine ear When I have been his music.

As howling after music.

Duke. Still so cruel?

Oli. Still so constant, lord.

Duke. What, to perseverance? you uncivil lady, To whose ingrate and unauspicous alters My soul the faithfulness offerings hath breathed out That e'er devotion tender'd! What shall I do?

Oli. Even what it please my lord, that shall be-

Duke. Why should I not, had I the heart to do it, Like to the Egyptian thief at point of death, Kill what I love? — a savage jealousy That sometime savours nobly. But hear me this: Since you to non-regardance cast my faith, And that I partly know the instrument That turns men from my true place in your favour, Live you the marble-breasted tyrant still; But this your minion, whom I know you love, And whom, by heaven I swear, I tender dearly, Him will I tear out of that cruel eye, Where he sits crowned in his master's spite. Come, boy, with me: my thoughts are ripe in mis-

Vio. I'll sacrifice the lamb that I do love, [chief: To spite a raven's heart within a dove.

Oli. And I, most just, apt and willingly, To do you rest, a thousand deaths would die.

Oli. Where goes Cesario?

Vio. After him I love More than I love these eyes, more than my life,
ACT V.  TWELFTH NIGHT; OR, WHAT YOU WILL.  SCENE I.

More, by all mores, than e'er I shall love wife.
If I do feign, you witnesses above,
Punishing my life for flattering of my love!
Ol.  Ay me, detected! how am I beguiled!
Vio.  Who does beguile you? who does do you wrong?
Ol.  Hast thou forgot thyself? is it so long?
Call forth the holy father.
_Duke._  Come, away!
Ol.  Whither, my lord? Cesario, husband, stay.
_Duke._  Husband!
Ol.  Ay, husband: can he that deny?
_Duke._  Her husband, sirrah!
_Vio._  No, my lord, not I.
Ol.  Alas, it is the harshness of thy fear
That makes thee strange straitly to provoke.
Fear not, Cesario; take thy fortunes up;
Be that thou know'st thou art, and then thou art
As great as that thou fear'st.

_Enter Priest._

_Ol._  O, welcome, father!
Father, I charge thee, by thy reverence,
Here to unfold, though lately we intended
To keep in darkness what occasion now
Reveals before 'tis ripe, what thou dost know.
Hath newly reasserted this youth and me.

_Priest._  A contract of eternal bond of love,
Confirm'd by mutual joinder of your hands,
Attested by the holy close of lips,
Strength'nd by interexchange of your rings;
And all the ceremony of this compact
Seal'd in my function, by my testimony:
Grave since when, my watch hath told me, toward my I have travel'd but two hours.

_Duke._  O thou denouncing cell! what wilt thou be
When time hath sow'd a grizzle on thy case?
Or will not else thy craft so quickly grow,
That thine own trip shall be thine overthrow?
Farewell, and take her: but direct thy feet
Where thou and I henceforth may never meet.

_Vio._  My lord, I do protest—

_Ol._  O, do not swear!
Hold little faith, though thou hast too much fear.

Enter Sir Andrew.

_Sir And._  For the love of God, a surgeon!
Send one presently to Sir Toby.

_Ol._  What's the matter?
_Sir And._  He has broke my head across and has given Sir Toby a bloody coxcomb too: for the love of God, your help! I had rather than forty pound I were at home.

_Ol._  Who has done this, Sir Andrew?

_Sir And._  The count's gentleman, one Cesario: we took him for a coward, but he's the very devil incarnate.

_Duke._  My gentleman, Cesario? [dismantle him.]

_Sir And._  'Od's lifelings, here he is! You broke my head for nothing; and that that I did, I was set on to do't by Sir Toby.

_Vio._  Why do you speak to me? I never hurt you;
You drew your sword upon me without cause;
But I bespake you fair, and hurt you not.

_Sir And._  If a bloody coxcomb be a hurt, you have hurt me: I think you set nothing by a bloody coxcomb.

Enter Sir Toby and Clown.

Here comes Sir Toby halting; you shall hear more: but if he had not been drunk, he would have tickled you otherthanas he grates you.

_Duke._  How now, gentleman! how is't with you?

_Sir Tb._  That's all one: has hurt me, and there's the end on't. Set, didst see Dick surgeon, set? _Clo._  O, he's drunk. Sir Toby, an hour agone; his eyes were at eight! the morning.

_Sir Tb._  Then he's a rogue, and a passy measures pan'y: I hate a drunken rogue.

_Ol._  Away with him! Who hath made this havoc with them?

_Sir And._  I'll help you, Sir Toby, because we'll be dressed together.

_Sir Tb._  Will you help? an ass-head and a coxcomb and a knife, a thin-faced knife, a gull!

_Ol._  Get him to bed, and let his hurt be look'd to.

_[Exeunt Clown, Fabian, Sir Toby, and Sir Andrew._

Enter Sebastian.

_Seb._  I am sorry, madam, I have hurt your kinsman; but, had it been the brother of my blood, [man; I must have done no less with wit and safety. You throw a strange regard upon me, and by that I do perceive that hath offended you. Pardon me, sweet one, even for the vows We made each other but so late ago. [persons, _Duke._  One face, one voice, one habit, and two A natural perspective, that is and is not!

_Seb._  Antonio, O my dear Antonio! How have the hours rack'd and tortured me, Since I have lost thee!

_Ant._  Sebastian are you?

_Seb._  Fear'st thou that, Antonio? _Ant._  How have you made division of yourself? An apple, e'ft in two, is not more twin Than these two seeming brooches. Which is Sebastian?

_Ol._  Most wonderful!  _Seb._  Do I stand there? I never had a brother; Nor can there be that deity in my nature, Of here and every where. I had a sister, Whom the blind waves and surges have devour'd. Of charity, what kin are you to me?

_Seb._  What countryman? what name? what parentage?

_Vio._  Of Messaline: Sebastian was my father; Such a Sebastian was my brother too,
So went he suiter to his watery tomb: If spirits can assume both form and suit You come to fright us.

_Seb._  A spirit I am indeed; But am in that dimension grossly clad Which from the womb I did participate. Were you a woman, as the rest goes even, I should my tears let fall upon your cheek, And say: Thrice-welcome, drowned Viola!

_Vio._  My father had a mole upon his brow.

_Seb._  And so had mine. [birth _Vio._  And died that day when Viola from her Had number'd thirteen years.

_Seb._  O, that record is lively in my soul! He finished and indited his happy raving That day that made my sister thirteen years.

_Vio._  If nothing lets to make us happy both But this my masculine usurp'd attire, Do not embrace me till each circumstance Of place, time, fortune, do cohere and jump That I am Viola: which to confirm,
I'll bring you to a captain in this town, Where lie my maiden weeds; by whose gentle help I was preserved to serve this noble count. All the occurrence of my fortune since Hath been between this lady and this lord. _Seb._ [To Olivia.]  So comes it, lady, you have been mistook:
But nature to her bias drew in that, You would have been contracted to a maid; Nor are you therein, by my life, deceived, You are betroth'd both to a maid and man. _Duke._  Be not amazed; rest noble is his blood. If this be so, as yet the glass seems true, I shall have share in this most happy wreck. [times _To Viola.]  Boy, thou hast said to me a thousand Thou never shouldst love woman like to me.

_Vio._  And all those sayings will I over-swear; And all those swearings keep as true in soul As doth that orbent continent the fire That severs day from night.
Act V.

Twelfth Night; or, What You Will. Scene I.

Duke. Give me thy hand;
And let me see thee in thy woman's weeds.

Vio. The captain that did bring me first on shore
Hath my Madd'ned, means: he upon some action
Is now in durance, at Malvolio's suit,
A gentleman, and follower of my lady's.

Oli. He shall enlarge him: fetch Malvolio hither:
And yet, alas, now I remember me,
They say, poor gentleman, he's much distract.

Re-enter Clown with a letter, and Fabian.

A most extracting frenzy of mine own.
From my remembrance clearly banish'd his.
How does he, sirrah?

Clo. Truly, madam, he holds Belzebub at the stakes's end as well as a man in his case may do:
has here writ a letter to you: I should have given you to-day morning, but as a madman's epistles are no gospels, so it skills not much when they are.

Oli. Open 't, and read it. [delivered.

Clo. Look then to be well edified when the fool delivers the madman. [He reads'] 'By the Lord, mad.

Oli. How now! art thou mad? [am']—

Clo. No, madam, I do but read madness: an your ladyship will have it as it ought to be, you must

Oli. Prifhee, read 't thy right wits. [allow Vox.

Clo. as solemn a manner; but to read his right wits is to read thus: therefore perpend, my princess, and give ear.

Oli. Read it you, sirrah. [To Fabian.

Fab. [Reads] 'By the Lord, madam, you wrong me, and the world shall know it: though you have put up to my darkness and given my drunken cousin rule over me, yet have I the benefit of my senses as well as your ladyship. I have your own letter that induced me to the semblance I put on; with the which I doubt not but to do myself much right, or you much shame. Think of me as you please.
I leave my duty a little mustloth of and speak out of my injury. The Madly-used Malvolio,

Oli. Did he write this?

Clo. Ay, madam.

Duke. This savours not much of distraction.

Oli. See him deliver'd, Fabian; bring him hither.

My lord, so please you, these things further thought
To think me as well a sister as a wife, [Exit Fabian.

On, One day shall crown the alliance on't, so please you,
Here at my house and at my proper cost. [offer.

Duke. Madam, I am most apt to embrace your [To Vio. You must master quits you; and for your service done him.
So much against the metre of your sex,
So far beneath your soft and tender breeding,
And since you call'd me master for so long.
Here is my hand: you shall from this time be
Your master's mistress.

Oli. A sister! you are she.

Re-enter Fabian, with Malvolio.

Duke. Is this the madman?

Oli. Ay, my lord, this same.

How now, Malvolio!

Mal. Madam, you have done me wrong,
Notorious wrong.

Mad. Lady, you may. Pray you, peruse that
You must not now deny its your hand: [letter.
Write from it, if you can, in hand or phrase;
Or say 't is not your seal, not your invention:
You can say none of this: well, grant it then

And tell me, in the modesty of honour,

Why you have given me such clear lights of favour,
Bade me come smiling and cross-garter'd to you,
To put on yellow stockings and to frown
Upon Sir Toby and the lighter people;
And, acting this in an obedient hope,

Why have you suffer'd me to be imprison'd,
Kep in a dark house, visited by the priest,
And made the most notorious gerk and gull
That e'er invention play'd on? tell me this.

Oli. Alas, Malvolio, this is not my writing,
Though, I confess, much like the character:
But out of question 't is Maria's hand.
And now I do both me, it was she [ing.

First told me thou wast mad; then camest in sniil-
And in such form as this, which I expected
Upon thee in the letter. Prifhee, be content:
This practice hath most shrewdly pass'd upon thee;
But when we know the grounds and authors of it,
Thou shalt be both the plaintiff and the judge
Of thine own cause.

Fab. Good madam, hear me speak,
And let no quarrel nor no brawl to come
Taint the condition of this present hour,
Which I have wonder'd at. In hope it shall not,
Most freely I confess, myself and Toby
Set this device against Malvolio here.

Upon some stubborn and uncorrigible parts
We had conceived against him: Maria writ
The letter at Sir Toby's great importance;
In recompense whereof he hath married her.

How with a sportful malice it was follow'd,
So rather back on it, tell me revenge,
If that the injuries be justly weigh'd.
That have on both sides pass'd.

Oli. Alas, poor fool, how have they baffled thee!

Clo. Why, 'some are born great, some achieve greatness, and some have greatness thrown upon them.' I was one, sir, in this interlude; one Sir
Topas, sir: but that's all one. 'By the Lord, fool,
I am not mad.' But do you remember? 'Madam, why laugh you at such a barren rascal? an you smile not, he's gagg'd!' and thus the whirligig of time brings in his revenges.

Mal. I'll be revenged on the whole pack of Oli. He hath been most notoriously abused.

Duke. Pursue him, and entreat him to a peace:

He hath not told us of the captain yet:
When that is known and golden time convicts,
A solemn combination shall be made
Of our dear souls. Meantime, sweet sister,
We will not part from hence. Cesario, come;
For so you shall be, while you are a man;
But when in other habits you are seen,
Orsino's mistress and his fancy's queen.

[Exeunt all, except Clown.

Clo. [Sings]

When I was that and a little tiny boy,
With hey, ho, the wind and the rain,
A foolish thing was but a toy,
For the rain it raineth every day.

But when I came to man's estate,
With hey, ho, &c.
'Gainst knaves and thieves men shut their
For the rain, &c.

But when I came, alas! to wife,
With hey, ho, &c.
By swaggering could I never thrive,
For the rain, &c.

But when I came unto my beds,
With hey, ho, &c.
With toss-pots still had drunken heads,
For the rain, &c.

A great while ago the world begun,
With hey, ho, &c.
But that's all one, our play is done,
And we'll strive to please you every day.

[Exit.]

Time, as Chorus.

SCENE.—Sicilia, and Bohemia.

ACT I.

SCENE I.—Antechamber in Leontes' palace.

Enter Camillo and Archdamus.

Arch. If you shall chance, Camillo, to visit Bohemia, on the like occasion whereon my services are now on foot, you shall see, as I have said, great difference betwixt our Bohemia and your Sicilia.

Cam. I think, this coming summer, the King of Sicilia means to pay Bohemia the visitation which he justly owes him.

Arch. Wherein our entertainment shall shame us, we will be justified in our loves; for indeed—

Cam. Beseech you,—

Arch. Verily, I speak it in the freedom of my knowledge: we cannot with such magnificence—

Cam. Sicilia cannot show itself over-kind to Bohemia. They were trained together in their childhoods; and there rooted betwixt them then such an affection, which cannot choose but branch now. Since their more mature dignities and royal necessities made separation of their society, their encounters, though not personal, have been royally attended with interchange of gifts, letters, loving embassies; that they have seemed to be together, though absent, shook hands, as over a vast, and embraced, as it were, from the ends of opposed winds. The heavens continue their loves!

Arch. I think there is not in the world either malice or matter to alter it. You have an unspeakable comfort of your young prince Mamillius: it is a gentleman of the greatest promise that ever came into my note.

Cam. I very well agree with you in the hopes of him: it is a gallant child; one that indeed physics the subject, makes old hearts fresh: they that went on crutches ere he was born desire yet their life to see him a man.

Arch. Would they else be content to die?

Cam. Yes: if there were no other excuse why they should desire to live.

Arch. If the king had no son, they would desire to live on crutches till he had one. [Exit.

SCENE II. — A room of state in the same.

Enter Leontes, Hermione, Mamillius, Polixenes, Camillo, and Attendants.

Pol. Nine changes of the watery star hath been
They shepherd's note since we have left our throne
Without a burthen: time as long again
Would be fill'd up, my brother, with our thanks;
And yet we should, for perpetuity,
Go hence in debt: and therefore, like a cipher,
Yet standing in rich place, I multiply
With one 'We thank you' many thousands more
That go before it.

Leon. Stay your thanks awhile;
And pay them when you part.

Pol. Sir, that's to-morrow.
I am question'd by my fears, of what may chance
Or breed upon our absence: that may blow
No snapping winds at home, to make us say
'This is put forth too truly:' besides, I have stay'd
To tire your royalty.

Leon. We are tougher, brother, than you can put us to 't.

Pol. No longer stay.
Leon. One seven-night longer.

Pol. Very sooth, to-morrow.

Leon. We 'll part the time between 's then; and
In that
I 'll no gainsaying.

Pol. Press me not, beseech you, so.
There is no tongue that moves, none, none i' the world,
So soon as yours could win me: so it should now,
Were there necessity in your request, although
'T were needful I denied it. My affairs
Do even drag me homeward: which to hinder
Were in your love a whip to me: my stay
To you a charge and trouble: to save both,
Farewell, our brother.

251
Leon. Tongue-tied our queen? speak you.
Her. I had thought, sir, to have held my peace till
You had drawn oaths from him not to stay. You,
Charge him too coldly. Tell him, you are sure
All in Bohemia’s well; this satisfaction
The bygone day proclaim’d: say this to him,
He’s beat from his best ward.
Leon. Well said, Hermione.
Her. To tell, he longs to see his son, were strong;
But let him say so then, and let him go;
But let him swear so, and he shall not stay,
We’ll thwack him hence with distaffs.
Yet of your royal presence I’ll adventure
The borrow of a week. When at Bohemia
You take my lord, I’ll give him my commission
To let him there a month behind the gest
Prefixed for parting; yet, good deed, Leonetes,
I love thee not a jot o’ the clock behind
What lady-she her lord. You shall stay?
Pol. No, madam.
Her. Nay, but you will?
Pol. I may not, verily.
Her. Verily!
You put me over with limber vows; but I, [oaths,
Though you would seek to unsphere the stars with Should yet say—Sir, no, or the other. Verily,
You shall not go: a lady’s Verily’s.
As potent as a lord’s. Will you go yet?
Force me to keep you as a prisoner,
Not like a guest; so you shall pay your fees [you?
When you depart, and save your thanks. How say
My prisoner? or my guest? by your dread—Verily,
One of them you shall be.
Pol. Your guest, then, madam:
To be your prisoner should import offending;
Which is for me less easy to commit
Than you to punish.
Her. Not your gaoler, then,
But your kind hostess. Come, I’ll question you
Of my lord’s tricks and yours when you were boys:
You were pretty lordlings then?
Pol. We were, fair queen,
Two lads that thought there was no more behind
But such a day to-morrow as to-day,
And to be boy eternal.
Her. Was not my lord
The verier wag o’ the two? [the sun,
Pol. We were as twin’d lambs that did frisk I
And blest the one, no other. What we changed
Was innocence for innocence; we knew not
The doctrine of ill-doing, nor dream’d
That any did. Had we pursued that life,
And our weak spirits ne’er been higher rear’d
With stronger blood, weshould haveanswer’d heaven
Baldly ‘n’t guilty; the imposition clear’d
Hereditary ours.
Her. By this we gather
You have tripp’d since.
Pol. Temptations have since then been born to’s; for
In those unledged days was my wife a girl;
Your precious self had then not cross’d the eyes
Of my young play-fellow.
Her. Grace to boot!
Of this make no conclusion, lest you say
Your queen and I are devils: yet go on:
The offences we have made you do we’ll answer,
If you first sinnd with us and that with us
You did continue fault and that you slipp’d not
With any but with us.
Leon. Is he won yet?
Her. He’ll stay, my lord.
Leon. At my request he would not.
Hermione, my dearest, thou never spokest.
To better purpose.
Her. Never?
Pol. What have I twice said well? when was’t before? I prithee tell me; cram’s with praise and make’s
As fat as tane things: one good deed dying tongue-
Slaughters a thousand waiting upon that. [less
Our praises are our wages: you may ride’s
With one soft kiss a thousand furlongs ere
With spurt we beat an acre. But to the goal:
My last good deed was to entreat his stay:
What was my first? it has an elder sister,
Or I mistake you: O, would her name were Grace!
But once before I spoke to the purpose: when?
Nay, let me have ‘t; I long.
Why, that was when
Three crubbed months had sour’d themselves to death,
Ere I could make thee open thy white hand
And clap thysel my love: then didst thou utter ‘I am yours forever.’
Her. ’Tis grace indeed.
Why, lo you now, I have spoke to the purpose twice:
The one for ever earn’d a royal husband;
The other for some while a friend.
Leon. [Aside] Too hot, too hot!
To mingle friendship false and mingling bloods.
They shall have temper cordis on me: my heart smiles;
But not for joy: not joy. This entertainment
May a free face put on, derive a liberty
From heartiness, from bounty, fertile bosom,
And well become the agent; ’t may, I grant;
But to be paddling palms and pinching fingers,
As’s now they are, and making practic’d smiles,
As in a looking-glass, and then to sigh, as ‘twere
The mort o’ the deer; O, that is entertainment
My bosom likes not, nor my brows! Mamillius,
Art thou my boy?
Man. Ay, my good lord.
Leon. I feeks!
Why, that’s my bawcock. What, last smutch’d thy nose?
They say it is a copy out of mine. Come, captain,
We must be neat; not neat, but cleanly, captain:
And yet the skeer, the heifer and the calf
Are all call’d neat.—Still virginaling
Upon his pala!—How now, you wanton calf!
Art thou my calf?
Man. Yes, if you will, my lord.
Leon. Thou want’st a rough pash and the shoots that I have,
To be full like me: yet they say we are Almost as like as eggs; women say so,
That will say any thing: but were they false
As o’er-dyed blacks, as wind, as waters, false
As dice are to be wish’d by one that fixes
No bourn ‘twixt his and mine, yet were it true
To say this boy were like me. Come, sir page,
Look on me with your welkin eye: sweet villain!
Most dear’st! my collop! Can thy dam?—may’t Affection! thy intention stabs the centre: [be?
Thou dost make possible things not so held,
Communicatest with dreams;—how can this be?
With what’s Unreal thou concrete art,
And fellow’st nothing: then ’t is very credent
Thou mayst co-join with something: and thou dost,
And that beyond commission, and I find it,
And that to the infection of my brains
And hardening of my brows.
Pol. What means Sicilin?
Her. He something seems unsettled.
Pol. How, my lord!
What cheer? how is ‘t with you, best brother?
Her. As you look
Pol. If you held a brow of much distraction:
Are you moved, my lord?
Leon. No, in good earnest.
How sometimes nature will betray its folly,
ACT I.

THE WINTER'S TALE.

SCENE II.

Its tenderness, and make itself a pastime
To harder bosoms. Looking on the lines
Of my past history, I do recall
Twenty-three years, and saw myself unbridled,
In my green velvet coat, my dagger muzzled,
Lest it should bite its master, and so prove,
As ornaments oft do, too dangerous:
How like, methought, I then was to this kernel,
This sudden, this gentleman. Mine honest friend,
Will you take eggs for money?

Main. No, my lord, I'll fight. [brother,
Leon. You will? why, happy man be's done! My
Are you so fond of your young prince as we Do seem to be of ours?

Doth. If at home, sir,
He's all my exercise, my mirth, my matter,
Now my sworn friend and then mine enemy,
My parasite, my soldier, statesman, all:
He makes a July's day short as December,
And with his varying childness cures in me
Thoughts that would thick my blood.

Leon. So stands this squire
Offered with me: we two will walk, my lord,
And leave you to your gravier steps. Hermione,
How thou lovest us, show in our brother's welcome;
Let what it bear in Sicily be cheap:
Next to thyself and my young rover, he's Apparent to my heart.

Her. If you would seek us,
We are yours: the garden: shall's attend you there?
Leon. To your own bents dispose you: you'll be found,
Be you beneath the sky. [Aside] I am angling now,
Though you perceive me not how I give line.
Go to, go to!
How she holds up the nep, the bill to him!
And arms her with theboldness of a wife
To her allowable husband! [Excit Polixenes, Hermione, and Attendants.

[Exeunt Polixenes, Hermione, and Attendants.

Gone already!

Inch-thick, knee-deep, o'er head and ears a fork'd
Go, play, boy, play: thy mother plays, and I [love:
Play too, but so disgraced a part, whose issue
Will hiss me to my grave; contempt and lumour
Will be my knoll. Go, play, boy, play. There have Or I am much deceived, cuckold's ere now: been,
And many a man there is, even at this present,
Now while speak this, holds his wife by the arm,
That little thinks she has been spiced in 's absence
And his pond fund'd by his next neighbor, by Sir Smile, his neighbour: nay, there's comfort in t'
Whiles other men have gates and those gates open'd,
As mine, against their will. Should all despair
That have revoluted wives, the tenth of mankind
Would hang themselves. Physic for 't there is none;
It is a bloody planet, that will strike
Where 't is predominant; and 't is powerful, think it.
From east, west, north and south: be it concluded,
No barricado for a belly; know 't;
It will let in and out the enemy
With bag and baggage: many thousand on's
Have the disease, and feel 't not. Now, boy! bow?

Main. I am like you, they say.

Leon. Why, that's some comfort.

What, Camillo there?
Cam. Ay, my good lord.

Leon. Go play, Manilius; thou art an honest
Boy, more that a gentleman. [Exit Manilius.
Camillo, this great sir will yet stay longer.
Cam. You had much ado to make his anchor hold:
When you cast out, it still came home.

Leon. Didst note it?
Cam. He would not stay at your petitions; made
His business more material.

Leon. Didst perceive it?
[Aside] They're here with me already, whispering,
'Sicilia is a so forth'; 't is far gone,

When I shall gust it last. How came 't, Camillo,
Thou went he did stay?

Cam. At the good queen's entreaty.

Leon. At the queen's be 't: 'good' should be per-
But, so it is, it is not. Was this taken [tinct;
By any understanding pate but thine?
For thy conceit is soaking, will draw in
More than the common blood: not noted, is 't,
But of the finer natures? by some severals
Of head-piece extraordinary? lower messes
Perchance are to this business turnblind! say.
Cam. Business, my lord! I think most understand
Bohemia stays here longer.

Leon. Ha! [Stay here longer.

Cam. Ay, but why?
Cam. To satisfy your highness and the entreaties
Of our most gracious mistress.

Leon. Satisfy! The entreaties of your mistress I satisfy!
Let that suffice. I have trusted thee, Camillo,
With all the nearest things to my heart, as well
My chamber-councill, wherein, priest-like, thou
Hast cleansed my bosom, I from thee departed
Thy penitent reform'd: but we have been deceived
In thy integrity, deceived
In that which seems so.

Cam. Be it forbid, my lord!

Leon. To bide upon 't, thou art not honest, or,
If thou inclinest that way, thou art a coward,
Which boxes honesty behind, restraining
From course required; or else thou must be counted
A servant grafted in my serious trust
And therein negligent; or else a fool
That seest a game play'd home, the rich stake drawn,
And takest it all for jest.

Cam. My gracious lord,

Leon. May I be negligent, foolish, and fearful;
In every one of these no man is free,
But that his negligence, his folly, fear,
Among the infinite doings of the world,
Sometime puts forth. In your affairs, my lord,
If ever I was willful-negligent,
It was my folly; if industriously
I play'd the fool, it was my negligence.
Not weighing well the end: if ever fearful
To do a thing, where I the issue doubted,
Whereof the execution did cry out
Against the non-performance, 't was a fear
Which oft infects the wise: these, my lord,
Are such allow'd infirmities that honesty
Is never free of. But, beseech your grace,
Be plainer with me; let me know my trespass
By its own visage: if I then desy it,
'T is none of mine.

Leon. Ha! not you seen, Camillo.—

But that 's past doubt, you have, or your eye-glass
Is thicker than a cuckold's horn,—or heard,—
For to a vision so apparent rumour
Cannot be mute,—or thought,—for cogitation
Resides not in that man that does not think,—
My wife is slippery? If thou wilt confess,
Or else be impudently that honesty
To have nor eyes nor ears nor thought, then say
My wife's a hobby-horse, deserves a name
As rank as any flux-wench that puts to
Before her troth-plight: say 't and justify 't.

Cam. I would not be a stander-by to hear
My sovereign mistress charged or say'd without
My present vengeance taken: 'shrew my heart,
You never spoke what did become you less
Than this; which to reiterate were sin
As deep as that, though true.

Is whispering nothing?

Is leaning cheek to cheek? is meeting noses?
Kissing with inside lip? stopping the career
Of laughing with a sigh?—a note infallible

233
Of breaking honesty—horsing foot on foot?
Skulking in corners? wishing clocks more swift?
Hours mutter? be the midnight? and all eyes
Blind with the pin and web but theirs, theirs only,
That would unseen be wicked? is this nothing?
Why, then the world and all that 's in 't is nothing;
The covering sky is nothing; Bohemia nothing;
My wife is nothing; nor nothing have these noth-
If this be nothing. [Lights, Con.]
Good my lord, be cured
Of this discourse opinion, and betimes;
For 't is most dangerous.
Con. No, no, my lord.
Leorn. Say it be, 'tis true.
Con. Who does infect her?
Leorn. Why, he that wears her like her medal,
About his neck, Bohemia: who, if I [hanging
Hail seeming true, and bare eyes
To see alike mine honour as their profits,
Their own particular thirths, they would do that
Which should undo more doing: ay, and thou,
His cup-bearer,—who from meamer form
Have bench'd and rear'd to worship, who mayst see
This in earth and earth there sees heaven,
How I am galled,—infeldest bespice a cup,
To give mine enemy a lasting wink;
Which draught to me were cordial.
Con. Sir, my lord,
I could do this, and that with no rash potion,
But with a lingering dram that should not work
Malicious like poison: but I cannot Believe this crack to be in my dread mistress,
So sovereignly being honourable.
I have loved thee,
I make that thy question, and go rot!
Dost think I am so muddy, so unsettled,
To appoint myself in this vexation, sully
The purity and whiteness of my sheets,
Which to preserve is sleep, which being spotted
Is goats, thorns, nettles, tails of wasps,
Gives hell to the prince my son,
Who I do think is mine and love as mine,
Without ripe moving to 't? Would I do this?
Could man so bencil?
Con. I must believe you, sir:
I do; and will fetch off Bohemia for 't;
Provided that, when he's removed, your highness
Will take again your queen as yours at first,
Even for your son's sake; and thereby for sealing
The injury of tongues in courts and kingdoms
Known and allied to yours.
Thou dost advise me
Even as I mine own course have set down:
I'll give no blemish to her honour, none.
Con. My lord,
Go then; and with a countenance as clear
As friendship wears at feasts, keep with Bohemia
And with your queen. I am his cup-bearer;
If from me he have wholesome beverage,
Account me not your servant.
Leorn. This is all;
Do't and thou hast one half of my heart:
Do not, thou split'st thine own.
Con. I'll do 't, my lord.
Leorn. I will seem friendly, as thou hast advised me. [Exit.
Con. O miserable lady! But, for me,
What case stand I in? I must be the poisons
Of good Polixenes; and my ground to do
Is the obedience to a master, one
Who in rebellion with himself will have
All that are his so too. To do this deed,
Promotion follows. If I could find example
Of thousands that had struck anointed kings
And flourished after, I'd not do 't; but since
Nor brass nor stone nor parchment bears not one,
Let villany itself forswear 't. I must Porsake the court: to do 't, or no, is certain
To me a break-neck. Happy star reigns now!
Here comes Bohemia.

Re-enter Polixenes.

Pol. This is strange: methinks
My favour here begins to warp. Not speak?
Good day, Camillo.
Con. Hail, most royal sir!
Pol. What is the news? the court?
Con. None rare, my lord.
Pol. The king hath on him such a countenance
As he had lost some province and a region
Loved as he loves himself: even now I met him
With customary compliment; when he,
Wafting his eyes to the contrary and falling
A lip of much contempt, speeds from me and Leaves me to consider what,—I beseech you,
That changeth thus his manners.
Con. I dare not know, my lord.
Pol. How! dare not! do not. Do you know, and dare not?
Be intelligent to me: 'tis thereabouts;
For, to yourself, what you do know, you must,
And cannot say, you dare not. Good Camillo,
Your changed compliances are to me a mirror
Which shows me mine changed too; for I must be A party in this alteration, finding Myself thus altered with 't.
Con. There is a sickness
Which puts some of us in distemper, but I cannot name the disease; and it is caught
Of you that yet are well.
Pol. How! caught of me!
Make me not sighted like the basilisk: [ter
I have looked on thousands, who have sped the bet-
By my regard, but kill'd none so. Camillo,—
As you are certainly a gentleman thereto,
Clerk-like experienced, with no less adorns
Our gentry than our parents' noble names.
In whose success we are gentle,—I beseech you,
If you know ought which does behave my know-
Thereof to be inform'd, imprison 't not [edge
In ignorant concealment.
Con. I may not answer.
Pol. A sickness caught of me, and yet I well!
I must be answer'd. Dost thou hear, Camillo,
I conjure thee, by all the parts of man
Which honour does acknowledge, whereof the least
Is not this suit of mine, that thou declare
What incedency thou dost guess of harm
Is creeping toward me; how far off, how near;
Which way to be prevented, if to be;
If not, how best to bear it.
Con. Sir, I will tell you;
Since I am charged in honour and by him [sel,
That I think honourable: therefore mark my coun-
Which must be even as swiftly follow'd as I mean to utter it, or both yourself and me
Cry lost, and so good night!
Pol. On, good Camillo.
Con. I am appointed him to murder you.
Pol. By whom, Camillo?
Con. By the king.
Pol. For what?
Con. He thinks, nay, with all confidence he
As he had seen 't or been an instrument [swears,
To vice you to 't, that you have touched his queen Forbiddenly.
ACT II.

THE WINTER'S TALE.

SCENE I.—A room in Leontes' palace.

Enter Hermione, Mamilius, and Ladies.

Her. Take the boy to you: he so troubles me,
'Tis past enduring.

First Lady. Come, my gracious lord,
Shall I be your playfellow?

Mam. No, I'll none of you.

First Lady. Why, my sweet lord?

Mam. You'll kiss me hard and speak to me as if I were a baby still. I love you better.

See. Lady. And why so, my lord?

Mam. Not for because
Your brows are blacker; yet black brows, they say,
Become some women best, so that there be not Too much hair there, but in a semicircle,
Or a half-moon made with a patch:

See. Lady. Who taught you this?

Mam. I learnt it out of women's faces. Pray now
What colour are your eyebrows?

First Lady. Nay, that's a mock: I have seen a lady's

That has been blue, but not her eyebrows.

First Lady. Hark ye; The queen your mother rounds apace: we shall Present our services to a fine new prince
One of these days; and then you 'd wanton with us, If we should have you.

See. Lady. She is spread of late
Into a goodly bulk: good time encounter her!

Her. What wisdom stirs amongst you? Come, I am for you again: pray you, sit by us, [sir, now
And tell ' s tale.

Mam. Merry or sad shall ' t be?

Her. As merry as you will.

Mam. A sad tale's best for winter: I have one
Of sprites and gobkins.

Her. Let's have that, good sir.

Come on, sit down: come on, and do your best
To fright me with your sprites; you're powerful.

Mam. There was a man — [at it.

Her. Nay, come, sit down: then on.

Mam. Dwelt by a churchyard: I will tell it softly; Yond crickets shall not hear it.

ACT II.

By this discovery lost. Not be uncertain;
For, by the honour of my parents, I
Have uttered truth: which if you seek to prove,
I dare not stand by: nor shall you be safer
Than one condemn'd by the king's own mouth,
His execution sworn. [thereon

I do believe thee;
I saw his heart in ' s face. Give me thy hand:
Be pilot to me and thy places shall Still neighbour mine. My ships are ready and My people did expect my hence departure
Two days ago. This jealousy
Is for a precious creature: as she ' s rare,
Must it be great, and as his person ' s mighty,
Must it be violent, and as he does conceive
He is dishonour'd by a man which ever
Profess'd to him, why, his revenges must
In that be made more bitter. Fear o'ershades me:
Good expedition be my friend, and comfort
The gracious queen, part of his theme, but nothing
Of his ill- ta'en suspicion! Come, Camillo;
I will respect thee as a father if Thou bear'st my life off hence: let us avoid.

Com. It is in mine authority to command
The keys of all the posterns: please your highness
To take the urgent hour. Come, sir, away. [Exit.
ACT II.

THE WINTER'S TALE.

SCENE I.

Look on her; mark her well; be but about
To say she's a goodly lady; and
The justice of your hearts will thereto add
'Tis pity she's not honest, honourable.'
Praise her but for this her without-door form,
Which on my faith deserves high speech, and straight
The name of hum or ha, those petty brands
That calumni doth use—O, I am out—
That mercy does, for calumni will sour
Virtue itself: these shrugs, these hums and ha's,
When you have said 'she's goodly,' come between Ere you can say 'she's honest;' but be't known,
From him that has most cause to grieve it should be,
She's an adulteress.

Her. Should a villain say so,
The most replenish'd villain in the world,
He was as much more villain: you, my lord,
Do but mistake.

Leon. You have mistook, my lady,
Polixenes for Leontes: 'tis thing to know.
Which I 'll not call a creature of thy place,
Lest barbarism, making me the precedent,
Should a like language use to all degrees
And marry do distinguish and leave out
Betwixt the prince and beggar: I have said
She's an adulteress; I have said with whom:
More, she's a traitor and Camillo is
A feareyler with her, and one that knows
What she should shame to know herself.
But will not say vile prince, that she is
A bed-swever, even as bad as those
That vulgar give bold'st titles, ay, and privy
To this their late escape.

Her. No, by my life,
Privy to none of this. How will this grieve you,
When you shall come to clearer knowledge, that
You thus have publish'd me! Gentle my lord,
You scarce can right me throughly then to say
You did mistake.

Leon. If I mistake
In those foundations which I build upon,
The centre is not big enough to bear
A school-boy's top. Away with her! to prison!
He who shall speak for her is afar off guilty
But that he speaks.

Her. There's some ill planet reigns:
I must be patient till the heavens look
With an aspect more favourable. Good my lords,
I am not prone to weeping, as our sex
Commonly are; the want of which vain dew
Perchance shall dry your pities; but I have
That honourable grief lodg'd here which burns
Worse than tears drown: beseech you all, my lords,
With thoughts so qualified as your charities
Shall best instruct you, measure me; and so
The king's will be perform'd!

Leon. Shall I be heard?

Her. Who is 't that goes with me? Beseech your highness,
My women may be with me; for you see
My plight requires it. Do not weep, good fools;
There is no cause: when you shall know your mistres.
Has deserved prison, then abound in tears
As I come out: this action I now go on
Is for my better grace. Adieu, my lord:
I never wish'd to see you sorry; now
I trust I shall. My women, come; you have leave.

Leon. 'Go, do our bidding; hence!'

First Lord. Beseech your highness, call the queen again.

Ant. Be certain what you do, sir, lest your justice
Prove violence: in which three great ones suffer,
Yourself, her queen, your son.

First Lord. For her, my lord,

I dare my life lay down and will do 't, sir,
Please you to accept it, that the queen is spotless;
I the eyes of heaven and to you; I mean,
In this which you accuse her.

Ant. If it prove
She's otherwise, I'll keep my stables where
I lodge my wife: I'll go in couples with her;
Then when I feel and see her to farther trust her;
For every inch of woman in the world,
Ay, every dram of woman's flesh is false,
If she be.

Leon. Hold your peace.

First Lord. Good my lord,—

Ant. It is for you we speak, not for ourselves:
You are abused and by some putter-on
That will bade 'm for 't; would I knew the villain,
I would land-damn him. Be she honour-ward'd,
I have three daughters; the eldest is eleven;
The second and the third, nine, and some live;
If this prove true, they'll pay for 't: by my honour
I'll geld 'em all; fourteen they shall not see,
To bring false generations: they are co-heirs;
And I had rather gib myself than they Should not produce fair issue.

Leon. Case: no more.
You smell this business with a sense as cold
As is a dead man's nose: but I do see 't and feel 't,
As you feel doing thus; and see withal
The instruments that feel.

Ant. If it be so,
We need no grave to bury honesty:
There's not a grain of it the face to sweeten
Of the whole dungey earth.

Leon. What! lack I credit?

First Lord. I had rather you did lack than I, my lord.

Leon. Upon this ground; and more it would content me
To have her honour true than your suspicion,
Be blamed for 't how you might.

Leon. Why, what need we Commune with you of this, but rather follow
Our forceful instigation? Our prerogative
Calls not your counsel, but our natural goodness
Imparts this; which if you, or stupid
Or seeming so in skill, cannot or will not Relish a truth like us, inform yourselves.
We need no more of your advice: the matter,
The loss, the gain, the ordering on 't, is all Properly ours.

Ant. And I wish, my liege,
You had only in your silent judgment tried it,
Without more overture.

Leon. How could that be?

Either thou art most ignorant by age,
Or thou wert born a fool. Camillo's flight,
Added to their familiarity,
Which was as gross as ever touch'd conjecture,
That lack'd sight only, nought for approbation
But only seeing, all other circumstances
Made up to the deed, doth push on this proceeding:
Yet, for a greater confirmation.
For in an act of this importance 't were Most piteous to be wild, I have dispatch'd in post
To sacred Delphos, to Apollo's temple,
Cleonemis and Dion, whom you know
Of such sufficiency; now from the oracle
They will bring all; whose spiritual counsel had,
Shall stop or spur me. Have I done well?

First Lord. Well done, my lord.

Leon. Though I am satisfied and need no more Than what I know, yet shall the oracle
Give rest to the minds of others, such as he Whose ignorant credulity will not Come up to the truth. So have we thought it good
From our free person she should be confined,
Lest that the treachery of the two fled hence
Be left her to perform. Come, follow us;
ACT II.
THE WINTER'S TALE.

SCENE II.—A prison.

Enter Paulina, a Gentleman, and Attendants.

Paul. The keeper of the prison, call to him.

Lett him have knowledge who I am. [Exit Gent.

Paul. Here's ado,
To lock up honesty and honour from
The access of gentle visitors! 'Tis lawful, pray you,
To see her women? any of them? Emilia?

Gaol. So please you, madam,
To put apart these your attendants, I Shall bring Emilia forth.

Paul. I pray now, call her.
Withdrew yourselves. [Exit Gentleman and Attendants.

Gaol. And, madam,
I must be present at your conference.

Paul. Well, be 't so, prithee. [Exit Gaoler.

Here's such ado to make no stain a stain
As passes colouring.

Re-enter Gaoler, with Emilia.

Dear gentlewoman,
How fares our gracious lady?

Emil. As well as one so great and so forlorn
May hold together: on her griefs and griefs,
Which never tender lady hath borne greater,
She is something before her time deliver'd.

Paul. A boy?

Emil. A daughter, and a goodly babe,
Lusty and like to live: the queen receives
Much comfort in 't; says 'My poor prisoner,
I am innocent as you.'

Paul. I dare be sworn: [them!
These dangerous unsafe hours: 'tis the king; beshrew
He must be told on 't, and he shall: the office
Becomes a woman best; I'll take 't upon me:
If I prove honey-mouth'd, let my tongue blister
And never to my red-look'd anger be
The trumpet any more. Pray you, Emilia,
Commend my best obedience to the queen:
If she dares trust me with her little babe,
I'll shew 't the king and undertake to be
Her advocate to the loud'st. We do not know
How he may soften at the sight o' the child:
The silence often of pure innocence
Persuades when speaking fails.

Emil. Most worthy madam,
Your honour and your goodness is so evident
That your free undertaking cannot miss
A thriving issue: there is no lady living
So meet for this great errand. Please your ladyship
To visit the next room, I'll presently
Acquaint the queen of your most noble offer;
Who but to-day hammer'd of this design
But durst not tempt a minister of honour,
Lest she should be denied.

Paul. Tell her, Emilia,
I'll use that tongue I have: if wit flow from 't
As boldness from my bosom, let 't not be doubted
I shall do good.

Emil. Now be you blest for it!

Paul. I'll to the queen: please you, come something nearer.

Emil. Madam, if 't please the queen to send the
I know not what I shall incur to pass it, [babe,
Having no warrant.

Paul. You need not fear it, sir:
This child was prisoner to the womb and is
By law and process of great nature thence Freed and enables himself to
The anger of the king nor guilty of,
If any be, the trespass of the queen.

Gaol. I do believe it.

Paul. Do not you fear: upon mine honour, I
Will stand betwixt you and danger. [Exit.

SCENE III.—A room in Leontes' palace.

Enter Leontes, Antigonus, Lords, and Servants.

Leon. Nor night nor day no rest; it is but weakness
To bear the matter thus: mere weakness, if
The cause were not in being, — part o' the cause,
She the adulteress; for the harlot king
Is quite beyond mine arm, out of the blank
And level of my brain, plot-proof; but she
I can hook to me: say that she were gone,
Given to the fire, a moiety of my rest
Might come to me again. Who's there?

First Serv. My lord?

Leon. How does the boy?

First Serv. He took good rest to-night;
'Tis hoped his sickness is discharged.

Leon. To see his nobleness!
Conceiving the dishonour of his mother,
He straight declined, droop'd, took it deeply,
Fasten'd and fix'd the shame on 't in himself,
Threw off his spirit, his appetite, his sleep,
And downright languish'd. Leave me solely; go,
See how he fares. [Exit Serv. [Fie, fie! no thought of
The very thought of my revenges that way him: Reckon upon me: in himself too mighty,
And in his parties, his alliance; let him be Until a time may serve: for present vengeance,
Take it on her. Camillo and Polixenes
Laugh at me, make their pastime at my sorrow;
They should not laugh if I could reach them, nor Shall she within my power.

Enter Paulina, with a child.

First Lord. You must not enter.

Paul. Nay, rather, good my lords, be second to Fear you his tyrannous passion more, alas, [une:
Than the queen's life? a gracious innocent soul,
More free than he is jealous.

Ant. That's enough.

Sec. Serv. Madam, he hath not slept to-night;
None should come at him. [commanded
Paul. Not so hot; good sir: I come to bring him sleep. 'T is such as you,
That creep like shadows by him and do sigh
At each his needless heavings, such as you
Nourish the cause of his awaking: I
Do come with words as medicinal as true,
Honest as either, to purge him of that humour
That presses him from sleep.

No noise, my lord; but needful conference
About some gossips for your highness.

Leon. How! Away with that audacious lady! Antigonus,
I charged thee that she should not come about me:
I knew she would.

Ant. I told her so, my lord,
On your displeasure's peril and on mine,
She should not visit you.
No yellow in 't, lest she suspect, as he does,
Her children not her husband's!
Leon.  A gross hag!
Paul.  Hang all the husbands
That cannot do that feat, you'll leave yourself
Hardly one subject.
Leon.  Once more, take her hence.
Paul.  A most unworthy and unnatural lord
Can do no more.
Leon.  I'll ha' thee burnt.
Paul.  I care not:
It is an heretic that makes the fire,
Not she which burns in 't. I'll not call you tyrant;
But this most cruel usage of your queen,
Not able to produce more accusation [yours
Than your own weak-hinged fancy, something sa-
Of tyranny and will ignore make you,
Yea, scandalous to the world.
Leon.  On your allegiance,
Out of the chamber with her! Were I a tyrant,
Where were her life? she durst not call me so,
If she did know me one. Away with her!
Paul.  I pray you, do not push me; I'll be gone.
Look to your babe, my lord; 'tis yours: Jove send her
A better guiding spirit! What needs these hands?
You, that are thus so tender o'er his follies,
Will never do him good, not one of you.
So, so: farewell; we are gone. [Exit.
Leon.  Thou, traitor, last set on thy wife to this.
My child? away with 't! Even thou, that last
A heart so tender o'er it, take it hence
And see it instantly consumed with fire.
Even thou and none but thou. Take it up straight:
Within this hour bring me word 't is done,
And by good testimony, or I'll seize thy life,
With what thou else canst bring to her. If thou refuse
And will encounter with my wrath, say so;
The bastard brains with these my proper hands
Shall I dash out. Go, take it to the fire;
For thou set'st on thy wife.
Ant.  I did not, sir:
These lords, my noble fellows, if they please,
Can clear me in 't.
Lords.  We can: my royal liege,
He is not guilty of her coming hither.
Leon.  You're liars all.  [credit:
First Lord. Beseech your highness, give us better
We have always truly served you, and beseech you
So to esteem of us, and on our knees we beg,
As recompense of our dear services
Past and to come, that you do change this purpose,
Which being so horrible, so bloody, must
Lead on to some foul issue: we all kneel.
Leon.  I am a feather for each wind that blows:
Shall I live on to see this bastard kneel
And call me father? better burn it now
Than curse it then. But be it; let it live.
It shall not neither. You, sir, come you hither;
You that have been so tenderly oblivious
With Lady Margery, your midwife where, there,
To save this bastard's life,—for 'tis a bastard,
So sure as this beard's grey,—what will you adven-
To save this brat's life?  [ture
Ant.  Anything, my lord,
That my ability may undergo
And boldness impose: at least thus much:
I'll pawn the little blood which I have left
To save the innocent: any thing possible.
Leon.  It shall be possible. Swear by this sword
Thou wilt perform my bidding.
Ant.  I will, my lord.
Leon.  Mark and perform it, see'st thou: for the
Of any point in 't shall not only be [fail
Death to thyself but to thy lewd-tongued wife,
ACT III.

SCENE I.—A sea-port in Sicilia.

Enter Cleomenes and Dion. Cleo. The climate's delicate, the air most sweet, Fertile the isle, the temple much surpassing The common praise it bears. Dion. I shall report, For most it caught me, the celestial habits, Methinks I so should term them, and the reverence Of the grave warriors. O, the sacrifice! How ceremonial, solemn and unearthly It was I' the offering! Cleo. But of all, the burst And the ear-deafening voice o' the oracle, Kin to Jove's thunder, so surprised my sense, That I was nothing! Dion. If the event o' the journey Prove as successful to the queen,—O be't so!— As it hath been to us rare, pleasant, speedy, The time is worth the use on 't.

Cleo. Great Apollo Turn all to the best! These proclamations, So forcing faults upon Hermione, I little like. Dion. The violent carriage of it Will clear or end the business: when the oracle, Thus by Apollo's great divine seal'd up, Shall the contents discover, something rare Even then will rush to knowledge. Go: fresh horses! And gracious be the issue! [Exit.]

SCENE II.—A court of Justice.

Enter Leontes, Lords, and Officers. Leon. This sessions, to our great grief we pronounce, Even pushes 'gainst our heart: the party tried The daughter of a king, our wife, and one Of us too much beloved. Let us be clear Of being tyrannous, since we so openly Proceed in justice, which shall have due course, Even to the guilt or the purgation. Produce the prisoner. Off. It is his highness' pleasure that the queen Appear in person here in court. Silence! Enter Hermione guarded; Paulina and Ladies attending. Leon. Read the indictment. Off. [Reads] Hermione, queen to the worthy Leontes, king of Sicilia, thou art here accused and arraigned of high treason, in committing adultery with Polixenes, king of Bohemia, and conspiring with Camillo to take away the life of our sovereign lord the king, thy royal husband: the pretence whereof being by circumstances partly laid open, thou, Hermione, contrary to the faith and allegiance of a true subject, didst counsel and aid them, for their better safety, to fly away by night. Her. Since what I am to say must be but that Which contradicts my accusation and The testimony on my part no other But what comes from myself, it shall scarce boot me To say 'not guilty': mine integrity Being counted falsehood, shall, as I express it, Be so received. But thus: if powers divine Behold our human actions, as they do, I doubt not then but innocence shall make False accusation blush and tyranny Tremble at patience. You, my lord, best know, Who least will seem to do so, my past life Hath been as continent, as chaste, as true, As I am now unhappy; which is more Than history can pattern, though devised And play'd to take spectators. For behold me A fellow of the royal bed, which owe A moiety of the throne, a great king's daughter, The mother to a hopeful prince, here standing To prate and talk for life and honour 'fore Who please to come and hear. For life, I prize it As I weigh grief, which I would spare: for honour, 'Tis a derivative from me to mine, And only that I stand for. I appeal To your own conscience, sir, before Polixenes Came to your court, how I was in your grace, How merited to be so; since he came, With what encounter so uncertain I Have strain'd to appear thus: if one jot beyond The bound of honour, or in act or will That way inclining, harden'd be the hearts Of all that hear me, and my near'st of kin Cry fie upon my grave! Leon. I never heard yet That any of these bolder vices wanted Less indiscretion to gainsay what they did Than to perform it first. Her. That's true enough; Though 't is a saying, sir, not due to me. Leon. You will not own it. Her. More than mistress of Which comes to me in name of fault, I must not At all acknowledge. For Polixenes,

ACT III.

THE WINTER’S TALE.

SCENE II.

With whom I am accused, I do confess
I loved him as in honour he required,
With all a kind of love as might become
A lady like me, with a love, freely
So and no other, as yourself commanded:
Which not to have done I think had been in me
Both disobedience and ingratitude [spoke].
To you and toward your friend, whose love I had Even from an infant, freely
That it was yours. Now, for conspiracy, I know not how it tastes; though it be dish’d
For me to try how: all I know of it
Is that Camillo was an honest man:
And why he left your court, the gods themselves;
With no more than I, are ignorant.

Leon. You knew of his departure, as you know
What you have underta’en to do in’s absence.

_Her._

You speak a language that I understand not:
My life stands in the level of your dreams,
Which I’ll lay down.

Leon. Your actions are my dreams;
You had a bastard by Polixenes,
And I but dream’d it. As you were past all shame,—
Those of your fact are so—so past all truth:
Which I should confound more than avails; for as Thy wrath hath been cast out, like to itself,
No father owning it,—which is, indeed,
More criminal in thee than it,—so thou
Shalt feel our justice, in whose easiest passage
Look for no less than death.

_Her._

Sir, spare your threats: The bug which you would fright me with I seek.
To me can life be no commodity:
The crown and comfort of my life, your favour,
I do give lost; for I do feel it gone,
But know not how it went. My second joy
And first-fruit of my body, from his presence
I am barr’d, like one infectious. My third comfort,
Starr’d most unluckily, is from my breast,
The innocent milk in it most innocent mouth,
Hai’d out to murder: myself on every post
Proclaim’d a strumpet: with immodest hatred
The child-bed privilege denied, which longs
To women of all fashion; lastly, hurried
Here to this place, i’ the open air, before,
I have got strength of limit. Now, my liege,
Tell me what blessings I have here alive,
That I should confound more than avails; for as
But yet hear this; mistake me not: no life,
I prize it not a straw, but for mine honour,
Which I would free, if I shall be condemn’d
Upon surmises, all proofs sleeping else
But what your jealousies awake. I tell you
This rigour and not law. Your honours all,
I do refer me to the oracle:

Apollo be my judge!

_First Lord._

This your request
Is altogether just: therefore bring forth,
And in Apollo’s name, his oracle.

Exeunt certain Officers.

_Her._ The Emperor of Russia was my father:
O that he were alive, and here beholding
His daughter’s trial! that he did but see
The flatness of my misery, yet with eyes
Of pity, not revenge!

Re-enter Officers, with Cleomenes and Dion.

_Off._ You here shall swear upon this sword of justice,
That you, Cleomenes and Dion, have Been both at Delphos, and from thence have brought
This seal’d-up oracle, by the hand delivered;
Of great Apollo’s priest and that since then
You have not dared to break the holy seal
Nor read the secrets in ’t.

_Cleo. Dion._ All this we swear.

Leon. Break up the seals and read.

---

Off. [Reads] Hermione is chaste: Polixenes blameless;
Camillo a true subject; Leontes a jealous tyrant; his innocent babe truly begotten; and the king shall live without an heir, if that which is lost be not found.

Lords. Now blessed be the great Apollo!

_Her._ Praised.

Leon. Hast thou read truth?

Ay, my lord; even so
As it is here set down.

Leon. There is no truth at all! the oracle:
The sessions shall proceed: this is mere falsehood.

Enter Servant.

_Serv._ My lord the king, the king!

Leon. What is the business?

_Serv._ O sir, I shall be hated to report it!
The prince your son, with mere conceit and fear
Of the queen’s speed, is gone.

_How! gone!_ (down)

Leon. Apollo’s angry; and the heavens themselves
Do strike at my injustice. [Hermione secons.] How now there!

Paul. This news is mortal to the queen: look
And see what death is doing.

Leon. Take her hence:
Her heart is but overcharged; she will recover:
I have too much believed mine own suspicion:
Beseech you, tenderly apply to her
Some remedies for life.

_Off._ [Exeunt Paulina and Ladies, with Hermione.]

Apollo, pardon
My great profusion! against thine oracle!
I’ll reconcile me to Polixenes,
New woo my queen, recall the good Camillo,
Whom I proclaim a man of truth, of mercy;
For, being transported by my jealousies
To bloody thoughts and to revenge, I chose
Camillo for the minister to poison
My friend Polixenes: which had been done,
But that the good mind of Camillo tardied
My swift command, though I with death and with Reward did threaten and encourage him,
Not doing ‘t and being done: he, most humane
And fill’d with honour, to my kingly guest
Uncles’p my practice, quit his fortunes here,
Which you knew great, and to the hazard
The king feared himself condemned.
No richer than his honour: how he glisters
Thorough my rust! and how his piety
Does my deeds make the blacker!

Re-enter Paulina.

_Paul._ Woe the while! O, cut my lace, lest my heart, cracking it, Break too!

_First Lord._ What fit is this, good lady? _Paul._ Paul. What studied torment, tyrant, hast for me?
In leads or odes? what old or newer torture?
Must I receive, whose every word deserves
To taste of thy most worst? Thy tyranny
Together working with thy jealousies,
Fancies too weak for boys, too green and idle
For girls of nine, _O_, think what they have done
And then run mad indeed, star’d mad! for all
Thy by-gone folleries were but spices of it.
That thou betray’dst Polixenes, ’t was nothing;
That did but show thee, of a fool, inconstant
And damnable ingratitude: nor was ’t much,
That wouldst have poison’d good Camillo’s honour,
To have him kill a king; poor trespasses,
More monstrous standing by: whereof I reckon
The casting forth to crows thy baby-daughter
To be or none or little; though a devil
Would have shed water out of fire ere done’t:

---
Nor is't directly laid to thee, the death
Of the young prince, whose honourable thoughts,
The tears that fell from seats of State and grace
That could conceiving a gross and foolish sire
Blankish'd his gracious dam: this is not, no,
Laid to thy answer: but the last,—O lords,
When I have said, cry 'wre,'—the queen, the queen,
The sweet'st, dearest creature's death, and vengeance
Not dropped down yet.

First Lord. The higher powers forbid it!
Paul. I say she's dead; I'll swear't. If word
Prevail not, go and see: if you can bring [nor oath
Tincture or lustre in her lip, her eye,
Heat outwardly or breath within, I'll serve you
As I could do the gods. But I am a tyrant,
Do not repeat these things, for they are heavier
Than all thy woes can stir: therefore betake thee
To nothing but despair. A thousand knees
Ten thousand years together, naked, fasting,
Upon a barren mountain, and still winter
In storm perpetual, could not move the gods
To look that way thou wert.

Leon. Go on, go on:
Thou canst not speak too much; I have deserved
All tongues to talk their bitterest.

First Lord. Say no more:
However the business goes, you have made fault;
I' the boldness of your speech.

Paul. I am sorry for 't:
All faults I make, when I shall come to know them,
I do repent. Alas! I have show'd too much
The rashness of a woman: he is touch'd [help
To the noble heart. What's gone and what's past
Should be past grief: do not receive affliction
At my petition; I beseech you, rather
Let me be punish'd, that have minded you
Of what you should forget. Now, good my liege,
Sir, royal sir, forgive a foolish woman;
The love I bore your queen—lo, fool again!—
I'll speak of her no more, nor of your children;
I'll not remember you of my own lord,
Who is lost too: take your patience to you,
And I'll say nothing.

Leon. Thou didst speak but well
When most the truth; which I receive much better Than to be piti'd of thee. Prithhee, bring me
To the dead bodies of my queen and son:
One grave shall be for both: upon them shall
The causes of their death appear, unto
Our shame perpetual. Once a day I'll visit
The chapel where they lie, and tears shed there Shall be my recreation: so long as nature
Will bear up with this exercise, so long
I daily vow to use it. Come and lead me
Unto these sorrows.

SCENE III.—Bohemia. A desert country near the sea.

Enter Antigonus with a child, and a Mariner.

Ant. Thou art perfect then, our ship hath touch'd
The deserts of Bohemia? [upon
Mar. Ay, my lord; and fear
We have landed in ill time: the skies look grimly
And threaten present blasts. In my conscience,
The heavens with that we have in hand are angry
And frown upon's.

Ant. Their sacred wills been done! Go, get aboard;
Look to thy bark: I'll not be long before
I call upon thee.

Mar. Make your best haste, and go not Too far i' the land: 'tis like to be loud weather;
Besides, this place is famous for the creatures
Of prey that keep upon't.

Ant. Go thou away:
I'll follow instantly.

Mar. I am glad at heart
To be so rid o' the business. [Exit.
ACT IV.

THE WINTER'S TALE.

SCENE I.

Enter Time, the Chorus.

Time. I, that please some, try all, both joy and to
Of good and bad, that makes and unfolds error,
Now take upon me, in the name of Time,
To use my wings. Impute it not a crime
To me or my swift passage, that I slide
O'er sixteen years and leave the growth untir'd
Of that wide gap, since it is in my power
To overthrow law and in one self-born hour
To plant and o'erwhelm custom. Let me pass
The same I am, ere ancient'st order was Or what is now receiv'd; I witness to
The times that brought them in; so shall I do
To the freshest things now revelling and make stale
The glistering of this present, as my tale
Now seems to it. Your patience this allowing,
I turn my glass and give my scene such growing
As you had slept between: Leontes leaving,
The effects of his fond jealousies so grieving
That he shuts up himself, imagine me,
Gentle spectators, that I now may be
In fair Bohemia; and remember well,
I mentioned a son o' the king's, which Florizel
I now name to you; and with speed sopace
To speak of Perdita, now grown in grace
Equal with wondering: what of her causes
I list not prophesy; but let Time's news
Be known when 'tis brought forth. A shepherd's daughter,
And what to her adheres, which follows after,
Is the argument of Time. Of this allow,
If ever you have spent time worse ere now;
If never, yet that Time himself doth say
He wishes earnestly you never may.

[Exit.

SCENE II.—Bohemia. The palace of Polixenes.

Enter Polixenes and Camillo.

Pol. I pray thee, good Camillo, be no more importunate: 'tis a sickness denying thee any thing; a death to grant this.

262
I fear, the angle that plucks our son thither. Thou shalt accompany us to the place; where we will, not appearing what we are, have some question with the shepherd; from whose simplicity I think it not uneasy to get the cause of my son's resort thither. Prithie, be my present partner in this business, and lay aside the thoughts of Sicilia.

Com. I willingly obey your command.

Pol. My best Camillo! We must disguise ourselves. [Exit.]

SCENE III. — A road near the Shepherd's cottage.

Enter Autolycus, singing.

When daffodils begin to peer,
With height! the doxy over the dale,
Why, then comes in the sweet o' the year;
For the red blood reigns in the winter's pale.

The white sheet bleaching on the hedge,
With height! the sweet birds, O, how they sing!
Doth set my pugging tooth on edge;
For a quart of ale is a dish for a king.

The lark, that tirra-lyra chants,
With height! with height! the thrush and the jay,
Are summer songs for me and my aunts,
While we lie tumbling in the hay.

I have served Prince Florizel and in my time wore three-pile; but now I am out of service:

But shall I go mourn for that, my dear?
—The pale moon shines by night:
And when I wander here and there,
I then do most go right.

If tinkers may have leave to live,
And bear the sow-skin budget,
Then my account I well may give,
And in the stocks avouch it.

My traffic is sheets; when the kite builds, look to lesser linen. My father named me Autolycus; who being, as I am, littered under Mercury, was likewise a snapper-up of unconsidered tribes. With die and drab I purchased this caparison, and my revenue is the silly cheat. Gallows and knock are too powerful on the highway: beating and hanging are terrors to me: for the life to come, I sleep out the thought of it.

A prize! a prize! [Enter Clown.]

Clo. Let me see: every 'leven wether tods; every tod yields pound and odd shilling; fifteen hundred shorn, what comes the wool to?

Ant. [Aside] If the spring be, the cock's mine. Clo. I cannot do 't without shutters. Let me see; what am I to buy for our sheep-shearing feast? Three pound of sugar, five pound of currants, rice, —what will this sister of mine do with rice? But my father hath made her mistress of the feast, and she lays it on. She hath made me four and twenty noses for the shepherds, the shepherd, the shepherd-men-song-men all, and very good ones; but they are most of them means and bases; but one puritan amongst them, and he sings psalms to horn-pipes. I must have saffron to colour the warden pies; mace; dates; — none's that out of my note; nutmegs, seven; a race or twain for the shepherds, the shepherds, — but that I may beg: four pound of prunes, and as many of raisins o' the sun.

Ant. O that ever I was born! [Grovelling on the ground.]

Clo. I' the name of me —

Ant. O, help me, help me! pluck but off these rags; and then, death, death! Clo. Alack, poor soul! thou hast need of more rags to lay on thee, rather than have these off.

Ant. O sir, the loathsomeness of them offends me more than the stripes I have received, which are mighty ones and millions.

Clo. Alack for me! a million of beating may come to a great matter.

Ant. I am robbed, sir, and beaten; my money and apparel ta'en from me, and these detestable things put upon me.

Clo. What, by a horseman, or a footman?

Ant. A footman, sweet sir, a footman.

Clo. Indeed, he should be a footman by the garments he has left with thee: if this be a horseman's coat, it hath seen very hot service. Lend me thy hand, I'll help thee: come, lend me thy hand.

Ant. O, good sir, tenderly, O!

Clo. Alas, poor soul!

Ant. O, good sir, softly, good sir! I fear, sir, my shoulder-blade is out.

Clo. How now! canst stand?

Ant. [Picking his pocket] Softly, dear sir; good sir, softly. You ha' done me a charitable office.

Clo. Dost lack any money? I have a little money for thee.

Ant. No, good sweet sir; no, I beseech you, sir: I have a kinsman not past three-quarters of a mile hence, unto whom I was going: I shall there have money, or any thing I want: offer me no money, I pray you; that kills my heart.

Clo. What manner of fellow was he that robbed

Ant. A fellow, sir, that I have known to go about with troll-my-dames: I knew him once a servant of the prince: I cannot tell, good sir, for which of his virtues it was, but he was certainly whipped out of the court.

Clo. His vices, you would say; there's no virtue whipped out of the court: they cherish it to make it stay there; and yet it will no more but abide.

Ant. Vices, I would say, sir. I know this man well: he hath been since an ape-bearer; then a process-server, a bailiff; then he compassed a motion of the Prodigal Son, and married a tinker's wife within a mile where my land and living lies; and, having flown over many knavish professions, he settled only in rogue: some call him Autolycus.

Clo. Out upon him! prig, for my life, prig: he haunts workshops, fairs and bear-baitings.

Ant. Very true, sir; he, sir, he; that's the rogue that put me into this apparel.

Clo. Not a more cowardly rogue in all Bohemia: if you had but looked big and spit at him, he'd have run away.

Ant. I must confess to you, sir, I am no fighter: I am false of heart that way; and that he knew, I

Clo. How do you now? [warrant him.]

Ant. Sweet sir, much better than I was; I can stand and walk: I will even take my leave of you, and pace softly towards my kinsman's.

Clo. Shall I bring thee on the way?

Ant. No, good-faced sir; no, sweet sir.

Clo. Then fare thee well: I must go buy spices for our sheep-shearing.

Ant. Prosper you, sweet sir! [Exit Clown.] Your purse is not hurt enough to purchase your splice. I'll be with you at your sheep-shearing too: if I make not this cheat bring out another and the shearers prove sheep, let me be unrolled and my name put in the book of virtue!

[Sings] Jog on, jog on, the foot-path way,
And merrily hunt the stile-a:
A merry heart goes all the day,
Your sad tires in a mile-a. [Exit.]

SCENE IV.—The Shepherd's cottage.

Enter Florizel and Perdita.

Flo. These your unusual weeds to each part of you Do give a life: no shepherdess, but Flora.
Peering in April’s front. This your sheep-shearing
Is as a meeting of the petty gods,
And you the queen on ’t.

Per. Sir, my gracious lord,
To chide at your extremities it not becomes me:
O, pardon, that I name them! Your high self,
The gracious mark o’ the land, you have obscured
With a swain’s wearing, and me, poor lowly maid,
Most goddess-like prank’d up: but that our feasts
In every mess have folly and the feathers
Digest it with a custom, I should blush
To see you so attired, sworn, I think,
To show myself a glass.

Flo. I bless the time
When my good falcon made her flight across
Thy father’s ground.

Per. Now Jove afford you cause!
To me the difference forges dread; your greatness
Hath not been used to fear. Even now I tremble
To think your father, by some accident,
Should pass this way as you did: O, the Fates!
How should he see, to see his work so noble Vilely bound up? What would he say? Or how Should I, in these my borrow’d haunts, behold
The sternness of his presence?

Flo. Nothing but jollity. The gods themselves,
Humbling their deities to love, have taken
The shapes of beasts among them: Jupiter
Become a bull, and bellow’d; the green Neptune
A ram, and bleated; and the fire-robbed god,
Golden Apollo, a poor humble swain,
As I am now. Their transformations
Were never for a piece of beauty rarer,
Nor in a way so chaste, since my desires
Run not before mine honour, nor my lusts
Burn hotter than my faith.

Per. O, but, sir,
Your resolution cannot hold, when ‘tis
Opposed, as it must be, by the power of the king:
One of these two must be necessities, [purpose,
Which then will speak, that you must change this
Or I my life.

Thou dearest Perdita,
With these forced thoughts, I prithee, darken not
The mirth o’ the feast. Or I’ll be thine, my fair
Or not my father’s. For I cannot be Mine own, nor any thing to any, if I be not thine. To this I am most constant,
Though destiny say no. But, gentle:
Strangle such thoughts as these with any thing
That you behold the while. Your guests are coming:
Lift up your countenance, as it were the day
Of celebration of that nuptial which
We two have sworn shall come.

Per. O lady Fortune,
Stand you auspicious!

Flo. See, your guests approach:
Address yourself to entertain them sprightly,
And let’s be red with mirth.

Enter Shepherd, Clown, Mopses, Dorcas, and others, with Polixenes and Camillo disguised.

Shep. Fie, daughter! when my old wife lived, upon
This day she was both pantler, butler, cook,
Both dame and servant: welcomed all, served all;
Who would have thou known, now how? now here,
At upper end o’ the table, now i’ the middle;
On his shoulder, and his; her face o’ fire
With labour and the thing she took to quench it,
She would to each one sip. If you are retired,
As if you were a feasted one and not
The hostess of the meeting; pray you, bid
These unknown friends to your welcome: for it is
A way to make us better friends, more known.
Come, quench your blushes and present yourself
That which you are, mistress o’ the feast: come on,
And bid us welcome to your sheep-shearing,
As your good flock shall prosper.

Flo. [To Sir.] Sir, welcome:
It is my father’s will I should take on me
The hostess-ship of the day. [To Cam.] You’re welcome, sir.

Give me those flowers there, Dorcas. Reverend sirs,
For you there’s rosemary and rue: these keep Seeming and savour all the winter long:
Grace and remembrance be to you both,
And welcome to our shearing!

Pol. Shepherd,—
A fair one are you — well you fit our ages
With flowers of winter.

Per. Sir, the year growing ancient,
Not yet on summer’s death, nor on the birth
Of trembling winter, the fairest flowers o’ the sea
Are our carnations and streak’d gillyvors, [son
Which some call nature’s bastards: of that kind
Our rustic garden’s barren; and I care not
To get slips of them.

Pol. Wherefore, gentle maiden,
Do you neglect them?

Per. For I have heard it said
There is an art which in their pleasantness shares
With great creating nature.

Flo. Say there be;
Yet nature is made better by no mean
But nature makes that mean: so, over that art
Which you say adds to nature, is an art
That nature makes. You see, sweet maid, we marry
A gentler scion to the wildest stock:
And make an conceive a buck of baser kind
By bud of nobler race: this is an art
Which does mend nature, change it rather, but
The art itself is nature.

Per. So it is.

Pol. Then make your garden rich in gillyvors,
And do not call them bastard.

Per. I’ll not put
The dibble in earth to set one slip of them;
No more than were I painted I would wish [fore
This youth should say ‘t were well and only there-
Desire to breed by me. Here’s flowers for you;
Hot lavender, mints, savory, marjoram;
The marigold, that goes to bed wi’ the sun
And with him rises weeping: these are flowers
Of middle summer, and I think they are given
To men of middle age. You’re very welcome.

Cam. I should leave gazing, were I of your flock,
And only live by gazing.

Per. Out, alas!
You’d be so lean, that blasts of January
Would blow you through and through. Now, my fair’st friend,
I would I had some flowers o’ the spring that might Become your time of day: and yours, and yours,
That wear upon your virgin branches yet
Your maidenheads growing: O Proserpina,
For the flowers now, that frighted thou letst fall
From Dis’s wagon! daffodils,
That come before the swallow dares, and take
The winds of March with beauty; violets dim,
But sweeter than the lids of Juno’s eyes
Or Cytherea’s breath; pale primroses,
That die unmarried, ere they can behold
Bright Phebus in his strength — a malady
Most incident to maid: bold exilips and
The crown imperial; lilies of all kinds,
The flower-de-luce being one! O, these I lack,
To make you garlands of, and my sweet friend,
To strew him over and over!

Flo. What, like a corse?

Per. No, like a bank for love to lie and play on;
Not like a corse; or if, not to be buried, [flowers:
But quick and in mine arms. Come, take your Menthinks I play as I have seen them do
ACT IV.

THE WINTER'S TALE.

SCENE IV.

In Whitsun pastorals: sure this robe of mine
Does change my disposition.

Flo. What you do shall letters what is done. When you speak, sweet,
I'll have you do it ever: when you sing,
I'll have you buy and sell so, so give alms,
Pray so; and, for the ordering your affairs,
To sing them too: when you do dance, I wish you
A wave o' the sea, that you might ever do
Nothing but that; move still, still so,
And own no other function: each your doing,
So singular in each particular,
Crowns what you are doing in the present deed,
That all your acts are queens.

Per. Your praises are too large: but that your youth,
And the true blood which peepeth fairly through 't,
Do plainly give you out an unstaun'd shepherd,
With wisdom I might fear, my Doricles,
You wou'd me do the false way.

Flo. I think you have
As little skill to fear as I have purpose.
To put you to 't. But come; our dance, I pray:
Your hand, my Perdita: so turtles pair,
That never mean to part.

Per. I'll swear for 'em.

Pol. This is the prettiest low-born lass that ever Ran on the green-sward: nothing she does or seems
But smackes of something greater than herself,
Too noble for this place.

Cam. He tells her something
That makes her blood look out: good sooth, she is
The queen of curds and cream.

Clo. Come on, strike up!

Mop. Now, in good time!

Clo. Not a word, a word; we stand upon our Come, strike up!

[Music. Here a dance of Shepherds and Shepherdesses.

Pol. Pray, good shepherd, what fair swain is this
Which dances with your daughter?

Slep. They call him Doricles; and boasts himself
To have a worthy feeding: but I have it
Upon his own report and I believe it:
He looks like sooth. He says he loves my daughter:
I think so too; for never gazed the moon
Upon the water as he 'll stand and read
As 't were my daughter's eyes: and, to be plain,
I think there is not half a kiss to choose
Who loves another best.

Pol. She dances fealty.

Slep. So she does anything; though I report it,
That should be silent: if young Doricles
Do light upon her, she shall bring him that
Which he not dreams of.

Enter Servant.

Serv. O master, if you but did hear the pedlar at the door, you would never dance again after a tabor and pipe: no, the bagpipe could not move you: he sings several tunes faster than you 'll tell money; he utters them as he had eaten ballads and all men's ears grew to his tunes.

Clo. He could never come better; he shall come in.
I love a ballad but even too well, if it be dole-ful matter merrily set down, or a very pleasant thing indeed and sung lamentably.

Nob. He has hath songs for man or woman, of all sizes; no milliner can so fit his customers with gloves: he has the prettiest love-songs for maids; so without bawdry, which is strange; with such delicate burthen of dildos and fadings, 'jump her and thump her,' and where some stretch-mouthed rascal would, as it were, mean mischief and break a foul gap into the matter, he makes the maid to answer 'Wooop, do me no harm, good man; 'puts him off, slights him, with 'Wooop, do me no harm, good man.'

Pol. This is a brave fellow.

Clo. Believe me, thou talkest of an admirable conceited fellow. Has he any unbraided wares?

Serv. He hath ribbons of all the colours I the rainbow: points more than all the lawyers in Boho-mia can learnedly handle, though they come to him by the ground, nickles, caddles, cambries, lawns:
why, he sings 'em over as they were gods or goddesses; you would think a smock were a she-angel, he clouds to the sleeve-hand and the work about the square on 't.

Clo. Prithee bring him in; and let him approach singing.

Per. Forewarn him that he use no scurrilous words in 's tunes.

[Exit Servant.

Clo. You have of these pedlars, that have more in them than you 'll think, sister.

Per. Ay, good brother, or go about to think.

Enter Autolycus, singing.

Lawn as white as driven snow;
Cyper black as e'er was crow;
Gloves as sweet as damask roses;
Masks for faces and for noses;
Bugle bracelet, necklace amber,
Perfume for a lady's chamber;
Golden quofts and stomachers,
For my lads to give their dears:
Pins and poking-sticks of steel,
What maids lack from head to heel:
Come buy of me, come: come buy, come buy;
Buy, lads, or else your lasses cry:
Come buy.

Clo. If I were not in love with Mopsa, thou shouldst take no money of me; but being enthralled as I am, it will also be the bondage of certain ribbons and gloves.

Mop. I was promised them against the feast; but they come not too late now.

Dor. He hath promised you more than that, or there be liars.

Mop. He hath paid you all he promised you: may be, he has paid you more, which will shame you to give him again.

Clo. Is there no manners left among maids? will they wear their plackets where they should bear their faces? Is there not milking-time, when you are going to bed, or kiln-hole, to whistle off these secrets, but you must be little-tattling before all our guests? 'Tis well they are not longer: charm your tongues, and not a word more.

Mop. I have done. Come, you promised me a tawdry-lace and a pair of sweet gloves.

Clo. Have I not told thee how I was cozened by the way and lost all my money?

Aut. And indeed, sir, there are cozeners abroad;
therefore it behoves men to be wary. [Here.

Clo. Fear not thou, man, thou shalt lose nothing

Aut. I hope so, sir; for I have about me many parcels of charge.

Clo. What hast here? ballads?

Mop. Pray now, buy some: I love a ballad in print o' life, for then we are sure they are true.

Aut. Here's one to a very doleful tune, how a user's wife was brought to bed of twenty money-bags at a burthen, and how she longed to eat addore's heads and toads carbonadoed.

Mop. Is it true, think you?

Aut. Very true, but a month old.

Dor. Bless me from marrying a userer!

Aut. Here's the midwife's name to 't, one Mis-

ACT IV. THE WINTER’S TALE. SCENE IV.

Clo. Come on, lay it by: and let’s first see more ballads: we’ll buy the other things anon.

Aut. Here’s another ballad of a fish, that appeared upon the coast on Wednesday the four-score of April, forty thousand fathom above water, and sung this ballad against the hard hearts of maidens: it was thought she was a woman and was turned into a cold fish for she would not exchange flesh with one that loved her: the ballad is very pitiful and as

Dor. Is it true too, think you? [true. And I have heard at it, and witnesses more than my pack will hold.

Clo. Lay it by too: another.

Aut. This is a merry ballad, but a very pretty one.

Mep. Let’s have some merry ones.

Aut. Why, this is a passing merry one and goes to the tune of ’T wo maids wooning a man: ’t’s scarce a maid westward but she sings it; ’t is in request. I can tell you.

Mep. We can both sing it: if thou ’t bear a part, thou shalt hear; ’t is in three parts.

Dor. We had the tune on ’t a month ago.

Aut. I can bear my part; you must know ’t is my occupation; have at it with you.

SONG.

A. Get you hence, for I must go
When it is night, and thou to bed;
D. Whither? M. O, whither? D. Whither?
M. It becomes thy oath full well,
Thou to me thy secrets tell.
D. Me too, let me go thither.
M. Or thou goest to the grange or mill.
D. If to either, thou dost ill.
D. Thou hast sworn my love to be;
M. Thou hast sworn it more to me;
Then whither goest? say, whither?
Clo. We’ll have this song out anon by ourselves: my father and the gentlemen are in sad talk, and we’ll not trouble them. Come, bring away thy pack after me. Wenches, I’ll buy for you both. Pedlar, let’s have the first choice. Follow me, girls. [Exit with Dorcas and Mopsa.

Aut. And you shall pay well for ’em. [Follows singing.

* Will you buy any tape,
Or lace for your cape,
My dainty duck, my dear-a?
Any silk, any thread,
Any fogs for your head,
Of the new’st and finest, finest wear-a?
Come to the pedlar,
Money ’s a medler,
That doth utter all men’s ware-a. [Exit.

Re-enter Servant.

Serv. Master, there is three carters, three shepherds, three neat-herds, three wise-herds, that have made themselves all men of hair, they call themselves Saltiers, and they have a dance which the wenches say is a gallimaufry of gaubols, because they are not in’t: but they themselves are o’ the mind, if it be not too rough for some that know little but bowling, it will please plentifully.

Shep. Away! we’ll none on ’t: here has been too much homely foolery already. I know, sir, we were out.

Pol. You weary those that refresh us: pray, let’s see these four threes of herdsmen.

Serv. One three of them, by their own report, sir, hath danced before the king; and not the worst of the three but jumps twelve foot and a half by the side.

Shep. Leave your prating: since these good men are pleased, let them come in; but quickly now.

Serv. Why, they stay at door, sir. [Exit.

Here a dance of twelve Satyrs.

Pol. O, father, you’ll know more of that hereafter.

To Cam.] Is it not too far gone? ’T is time to part them.

He’s simple and tells much. [To Flor.] How now, fair shepherd! Your heart is full of something that does take Your mind from teaching. Sooth, when I was young and handed love as you do, I was wont [sack’d To load my she with knacks: I would have ran The pedlar’s silken treasury and have pour’d it To her acceptance; you have let him go And nothing marted with him. If your lass Interpretation should abuse and call this Your lack of love or bounty, you were straited For a reply, at least if you make a care Of happy holding her.

Flo. Old sir, I know
She prizes not such trifles as these: The gifts she looks from me are pack’d and lock’d Up in my heart; which I have given already. But not deliver’d. O, hear me breathe my life Before this ancient sir, who, it should seem, Hath sometime loved! I take thy hand, this hand, As soft as dove’s down and as white as it. [bolted Of Ethiopian’s tooth, or the fam’d snow that’s By the northern blasts twice o’er.

Pol. What follows this?
How prettily the young swain seems to wash
The hand was fair before! I have put you out: But to your protestation; let me hear
What you profess. [Exit.

*Pol. And this my neighbour too?

Flo. Do, and be witness to’t.

Pol. Fairly offer’d.

Cam. This shows a sound affection.

Shep. But, my daughter, Say you the like to him? I cannot speak So well, nothing so well; no, nor mean better: By the pattern of mine own thoughts I cut out The purity of his.

Shep. Take hands, a bargain! And, friends unknown, you shall bear witness to’t: I give my daughter to him, and will make Her portion equal his.

Flo. O, that must be
I’ the virtue of your daughter: one being dead, I shall have more than you can dream of yet; Enough then for your wonder. But, come on, Contract us ‘fore these witnesses.

Shep. Come, your hand; And, daughter, yours.

Pol. Soft, swain, awhile, beseech you; Have you a father?

Flo. I have: but what of him?

Pol. Knows he of this?

Flo. He neither does nor shall.

Pol. Methinks a father
Is at the nuptial of his son a guest
That best becomes the table. Pray you once more, Is not your father grown incapable Of reasonable affairs? Is he not stupid With age and altering rheums? can he speak? hear? Know man from man? dispute his own estate?
Flo. Why look you so upon me? I am but sorry, not afraid; delay'd, but nothing alter'd: what I was, I am; more straining on for plucking back, not following my leash unwillingly.

Com. Gracious my lord, you know your father's temper: at this time he will allow no speech, which I do guess you do not purpose to him; and as hardly will he endure your sight as yet, I fear: then, till the fury of his highness settle, come not before him.

Flo. I do not purpose it.

I think, Camillo?

Com. Even he, my lord.

Per. How often have I told you 'tis would be thus! How often said, my dignity would last but till 't were known!

Flo. It cannot fail but by the violation of my faith: and then let nature crush the sides o' the earth together and mar the seeds within! Lift up thy looks: From my succession where I come, father; I am heir to my affection.

Com. Be advised.

Flo. I am, and by my fancy: if my reason will thereto be obedient, I have reason; if not, my senses, better pleased with madness, do bid it welcome.

Com. This is desperate, sir.

Flo. So call it: but it does fulfill my vow; I needs must think it honesty. Camillo, not for Bohemia, nor the pomp that may be thereof gain'd, for all the sun seas or the close earth wounds or the profound sea hides In unknown fathoms, will I break my oath to this my fair beloved: therefore, I pray you, as you have ever been my father's honour'd friend, when he shall miss me,—as, in faith, I mean not to see him any more,—cast your good counsels Upon his passion: let myself and fortune tug for the time to come. This you may know and do deliver, I am put to sea With her whom here I cannot hold on shore; and most opportune to our need I have A vessel rides fast by, but not prepared for this design. What course I mean to hold shall nothing benefit your knowledge, nor concern me the reporting.

Com. O my lord! I would your spirit were easier for advice, or stronger for your need.

Hark, Perdita [Drawing her aside.

I'll hear you by and by.

Com. He's irremovable, resolved for flight. Now were I happy, if his going I could frame to serve my turn, save him from danger, do him love and honour, purchase the sight again of dear Sicilia and that unhappy king, my master, whom I so much thirst to see.

Flo. Now, good Camillo; I am so fraught with curious business that I leave out ceremony.

Com. Sir, I think you have heard of my poor services, 'tis the love That I have borne your father?

Flo. Very nobly have you deserved: it is my father's music To speak your deeds, not little of his care To have them recomposed as thought on.

Com. Well, my lord, if you may please to think I love the king And through him what is nearest to him, which is your gracious self, embrace but my direction: If your more ponderous and settled project May suffer alteration, on mine honour,
I'll point you where you shall have such receiving
As shall become your highness; where you may Enjoy your mistress, from the whom, I see,
There shall be no dispute, but by
— As heavens forend! — your ruin; marry her,
And, with my best endeavours in your absence,
Your discontenting father strive to qualify
And bring him up to liking.

Flo. How, Camillo,
May this, almost a miracle, be done?
That I may call thee something more than man
And after that trust to thee.

Com. Have you thought on
A place wherefo you 'll go?
But as the unthought-on accident is guilty
To what we wildly do, so we profess
Ourselfes to be the slaves of chance and flies
Of every wind that blows.

Com. Then list to me:
This follows, if you will not change your purpose
But undergo this flight, make for Sicilia,
And there present yourself and your fair prince,
For so I see she must be, fore Leontes:
She shall be habited as it becomes
The partner of your bed. Methinks I see Leontes opening his arms and, but —
His welcomes forth; asks thee the son forgiveness,
As 'twere I the father's person; kisses the hands
Of your fresh princess; o'er and o'er divides him
Twixt his unkindness and his kindness: the one
He chides to hell and bids the other grow
Faster than thought or time.

Flo. Worthy Camillo,
What colour for your visitation shall I
Hold up before him?

Com. Sent by the king your father to greet him and to give him comforts, Sir;
The manner of your bearing towards him, with
What you as from your father shall deliver,
Things known betwixt us three, I'll write you down:
The which shall point you forth at every sitting
What you must say; that he shall not perceive
But that you have your father's bosom there
And speak his very heart.

I am bound to you:

Com. There is some sap in this.
A cause more promising
Than a wild dedication of yourselves
To earth'd waters, undream'd shores, most certain
To miseries enough: no hope to help you,
But as you shake off one to take another;
Nothing so certain as your anchors, who
Do their best office, if they can but stay you
Where you 'll be forth to be: besides you know
Prosperity's the very bond of love,
Whose fresh complexion and whose heart together
Affliction alters.

Per. One of these is true:
I think affliction may subdue the cheek,
But not take in the mind.

Com. Yea, say you so?
There shall not at your father's house these seven years Be born another such.

Flo. My good Camillo,
She is as forward of her breeding as
She be for the return of our.

Com. I cannot say 'tis pity
She lacks instructions, for she seems a mistress
To most that teach.

Per. Your pardon, sir; for this
I'll blush you thanks.

Flo. My prettiest Perdita!
But O, the thorns we stand upon! Camillo,
Preserver of my father, now of me,
The medicine of our house, how shall we do?
ACT IV.

THE WINTER'S TALE.

SCENE IV.

For I do fear eyes over—to shipboard
Get undescribed.

That I must bear a part.

No remedy.

Have you done there?

Should I now meet my father,
He would not call me son.

Nay, you shall have no hat.

[Giving it to Perdita.]

Come, lady, come. Farewell, my friend.

Adieu, sir.

Fio. O Perdita, what have we twain forgot?

Pray you, a word [king

[Aside]

What do I now shall be to tell thee
Of this escape and whither they are bound;
Wherein my hope is I shall so prevail
To force him after: in whose company
I shall review Sicilia, for whose sight
I have a woman's longing.

Fortune speed us!

Thus we set on, Camillo, to the sea-side.

The swifter speed the better.

Re-enter Clown and Shepherd.

Aside, aside; here is more matter for a hot brain:
every lane's end, every shop, church, session, hanging,
yields a careful man work.

See, see; what a man you are now! There is no other way but to tell the king she's a changening and none of your flesh and blood.

Nay, but hear me.

Go to, then.

Sic being none of your flesh and blood, your flesh and blood hath not offended the king; and so your flesh and blood is not to be punished by him.
Show those things you found about her, those secret things, all but what she has with her: this being done, let the law go whistle: I warrant you.

Tell, I will tell the king all, every word, yea, and his son's pranks too; who, I may say, is no honest man, neither to his father, nor to me, to go about to make me the king's brother-in-law.

Indeed, brother-in-law was the farthest off you could have been to him and then your blood had been the dearer by I know how much an ounce.

Though him not naturally honest, I am so sometimes by chance: let me pocket up my pedlar's excrement. [Takes off his false beard.] How now, rustics! whither are you bound?

To the palace, an it like your worship.

Your affairs there, what, with whom, the collection of that fardel, the place of your dwelling, your names, your ages, of what having, breeding,
and any thing that is fitting to be known, discover.

Clo. We are but plain fellows, sir.

Aut. A lie; you are rough and hairy. Let me have no lying, it becomes both tradesmen, and they often give us soldiers the lie: but we pay them for it with stamped coin, not stuffing steel: therefore they do not give us the lie.

Clo. Your worship had like to have given us one,
if you had not taken yourself with the manner.

Shew. Are you a courtier, an't like you, sir?

Aut. Whether it like me or no, I am a courtier.
Seest thou not the air of the court in these enfold-ings? hast not my gait in it the measure of the court? receives not thy nose court-colour from being reflected on the baseless court-contempt?
Thinketh thou, for that I insinuate, or leane from thee thy business, I am therefore no courtier?
I am courtier cap-a-pe; and one that will either push on or pluck back thy business there: whereupon
I command thee to open thy affair.

Shew. My business, sir, is to the king.

Aut. What advocate hast thou to him?

Clo. Advocate's the court-word for a pheasant:
say you have none.

[hen.

Aut. None, sir; I have no pheasant, cock nor

Clo. How hast thou that are not simple men?
Yet nature might have made me as these are,
Therefore I will not disdain.

Clo. This cannot be but a great courtier.

Shew. His garments are rich, but he wears them not handsomely.

Clo. He seems to be the more noble in being fantastical: a great man, I'll warrant; I know by the picking on 's teeth.

Aut. The fardel there? what's i' the fardel?

Wherefore that box?

Shew. Sir, there lies such secrets in this fardel and box, which none must know but the king; and while he shall know within this hour, if I may come to the speech of him.

Aut. Age, thou hast lost thy labour.

Shew. Why, sir?

Aut. The king is not at the palace; he is gone abroad a new ship to purge melancholy and air him self. For, if thou best able man of thing's serious, thou must know the king is full of grief.

Shep. So 'tis said, sir; about his son, that should have married a shepherd's daughter.

Aut. If that shepherd be not in hand-fast, let him fly, the curses he shall have, the tortures he shall feel, will break the back of any man, the heart of monster.

Clo. Think you so, sir?

Aut. Not he alone shall suffer what wit can make heavy and vengeance bitter; but those that are germans to him, though removed fifty times, shall all come under the hangman: which though it be great pity, yet it is necessary. An old sheep-whistling rogue, a ram-tender, to offer to have his daughter come into grace! Some say he shall be steged; but that death is too soft for him, say I; draw our throne into a sheep-cote! all deaths are too few, the sharpest too easy.

Clo. Has the old man e'er a son, sir, do you hear, an't like you, sir?

Aut. He has a son, who shall be flayed alive; then flayed over with honey, set on the head of a wasp's nest; then stand till he be three-quarters and a drum dead; then recovered again with aqua vitae or some hot menstron; then let him be tied up, as he is, and in the hottest day prog nostication proclaims, shall he be set against a brick-wall, the sun looking with a southward eye upon him, where he is to behold him with flies blown to death. But what talk we of these truitory rascals, when our sires' shadows being so capital? Tell me, for you seem to be honest plain men, what you have to the king: being something genteely considered, I'll

ACT V.

THE WINTER'S TALE.

SCENE I.

Enter Leontes, Cleomenes, Dion, Paulina, and Servants.

Cleo. Sir, you have done enough, and have perform'd a saint-like sorrow: no fault could you make, which you have not redeem'd; indeed, paid down more penitence than done trespass at the last, do as the heavens have done, forget your evil; with them forgive yourself.

Leon. Whilst I remember her and her virtues, I cannot forget my blemishes in them, and so still think of the wrong that's the case of the shepherd's son: hang him, he'll be made an example.

Cleo. Comfort, good comfort! We must to the king and show our strange sights: he must know 'tis none of your daughter nor my sister; we are gone else. Sir, I will give you as much as this old man does when the business is performed, and remain, as he says, your pawn till it be brought you.

Ant. I will trust you. Walk before toward the sea-side; go on the right hand: I will but look upon the hedge and follow you. [Hecest.

Cleo. We are blest in this man, as I may say, even Shem. Let's before as he bids us: he was provided to do us good.

ACT V.

SCENE I.—A room in Leontes' palace.

Enter Leontes, Cleomenes, Dion, Paulina, and Servants.

Cleo. Sir, you have done enough, and have performed a saint-like sorrow: no fault could you make, which you have not redeemed; indeed, paid down more penitence than done trespass at the last, do as the heavens have done, forget your evil; with them forgive yourself.

Leon. Whilst I remember her and her virtues, I cannot forget my blemishes in them, and so still think of the wrong that's the case of the shepherd's son: hang him, he'll be made an example.

[Exit.

Will have fulfilled their secret purposes;
For has not the divine Apollo said,
Isn't not the tenour of his oracle,
That King Leontes shall not have an heir
Till his lost child be found? which that it shall,
Is all as monstrous to our human reason
As my Antigonus to break his grave
And come again to me; who, on my life,
Did perish with the infant. This your counsel
My lord should to the heavens be contrary, Oppose against their wills. [To Leontes.] Care not for issue;
The crown will find an heir; great Alexander
Left his to the worthiest; so his successor
Was list to be the best.

Leon. Good Paulina,
Who hast the memory of Hermione,
I know, in honour, O, that ever I
Had squared me to thy counsel; then, even now,
I might have look'd upon my queen's full eyes,
Have taken treasure from her lips— And left them
More rich for what they yielded.

Leon. Thou speakest truth.
No more such wives; therefore, no wife: one worse,
And better used, would make her sainted spirit
Again possess her corpse, and on this stage,
Where we're offenders now, appear soul-vex'd,
And begin, 'Why to me?'

Paul. Had she such power,
She had just cause.

Leon. She had; and would incense me to murder her I married.

Paul. I should so.
Were I the ghost that walk'd, I'd bid you mark
Her eye, and tell me for what dull part in 't
You chose her; then I'd shriek, that even your ears
Should rift to hear me; and the words that follow'd
Should be 'Remember mine.'

Leon. Stars, stars,
And all eyes else dead coals! Fear thou no wife;
I'll have no wife, Paulina.

Paul. Will you swear
Never to marry but by my free leave?

Leon. Never, Paulina; so be blest my spirit!

Paul. Then, good my lords, bear witness to his Cleo. You tempt him over-much. [Exit.

Paul. Unless another,
ACT V.

THE WINTER'S TALE.

SCENE I.

As like Hermione as is her picture,
Affront his eye.

Cleo. Good madam,—

Cleo. I have done.

Yet, if my lord will marry—if you will, sir,
No remedy, but you will,—give me the office
To check she shall not be so young
As was your former; but she shall be such
As walk'd your first queen's ghost, it should take joy
To see her in your arms.

Leon. My true Paulina,
We shall not marry till thou bid'st us.

That shall be when your first queen's again in breath;
Never tell then.

Enter a Gentleman.

Gent. One that gives out himself Prince Florizel, Son of Polixenes, with his princess, she
The fairest I have yet beheld, desires access
To your high presense.

Leon. What with him? he comes not Like to his father's greatness: his approach,
So out of circumstance and sudden, tells us
'Tis not a visitation framed, but forced
By need and accident. What train?

Gent. But few,
And those but mean.
Leon. His princess, say you, with him?
Gent. Ay, the most peerless piece of earth, I think,
That ever the sun shone bright on.

Paul. O Hermione,
As every present time doth boast itself
Above a better gone, so must thy grave
Give way to what's seen now! Sir, you yourself
Have said and writ so, but your writing now
Is colder than that then. She had not been,
Nor was not to be equal'd;—thus your verse
Flow'd with her beauty once: 'tis shrewdly ebb'd,
To say you have seen a better.

Gent. Pardon, madam:
The one I have almost forgot,—your pardon,—
The other, when she has obtain'd your eye,
Will have your tongue too. This is a creature,
Would she begin a sect, might quench the zeal
Of all professors else, make proslytes
Of who she but bid follow.

Paul. How! not women?

Gent. Women will love her, that she is a woman
More worth than any man; men, that she is
The rarest of all women.
Leon. Go, Cleomenes;
Yourself, assisted with your honour'd friends,
Bring them to our embracement. Still, 'tis strange [Execute Cleomenes and others.
He thus should steal upon us.

Paul. Had our prince,
Jewel of children, seen this hour, he had pair'd
Well with this lord: there was not full a month
Between their births.

Leon. Praise, no more; cease; thou know'st
He dies to me again when talk'd of; sure,
When I shall see this gentleman, thy speeches
Will bring me to consider that which may Unfurnish me of reason. They are come.

Re-enter Cleomenes and others, with Florizel and Perdita.

Your mother was most true to wedlock, prince;
For she did print your royal father off,
Conceiving you were but twenty-one,
Your father's image is so hit in you,
His very air, that I should call you brother,
As I did him, and speak of something wildly
By us perform'd before. Most dearly welcome!
And your fair princess,—godness!—O, alas!
I lost a couple, that 'twixt heaven and earth
Might thus have stood begetting wonder as

You, gracious couple, do: and then I lost—
All mine own folly,—the society,
Amitio too, of your brave father, whom,
Though bearing misery, I desire my life
Once more to look on him.

Flo. By his command
Have I here touch'd Sicilia and from him
Give you all greetings that a king, at friend,
Can send his brother: and, by infancy
Which waits upon worn times hath something seized
His wish'd ability, he had himself
The lands and waters 'twixt your throne and his Measured to look upon you, whom he loves—
He bade me say so—more than all the sceptres
And those that bear them living.

Leon. O my brother,
Good gentleman! the wrongs I have done thee stir
Afresh within me, and these thy offices,
So rarely kind, are as interpreters
Of my behind-hand slackness. Welcome hither,
As is the spring to the earth. And hath he too
Expos'd this paragon to the fearful usage,
At least ungentle, of the dreadful Neptune,
To greet a man not worth her pains, much less
The adventure of her person? Good my lord,
She came from Libya.

Leon. Where the warlike Smalus,
That noble honour'd lord, is fear'd and loved?
Flo. Most royal sir, from thence; from him,
Whose daughter
His tears proclaim'd his, parting with her: thence,
A prosperous south wind friendly, we have cross'd,
To execute the charge my father gave me
For visiting his highness: my best train
I have from your Sicilian shores dismissed;
Who for Bohemia bend, to signify
Not only my success in Libya, sir,
But my arrival and my wife's in safety
Here where we are.

Leon. The blessed gods
Purge all infection from our air whilst you
Do climax here! You have a holy father,
A graceful gentleman; against whose person,
So sacred as it is, I have done sin:
For which the heavens, taking angry note,
Have left me issueless; and your father's blest,
As he from heaven merits it, with you
Worthy his goodness. What might I have been,
Might I a son and daughter now have look'd on,
Such goodly things as you!

Enter a Lord.

Lord. Most noble sir,
That which I shall report will bear no credit,
Were not the proof so nigh. Please you, great sir,
Bohemia greets you from himself by me;
Desires you to attach his son, who has—
His dignity and duty both cast off—
Fled from his father, from his hopes, and with
A shepherd's daughter.

Lord. Here in your city; I now came from him:
I speak amazedly; and it becomes
My marvel and my message. To your court
While he was hastening, in the chase, it seems,
Of this fair couple, meets he on the way
The father of this seeming lady and
Her brother, having both their country quitted
With this young prince.

Flo. Camillo has betray'd me;
Whose honour and whose honesty till now
Endured all weather.

Lord. Lay 't so to his charge:
He's with the king your father.

Leon. Who? Camillo?
Lord. Camillo, sir; I spake with him; who now
ACT V.

THE WINTER'S TALE.

SCENE II.

Enter a third Gentleman.

Here enters the Lady Paulina's steward: he can deliver you more. How goes it now, sir? this news which is called true is so like an old tale, that the verity of it is in strong suspicion: has the king found his heir?

Third Gent. Most true, if ever truth were preferred by circumstance: that which you hear you'll swear you see, is there such unity in the proofs. The mantle of Queen Hermione's, her jewel about the neck of it, the letters of Antigonus found with it which they know to be his character, the majesty of the creature in resemblance of the mother, the affection of none less wise than nature shows above her breeding, and many other evidences proclaim her with all certainty to be the king's daughter. Did you see the meeting of the two kings?

Sec. Gent. No.

Third Gent. Then have you lost a sight, which was to be seen, cannot be spoken of. There might you have beheld one joy crown another, so and in such manner that it seemed sorrow went to take leave of them, for their joy was in tears. There was casting up of eyes, holding up of hands, with motions of despair. But enough, they shall be known by garment, not by favour. Our king, being ready to leap out of himself for joy of his found daughter, as if that joy were now become a loss, cries 'O, thy mother, thy mother!' then asks Bohemia forgiveness; then embraces his son-in-law; and again weeps over his former loss. He moves her: now he thanks the old shepherd, which stands by like a weather-bitten conduit of many kings' reigns. I never heard of such another encounter, which lares report to follow it and undoes description to do it.

Sec. Gent. What, pray you, became of Antigonus, that carried hence the child?

Third Gent. Like an old tale still, which will have matter to rehearse, though credit be asleep and not an ear open. He was torn to pieces with a bear: this avouches the shepherd's son: who has not only his innocence, which seems much, to justify him, but a handkerchief and rings of his that Paulina knows.

First Gent. What became of his bark and his followers?

Third Gent. Wrecked the same instant of their master's death and in the view of the shepherd; so that all the instruments which aided to expose the child were even then lost when it was found. But 0, the noble combat that 'twixt joy and sorrow was fought in Paulina! She had one eye declined for the loss of her husband, another elevated that the oracle was fulfilled: she lifted the princess from the earth, and so locks her in embraces, as if she would pin her to her heart that she might no more be in danger of losing.

First Gent. The dignity of this act was worth the audience of kings and princes; for by such was it acted.

Third Gent. One of the prettiest touches of all and that which angled for mine eyes, caught the water though not the fish, was when, at the relation of the queen's death, with the manner how she came bravely to be confessed and lamented by the king, how attentiveness wounded his daughter; till, but one sign of dolor to another, she did, with an 'Alas,' I would fain say, bleed tears, for I am sure my heart wept blood. Who was most marble there changed colour; some swooned, all sorrowed: if all the world could have seen 't, the woe had been universal.

First Gent. Are they returned to the court?

Third Gent. No: the princess hearing of her mother's statue, which is in the keeping of Paulina,—a piece many years in doing and now newly performed by that rare Italian master, Julio Romano, who, had
ACT V.

THE WINTER'S TALE.

SCENE III.

Enter Shepherd and Clown.

Here come those I have done good to against my will, and already appearing in the blossoms of their fortune.

Shep. Come, boy; I am past moe children, but thy sons and daughters will be all gentlemen born.

Clo. You are well met, sir. You denied to fight with me this other day, because I was no gentleman born. See these clothes? say you see them not, and think me still no gentleman born: you were best say these robes are not gentlemen born: give me the lie, do, and try whether I am not now a gentleman born.

Aut. I know you are now, sir, a gentleman born.

Clo. Ay, and have been so any time these four hours.

Shep. And so have I, boy.

Clo. So you have: but I was a gentleman born before my father; for the king's son took me by the hand, and called me brother; and then the two kinsmen may be father and brother; and then the prince my brother and the princess my sister called my father; and so we wept, and there was the first gentleman-like tears that ever we shed.

Shep. We may live, son, to shed many more.

Clo. Ay; or else 'twere hard luck, being in so preposterous estate as we are.

Aut. I humbly beseech you, sir, to pardon me all the faults I have committed to your worship and to give me your good report to the prince my master.

Shep. Prithee, son: do; for we must be gentle, now we are gentlemen.

Aut. Thou wilt amend thy life?

Clo. Ay, an it like your good worship.

Aut. Give me thy hand: I will swear to the prince thou art as honest a true fellow as any is in Bohemia.

Shep. You may say it, but not swear it.

Clo. Not swear it, now I am a gentleman? Let boors and franklins say it, I'll swear it.

Shep. How if it be false, son?

Clo. If it be ne'er so false, a true gentleman may swear it in the behalf of his friend: and I'll swear to the prince thou art a tall fellow of thy hands and that thou wilt not be drunk; but I know thou art no tall fellow of thy hands and that thou wilt be drunk: but I'll swear it, and I would thou wouldest be a tall fellow of thy hands.

Aut. I will prove so, sir, to my power.

Clo. Ay, by any means prove a tall fellow; if I do not wonder how thou dar'st venture to be drunk, not being a tall fellow, trust me not. Hark! the kings and the princes, our kindred, are going to see the queen's picture. Come, follow us: we'll be thy good masters.

[Exeunt.]

SCENE III.—A chapel in Paulina's house.

Enter Leontes, Polixenes, Florizel, Perdita, Camillo, Paulina, Lords, and Attendants.

Leom. O grave and good Paulina, the great com-

That I have had of thee!

Paul. What, sovereign sir, I did not well I meant well. All my services

You have paid home: but that you have vouchsafed,

With your crown'd brother and these your con-

Heirs of your kingdoms, my poor house to visit,

It is a surplus of your grace, which never

My life may last to answer.

Paul. O Paulina, We honour you with trouble: but we came

To see the statue of your queen; your gallery
Have we pass'd through, not without much content
In many singularities; but we saw not

That which my daughter came to look upon,

The statue of her mother.

Paul. As she lived peerless, So her dead likeness, I do well believe,

Exeld whatever yet you look'd upon
Or hand of man hath done; therefore I keep it

Lonely, apart. But here it is; prepare

To see the life as lively mock'd as ever

Still sleep mock'd death: behold, and say 'tis well.

[Paulina draws a curtain, and discovers

Hermione standing like a statue.

I like your silence, it the more shows off
Your wonder: but yet speak; first, you, my liege.

Comes it not something near?

Paul. Her natural posture! Chide me, dear stone, that I may say indeed

Thou art Hermione; or rather, thou art she

In thy not chiding, for she was as tender
As infancy and grace. But yet, Paulina,
Hermione was not so much wrinkled, nothing
So aged as this seems.

Paul. O, not by much.

Paul. So much the more our carver's excellence:

Which lets go by some sixteen years and makes her

As she lived now.

Paul. As now she might have done, So much to my good comfort, as it is Now piercing to my soul. O, thus she stood,

Even with such life of majesty, warm life,

As now it coldly stands, when first I woo'd her!

I am ashamed: does not the stone rebuke me

For being more stone than it? O royal piece,

There's magic in thy majesty, which has

My evils conjured to remembrance and

From thy admiring daughter took the spirits,

Standing like stone with thee.

Per. And give me leave, And do not say 't is superstition, that

I kneel and then implore her blessing. Lady,

Dear queen, that ended when I but began,

Give me that hand of yours to kiss.

Paul. O, patience! The statue is but newly fix'd, the colour's

Not dry.

Pol. My lord, your sorrow was too sore laid on,
Which sixteen winters cannot blow away,

So many summers dry: scarce any joy

Did ever so long live; no sorrow

But kill'd itself much sooner.

Pol. Dear my brother,
Act V.

THE WINTER'S TALE.

Scene III.

Let him that was the cause of this have power
To take off so much grief from you as he
Will piece up in himself.

Paul. Indeed, my lord,
If I had thought the sight of my poor image
Would thus have wrought you,—for the stone is,
I'll have show'd it.  [mine—
As any cordial comfort. Still, methinks, already—
What was he that did make it?—See, my lord,
Would you not deem it breathed; and that those
Did verily bear blood?—[veins

Paul. No longer shall you gaze on 't, lest your May think anon it moves.

Leon. Let he, let be.
Would I were dead, but that, methinks, already—
What was he that did make it?—See, my lord,
Would you not deem it breathed; and that those
Did verily bear blood?—[veins

Paul. Masterly done:
The very life seems warm upon her lip.
Leon. The figure of her eye has motion in 't,
As we are mock'd with art.

Paul. I'll draw the curtain:
My lord's almost so far transported that He'll think anon it lives.

Leon. O sweet Paulina,
Make me to think so twenty years together!
No settled senses of the world can match
The pleasure of that madness. Let 't alone.

Paul. I am sorry, sir, I have thus far stirr'd you:
I could afflic you farther. [but

Leon. Do, Paulina;
For this affliction has a taste as sweet
As any cordial comfort. Still, methinks, there's
If an air comes from her: what fine chisel
Could ever yet cut breath? Let no man mock me,
For I will kiss her.

Paul. Good my lord, forbear:
The rudeness upon her lip is wet;
You mar it if you kiss it, stain your own
With oily painting. Shall I draw the curtain?

Leon. No, not these twenty years.

Per. So long could I

Stand by, a looker on.

Paul. Either forbear,
Quit presently the chapel, or resolve you
For more amazement. If you can behold it,
I'll make the statue move indeed, descend
And take you by the hand: but then you'll think—
Which I protest against—I am assisted
By wicked powers.

Leon. What you can make her do,
I am content to look on: what to speak,
I am content to hear; for 'tis as easy
To make her speak as move.

Paul. It is required
You do awake your faith. Then all stand still;
On: those that think it is unlawful business
I am about, let them depart.

Leon. Proceed:
No foot shall stir.

't is time: descent; be stone no more: approach;
Strike all that look upon with marvel. Come,
I'll fill your grave up: stir, nay, come away,

Bequeath to death your numbness, fear from him
Dear life redeems you. You perceive she stirs:

Hermione comes down.

Start not; her actions shall be holy as
You hear my spell is lawful: do not shun her
Until you see her die again; for then
You kill her double. Nay, present your hand:
When she was young you woo'd her; now in age
Is she become the suitor?

Leon. O, she's warm!
If this be magic, let it be an art
Lawful as eating.

Pol. She embraces him.

Cam. She hangs about his neck:
If she pertain to life let her speak too.

Paul. That she is living,
Were it but told you, should be hooted at
Like an old tale: but it appears she lives,
Though yet she speaks not. Mark a little while.
Please you to interpose, fair madam: kneel
And pray your mother's blessing. Turn, good lady;
Our Perdita is found.

Leon. You gods, look down
And from your sacred vials pour your graces
Upon your daughter's head! Tell me, mine own, Where hast thou been preserved? where lived? how found
Thy father's court? for thou shalt hear that I,
Knowing by Paulina that the oracle
Gave hope thou wast in being, have preserved
Myself to see the issue.

Paul. There's time enough for that;
Lest they desire upon this push to trouble
Your joys with like relation. Go together,
You precious winners all: your exultation
Partake to every one. I, an old turtle,
Will wing me to some wither'd bough and there
My mate, that's never to be found again,
Lament till I am lost.

Leon. O, peace, Paulina!
Thou should'st a husband take by my consent,
As I by thine a wife: this is a match, [mine;
And made between 's by vows. Thou hast found
But how, is to be question'd; for I saw her,
As I thought, dead, and have in vain said many
A prayer upon her grave. I'll not seek far—
For him, I partly know his mind—to find thee
An honourable husband. Come, Camillo,
And take her by the hand, whose worth and honesty
Is richly noted and here justified
By us, a pair of kings. Let's from this place,
What! look upon my brother: both your pardons,
That e'er I put between your holy looks
My ill suspicion. This is your son-in-law
And son unto the king, who, heavens directing,
Is troth-plight to your daughter. Good Paulina,
Lead us from hence, where we may leisurely
Each one demand and answer to his part
Perform'd in this wide gap of time since first
We were dissembler'd: hastily lead away. [Exeunt.

Lady Faulconbridge.

Lords, Citizens of Angiers, Sheriff, Heralds, Officers, Soldiers, Messengers, and other Attendants.

SCENE—Partly in England, and partly in France.

ACT I.

SCENE I.—King John's palace.
Enter King John, Queen Elinor, Pembroke, Essex, Salisbury, and others, with Chatillon.

K. John. Now, say, Chatillon, what would France with us? [France

Chat. Thus, after greeting, speaks the King of my behaviour to the majesty.
The borrow'd majesty, of England here.

Eli. A strange beginning! 'tis borrow'd majesty!' [France

K. John. Silence, good mother; hear the embassy.

Chat. Philip of France, in right and true behalf Of thy deceased brother, Geoffrey's son, Arthur Plantagenet, lays most lawful claim To this fair island and the territories, To Ireland, Poictiers, Anjou, Touraine, Maine, Desiring thee to lay aside the sword Which sways usurpingly these several titles, And put the same into young Arthur's hand, Thy nephew and right royal sovereign.

K. John. What follows if we disallow of this?

Chat. The proud controlment of fierce and bloody war, To enforce these rights so forcibly withheld.

K. John. Here have we war for war and blood for blood, Controlment for controlment; so answer France.

Chat. Then take my king's defiance from my The farthest limit of my embassy. [month, K. John. Bear mine to him, and so depart in peace:

Be thou as lightning in the eyes of France; For ere thou canst report I will be there.
The thunder of my cannon shall be heard:
So hence! Be thou the trumpet of our wrath And sullen presage of your own decay.
An honourable conduct let him have:
Pembroke, look to't. Farewell, Chatillon.

[Exeunt Chatillon and Pembroke.

Eli. What now, my son! have I not ever said How that ambitious Constance would not cease Till she had kindled France and all the world, Upon the right and party of her son?
This might have been prevented and made whole With very easy arguments of love,

Which now the manage of two kingdoms must With fearful bloody issue arbitrate. [us.

K. John. Our strong possession and our right for Eli. Your strong possession much more than your right,

Or else it must go wrong with you and me:
So touch my conscience whispers in your ear,
Which none but heaven and you and I shall hear.

Enter a Sheriff.

Essex. My liege, here is the strangest controversy Come from the country to be judged by you That ever I heard; shall I produce the men?

K. John. Let them approach.

Our abbey's and our priories shall pay This expedition's charge.

Enter Robert Faulconbridge, and Philip his bastard brother.

What men are you?

Bast. Your faithful subject I, a gentleman

Born in Northamptonshire and eldest son, As I suppose, to Robert Faulconbridge, A soldier, by the honour-giving hand Of Cœur-de-lion knighted in the field.

K. John. What art thou?

Rob. The son and heir to that same Faulconbridge.

K. John. Is that the elder, and art thou the heir?

You came not of one mother then, it seems.

Bast. Most certain of one mother, mighty king; That is well known; and, as I think, one father:
But for the certain knowledge of that truth I put you o'er to heaven and to my mother;
Of that I doubt, as all men's children may. [mother Eli. Out on thee, rude man! thou dost shame thy And wound her honour with this diffluence.

Bast. I, madam? no, I have no reason for it;
That is my brother's plea and none of mine;
The which if he can prove, a'pops me out At least from fair five hundred pound a year:
Heaven guard my mother's honour and my land! K. John. A good blunt fellow. Why, being younger Both he lay claim to thine inheritance? [born,
KING JOHN.

ACT I. SCENE I.

Bast. I know not why, except to get the land. But once he slander’d me with bastardsly: But whether I be as true begot or no, That still I lay upon my mother’s head, But that I am as well begot, my liege,— Fair fall the bones that took the pains for me!— Compare our faces and be judge yourself. If old sir Robert did beget us both And were our father and this son like him, Ol’ sir Robert, father, on my knee I give heaven thanks I was not like to thee! K. John. Why, what a madcap hath heaven lent us here! Ely. He hath a trick of Ceur-de-lion’s face; The accent of his tongue affecteth him. Do you not read some tokens of my son In the large composition of this man? K. John. Mine eye hath well examined his parts And finds them perfect Richard. Sirrah, speak, What doth move you to claim your brother’s land? Bast. Because he hath a half-face, like my father, With half that face would he have all my land: A half-faced great five hundred thousand pence. Rob. My conclusion, when that my father lived, Your brother did employ my father much,— Bast. Well, sir, by this you cannot get my land: Your tale must be how he employ’d my mother. Rob. And once dispatch’d him in an embassy To Germany, there the whole world to view. To treat of old affairs touching that time. The advantage of his absence took the king And in the mean time sojourn’d at my father’s; Where how he did prevail I crave to speak. But truth is truth: large lengths of seas and shores Between my mother and my mother’s land, As I have heard my father speak himself, When this same hasty gentleman was got. Upon his death-bed he by will bequeath’d all His lands to me, and took it on his death That this my mother’s son was none of his; And if he were, he came from the world Full fourteen weeks before the course of time. Then, good my liege, let me have what is mine, My father’s land, as was my father’s will. K. John. Sirrah, your brother is legitimate; Your father’s face and body be true-born, And if she did play false, the fault was hers; Which fault lies on the hazards of all husbands That marry wives. Tell me, how if my brother, Who, as you say, took pains to get his son, Had of your father claim’d this son for his, That this my mother’s son was none of his; In sooth, he might; then, if he were my brother, My brother might not claim him; nor your father, Being none of his, refuse him: this concludes; My mother’s son did get your father’s heir; Your father’s heir must have your father’s land. Rob. Shall then my father’s will be of no force To dispossess that child which is not his? Bast. Of no more force to dispossess me, sir, Than was his will to get me, as I think. [bridge

Ely. Whether hast thou rather be a Faulconbridge And thy brother, to the shame of thy land, Or the reputed son of Ceur-de-lion, Lord of thy presence and no land beside? Bast. Madam, an if my brother had my shape, And I had his, sir Robert’s his, like him; And if my legs were as such rid-robins, My arms and such elk-skins stuff’d, my face so thin That in mine ear I durst not stick a rose [goes! Lest men should say ‘Look, where three-farthings And, to his shape, were heir to all this land, Would I might never stir from off this place, I would not be sir Rob in any case. [time, Ely. I like thee well: wilt thou forsake thy for- Bequeath thy land to him and follow me? I am a soldier and now bound to France. [chance. Bast. Brother, take you my land, I’ll take your face hath got five hundred pound a year, Yet sell your face for five pence and I is dear. Madam, I’ll not bow you into this face. Ely. Nay, I would have you go before me thither. Bast. Our country manners give our betterways. K. John. What is thy name? Bast. Philip, my liege, so is my name begun; Philip, good old sir Robert’s wife’s eldest son. K. John. Rob. Mine heart here beareth his name whose form thou bearest: Kneel thou down Philip, but rise more great, Arise sir Richard and Faulconbridge. [hand, Bast. Brother by the mother’s side, give me your father gave me honour, yours gave land. Now blessèd be the hour, by night or day, When I was got, sir Robert was away! Ely. The very spirit of Faulconbridge! I am thy grandson, Richard; call me so. [though? Bast. Madam, by chance but not by truth; what Something about a little from the right, In at the window, or else o’er the hatch: Who dares not stir by day must walk by night, And have is have, however men do catch: Near or far off, well won is still well shot, And I am, how’er I was begot. [desire; God. John. Christopher; now hast thou A landless knight makes thee a landed squire. Come, madam, and come, Richard, we must speed For France, for France, for it is more than need. Bast. Brother, adieu: good fortune come to thee! For thou wast got i’ the way of honesty. A foot of honour better than I was; But many a many a foot of land the worse. Well, now can I make any Joan a lady. ‘Good den, sir Richard!’— God-a-mercy, fellow!— And if his name be George, I’ll call him Peter; For new-made honour doth forget men’s names; ‘Tis too respective and too sensible For your conversion. Now your traveller, He and his toothpick at my worship’s mess, And when my knightly stomach is sufficed, Why then I knock at the diest and catenize, My picked man of countries: ‘My dear sir,’ Thus, leaning on mine elbow, I begin, ‘I shall beseech you’—that is question now; And then comes answer like an Absey book: ‘O sir,’ says answer, ‘at your best command; I esteem your employment but so little;’ ‘No, sir,’ says question, ‘I, sweet sir, at yours: And so, ere answer knows what question would, Saving in dialogue of compliment, And talking of the Alps and Apennines, The Pyrenean and the river Po, It draws toward supper in conclusion so. But this is worshipful society And fits the mounting spirit like myself, For he is but a bastard to the time That doth not smack of observation; And so am I, whether I smack or no; And not alone in habit and catenize, Exterior form, outward accoutrement, But from the inward motion to deliver Sweet, sweet, sweet poison for the age’s tooth: Which, though I will not practise to deceive, Yet, to avoid deceit, I mean to learn; For it shall make the fool the other rising. But who comes in such haste in riding-robins? What woman-post is this? hath she no husband That will take pains to blow a horn before her? Enter Lady Faulconbridge and James Gurney. O me! it is my mother. How now, good lady! What brings you here to court so hastily?
ACT II.

SCENE I.—France. Before Angiers.

Enter Austria and forces, drums, &c., on one side; on the other King Philip of France and his power; Lewis, Arthur, Constance and Attendants.

LADY F. Where is that slave, thy brother? where is he, that holds in chase mine honour up and down?

BAST. My brother Robert? old sir Robert’s son?

COBRAUND, the giant, that same mighty man?

Is it sir Robert’s son that you seek so? [bow.

BAST. Nay, thou unreverend Sir Robert’s son: why scorn’st thou at sir Robert?

He is sir Robert’s son, and so art thou. [awhile.

BAST. James Gurney, wilt thou give us leave.

GURNEY. Good leave, good Philip.

BAST. Philip! sparrow: James, there’s toys abroad: anon I’ll tell them more.

[Exeunt Gurney.

LADY F. I am not old sir Robert’s son:

Sir Robert might have eaten his part in me

Upon Good-Friday and ne’er broke his fast:

Sir Robert could do well: marry, to confess,

Could he get me? Sir Robert could not do it:

We know his handiwork: therefore, good mother,

To whom am I beholding for these limbs?

Sir Robert never help to make this leg. [too.

BAST. Knight, knight, good mother, Basillise-like.

What! I am dubb’d! I have it on my shoulder.

But, mother, I am not sir Robert’s son;

I have disclaim’d sir Robert and my land;

Legitimation, name and all is gone:

Then, good my mother, let me know my father;

Some proper man, I hope: who was it, mother?

LADY F. Ilast thou denied thyself a Faulcon-But as faithfully as I deny the devil. [bridge.

BAST. King Richard Cœur-de-lion was thy father.

By long and vehement suit I was seduced

To make room for him in my husband’s bed:

Heaven lay not my transgression to my charge:

Thou art the issue of my dear offence,

Which was so strongly urged past my defence.

BAST. Now, by this light, were I to get again,

Madam, I would not wish a better father:

Some sinner do bear their privilege on earth,

And so doth yours; your fault was not your folly:

Needs must you lay your heart at his dispose,

Subjected tribute to commanding love,

Against whose fury and unequal force

The aweless lion could not wage the fight,

Nor keep his princely heart from Richard’s hand.

He that perforce robs lions of their hearts

May easily win a woman’s. Ay, my mother,

With all my heart I thank thee for my father!

Who lives and dare to say, that we are not well

When I was got, I’ll send his soul to hell.

Come, lady, I will show thee to my kin;

And they shall say, when Richard me begot,

If thou hast said him nay, it had been sin:

Who says it was, he lies; I say ’t was not. [Exeunt.

KING JOHN.

SCENE I.

AUST. The peace of heaven is theirs that lift their
In such a just and charitable war. [words

K. PHI. Well then, to work: our cannon shall be Against the brows of this resisting town. [bent

Call for our chiefest men of discipline,

To cul the plots of best advantages:

We’ll lay before this town our royal bones,

Wade to the market-place in Frenchmen’s blood,

But we will make it subject to this boy.

CONST. Stay for an answer to your embassy,

Lest unadvised you stain your swords with blood:

My Lord Chatillon may from England bring

That right which place which here we urge in war,

And then we shall repent each drop of blood

That hot rash haste so indirectly shed.

Enter Chatillon.

K. PHI. A wonder, lady! lo, upon thy wish,
Our messenger Chatillon is arrived!

What England says, say briefly, gentle lord;

We coldly pause for thee; Chatillon, speak.

CHAT. Then turn your forces from this paltry siege
And stir them up against a mightier task.

England, impatient of your just demands,

Hath put himself in arms; the adverse winds,

Whose leisure I have stay’d, have given him time

To land his legions all as soon as I,

His marches are expedient to this town,

His forces strong, his soldiers confident.

With him along is come the mother-queen,

An Atte, stirring him to blood and strife;

With her her niece, the Lady Blanch of Spain;

With them a bastard of the king’s deceased

And all the unsettled honours of the land,

Rash, inconsiderate, airy voluntaries,

With ladies’ faces and fierce dragons’ spleens.

Who have sold their fortunes at their native homes,

Bearing their birthrights proudly on their backs,

To make a hazard of new fortunes here;

In brief, a braver choice of dauntless spirits

Than now the English bottoms have waft o’er
Did never float upon the swelling tide,
To do offence and scathe in Christendom.

[Drum beats.]
The interruption of their churlish drums
Cuts off all other circumstance: they arrest hand,
To parley or to fight: therefore prepare.

K. Phi. How much unlook'd for is this expedition!
Aust. By how much unexpected, by so much
We must awake endeavour for defence;
For courage mounteth with occasion;
Let them be welcome then; we are prepared.

Enter King John, Elinor, Blanch, the Bastard,
Lords, and forces.

K. John. Peace be to France, if France in peace
Our just and lineal entrance to our own; I permit
If not, bleed France, and peace ascend to heaven,
While we, God's wrathful agent, do correct
Their proud contumacy that beats His peace to heaven.

K. Phi. Peace be to England, if that war return
From France to England, there to live in peace.
England we love; and for that England's sake
With burden of our armours here we sweat.
This toil of ours should be a work of thine;
But thou from loving England so far,
That thou hast under-wrought his lawful king,
Cut off the sequence of posterity,
Out-facing infant state and doom to rape
Upon the maiden virtue of the crown.
Look here upon thy brother Geoffrey's face;
These eyes, these brows, were moulded out of his:
This little abstract doth contain that large
Which died in Geoffrey, and the hand of time
Shall frame into a brain as long a volume,
That Geoffrey was thy elder brother born,
And this his son; England was Geoffrey's right
And this is Geoffrey's: in the name of God
How comes it then that thou art call'd a king,
When living blood both in these temples beat,
When see the crown, that thou o'er-merestor?ere?

K. John. From whom hast thou this great commission,
France,
To draw my answer from thy articles?

K. Phi. From that supernal judge, that stirs good
In every breast of strong authority
England's sake,
Alas! what thoughts
To look into the blots and stains of right:
That judge hath made me guardian to this boy:
Under whose warrant I impeach thy wrong
And by whose help I mean to chastise it.

K. John. Ahuck, thou dost usurp authority.
K. Phi. No, more; it is to be usurped downing up.

Elit. Who is it thou dost call usurper, France?
Const. Let me make answer; thy usurping son.
Elit. Out, insolent! thy bastard shall be king,
That thou mayst be a queen, and check the world!

Const. My bed was ever to thy son as true
As thine was to thy husband; and this boy
Lik'er in feature to his father Geoffrey
Than thou and John in manners: being as like
As rain to water, or devil to his dam.
My boy a bastard! By my soul, I think
His wise young mother was no true begot,
It cannot be, an if thou unber his mother.

Elit. There's a good mother, boy, that blots thy father.

Const. There's a good grandam, boy, that would Aust. Peace! peace!

Bast. Hear the crier.

Bast. One that will play the devil, sir, with you,
An a' may catch your hide and you alone:
You are the hare of whom the proverb goes,
Whose valour plucks dead lions by the beard;
I'll smoke your skin-coat, an I catch you right;
Sirrah, look to 't: I faith, I will, ' faith.

Blanch. O, well did he become that lion's roar
That did disrobe the lion of that robe!

Bast. It lies as sightly on the back of him
As great Alcides' shows upon an ass:
But, ass, I'll take that burthen from your back,
Or lay on that shall make your shoulders crack.

Aust. What crack is this same that deals our ears
With this abundance of superfluous breath?

K. Phi. Lewis, determine what we shall do straight.

[Enter Wood and fools, break off your conver-
K. John, this is the very sum of all;
England and Ireland, Anjou, Touraine, Maine,
In right of Arthur do I claim of thee:
Wilt thou resign them and lay down thy arms?

Arthur of Bretagne, yield thee to his hand;
And out of my dear love I'll give thee more
Than e'er the coward hand of France can win:
Submit thee, boy.

Elit. Come to thy grandam, child.

Const. Do, child, go to it grandam, child;
Give grandam kingdom, and it grandam will Give it a plum, a cherry, and a fig:
There's a good grandam.

A. Th. Good my mother, peace! I
Would that I were low laid in my grave:
I am not worth this coil that's made for me.
Elit. His mother's shame him so, poor boy, he weeps.

[No!]

Const. Now shame upon you, whether she does
His grandam's wrongs, and not his mother's shame,
Draws those heaven-moving pearls from his poor
Which heaven shall take in nature of a fee; [eyes
Ay, with the wretches that receive heaven shall be bribed
To do him justice and revenge on you.

Elit. Thou monstrous slanderer of heaven and earth!

Const. Thou monstrous injurer of heaven and call not me slanderer; thou and thine usurp
The domr of heaven. [Re-enter an answer.
Of this oppressed boy: this is thy eldest son's son,
Infortunate in nothing but in thee;
Thy sins are visited in this poor child;
The canon of the law is laid on him,
Smitten but the second generation
Removed from thy sin-conceiving womb.
K. John. Bedlam, have done.

Const. I have but this to say,
That he is not only plagued for her sin,
But God hath made her sin and her the plague
On this removed issue, plagued for her
And with her plague, her sin his injury,
Her injury the beaule to her sin,
All punish'd in the person of this child,
And all for her; a plague upon her!

Elit. Thou unadvised scold, I can produce
A will that bars the title of thy son [will:
Const. Ay, who doubts that? a will! a wicked
A woman's will; a canker'd grandam's will!
K. Phi. Peace, lady! pause, or be more temper-
It ill-beseems this presence to cry aim [ate:
To these ill-tuned repetitions.
Some trumpet summon'd like to the walls
These men of Angiers: let us hear them speak
Whose title they admit, Arthur's or John's.

Trumpet sounds. [Enter certain Citizens upon the walls.

First Cit. Who is it that hath warn'd us to the K. Phi, 'Tis France, for England; [walls?
You men of Angiers, and my loving subjects,—
K. Phi. You loving men of Angiers, Arthur's subjects,
Our trumpet call'd you to this gentle parle—
K. John. For our advantage; therefore hear us first.

These flags of France, that are advanced here
Before the eye and prospect of your town,
Have hither march'd to your encomium:
They and their close followers, enfeebled, and Ready mounted are they to spit forth
Their iron indignation 'gainst your walls:
All preparation for a bloody siege
And merciless proceeding by these French
Confronts your city's eyes, your wrinkling gates;
And but for our approach those sleeping stones,
That as a waist doth girdle you about,
By the compulsion of their ordinance
By this time from their fixed beds of lime
Had been disabated, and wide havoc made
For bloody power to rush upon your peace.
But for your faith in the King,
Who painfully with much expedient march
Have brought a countercheck before your gates,
To save unscar'd your city's threatened cheeks,
Behold, the French amazed vouche safe a parle;
And now, instead of bullets wrapp'd in fire,
To make a shaking fever in your walls,
They shoot but calm words folded up in smoke,
To make a faithless error in your ears:
Which trust accordingly kind citizens,
And let us in, your king, whose labour’d spirits,
Forwarried in this action of swift speed,
Crave and balance within your gates:
K. Phi. When I have said, make answer to us both.
Lo, in this right hand, whose protection
Is most divinely vow’d upon the right
Of him it holds, stands young Plunketagenet,
Son to the elder brother of this man,
And king o'er him and all that he enjoys:
For this down-trodden equity, we tread
In warlike march these greens before your town,
Being no further enemy to you
Than the constraint of hospitable zeal
In the relief of this oppressed child
Religiously provokes... Be pleased then
To pay that duty which you truly owe
To him that owes it, namely this young prince:
And then our arms, like to a muzzled bear,
Save in aspect, hath all offence seal’d up.
Our canons’ malice vainly shall be spent
Against the invulnerable clouds of heaven;
And with a blessed and unvex’d retire,
With unmask’d swords and helmets all unbruised,
We will bear home that lusty blood again
Which here we came to spout against your town,
And leave your children, wives and you in peace.
But if you are our country’s good report,
’T is not the roundure of your old-faced walls
Can hide you from our messengers of war,
Though all these English and their discipline
Were harbour’d in their rude circumference.
Then tell us, shall your city call us lord,
In that behalf which we have challenged it?
Or shall we give the signal to our rage
And stalk in blood to our possession? [subjects: First Cit. In brief, we are the king of England’s For him, and in his right, we hold this town. K. John. Acknowledge then the king, and let me First Cit. That can we not; but he that proves the king,
To him will we prove loyal; till that time
Have we ramm’d up our gates against the world.
K. John. Doth not the crown of England prove
And if not that, I bring you witnesses, [the king?] Twain and their deeds of England’s breed—
Bast. Bastards, and else.
K. John. To verify our title with their lives.
K. Phi. As many and as well-born bloods as Bast. Some bastards too. [those— K. Phi. Stand in his face to contradict his claim.
First Cit. Till you compound whose right is worthiest,
We for the worthiest hold the right from both.

K. John. Then God forgive the sin of all those
That to their everlasting residence—
[souls
Before the heavens falling fall, shall fleet,
In dreadful trial of our kingdom’s king!
[arms!
K. Phi. Amen, amen! Mount, chevaliers! to Bast. Saint George, that swung the dragon, and e’er since
Sits on his horseback at mine hostess’ door, [home, Teach us some fence! [To Aost.] Sirrah, were I at
At your den, sirrah, with yourlieness,
I would set an ox head to your lion’s hide,
And make a monster of you.
Aost. Peace! no more.
Bast. O, tremble, for you hear the lion roar.
K. John. Up higher to the plain, where we’ll
In best appointment all our regiments. [set forth
Bast. Speed then, to take advantage of the field.
K. Phi. It shall be so; and at the other hill
Command the rest to stand. God and our right! [Exeunt.

Here after excursions, enter the Herald of France, with trumpets, to the gates.

F. Her. You men of Angiers, open wide your
And let young Arthur, Duke of Bretagne, in, [gates,
Who by the hand of France this day hath made
Much work for tears in many an English mother,
Whose sons lie scattered on the bleeding ground;
Many a widow’s husband grovelling lies,
Coldly embracing the discou’rd earth;
And victory, with little loss, doth play
Upon the dancing banners of the French,
Who are on high, triumphantly display’d—
To enter conquerors and to proclaim
Arthur of Bretagne England’s king and yours.

Enter English Herald, with trumpet.

E. Her. Rejoice, you men of Angiers, ring your bells;
King John, your king and England’s, doth approach,
Commander of this hot malicious day:
Their armours, that march’d hence so silver-bright,
Hither return all gilt with Frenchmen’s blood;
There stuck no plume in any English crest
That is removed by a staff of France;
Our colours do return in those same hands
That did display them when we first march’d forth;
And, like a jolly troop of huntsmen, come—
Our lusty English, all with purpled hands,
Dyed in the dying slaughter of their foes.
Open your gates, and let us in, [behind,
First Cit. Heralds, from off our towers we might
From first to last, the onset and retire
Of both your armies; whose equality
By our best eyes cannot be censured;
Blood hath bought blood and blows have answer’d blows;
Fronted power;
Strength match’d with strength, and power con
Both are alike; and both alike we like.
One must prove greatest; while they weigh so even,
We hold our town for neither, yet for both.

Re-enter the two Kings, with their powers severally.

K. John. France, hast thou yet more blood to cast away?
Say, shall the current of our right run on?
Whose passage, vex’d with thy impediment,
Shall leave his native channel and pervade
With course and distum’d by the confining shores,
Unless thou let his silver water keep
A peaceful progress to the ocean. [of blood,
K. Phi. England, thou hast not saved one drop
In this hot trial, more than we of France;
Rather, lost more. And by this hand I swear,
This present hour is like to spring us in
This climate looks over, Before we will lay down our just-born arms, [bear, We’ll put thee down, ‘gainst whom these arms we

ACT II.

KING JOHN.  SCENE I.

Or add a royal number to the dead,
Gracing the scroll that tells of this war’s loss
With slaughter coupled to the name of kings.

Bast. Ha, majesty! how high thy glory towers,
When the rich blood of kings is set on fire!
O, now death, the friend of the friendless man,
Have done, add to the book of time.

Bast. Our brothers, not our princes,
Battled in that field;
And now he feasts, mowing the flesh of men,
In undetermined differences of kings.

Why stand these royal fronts amazed thus?
Cry ‘haxove!’ kings; back to the stained field,
You equal potents, fiery kindled spirits!
Then, let it be one part confusion
The other’s peace; till then, blows, blood and death!

K. John. Whose party do the townsman yet admit?
K. Phi. Speak, citizens, for England; who’s your king?
[The king.

First Cit. The king of England, when we know
K. Phi. Know him in us, that here hold up his right.

K. John. In us, that are our own great deputies,
And bear possession of our person here,
Lord of our presence, Angiers, and of you.
For there’s no realm that I do not deny;
And till it be undoubted, we do lock
Our former scruple in our strong-barr’d gates;
King’d of our fears, until our fears, resolved,
Be by some certain king purged and deposited.

Bast. By heaven, these scroyles of Angiers flout
And stand securely on their battlements,
As in a theatre, whence they gape and point
At your industrious scenes and acts of death.

Your royal presence be ruled by me:
Do like the mumins of Jerusalem;
Be friends awhile and both conjointly bend
Your sharpest deeds of malice on this town:
By east and west let France and England mount
Their battering cannon charged to the mouths,
Till their soul-tearing clamours have bravi’d down
The flinty ribs of this contemptuous city:
I’d play incessantly on these Jades,
Even till unfenced desolation
Leave them as naked as the vulgar air.
That done, dispose ye your united strengths,
And part your mingled colours once again;
Turn them to the battle, and to the point;
Then, in a moment, Fortune shall call forth
Out of one side her happy minion,
To whom in favour she shall give the day,
And kiss him with a glorious victory.

How like you this wild counsel, mighty states?
Shall it be your policy?
K. John. Now, by the sky that hangs above our
I like it well. France, shall we knit our powers
And lay this Angiers even with the ground;
Then after right who shall be king of it?

Bast. An if thou hast the meate of a king,
Being wrong’d as we are by this peevish town,
Turn thou the mouth of thy artillery,
As we will ours, against these saucy walls;
And when that we have dash’d them to the ground,
Why then defy each other, and pell-mell
Not work upon ourselves, but both on hell.
K. Phi. Let it be so. Say, where will you assault?
K. John. We from the west will send destruction
Into this city’s bosom.

Aust. 1 from the north.
K. Phi. Our thunder from the south
Shall strike their drift of bullets on this town.

Bast. O prudent discipline! from north to south:
Austria and France shoot in each other’s mouth:
I’ll stir them to it. Come, away, away!

First Cit. Hear us, great kings; vouesafe awhile to stay
And I shall show you peace and fair-faced league;
Win you this city without stroke or wound;
Rescue those breathing lives to die in beds,
That here come sacrifices for the field;
Persever not, but hear me, mighty kings.

K. John. Speak on with favour; we are bent to First Cit. That daughter there of Spain, the Lady
Is niece to England; look upon the years [Blanch,
Anjou’s daughter.

John. Of Lewis the abashed and lovely maid!
If lusty love should go in quest of beauty,
Where should he find it fairer than in Blanch?
If zealous love should go in search of virtue,
Where should he find it purer than in Blanch?
That love ambitious sought of much of birth,
Whose veins bound richer blood than Lady Blanch?
Such as she is, in beauty, virtue, birth,
Is the young Dauphin every way complete;
If not complete of, say he is not she;
And she again wants nothing, to name want,
If want it be not that she is not she:
He is the half part of a blessed man,
Left to be finished by such as she;
And she a fair divided excellence,
Whose fulness of perfection lies in him.
O, two such silver currents, when they join,
Do glorify the banks that both do feed;
And two such shores to two such streams made one,
Two such controlling bounds shall you be, kings,
To these two princes, if you marry them.
This union shall do more than battery can
To our fast-closed gates; for at this match,
With swifter than the wind they perish’d his
The mouth of passage shall we fling wide ope,
And give you entrance: but without this match,
The sea en rag’d is not half so dear,
Lions more confidant, mountains and rocks
More free from motion, no, not Death himself
In mortal fury half so prerogu’d,
As we to keep this city.

Bast. Here’s a stay
That shakes the rotten carcass of old Death
Out of his rags! Here’s a large mouth, indeed,
That spits forth death and mountains, rocks and Talks as familiarly of roaring lions
As maids of thirteen do of puppy-dogs!
What cannoneer bestow this lusty blood?
He speaks plain cannon fire, and smoke and bounce;
He gives the bastardo with his tongue:
Our ears are cut off; not to the point,
But buffets better than a fist of France:
Zounds! I was never so ethump’d with words
Since I first call’d my brother’s father dad.

Eli. Son, list to this conjunction, make this match;
Give with our niece a dowry large enough
For by this knot thou shalt so surely lie
Thy now unsus’ded assurance to the crown,
That your green boy shall have no sun to ripe
The bloom that promiseth a mighty fruit.
I see a yielding in the looks of France:
Mark, how they whisper: urge them while their souls
Are capable of this ambition,
Least zeal, now melted by the windy breath
Of soft petitions, pity and remorse,
Cool and congrual again to what it was.

First Cit. Why answer not the double majesties
This friendly treaty of our threaten’d town?
K. Phi. Speak England first, that hath been for-
To speak unto this city: what say you?
K. John. If that the Dauphin there, thy princely
Can in this book of beauty read ‘I love,’
Son,
Her dowry shall weigh equal with a queen:
For Anjou and fair Touraine, Maine, Poictiers,
And all that we upon this side the sea,
Except this city now by us besieged,
Find liable to our crown and dignity,
Shall gild her bridal bed and make her rich
In titles, honours and promotions,
As she in beauty, education, blood,
Hold hand with any princess of the world.
ACT III.

KING JOHN.

SCENE I.

K. Ph. What say'st thou, boy? look in the lady's eye. I do, my lord; and in her eye I find true love. A wonder, or a wondrous miracle, the shadow of myself form'd in her eye; which, being but the shadow of your son, becomes a sun and makes your son a shadow: I do protest I never loved myself—

Till now I've been by myself beheld. Drawn in the flattering table of her eye.

Bast. Drawn in the flattering table of her eye! Hang'd in the frowning wrinkle of her brow! And quarter'd in her heart! he doth espy himself love's traitor: this is pity now; he hang'd and drawn and quarter'd, there should in such a king's oath in such haste to this unlook'd for, unprepared pomp.

[Exeunt all but the Bastard.]

Bast. Mad world! mad kings! mad composition! John, to stop Arthur's title in the whole, Hath willingly departed with a part, and France, whose armour conscience buckled on, whom zeal and charity brought to the field as God's own soldier, rounded in the ear with that same purpose-changer, that sly devil, that brook, that still breaks the patent of faith, that daily break-vow, he that wins of all, kings, of beggars, old men, young men, maids, who, having no external thing to lose, but the word 'maid,' cheats the poor maid of that, that smooth-faced broth, this all-changing word, this sway of motion, this commodity, makes it take head from all indifferency, from all direction, purpose, course, intent: and this same bias, this commodity, this hawd, this rogue, this all-changing word, clapp'd on the outward eye of sickle France, hath drawn him from his own determined aid, from a resolved and honourable war, to a most base and vile-concluded peace. And why rail I on this commodity? But for because he hath not woo'd me yet; not that I have the power to clutch my hand, when his fair angels would salute my palm; but for my hand, as unattempted yet, like a poor beggar, railed on the rich. Well, whilst I am a beggar, I will rail; and say there is no sin but to be beggar. And being rich, my virtue then shall be to say there is no vice but beggary. Since kings break faith upon commodity, gain, be my lord, for I will worship thee. [Exit.

ACT III.

SCENE I.—The French King's pavilion.

Enter Constance, Arthur, and Salisbury.

Const. Gone to be married! gone to swear a peace! False blood to false blood jointed: gone to be friends! Shall Lewis have Blanch, and Blanch those provinces? It is not so; thou hast misspoke, mishandled; be well advised, tell o'er thy tale again: it cannot be; thou dost but say 'tis so: I trust I may not trust thee; for thy word is but the vain breath of a common man: believe me, I do not believe thee, man; I have a king's oath to the contrary. Thou shalt be punish'd for thus frightening me,

For I am sick and capable of tears, oppressed with wrongs and therefore full of fears, a widow, husbandless, subject to fears, a woman, naturally born to fears; and though thou now confess thou diest but jest, with my vex'd spirits I cannot take a truce, but they will quake and tremble all this day. What do'st thou mean by a fool and thy head? Why dost thou look so sadly on my son? What means that hand upon that breast of thine? Why holds thine eye that lamentable rheum, like a proud river peering o'er his bounds? Be these sad signs confirmers of thy words? Then speak again: not all thy former tale, but this one word, whether thy tale be true.

281
KING JOHN.

ACT III.

KING JOHN. SCENE I.

Sol. As true as I believe you think them false.
That give you cause to prove my saying true.
Const. O, if thou teach me to believe this sorrow,
Teach thou this sorrow how to make me die,
And show me how to follow falsehood fortune,
As doth the fury of two desperate men
Which in the very meeting fall and die.
Lewis marry Blanch! O boy, then where art thou?
France friend with England, what becomes of me?
Fellow, be gone: I cannot brook thy sight:
This tale thou hast made a truth full lain.
Sol. What other harm have I, good lady, done,
But spoke the harm that is by others done?
Const. Which harm within itself so heinous is
As it makes harmful all that speak of it.

Arth. I do beseech you, madam, be content.
Const. If thou, that hast thee so confound,wert grim,
Ugly and slanderous to thy mother's woe,
Full of unpleasing shots and sightless stains,
Lame, foolish, crooked, swart, prodigious,
Patch'd with foul moles and eye-offending marks,
I would not care, I then would be content.
For then I should not love thee, no, nor thou
Become thy great birth nor deserve a crown.
But thou art fair, and at thy birth, dear boy,
Nature and Fortune join'd to make thee great:
Of Nature's gifts thou mayst with lilies boast
And France, my best supporter, is his part,
She is corrupted, changed and won from thee;
She adulterates hourly with thine uncle John,
And with her golden hand hath pluck'd it on France
To tread down fair respect of sovereignty,
And made his majesty the bawd to theirs.
France is in wealth, Fortune to England, John,
That strumpet Fortune, that usurping John!
Tell me, thou fellow, is not France forsworn?
Envenom him with words, or get thee gone
And leave those woes alone which I alone
Am bound to under-bear.

Sol. Pardon me, madam, I may not go without you to the kings. [thee:
Const. Thou mayst, thou shalt; I will not go with
I will instruct my sorrows to be proud;
For grief is proud and makes his owner stoope.
To me and to the state of my great grief
Let kind England, for my part, take a part
That no supporter but the huge firm earth
Can hold it up: here I and sorrows sit;
Here is my throne, bid kings come bow to it.
[Seats herself on the ground.

Enter King John, King Philip, Lewis, Blanch,
Blononor, the Bastard, Austria, and Attendants.

K. Phi. 'Tis true, fair daughter; and this blessed
Ever in France shall be kept festival: [day
To solemnize this day the glorious sun
Stays in his course and plays the alchemist,
Turning with splendour of his precious eye
The meagre clothy earth to glittering gold:
The yearly course that brings this day about
Shall never see it but a holiday.

Const. A wicked day, and not a holy day! [Rising. What is this day deserved? what hath it done,
That it in golden letters should be set
Among the high tides in the calendar?
Nay, rather turn this day out of the week,
This day of shame, oppression, perjury,
or, if it must stand still, get wives with child
Pray that their burthens may not fall this day,
Lost that their hopes prodigiouely be cross'd;
But on this day let seamen fear no wreck;
No bargains break that are not this day made:
This day, all things begun come to ill end,
Yet in a hollow falsehood change!

K. Phi. By heaven, lady, you shall have no cause
To curse the fair proceedings of this day:
Have I not pawn'd to you my majesty?

'St. You have beguiled me with a counterfeit Resembling majesty, which, being touch'd and tried,
Proves valueless: you are forsworn, forsworn;
You cause in arms to spill mine enemies' blood,
But now in arms you are a traitor, and with yours:
The grappling vigour and rough frown of war
Is cold in amity and painted peace,
And our oppression hath made up this league.
Arm, arm, you heavens, against these perjured kings.
A widow cries; be husband to me, heavens!
Let not the hours of this ungodly day
Wear out the day in peace; but, ere sunset,
Set armed discord 'twixt these perjured kings!
Hear me, O, hear me!

Aust. Lady Constance, peace! [Aust. War! war! no peace! peace is to me a war.
O Lymoges! O Austria! thou dost shame
That bloody spoil: thou slave, thou wretch, thou
Peace, John: thou little valiant, great in villany! [coward!
Thou ever strong upon the stronger side!
Thou fortune's champion that dost never fight
But when her humorous ladyship is by
To teach thee safety! thou art perjur'd too,
And soothest up greatness. What a fool art thou,
A ramping fool, to brag and stamp and swear
Upon my party! Thou cold-blooded slave,
Thou dost not speak like man: for man's sake,
I been sworn my soldier, bidding me depend
Upon thy stars, thy fortune and thy strength,
And dost thou now fall over to my foes?
Thou wear a lion's hide! doff it for shame,
And hang a calf's-skin on those recreant limbs.
Aust. O, that a man should speak those words to me!

[limbs.

Bast. And hang a calf's-skin on these recreant
Aust. Thou darest not say so, villain, for thy life.
Bast. And hang a calf's-skin on those recreant limbs.

K. John. We like not this; thou dost forget thy-

Enter Pandulph.

K. Phi. Here comes the holy legate of the pope.
Pand. Hail, you anointed deputies of heaven!
To thee, King John, my holy errand is
I Pandulph, of for fair Ambrose of St.
And from Pope Innocent the legate here,
Do in his name religiously demand
Why thou against the church, our holy mother,
So wilfully dost spurn; and force perforce
Keep Stephen Langton, chancellor-bishop,
Of Canterbury; from that holy see?
This, in our foresaid holy father's name,
Pope Innocent, I do demand of thee.
K. John. What earthy name to interrogatories
Can task the free breath of a sacred king?
Thou canst not, cardinal, devise a name
So slight, unworthy and ridiculous,
To charge me to an answer, as the pope.
Tell him this tale; and from the mouth of England
Add thus much more. that no Italian priest
Shall tithe or toll in our dominions;
But as we, under heaven, are supreme head,
So under Him that great supremacy,
Where do reign, we will alone uphold,
Without the assistance of a mortal hand:
So tell the pope, all reverence set apart
To him and his usurp'd authority.

K. Phi. Brother of England, you blaspheme in K. John. Though you and all the kings of Christendom
Are led so grossly by this meddling priest,
Dreading the curse that money may buy out;
And by the merit of vile gold, dross, dust,
Purchase corrupted pardon of a man
Who in that sale sells pardon from himself;
Though you and all the rest so grossly led
ACT III.

KING

JOHN.

SCENE I.

This juggling witchcraft with revenue cherish,
Yet I alone, alone do me oppose
Against the hands that thread my foes.

Pau'd. Then, by the lawful power that I have,
Thou shalt stand cursed and excommunicate;
And blessed shall he be that doth revolt
From his allegiance to an heretic;
And meritorious that shall be call’d,
Canonized, and worshipp’d as a saint,
That takes away by any secret course
Thy hateful life.

Const. O lawful let it be
That I have room with Rome to curse awhile!
Good father cardinal, cry thou amen
To my return; for without my wrong
There is no tongue hath power to curse him right.

Pau'd. There’s law and warrant, lady, for my curse.

[Right.

Const. And for mine too: when law can do no
Let it be lawful that law bar no wrong;
Law cannot give my child his kingdom here,
For he that holds his kingdom holds the law;
Therefore, since law itself is perfect wrong,
How can the law forbid my tongue to curse?

Pau’d. Philip of France, on peril of a curse,
Let go the hand of that arch-heretic;
And raise the power of France upon his head,
Unless he do submit himself to Rome.

Ell. Look’st thou pale, France? do not let go thy hand.

Const. Look to that, devil; lest that France re-
And by disjoining hands, hell lose a soul.

Aust. King Philip, listen to the cardinal.

Bast. And hang a calf’s-skin on his regrant limbs.

Aust. Well, Russian, I must pocket these wrongs, Because—

Bast. Your breeches best may carry them.

K. John. Philip, what say’st thou to the cardinal?

Const. What should he say, but as the cardinal?

Lew. Benthink you, father; for the difference
Is purchase of a heavy curse from Rome,
Or the light loss of England for a friend:
Forego the easier.

Bland. That’s the curse of Rome.

Const. O Lewis, stand fast! the devil tempts thee
In likeness of a new untrimmed bride.

[Here

Bland. The Lady Constance speaks not from her
But from her need.

[faith.

K. Phi. O, if thou grant my need,
With only lives but by the death of faith,
That need must needs infer this principle,
That faith would live again by death of need.
O then, tread down my need, and faith mounts up;
Keep my need up, and faith is trodden down [this.

K. Phi. I am perplex’d, and know not what to Pau’d. What canst thou say but will perplex thee

If thou stand excommunicate and cursed? [more,

K. Phi. Good reverend father, make my person yours,
And tell me how you would bestow yourself.
This royal hand and mine are newly knit,
And the conjunction of our inward souls
Marry these two, as this twain together
With all religious strength of sacred vows;
The latest breath that gave the sound of words
Was deep-swanth faith, peace, purity, true love
Between our kingdoms and our royal selves,
And even before this truce, but new before,
No less than we well have our hands
To clasp this royal bargain up of peace.

K. Phi. With slaughter’s pencil, where revenge did paint
The fearful difference of incensed kings:
And shall we not by holy purged blood,
So newly join’d in love, so strong in both,
Unyoke this siege and this kind regret?

Play fast and lose with faith? so jest with heaven,
Make such unconstant children of ourselves,
As now again to snatch our palm from palm,
Unswear faith sworn, and on the marriage-bed
Of smiling peace to march a bloody lost,
And make a riot on the gentle brow
Of true sincerity? O, holy sir,
My reverend father, let it not be so!
Out of your grace, devise, ordain, impose
Some gentle order; and the shall be best
To do your pleasure and continue friends.

Pau’d. All form is formless, order orderless,
Save what is opposite to England’s love.
Therefore to arms! be champion of our church,
Or let the church, our mother, breathe her curse,
A mother’s curse, on her revolting son.

France, thou mayst hold a serpent by the tongue,
A chained lion by the mortal paw,
A fasting tiger safer by the tooth,
Than keep in peace that hand which thou dost hold.

K. Phi. I may disjoin my hand, but not my faith.

Bast. And make the faith thy only faith to faith;
And like a civil war’st set oath to oath,
Thy tongue against thy tongue. O, let thy vow
First made to heaven, first be to heaven perform’d,
That is, to be the champion of our church!
What since thou swarest is sworn against thyself
And may not be performed by thyself,
For that which thou hast sworn to do amiss
Is not amiss when it is truly done,
And being not done, where doing tends to ill,
The truth is then most done not doing it:
The better act of purposes mistsook
Is to mistake again; though indirect,
Yet indirection thereby grows direct,
And falseshod falseshood cures, as fire cooks fire
Within the scorched veins of one new-burn’d.
It is religion that doth make vows kept;
But thou hast sworn against religion,
[swearst.
And may not be performed by thyself,
And make an oath the surety for thy truth
Against an oath: the truth thou art unsure
To swear, swearest only not to be forsworn;
Else what a mockery should it be to swear!
But thou dost swear only to be forsworn;
And must forsworn, to be thou dost swear.
Therefore thy later vows against thy first
Is in thyself rebellion to thyself;
And better conquest never canst thou make
Than arm thy constant and thy nobler parts
Against these giddy loose suggestions:
Upon which better part our prayers come in,
If thou vouchsafe them. But if not, then know
The peril of our curses light on thee
So heavy as thou shalt not shake them off,
But in despair die under their black weight.

Aust. Rebellion, flat rebellion!

Bast. Will’t not be?

K. Phi. Will not a calf’s-skin stop that mouth of thine?

Lew. Father, to arms!

Bland. Upon thy wedding-day?

Const. Against the blood that thou hast married?

Bland. What, shall our feast be kept with slaughter’d men?

K. Phi. Shall bray the brains, and lacerate the brains, drums,
Clamours of hell, be measures to our pomp?
O husband, hear me! ay, alack, how now
Is husband in my mouth! even for that name,
Which till this time my tongue did ne’er pronounce,
Upon my knee I beg, go not to arms
Against true uncle.

Con. O, upon my knee,
Made hard with kneading, I do pray to thee,
Thou virtuous Dauphin, alter not the doom
Forethought by heaven! [may Blank. No, nor shall I see thy love: what motive
Be stronger with thee than the name of wife?
Const. That which upholdeth him that thee upholds,
His honour: O, thine honour, Lewis, thine honour!
Lee. I nurse thy majesty doth seem so cold,
Where thou shouldst rear and respect; I will pull you on.
Paul. I will denounce a curse upon his head.
K. Phi. Thou shalt not need. England, I will fall from thee.
Const. O fair return of banish’d majesty!
Eli. O foul revolt of French inconstancy!
K. John. Thou shalt rue this hour within this hour.
[Time,
Bast. Old Time—the clock-setter, that bale sexton
Is it as he will? well then, France shall rue.
Blank. The sun’s o’ercast with blood: fair day, aden!
Which is the side that I must go withal?
I am with both: each army hath a hand;
And in their rage, I having hold of both,
They whirl asunder and dismember me.
Husband, I cannot pray that thou mayst win;
Uncle, I never pray that thou mayst lose;
Father, I may not wish the fortune thine;
Grandam, I will not wish thy wishes thrive:
Whoever wins, on that side shall I lose;
Assured loss before the match be play’d.
Lee. Lady, with me, with me thy fortune lies.
Blank. There where my fortune lives, there my life dies.
K. John. Cousin, go draw our puissance together.
[Exit Bastard.
France, I am burn’d up with inflaming wrath;
A rage whose heat hath this condition,
That nothing can alay, nothing but blood,
The blood, and dearest-valued blood, of France.
K. Phi. Thy rage shall burn thee up, and thou shall turn
To ashes, ere our blood shall quench that fire:
Look to thyself, thou art in jeopardy.
K. John. No more than he that threatens. To arms let’s lie!
[Exeunt.

SCENE II.—The same. Plains near Angiers.

Alarmms, executions. Enter the Bastard, with Austria’s head.

Bast. Now, by my life, this day grows wondrous
Some airy devil hovers in the sky [hot;
And pours down mischief. Austria’s head lie there,
While Philip breathes.

Enter King John, Arthur, and Hubert.

K. John. Hubert, keep this boy. Philip, make up;
My mother is assailed in our tent,
And ta’en, I fear.

Blod. My lord, I rescued her;
Her highness is in safety, fear you not:
But on, my liege; for very little pains
Will bring this labour to an happy end.
[Exeunt.

K. John. [To Elior] So shall it be; your grace shall stay behind [sad:
So strongly guarded. [To Arthur] Cousin, look not Thy grandam loves thee; and thy uncle will
As dear be to thee as thy father was.
Arth. O, this will make my mother die with grief!
K. John. [To the Bastard] Cousin, away for England! haste before:
And, ere our coming, see thou shake the bags

Of hoarding abbeys; imprisioned angels
Set at liberty: the fat ribs of peace
Must by the hungry now be fed upon:
Use our commission in his utmost force. [back,
Bast. Bell, book, and candle shall not drive me
When gold and silver beckons me to come on.
I leave your highness. Grandam, I will pray,
If ever I remember to be holy,
For your safe return: and, if I live, by your hand.
Eli. Farewell, gentle cousin.
Eli. Come hither, little kinsman: bane, a word.
K. John. Come hither, Hubert. O my gentle Hubert,
We owe thee much! within this wall of deth
There is a soul counts thee her creditor
And with advantage means to pay thy love;
And, my good friend, thy voluntary oath
Lives in this bosom, dearly cherished.
Give me thy hand. I had a thing to say,
But I will fit it with some better order.
By heaven, Hubert, I am almost ashamed
To say what good respect I have of thee,
Hub. I am much bounden to thy majesty.
K. John. Good friend, thou last no cause to say so yet,
But thou shalt have; and creep time ne’er so slow,
Yet it shall come for me to do thee good.
I had a thing to say, but let it go:
The sun is in the heaven, and the proud day,
Attended with the pleasures of the world,
Is all too wanton and too full of gawds
To give me audience: if the midnight bell
Did, with his iron tongue and brazen mouth,
Sound on into the drowsy race of night;
If this same were a churchyard where we stand,
And thou possessed with a thousand wrongs,
Or if that surly spirit, melancholy,
Had baked thy blood and made it heavy-thick,
Which else runs tickling up and down the veins,
Making that idiot, laughter, keep men’s eyes
And strain their cheeks to idle merriment,
A passion hateful to my purposes.
Or if that thou couldst see me without eyes,
Hear me without thine ears, and make reply
Without a tongue, using conceit alone,
Without eyes, ears and harmful sound of words;
Then, in despite of brooded watchful day,
I would into thy bosom pour my thoughts:
But ah, I will not! yet I love thee well;
And, by my truth, I think thou lov’st me well.
Hub. So well, that what you bid me undertake
Though that my death were adjunct to my act
By heaven, I would do it.
K. John. Do not I know thou wouldst?
Good Hubert, Hubert, throw thine eye
On yon young boy: I’ll tell thee what, my friend,
He is a very serpent in my way;
And whereas’er this foot of mine doth tread,
He lies before me: dost thou understand me?
Thou art his keeper.
Hub. And I’ll keep him so,
That he shall not offend your majesty.
Hub. My lord?
Hub. He shall not live.
I could be merry now. Hubert, I love thee;
Well, I’ll not say what I intende for thee:
Remember, Madam, fare you well.
I’ll send those povers o’er to your majesty.
Eli. My blessing go with thee.
K. John. For England, cousin, go;
Hubert shall be your man, attend on you
With all true duty. On towards Calais, ho!
[Exeunt.
Enter K. Phi. Lewis, Pandulph, and Attendants.

K. Phi. So, by a roaring tempest on the flood,
A whole armada of convulsed sail
Is scattered and disjointed by the tempest:
Pand. Comfort! all shall yet go well.
K. Phi. What can go well, when we have run so far?
Are we not beaten? Is not Angiers lost? [ill]
Arthur ta'en prisoner? divers dear friends slain?
And bloody England into England gone?
Or ruthless tyrants in the spoil of France?

Lev. What! he hath won, that hath he fortified?
So hot a speed with such advice disposed,
Such temperate order in so fierce a cause,
Doth want example: who hath read or heard
Of any kindred action like to this? [praise]
K. Phi. Well could I bear that England had this
So we could find some pattern of our shame.

Enter Constance.

Look, who comes here! a grave unto a soul;
Holding the eternal spirit, against her will,
In the mouth of heaven declaring the breath.
I prithee, lady, go away with me.

Const. Lo, now! now see the issue of your peace.
K. Phi. Patience, good lady! comfort, gentle Constance!

Const. No, I defy all counsel, all redress,
But that which ends all counsel, true redress,
Death, death; O amiable lovely death!
Thou odorous stench! sound rotteness!
Arise forth from the couch of lasting night,
Thou hate and terror to prosperity,
And I will kiss thy detestable bones
And touch thy drowsy brow.
And ring these fingers with thy household worms
And stop this gap of breath with fulsome dust
And be a carrion monster like thyself;
Come, grin on me, and I will think thou smilest
And buss thee as thy wife. Misery's love,
O, come to me!

K. Phi. O fair affliction, peace!

Const. No, no, I will not, having breath to cry:
O, that my tongue were in the thunder's mouth!
Then with a passion would I shake the world;
And raise from sleep that fell anatomy
Which cannot hear, but hears the voice,
Which scorns a modern invocation.

Pand. Lady, you utter madness, and not sorrow.

Const. Thou art not holy to belie me so;
I am not mad: this hair I tear is mine;
My name is Constance; I was Geoffrey's wife;
Young Arthur is my son, and he is lost:
I am not mad: I would to heaven I were!
For then, 'tis like I should forget myself:
O, if I could, what grief should I forget!
Preach some philosophy to make me mad,
And thou shalt be canalized, cardinal;
For by the right of nature a cardinal,
My reasonable part produces reason:
How I may be deliver'd of these woes,
And teaches me to kill or hang myself:
If I were mad, I should forget my son,
Or madly think a babe of clouts were lie:
I am not mad; too well, too well I feel
The different plague of each calamity.

K. Phi. Bind up those tresses. O, what love I note
In the fair multitude of those her hairs!
Where but by chance a silver drop hath fallen,
Even to that drop ten thousand virtuous friends
Do grieve themselves in social grief;
Like true, inseparable, faithful loves,
Sticking together in calamity.

Const. To England, if you will.

K. Phi. Bind up your hairs.

Const. Yes, that I will; and wherefore will I do it?
I tore them from their bonds and cried aloud
'O that these hands could so redeem my son
As they have given these hairs their liberty!'
But now I envy at their liberty,
And will again commit them to their bonds,
Because my poor child is a prisoner.
And, father cardinal, I have a good say
That we shall see and know our friends in heaven:
If that be true, I shall see my boy again;
For since the birth of Cain, the first male child,
To him that did but yesterday surmise,
There was not such a grievous creature born.
But now will cannot sorrow eat their soul
And chase the native beauty from his cheek
And he will look as hollow as a ghost,
As dim and meagre as an ague's fit,
And so he'll die; and, rising so again,
When I shall meet him in the court of heaven
I shall not know him: therefore, never, never Must I behold my pretty Arthur more.

Pand. You hold too heinous a respect of grief.

Const. He talks to me that never had a son.

K. Phi. You are as fond of grief as of your child.

Const. Grant of my absent child,
Lies in his bed, walks up and down with me,
Puts on his pretty looks, repeats his words,
Remembers me of all his gracious parts,
Stuffs out his vacant garments with his form;
Then, have I reason to be fond of grief?
Fare you well; had you such a loss as I,
I could give better comfort than you do.
I will not keep this form upon my head,
When there is such disorder in my wit.
O Lord! my boy, my Arthur, my fair son!
My life, my joy, my food, my all the world!
My widow-comfort, and my sorrow's ease.

Lev. There's nothing in this world can make me
Life is as tedious as a twice-told tale
Joy: vexing the dull ear of a drowsy man;
And bitter shame hath spoil'd the sweetest world's taste,
That it yields nought but shame and bitterness.

Pand. Before the curing of a strong disease,
Even in the instant of repair and health,
The fit is strongest; evils that take leave,
On their departure most of all show evil:
What have I lost by losing this day?

Lev. All days of glory, joy and happiness.

Pand. If you had won it, certainly you had.
No, no; when fortune means to men most good,
She looks upon them with a threatening eye,
'Tis strange to think how much King John hath lost
In this which he accounts so clearly won;
Are not you grieved that Arthur is his prisoner?

Lev. As heartily as he is glad he hath him.

Pand. Your mind is all as youthful as your blood.
Now hear me speak with a prophetic spirit;
For even the breath of what I mean to speak
Shall blow each not a single dust, but each little rub,
Out of the path which shall directly lead
Thy foot to England's throne; and therefore mark.
John hath seized Arthur; and it cannot be
That, whiles warm life plays in that infant's veins,
The misplace'd John should entertain an hour,
One minute, nay, one quiet breath of rest.
A sceptre snatch'd with an unruly hand
Must be as boisterously maintain'd as gain'd;
And he that stands upon a slippery place
Makes nice of no vile hold to stay him up:
That John may stand, then Arthur needs must fall;
So be it, for I cannot be false.

Lev. But what shall I gain by young Arthur's Pand. You, in the right of Lady Blanch your wife,
May then make all the claim that Arthur did.

Lev. And lose it, life and all, as Arthur did.
ACT IV.

KING JOHN.

SCENE I.

Pand. How green you are and fresh in this old world!
John lays you plots; the times conspire with you;
For he that steeps his safety in true blood
Shall find but bloody safety and untrue.
This act so evilly born shall cool the hearts
Of all his people and freeze up their zeal.
That none so small advantage shall step forth
To check his reign, but they will cherish it;
No natural exhalation in the sky;
No scope of nature, no dis temper'd day,
No common wind, no customed event.
But they will pluck away his natural cause
And call them meteors, prodigies and signs,
Abortive, presages and tongues of heaven,
Plainly denouncing vengeance upon John.

Lew. May be he will not touch young Arthur's life,
But hold himself safe in his imprisonment.
Pand. O, sir, when he shall hear of your approach,
If that young Arthur be not gone already,

Even at that news he dies; and then the hearts
Of all his people shall revolt from him
And kiss the lips of unacquainted change
And pick strong matter of revolt and wrath
Out of the bloody fingers' ends of John.

Methinks I see this hurly all on foot:
And, O, what better matter breeds for you
Than I have named! The bastard Faulconbridge
Is now in England, ransacking the church,
Offending charity: if but a dozen French
Were there in arms, they would be as a call
To train ten thousand English to their side,
Or as a little snow, tumbling about.

Anon becomes a mountain. O noble Dauphin,
Go with me to the king: 'tis wonderful
What may be wrought out of their discontent,
Now that their souls are topful of offence.
For England go: I will whet on the king.

Lew. Strong reasons make strong actions: let us
If you say ay, the king will not say no.

[Execut.]

ACT IV.

SCENE I. — A room in a castle.

Enter Hubert and Executioners.

Hub. Heat me these iron rods; and look thou stand
Within the arras: when I strike my foot
Upon the bosom of the ground, rush forth,
And bind the boy which you shall find with me.
Fast to the chair: be heedful: hence, and watch.

First Exe. I hope your warrant will bear out the deed.

Hub. Uncleanly scruples! fear not you: look to 't.

[Execut Executioners.

Young lad, come forth; I have to say with you.

Enter Arthur.

Arth. Good morrow, Hubert.

Hub. Good morrow, little prince.
Arth. As little prince, having so great a title
To be more prince, as may be. You are sad.

Hub. Indeed, I have been merrier.

Arth. Methinks no body should be sad but I:
Yet, I remember, when I was in France,
Young gentlemen would be as sad as night,
Only for wantonness. By my christendom,
So I were out of prison and kept sheep,
I should be merry as my day is long:
And so I would be here, but that I doubt
My uncle practices more harm to me:
He is afraid of me and I of him:
Is it my fault that I was Geoffrey's son?
No, indeed, is 't not: and I would to heaven
I were your son, so you would love me, Hubert.

Hub. [Aside] If I talk to him, with his innocent
He will awake my mercy which lies dead: pray,
Therefore I will be sudden and dispatch, [day:
Arth. Are you sick, Hubert? you look pale to
In sooth, I would you were a little sick,
That I might sit all night and watch with you:
I warrant I love you more than you do me.

Hub. [Aside] His words do take possession of my bosom.

Read here, young Arthur: [Showing a paper.

[Aside] How now, foolish rheum!

Turning dispituous torture out of door!
I must be brief, lest resolution drop
Out at mine eyes in tender womanish tears.
Can you not read it? Is it not fair writ?

Arth. Too fairly, Hubert, for so foul effect:
May you with hot irons burn out both mine eyes?

Hub. Young boy, I must.

Arth. And will you?

Hub. And will I.

Arth. Have you the heart? When your head did but ache,
I knit my handkercher about your brows,
The best I had, a princess wrought it me,
And I did never ask it you again;
And with my hand at midnight hid your head,
And like the watchful minutes to the hour,
I and a man chek'd up the heavy time.

[Aside] What lack you?

Hub. Saying, 'What lack you?' and 'Where lies your
Of what good love may I perform for you?'
Many a poor man's son would have lien still
And ne'er have spoke a loving word to you;
But you at your sick service had a prince
Nay, you may think my love was crafty love
And call it cunning: do, an if you will:
If heaven be pleased that you must use me ill,
Why then you must. Will you put out mine eyes?
These eyes theft never did nor never shall
So much as frown on you.

Hub. I have sworn to do it;
And with hot irons must I burn them out.

Arth. Ah, none but in this iron age would do it!
The iron of itself, though heat red-hot,
Approaching near these eyes, would drink my tears
And quench his fiery indigation
Even in the matter of mine innocence;
Nay, after that, consume away in rust,
But for containing fire to harm mine eye.
Are you more stubborn-hard than hammer'd iron?
An if an angel should have come to me
And told me Hubert should put out mine eyes,
I would not have believed him,—no tongue but Hubert's.

Re-enter Executioners, with a cord, irons, &c.

Do as I bid you do. [out

Arth. O, save me, Hubert, save me! my eyes are Even with the fierce looks of these bloody men.

Hub. Give me the iron, I say, and bind him here.

Arth. Alas, what need you be so hoisterous-rough?
I will not struggle, I will stand stone-still.
For heaven sake, Hubert, let me not be bound!
Nay, hear me, Hubert, drive these men away,
And I will sit as quiet as a lamb;
I will not stir, nor wince, nor speak a word,
Nor look upon the iron angrily.

Thrust these men away, and I'll forgive you,
Whatever torment you do put me to.

286
ACT IV.

KING JOHN.

SCENE II.

Hub. Go, stand within; let me alone with him.
First Exec. I am best pleased to be from such a deed.
[Executes Executors.
Arth. Alas, I then have child away my friend!
He hath a stern look, but a gentle heart:
Let him hark back, that his compassion may Give life to yours.
Hub. Come, boy, prepare yourself.
Arth. Is there no remedy?
Hub. None, but to lose your eyes.
Arth. O heaven, that there were but a mote in your an;urs,
A grain, a dust, a gnat, a wandering hair,
Any annoyance in that precious sense!
Then feeling what small things are boisterous there,
Your vile intent must needs seem horrid.
Hub. Is this your promise? go to, hold your tongue.
Arth. Hubert, the utterance of a brace of tongues
Must needs want pleading for a pair of eyes:
Let me not hold my tongue, let me not, Hubert;
Or, Hubert, if you will, cut out my tongue,
So I may keep mine eyes: O, spare mine eyes,
Though to no use but still to look on you!
Lo, by my troth, the instrument is cold
And would not harm me.
Hub. I can heat it, boy.
Arth. No, in good sooth; the fire is dead with Being create for comfort, to be used [grief,
In undeserved extremes: see else yourself;
There is no malice in his burning coal.
The breath of heaven has blown his spirit out
And swear'd repentant ashes on his head.
Hub. But with my breath I can revive it, boy.
Arth. An if you do, you will but make it blush
And glow with shame of your proceedings, Hubert:
Nay, it percelance will sparkle in your eyes;
And like a dog that is compell'd to fight,
Smatch at his master that doth tarre him on.
All things that you should use to do me wrong
Deny their office: only do look
That mercy which fierce fire and iron extends;
Creatures of note for mercy-lacking uses.
Hub. Well, see to live; I will not touch thine eye
For all the treasure that thine uncle owes:
Yet am I sworn and I did purpose, boy,
With this same very iron to burn them out.
Arth. O, now you look like Hubert! all this while
You were disguised.
Your uncle must not know but you are dead;
I'll fill these dogged spies with false reports:
And, pretty child, sleep doubtless and secure,
That Hubert, for the wealth of all the world,
Will not offend thee.
Arth. O heaven! I thank you, Hubert.
Hub. Silence; no more: go closely in with me:
Much danger do I undergo for thee. [Execut.
Before the child himself felt he was sick:

This must be answer'd either here or hence.

K. John. Why do you bend such solemn brows on Think you I hear the shears of destiny? [me?
Have I command or not on the pulse of life?

Sal. It is apparent foul play; and 'tis shame
That greatness should so grossly offer it:
So thrive it in your game! and so, farewell.

Pem. Stay yet, Lord Salisbury: I'll go with thee,
And find the inheritance of this poor child,
His little kingdom of a forged grave.
That blood which owed the breadth of all this isle,
Three foot of it doth hold: bad world the while!
This must not be thus borne: this will break out
To all our sorrows, and ere long I doubt.

K. John. They burn in indignation. I repent:
There is no sure foundation set on blood,
No certain life achieved by others' death.

Enter a Messenger.

A fearful eye thou hast: where is that blood
That I have seen inhabit in those cheeks?
So foul a sky clears not without a storm:
Pour down thy weather: how goes all in France?

Mess. From France to England. Never such a Power for any foreign preparation.

Was blood in the bosom of a land,
The copy of your speed is learn'd by them;
For when you should be told they do prepare,
The tidings come that they are all arrived.

K. John. O, where hath our intelligence been drunken?
Where hath it slept? Where is my mother's care,
That such an army could be drawn in France,
And she not hear of it?

Mess. My liege, her ear
Is stopp'd with dust: the first of April died
Your noble mother: and, as I hear, my lord,
The Lady Constance in a frenzy died
Three days before: but this from rumour's tongue
I idly heard: if true or false I know not.

K. John. Withhold thy speed, dreadful occasion!
O, make a league with me, till I have pleased
My discontented peers! What! mother dead!
How wildly then walks my estate in France!
Under whose conduct came those powers of France
That for truth givest out are landed here?

Mess. Under the Dauphin.

K. John. Thou hast made me giddy
With these ill tidings.

Enter the Bastard and Peter of Pomfret.

Now, what says the world
To your proceedings? do not seek to stuff
My head with more ill news, for it is full.

Bast. But if you be afraid to hear the worst,
Then let the worst unheard fall on your head.
K. John. Bear with me, cousin; for I was amazed
Under the tide: but now I breathe again
A loft the fooul, and can give audience
To your tongue, speak it of what it will.

Bast. How I have sped among the clergymen,
The sums I have collected shall express,
But as I travell'd hither through the land,
I find the people strangely fannsfated;
Possess'd with rumours, full of idle dreams.
Not keen in nothing but in their fear:
And here's a prophet, that I brought with me
From forth the streets of Pomfret, whom I found
With many hundreds tredding on his heels;
To whom he sang, in rude harsh-sounding rhymes,
That, ere the next Ascension-day at noon,
Your highness should deliver up your crown.

K. John. Thou idle dreamer, wherefore dist thou so? [so.

Peter. Foreknowing that the truth will fall out

K. John. Hubert, away with him; imprison him;
And on that day at noon, whereon he says
I shall yield up my crown, let him be hang'd.
Deliver him to safety; and return
For I must use thee. [Exit Hubert with Peter.
O my gentle cousin,
Hear'st thou the news abroad, who are arrived?

Bast. The French, my lord; men's mouths are Full of it:
Besides, I met Lord Bigot and Lord Salisbury,
With eyes as red as new-enkindled fire,
And others more, going to seek the grave
Of Arthur, whom they say is kill'd to-night
On your suggestion.

K. John. Gentle kinsman, go,
And thrust thyself into their companies:
I have a way to win their loves again;
Bring them before me.

Bast. I will seek them out.

K. John. Nay, but make haste; the better foot
O, let me have no subject enemies. [before.
When adverse foreigners affright my towns
With dreadful pomp of stout invasion!
Be Mercury, set feathers to thy heels,
And fly like thought from them to me again.

Bast. The spirit of the time shall teach me speed.

Go after him; for he perhaps shall need
Some messenger betwixt me and the peers;
And be thou he.

Mess. With all my heart, my liege. [Exit.

K. John. My mother dead!

Re-enter Hubert.

Hub. My lord, they say five moons were seen to Four fixed, and the fifth did whirl about [night;
The other four in wondrous motion.

K. John. Five moons!

Hub. Old men and beldams in the streets
Do prophesy upon it dangerously:
Young Arthur's death is common in their mouths:
And when they talk of him, they shake their heads
And whisper one another in the ear;
And be that speech cloth grieves the hearer's wrist.
Whilest he that hears makes fearful action,
With wrinkled brows, with nods, with rolling eyes.
I saw a smith stand with his hammer, thus,
The whilst his iron did on the anvil cool,
With open mouth swallowing a tailor's news;
Who, with his shears and miserere in his hand,
Standing on slippers, which his nimble haste
Had falsely thrust upon contrary feet,
Told of a many thousand warlike French
That were enlattin'd and rank'd in Kent:
Another lean unwash'd artificer
Cuts off his tale and talks of Arthur's death.

K. John. Why seek'st thou to possess me with these fears?

Why urg'st thou so oft young Arthur's death?
Thy hand hath murder'd him; I had a mighty cause
To wish him dead, but thou hast done to kill him.
Hub. No had, my lord! why, did you not provoke me?

K. John. It is the curse of kings to be attended
By slaves that take their humours for a warrant
To break within the bloody house of life,
And on the other side of fear:
To understand a law, to know the meaning
Of dangerous majesty, when perchance it frowns
More upon humour than advised respect.

Hub. Here is your hand and seal for what I did.

K. John. O, when the last account 'twixt heaven and earth
Is to be made, then shall this hand and seal
Witness against us to damnation!
How off the sight of means to do ill deeds
Make deeds ill done! Hadst thou not been by, A fellow by the hand of nature mark'd, Quoted and sign'd to do a deed of shame, This murder had not come into my mind; But taking note of thy abhor'd aspect, Finding thee fit for bloody villany, Art, and that with such ministers as I I faintly broke with thee of Arthur's death; And thou, to be everarded to a king, Made it no conscience to destroy a prince.

Hub. My lord,—

K. John. Hadst thou but shook thy head or made When I spake darkly what I purposed, Or turn'd an eye of doubt upon my face, As bid me tell my tale in express words, [off. Deep shame had struck me dumb, made me break And those thy fears might have wroth fears in me: But thou didst understand me by my signs And didst in signs again parley with sin; Yea, without stop, didst let thy heart consent, And consequently thy rude hand to act The deed, which both our tongues held vile to name. Out of my sight, and never see me more! My nobles leave me; and my state is braved, Even as a wreath with which I have beheld, Or have you read or heard? or could you think? Or do you almost think, although you see, That you do see? could thought without this object, Form such another? This is the very top, The height, the crest, or crest unto the crest, Of murder's arrow; this is the lowest shame, The wildest savagery, the vilest stroke, That ever wall-eyed wrath or staring rage Presented to the tears of soft remorse.

Pem. All murders past do stand excused in this: And this, so sole and so unmatchable, Didst give a holiness, a purity, To the yet unbegotten sin of times; And prove a deadly bloodshed but a jest, Examined by this heinous spectacle.

Bast. It is a damned and a bloody work; The graceless action of a heavy hand, It that be the work of any hand.

Sal. If that it be the work of any hand! We had a kind of light what would ensue; It is the shameful work of Hubert's hand; The practice and the purpose of the king: From whose obedience I forbid my soul, Kneeling before this ruin of sweet life, And breathing to his breathless excellence The incense of a vow, a holy vow, Never to taste the pleasures of the world, Never to be infected with delight, Nor conversant with ease and idleness, Till I have set a glory to this hand, By giving it the worship of revenge.

Pem. Our souls religiously confirm thy words.

Big. Enter Hubert.

Hub. Lords, I am hot with haste in seeking you: Arthur doth live; the king hath sent for you.

Sal. O, he is bold and bludges not at death.

Avaunt, thou hateful villain, get thee gone!

Hub. I am no villain.

Sal. Must I rob the law?

[Drawing his sword.

Bast. Your sword is bright, sir; put it up again.

Sal. Not till I sheathe it in a murderer's skin.

Hub. Stand back, Lord Salisbury, stand back, I say;

Big. By heaven, I think my sword 's as sharp as yours: I would not have you, lord, forget yourself, Nor tempt the danger of my true defence; Let me, by marking of your rage, forget Your worth, your greatness and nobility.

[man?

Big. Out, duaghill! darest thou brave a noble-
ACT V.

KING JOHN.

SCENE I. — King John's palace.

Enter King John, Pandulf, and Attendants.

K. John. Thus have I yielded up into your hand The circle of my glory.

Pand. Take again From this my hand, as holding of the pope Your sovereign greatness and authority.

K. John. Now keep your holy word: go meet the And from his holiness use all your power To stop their marches 'fore we are inflamed. Our discontented counties do revolt; Our people quarrel with obedience, Swearing allegiance and the love of soul To stranger blood, to foreign royalty. This inundation of mistemper'd humour Rests by you only to be qualified: Since then pass not; for the present time's so sick, That present medicine must be minister'd, Or overthrow incursible ensues.

Pand. It was my breath that blew this tempest Upon your stubborn usage of the pope; But since you are a gentle converte, My tongue shall blush in this storm of war And make fair weather in your blistering land. On this Ascension-day, remember well, Upon your oath of service to the pope, Go I to make the French lay down their arms.

K. John. Is this Ascension-day? Did not the Say that before Ascension-day at noon

ACT V.

JOHN.

SCENE I.

There is not yet so ugly a fiend of hell As thou shalt be, if thou didst kill this child.

Hub. Upon my soul—

Bast. If thou didst but consent To this most cruel act, do but despair; And if thou want'st a cord, the smallest thread That ever spider twisted from her womb Will serve to strangle thee; a rush will be a beam To hang thee on; or wouldst thou drown thyself, Put but a little water in a spoon, And it shall be as all the ocean, Enough to stifle such a villain up. I do suspect thee very gentle.

Hub. If I in act, consent, or sin of thought, Be guilty of the stealings that sweet breath Which was embounded in this beauteous clay, Let hell want pains enough to torture me. I left him well.

Bast. Go, bear him in thine arms. I am amazed, methinks, and lose my way Among the thorns and dangers of this world. How easy dost thou take all England up! From forth this morsel of dead royalty, The life, the light and truth of this rich realm Is fled to heaven! and England now is left To tug and scramble and to part by the teeth The unwielded interest of proud-swelling state. Now for the bare-pick'd bone of majesty Doth dogged war bristle his angry crest And snarl in the gentle peace of heaven; Now powers from home and discontentments at home Meet in one line; and vast confusion waits, As doth a raven on a sick-fall'n beast, The imminent decay of wrested pomp. Now happy he whose cloak and cincture can Hold out this tempest. Bear away those And follow me with speed: I'll to the king: A thousand businesses are brief in hand, And heaven itself doth frown upon the land.

[Exeunt.

My crown I should give off? Even so I have: I did suppose it should be on constraint; But, heaven be thank'd, it is but voluntary.

Enter the Bastard.

Bast. All Kent hath yield'd; nothing there holds But Dover castle: London hath received, But like a kind host, the Dauphin and his powers: Your nobles will not hear you, but are gone To offer service to your enemy, And will amazement hurries up and down The little number of your doubtful friends. K. John. Would not my lords return to me again, After they heard young Arthur was alive?

Bast. They found him dead and cast into the An empty casket, where the jewel of life streets, By some damn'd hand was robb'd and ta'en away. K. John. That villain Hubert told me he did live.

Bast. So, on my soul, he did, for aught he knew. But wherefore do you droop? why look you sad? Be great in act, as you have been in thought: Let not the world see fear and sad distrust Govern the motion of a kingly eye: Be stirring as the time: be fire with fire; Threaten the threateners and outface the brow Of bragging horror: so shall inferior eyes, That borrow their behaviours from the great, Grow great by your example and put on The dauntless spirit of resolution. Away, and glister like the god of war, When he intendeth to become the field:
Act V.

KING JOHN.

Scene II.

Show boldness and aspiring confidence.
What, shall they seek the lion in his den?  [there?
And fright him there? and make him tremble
O, let it not be said: forage, and run
To meet displeasure farther from the doors,
And grasp prenentus eye, he has it so high.  [me,
K. John.  The legs of the people hath been with
And I have made a happy peace with him;
And he hath promised to dismiss the powers
Led by the Dauphin.

Bast.

mocking O inglorious league!
Should we, upon the footing of such lord,
Send fair-play orders and make compromise,
Insinuation, parley, and base truce
To arms invassy? shall a beardless boy,
A cocker'd silken wanton, brave our fields,
And flesh his spirit in a warlike soil,
Mocking the air with colours idly spread,
And find no check? Let us, my liege, to arms:
Perchance the cardinal cannot make your peace;
Or if he do, let it at least be said
They saw we had a purpose of defence.

K. John.  Have thou the ordering of this present

Bast.

Away, then, with good courage! yet, I know,
Our party may well meet a prouder foe.  "Excitent.

Scene II. — The Dauphin's camp at St. Edmundsbury.

Enter, in arms, Lewis, Salisbury, Melun, Pembroke, Bigot, and Soldiers.

Lev.

My Lord Melyn, this let he be copied out,
And keep it safe for our remembrance:
Return the present offers of these lords again;
That, having our fair order written down,
Both they and we, perusing o'er these notes,
May know wherefore we took the sacrament
And keep our faiths firm and inviolable.

Sol.

Upon our sides it never shall be broken.

And, noble Dauphin, albeit we swear
A voluntary zeal and an unurged faith
To your proceedings; yet believe me, prince,
I am not glad that such a sore of time
Should seek a plaster by contemn'd revolt,
And heal the inveterate canker of one wound
By using many. O, it grieves my soul
That I must draw this metal from my side
To be a widow-maker! O, and there
Where honourable rescue and defence
Cries out upon the name of Salisbury!
But such is the infection of the time,
That, for the health and physic of our right,
We cannot deal but with the very hand
Of stern injustice and confused wrong,
And is't not pity, O my grieved friends,
That we, the sons and children of this isle,
Were born to see so sad an hour as this;
With what a step affect these lords again
Upon her gentle bosom, and fill up
Her enemies' ranks.—I must withdraw and weep
Upon the spot of this enforced cause,—
To grace the gentry of a land remote,
And follow unacquainted colours here?
What, here? O nation, that thou couldst remove!
That Neptune's arms, who clippeth thee about,
Would bear thee from the knowledge of thyself,
And grasp thee unto a pagan shore;
Where these two Christian armies might combine
The blood of many, and not to spend it so unneighbourly!
Lev.

A noble temper dost thou show in this;
And great affections wrestling in thy bosom
Doth make an earthquake of nobility.
O, what a noble combat hast thou fought
Between compulsion and a brave respect!

Let me wipe off this honourable dew,
That silvery doth progress on thy cheeks;
My heart hath melted at a lady's tears,
Being an ordinary inundation;
But this effusion of such many drops,
This shower, blown up by tempest of the soul,
Startles not eyes, and makes no man amazed
Than had I seen the vault of heaven
Figured quite o'er with burning meteors.

Come, let us to the strife of your empires;
To divide these waters between us,
And make a peace between you,
And to the work of peace.

Enter Pandulph.

Hail, noble prince of France!

The next is this, King John hath reconciled
Himself to Rome; his spirit is come in,
That so set out against the holy church,
The great metropolis and see of Rome.
Therefore thy threatening colours now wind up;
And tame the savage spirit of wild war,
That, like a lion foster'd up at hand,
It may lie gently at the foot of peace,
And be no further harmful than in show.

Lev.

Your grace shall pardon me, I will not back:
I am too high-born to be propertied,
To be a secondary at control,
Or useful serving-man and instrument,
To any sovereign state throughout the world.
Your breath first kindled the dead coal of wars
Between this chastised kingdom and myself,
And brought in matter that should feed this fire;
And now 'tis far too huge to be blown out
With that same weak wind which enkindled it.
You taught me how to know the face of right,
Acquainted with that which is an end,
Yea, thrust this enterprise into my heart;
And come ye now to tell me John hath made
His peace with Rome? What is that peace to me?
I, by the honour of my marriage-bed,
After young Arthur, claim this land for mine;
And, now it is half-conquered, must I back?
Because that John hath made his peace with Rome?
Am I Rome's slave? What penny hath Rome borne,
What men provided, what munition sent,
To underprop this action? Is 't not I
That undergo this charge? who else but I,
And such a step to my claim?
Upon her gentle bosom, and fill up
Her enemies' ranks.—I must withdraw and weep
Upon the spot of this enforced cause,—
To grace the gentry of a land remote,
And follow unacquainted colours here?
What, here? O nation, that thou couldst remove!
That Neptune's arms, who clippeth thee about,
Would bear thee from the knowledge of thyself,
And grasp thee unto a pagan shore;
Where these two Christian armies might combine
The blood of many, and not to spend it so unneighbourly!
Lev.

A noble temper dost thou show in this;
And great affections wrestling in thy bosom
Doth make an earthquake of nobility.
O, what a noble combat hast thou fought
Between compulsion and a brave respect!

What lusty trumpet thus doth summon us?
Enter the Bastard, attended.

Bast. According to the fair play of the world, Let me have audience! I am sent to speak:
To my high lord King John, and to thee, my kinsman, John, As I am sent to you. I come to learn how you have dealt for him; And, as you answer, I do know the scope And warrant limited unto my tongue.

Pand. The Dauphin is too wilful-opposite, And will not temporize with my entreaties; He duty says he'll not lay down his arms.

Bast. By all the blood that ever fury breathed, The youth says well. Now hear our English king; For thus his royalty doth speak in me. He is prepared, and reason too he should:
This apish and unmanly apprais'd,
This harness'd masque and unadvised revel,
This unhair'd sauciness and boyish troops,
The king doth smile at; and is well prepared To whip this dwarfish war, these pigmy arms,
From out the circle of his territories. [door, That hand which had the strength, even at your To cudgel you and make you take the hatch, To dive like buckets in concealed wells,
To crouch in litter of your stable planks,
To lie like pawn's lock'd up in chests and trunks,
To hug with swine, to seek sweet safety out In vaults and prisons; and to hurl and shake Even at the crying of your nation's crown,
Thinking his voice an armed Englishman; Shall that victorious hand be feebled here,
That in your chambers gave you chastisement? No: in the gallant monarch is the burns And like an eagle o'er his sery towers
To sose annoyance that comes near his nest.

And you degenerate, you ingrate revolts,
You bloody Xeroes, ripping up the womb Of your dear mother England, blush for shame;
For your own ladies and pale-visaged maids
Like Amazons come tripping after drums,
Their thimbles into armed gauntlets change,
Their needles to lances, and their gentle hearts To fierce and bloody inclination. [peace; Leav. There end thy brave, and turn thy face in We grant thou asse outcast us: fare thee well;
We hold our time too precious to be spent
With such a brabber.

Paw. Give me leave to speak.
Bast. No, I will speak.
Leav. We will attend to neither.
Strike up the drums; and let the tongue of war Plead for our interest and our being here. [out; Bast. Indeed, your drums, being beaten, will cry And so shall you, being beaten: do but start An echo with the clamour of thy drum, And even at hand a drum is ready bruised That shall reverberate all as loud as thine;
Sound but another, and another shall As loud as thine rattle the welkin's ear And mock the deep-mouth'd thunder: for at hand, Not trusting to this halting legate here, Whom he hath used rather for sport than need, Is warlike John; and in his forehead sits A bare-ribb'd death, whose office is this day To feast upon whole thousands of the French.

Leav. Strike up your drums, to find this danger out.
Bast. And thou shall find it, Dauphin. do not doubt. [Exeunt.

SCENE III.—The field of battle.

Alarms. Enter King John and Hubert.

K. John. How goes the day with us? O, tell me, Hubert.
Hub. Badly, I fear. How fares your majesty?
K. John. This fever, that hath troubled me so long, Lies heavy on me; O, my heart is sick!
SCENE V.—The French camp.

Enter Lewis and his train.

Lev. The sun of heaven methought was loath to set.

But sunk and made the western welkin blush,

When English measure backward their own ground

In faint retire, O, bravely came we off,

When with a volley of our needless shot,

And wond our tattering colours clearly up,

Last in the field, and almost lords of it!

Enter a Messenger.

Mess. Where is my prince, the Dauphin?

Lev. Here: what news? Mess. The Count Melun is slain; the English lords

His present purpose are again to bear thee hence;

And your supply, which you have wish’d so long,

Are cast away and sunk on Goodwin Sands.

Lev. Ah, foul shrewd news! bleslirew thy very

I did not think to be so sad to-night [heart!]

As this hath made me. Who was he that said

King John did fly an hour or two before

The stumbling night did part our weary powers?

Mess. Whoever spoke it, it is true, my lord.

Lev. Well: keep good quarter and good care to—

The day shall not be up so soon as I,

To try the fair adventure of to-morrow. [Exeunt.

SCENE VI.—An open place in the neighbourhood of Swinestead Abbey.

Enter the Bastard and Hubert, severally.

Hub. Who’s there? speak, ho! speak quickly, or

Hub. Of the part of England.

Bast. Whither dost thou go? [mand

Hub. What’s that to thee? why may not I de-

Of thine affairs, as well as thou of mine?—

Bast. Hubert, I think.

Hub. Thou hast a perfect thought:

I will upon all hazards well believe

Thou art my friend, that know’st my tongue so well.

Who art thou?

Bast. Who art wilt: and if thou please,

Thou mayst befriend me so much as to think

I come one way of the Plantagenets. [night

Hub. Unkind remembrance! thou and eyless

Have done me shame; brave soldier, pardon me,

That any accent breaking from thy tongue

Should escape the true acquaintance of mine ear.

Bast. Come, come; sans compliment, what news abroad?

Hub. Why, why here walk I in the black brow of night,

To find you out.

Bast. Brief, then; and what’s the news?

Hub. O, my sweet sir, news fitting to the night,

Black, fearful, comfortless and horrible.

Bast. Do you know me the very wond of this ill news:

I am no woman, I’ll not swoon at it.

Hub. The king, I fear, is poison’d by a monk:

I left him almost speechless; and broke out

To acquaint you with this evil, that you might

The better arm you to the sudden time.

Then, if you had at leisure known of this.

Bast. How did he take it? who did taste to him?

Hub. A monk, I tell you; a resolved villain,

Whose bowels suddenly burst out: the king

Yet speaks and pereadventure may recover.

Bast. Who didst thou leave to tend his majesty?

Hub. Why, know you not? the lords are all come back,

And brought Prince Henry in their company; At whose request the king hath pardon’d them,

And they are all about his majesty.

Bast. Withhold thine indignation, mighty heaven,

And tempt us not to bear above our power!

I’ll tell thee, Hubert, half my power this night,

Passing these flats, are taken by the tide:

These Lincoln Washes have devoured them;

Myself, well mounted, hardly have escaped.

Away before: conduct me to the king:

I doubt he will be dead or ere I come. [Exeunt.

SCENE VII.—The orchard in Swinestead Abbey.

Enter Prince Henry, Salisbury, and Bigot.

P. Hen. It is too late: the life of all his blood

Is touch’d corruptibly, and his pure brain,

Which some suppose the soul’s frail dwelling-house,

Doth by the idle comments that it makes

Foretell the ending of mortality.

Enter Pembroke.

Pem. His highness yet doth speak, and holds be-

That, being brought into the open air, [lief

It would alay the burning quality

Of that fell poison which assalleth him.

P. Hen. Let him be brought into the orchard here.

Doth he still rage? [Exeunt Bigot.

Pem. He is more patient

When you let him off; even now he sung.

P. Hen. O vanity of sickness! fierce extremes

In their continuance will not feel themselves.

Death, having prey’d upon the outward parts,

Leaves them invisible, and his siege is now

Against the mind, the which he pricks and wounds

With many legions of strange fantasies,

Which, in their throng and press to that last hold,

Confound themselves. ’Tis strange that death should sing.

I am the cygneet to this pale faint swan,

Who chants a doleful hymn to his own death,

And from the organ-pipe of frailty sings

His soul and body to their lasting rest.

Sal. Be of good comfort, prince; for you are born

To set a form upon that indigist

Which he hath left so shapeless and so rude.

Enter Attendants, and Bigot, carrying King John in a chair.

K. John. Ay, marry, now my soul hath elbow—

It would not out at windows nor at doors. [room;

There is so hot a summer in my bosom,

That all my bowels crumble up to dust:

I am a scribbled form, drawn with a pen

Upon a parchment, and against this fire

Do I shrink up.

P. Hen. How fares your majesty?

K. John. Poison’d.—ill fare—dead, forsook, cast

And none of you will bid the winter come [off:

To thrust his icy fingers in my bow,

Nor let my kingdom’s rivers take their course

Through my burn’d bosom, nor entreat the north

To make his bleak winds kiss my parched lips,

And comfort me with cold. I do not ask you much,

I beg cold comfort; and you are so strait

And so ingrateful, you deny me that.

P. Hen. O that there were some virtue in my

That might relieve you!

K. John. The salt in them is hot.

Within me is a hell: and there the poison

Is as a fiend confined to tyrannize

On unreapicable condemned blood.

293
Enter the Bastard.

Bast. O, I am scalded with my violent motion, And spleen of speed to see your majesty!

K. John. O cousin, thou art come to set mine eye:
The tackle of my heart is crack'd and burn'd.
And all the shrouds wherewith my life should sail
Are turned to one thread, one little hair:
My heart hath one poor string to stay it by,
Which holds but till thy news be uttered;
And then all this thou seest is but a cloath
And module of confounded royalty.

Bast. The Dauphin is preparing hitherward,
Where heaven He knows how we shall answer him;
For in a night the best part of my power,
As I upon advantage did remove,
Were in the Washes all unwarily
Devoured by the unexpected flood. [The king dies.

Sal. You breathe these dead news in as dead an ear.
My liege! my lord! but now a king, now thus.

P. Hen. Even so must I run on, and even so stop.
What surety of the world, what hope, what stay,
When this was now a king, and now is clay?

Bast. Art thou gone so? I do but stay behind
To do the office for thee of revenge,
And then my soul shall wait on-thee to heaven,
As it on earth hath been thy servant still.
Now, now, you stars that move in your right spheres,
Where be your powers? show now your minded
And instantly return with me again, [faiths,
To push destruction and perpetual shame
Out of the weak door of our fainting land,
Straight let us seek, or straight we shall be sought;
The Dauphin rages at our very heels.

Sal. It seems you know not, then, so much as we:
The Cardinal Pandulp is within at rest,
Who half an hour since came from the Dauphin,
And brings from him such offers of our peace
As we with honour and respect may take,
With purpose presently to leave this war.

Bast. He will the rather do it when he sees Ourselves well sinewed to our defence.

Sal. Nay, it is in a manner done already;
For many carriages he hath dispatch'd
To the sea-side, and put his cause and quarrel
To the disposing of the cardinal:
With whom yourself, myself and other lords,
If you think meet, this afternoon will post
To consummate this business happily.

Bast. Let it be so: and you, my noble prince,
With other princes that may best be spared,
Shall wait upon your father's funeral.

P. Hen. At Worcester must his body be inter'd;
For so he will'd it.

Bast. Thither shall it then:
And happily may your sweet self put on
The linear state and glory of the land!
To whom, with all submission, on my knee
I do bequeath my faithful services
And true subjection everlastingly.

Sal. And the like tender of our love we make,
To rest without a spot for evermore. [thanks
P. Hen. I have a kind soul that would give you
And knows not how to do it but with tears.

Bast. O, let us pay the time but needful woe,
Since it hath been beforehand with our griefs.
This England never did, nor never shall,
Lie at the proud foot of a conqueror,
But when it first did help to wound itself.
Now these her princes are come home again,
Come the three corners of the world in arms, [true,
And we shall shock them. Nought shall make us
If England to itself do rest but true. [Eloquent.

Panulp.—Lady, you utter madness, and not sorrow.
Constance.—Thou art not holy to beseel me so;
I am not mad: this hair I tear is mine;
My name is Constance; I was Geoffrey's wife;
Young Arthur is my son, and he is lost:
I am not mad:—I would to Heaven, I were.—Act III., Scene iv.

ACT I.

K. Rich. Old John of Gaunt, time-honour'd Lancaster! Hast thou, according to thy oath and bond, [caster, brought hither Henry Hereford thy bold son, Here to make good the boisterous late appeal, Which then our leisure would not let us hear, Against the Duke of Norfolk, Thomas Mowbray? Gaunt. I have, my liege. [him, K. Rich. Tell me, moreover, hast thou sounded If he appeal the duke on ancient malice; Or worthily, as a good subject should, On some known ground of treachery in him? [ment, Gaunt. As near as I could sift him on that argu-On some apparent danger seen in him A'ld't at your highness, no inveterate malice. [face, K. Rich. Then call them to our presence; face to And frowning brow to brow, ourselves will hear The accuser and the accused freely speak: High-stomach'd are they both, and full of ire, In rage deaf as the sea, lusty as fire.

Enter Bolingbroke and Mowbray.

Boling. Many years of happy days befall My gracious sovereign, my most loving liege! [Mow. Each day still better other's happiness; Until the heavens, envying earth's good hap, Add an immortal title to your crown! [us, K. Rich. We thank you both: yet one but flatters As well appeareth by the cause you come; Namely, to appeal each other of high treason. Cousin of Hereford, what dost thou object Against the Duke of Norfolk, Thomas Mowbray? Boling. First, heaven be the record to my speech! In the devotion of a subject's love, Tendering the precious safety of my prince, And free from other misbegotten hate,
If guilty dread have left thee so much strength
As to take up mine honour's pawn, then stoop:
By that and all the rites of knighthood else,
Will I make good against thee, arm to arm,
What I have spoke, or thou canst worse devise.
Said it, in honour thou doit, in word I swear,
Which gently laid my knighthood on my shoulder,
I'll answer thee in any fair degree,
Or chivalrous design of knightly trial:
And when I mount, alive may I not light,
If I be traitor or unjustly fight. [charge?]
K. Rich. Of that I say, and lay to Mowbray's
It must be great that can inherit us
So much as of a thought of ill in him. [it true:
Boling. Look, what I speak, my life shall prove
That Mowbray hath received eight thousand nobles
In name of lendings for your highness' soldiers,
The which he hath detain'd for lewd employments,
Like a false traitor and injurious villain.
Besides I say and will in battle prove,
Or here or elsewhere to the furthest verge
That ever was survey'd by English eye,
That all the treasons for these eighteen years
Complotted and contrived in this land, [spring, Fetch from false Mowbray their first head and Further I say and further will maintain
Upon his bad life to make all this good,
That he did plot the Duke of Gloucester's death,
Sovereigns' fortune, and blood of England.
And consequently, like a traitor coward, [blood:
Sluiced out his innocent soul through streams of
Which blood, like sacrificing Abel's, cries,
Even from the tongueless caverns of the earth,
To set for justice and rough chastisement;
And, by the glorious worth of my descent,
This arm shall do it, or this life be spent.
K. Rich. How high a pitch his resolution soars!
Thomas of Norfolk, what say'st thou to this?
More. O, let my sovereign turn away his face
And bid his ears a little while be deaf,
Till I have told this slander of his blood,
How God and good men hate so foul a liar. [ears:
K. Rich. Mowbray, impartial are our eyes and
Were he my brother, nay, my kingdom's heir,
As he is but my father's brother's son,
Now must thou know, thy tongue is as low,
Such neighbour nearness to our sacred blood
Should nothing privilege him, nor partialize
The unstooping firmness of my upright soul:
He is our subject, Mowbray; so art thou:
Free speech and fearless I to thee allow.
More. O, God defend my soul from such deep
Shall I seem crest-fall'n in my father's sight? [sin!
Or with pale beggar-feare impair my height
Before this out-dared bastard? Ere my tongue
Shall wound my honour with such feeble wrong,
Or sound so base a parle, my teeth shall tear
The slavish tooth! All live of my lord, [shame,
And spilt it bleeding in his high disgrace,
Where shame doth harbour, even in Mowbray's face. [Exit Gaunt.
K. Rich. We were not born to sue, but to command,
Which since we cannot do to make you friends,
Be ready, as your lives shall answer it,
At Coventry, upon Saint Lambert's day:
There shall your swords and lances arbitrate
The swelling difference of your settled hate:
Since we can not atone you, we shall see
Justice design the victor's chivalry;
Lord marshal, command our officers at arms
Be ready to direct these home alarms. [Exitant.

SCENE II. — The Duke of Lancaster's palace.

Enter John of Gaunt with the Duchess of Gloucester.

Gaunt. Alas, the part I had in Woodstock's blood
Dost more solicit me than your exclaims,
To stir against the butchers of his life!
But since correction demands
Which made the fault that we cannot correct,
Put we our quarrel to the will of heaven;
Who, when they see the hours ripe on earth,
Will rain hot vengeance on offenders' heads.
Duch. Finds brotherhood in thee no sharper spur?
Hath love in thy old blood no living fire?
Edward's seven sons, whereof thyself art one,
Were as seven vials of his sacred blood,
Or seven fair branches springing from one root: Some of those seven are dried by nature's course, Some of those branches by the Destinies cut; But Thomas, my dear lord, my life, my Gloucester, One vial full of Edward's sacred blood, One flourishing branch of his most royal root, Is crack'd, and all the precious liquor spilt, Is luck'd down, and his summer leaves all faded, By envy's hand and murder's bloody axe. [wounb, Ah, Gaunt, his blood was thine! that bed, that That metal, that self-mould, that fashion'd thee Made man in man; and through thou livest and breathed, Yet art thou slain in him: thou dost consent In some large measure to thy father's death, In that thou seest thy wretched brother die, Who was the model of thy father's life. Call it not patience, Gaunt; it is despair: In suffering thus thy brother to be slaughtered, Thou showest the naked pathway to thy life, Teaching stern murder how to butcher thee: That which in mean men we intitle patience Is pale cold cowardice in noble breasts. What shall I say? to safeguard thine own life, The best way is to venge my Gloucester's death. Gaunt. God's is the quarrel; for God's substitute, His deputy anointed in His sight, Hath caused his death: the which if wrongfully, Let heaven revenge; for I may never lift An angry arm against His minister. Duch. Where then, alas, may I complain myself? Gaunt. To God, the widow's champion and defence. Duch. Why, then, I will. Farewell, old Gaunt. Thou goest to Coventry, there to behold Our cousin Hereford and left Mowbray light: O, sit my husband's wrongs on Hereford's spear, That it may enter butcher Mowbray's breast! Or, if miscourse miss the first career, Be Mowbray's sin so heavy in his bosom, That they may break his foaming courser's back, And throw the rider headlong in the lists, A caiffit recreant to my cousin Hereford! Farewell, old Gaunt: thy sometimes brother's wife With her companion grief must end her life. Gaunt. Sister, farewell; I must to Coventry: As much good stay with thee as go with me! Duch. One word more: grief boundeth where it falls, Not with the empty hollowness, but weight: I take my leave before I have begun, For sorrow ends not when it seemeth done. Commend me to thy brother, Edmund York. Lo, this is all:—nay, yet depart not so; Though this be all, do not so quickly go; I shall remember more. Bid him—ah, what?— With all good speed at Flashy visit me. Alack, and what shall good old York there see But empty lodgings and unfurnished walls, Unrestored officers, untried troops? And what hear there for welcome but my groans? Therefore commend me; let him not come there, To seek out sorrow that dwells everywhere. Desolate, desolate, will I hence and die: The last leaf of thee takes my weeping eye. [Exeunt.

SCENE III.—The lists at Coventry

Enter the Lord Marshal and the Duke of Aumerle.

Mar. My Lord Aumerle, is Harry Hereford arm'd? Aum. Yea, at all points; and longs to enter. Mar. The Duke of Norfolk, sprightfully and bold, Stays but the summons of the appellant's trumpet. Aum. Why, then, the champions are prepared, and For nothing but his majesty's approach. [stay

KING RICHARD II. SCENE III.

The trumpets sound, and the King enters with his nobles, Gaunt, Bushy, Bagot, Green, and others. When they are set, enter Mowbray in arms, defendant, with a Herald.

K. Rich. Marshal, demand of yonder champion The cause of his arm's entering in arms: Ask him his name and orderly process To swear him in the justice of his cause. [art

Mar. In God's name and the king's, say who thou Art and why thou comest thus knightly clad in arms, Against what man thou comest, and what thy quarrel Speak truly on thy knightly leave and thy oath; [incl: As so defend thee heaven and thy valour!

Mow. My name is Thomas Mowbray, Duke of Norfolk. Who hither come engaged by my oath—[folk; Which God defend a knight should violate!— Both to defend my loyalty and truth To God, my king and my succeeding issue, Against the Duke of Hereford that appeas me; And, by the grace of God and this mine arm, To prove him, in defending of myself, A traitor to my God, my king, and me: And as I truly fight, defend me heaven!

The trumpets sound. Enter Bolingbroke, apppellant, in armour, with a Herald.

K. Rich. Marshal, ask yonder knight in arms, Both who he is and why he cometh hither Thus platted in habiliments of war, And formally, according to the laws, Depose him in the justice of his cause.

Mar. What is thy name? and wherefore comest thou hither, Before King Richard in his royal lists? [rel? Against whom comest thou? and what's thy quarrel Like true knight, so defend thee heaven! Bolingbroke. Harry of Hereford, Lancaster and Derby Am I; who ready here do stand in arms, To prove, by God's grace and my body's valour, In lists, on Thomas Mowbray, Duke of Norfolk, That he is a traitor, foul and dangerous, To God of heaven, King Richard and to me: And as I truly fight, defend me heaven! Mar. On pain of death, no person be so bold Or daring-hardy as to touch the lists, Except the marshals and such others Appointed to direct these fair designs. [hand, Bolingbroke. Lord marshal, let our kinsman sovereign's And bow my knee before his majesty: For Mowbray and myself are like two men That vow a long and weary pilgrimage; Then let us take a ceremonious leave And loving farewell of our several friends. [ness, Mar. The appellant in all duty greets your high And craves to kiss your hand and take his leave. K. Rich. We will descend and fold them in our arms. Cousin of Hereford, as thy cause is right, So be thy fortune in this royal fight! Farewell, my blood; which if to-day thou shed, Lament with me, but not revenge thee dead! Bolingbroke. O, let no noble eye profane a tear For me, if I be gored with Mowbray's spear: As confident as is the falcon's flight Against a bird, do I with Mowbray fight. My loving lord, I take my leave of you Of you, my noble cousin, Lord Aumerle; Not sick, although I have to do with death, But lusty, young, and cheerily drawing breath. Lo, as at English feasts, so I regard The daintiest last, to make the end most sweet: Of thou, the earthily author of my blood, Whose youthful spirit, in me regenerate, Both with a twofold vigour lift me up To reach at victory above my head; Add proof unto mine armour with thy prayers; And with thy blessings steel my lance's point, That it may enter Mowbray's waxen coat,
And furnish new the name of John a Gaunt,
Even in the lusty havour of his son. [perous! Gaunt.
God in thy good cause make thee prosper;
Be swift like lightning in the execution;
And let thy blows, doubly redoubled,
Fall like amazing thunder on the casque
Of thy adverse pernicious enemy;
Rouse up thy youthful blood, be valiant and live.

Boling. Mine innocency and Saint George to right me.

Mow. How ever God or fortune cast my lot,
There lives or dies, true to King Richard's throne,
A loyal, just and upright gentleman:
Never did captive with a mere heart
Cast off his chains of bondage and embrace
His golden uncontroll'd enfranchisement,
More than my dancing soul doth celebrate
This feast of battle with mine adversary.
Most mighty liege, and my companion peers,
Take from my mouth the wish of happy years:
As gentle and as Joanct as to jest
Go I to fight; the truth hath a quiet breast.

K. Rich. Farewell, my lord: securely I espy
Virtue with valour couched in thine eye.
Order the trial, marshal, and begin.

Mar. Harry of Hereford, Lancaster and Derby,
Receive thy lance; and God defend the right! Boling. Sir, as a tower in hope, I cry amen.

Mar. Go bear this lams to Thomas, Duke of Norfolk.

First Her. Harry of Hereford, Lancaster and Derby.
Standing, for God, his sovereign and himself,
On pain to be found false and recreant,
To prove the Duke of Norfolk, Thomas Mowbray,
A traitor to his God, his king and him;
And dares him to set forward to the fight.

Sec. Her. Here standeth Thomas Mowbray, Duke of Norfolk.

On pain to be found false and recreant,
Both to defend himself and to approve
Henry of Hereford, Lancaster and Derby,
To God, his sovereign and to him disloyal;
Courageously and with a free desire
And to plot, contrive or think out all ill
Gainst us, our state, our subjects, or our land.

Boling. I swear.

Mow. And I, to keep all this.

Boling. Norfolk, so far as to mine enemy:—
By this time, had the king permitted us,
One of our sun's hands had wearied
Banish'd this frail sepulchre of our flesh,
As now our flesh is banish'd from this land:
Confess thy treasons ere thou fly the realm;
Since thos) hast far to go, bear not along
The clogging burden of a guilty soul.

Mow. No, Bolingbroke: if ever I were traitor,
My name be blotted from the book of life,
And I from heaven banish'd as from hence!
But what thou art, God, thou, and I do know;
And all too soon, I fear, the king shall rue.
Farewell, my liege. Now no way can I stay;
Save back to England, all the world's my way.

K. Rich. Uncle, even in the glasses of thine eyes
I see thy griefed heart: thy sad aspect
Hath from the number of his banish'd years
Phank'd four hundred. [To Boling.] Six frozen waters spent.
Return with welcome home from banishment.

Boling. How long a time lies in one little word!
Four lagging winters and four wanton springs
End in a word: such is the breath of kings.

Gaunt. I thank my lord: but in regard of me
He shortens four years of my son's exile:
But little vantage shall I reap thereby;
For, ere the six years that he hath to spend
ACT I.

KING RICHARD II.

SCENE IV.

Can change their moods and bring their times about,
My oil-dried lamp and time-bewasted light
Shall be extinct with age and endless night;
My inch of taper will be burnt and done,
And blindfold death not let me see my son. [live.
K. Rich. But not a minute, king, that thou canst give:
Shorten my days thou canst with sullen sorrow,
And pluck nights from me, but not lend a morrow;
Thou canst help time to forrow me with age,
But Cannot no wrinkle in his pilgrimage.
Thy word is current with him for my death
But dead, thy kingdom cannot buy my breath.
K. Rich. Thy son is banished'd upon good advice,
Where'ry thou tongue a party-verbist gave:
Why at our justice seem'st thou then to lour?
Gaunt. But not a minute, king, that thou canst say:
For gnarling sorrow hath less power to bite
The man that mocks at it and sets it light.
Boling. O, who can hold a fire in his hand
By thinking on the frosty Caucasus?
Or cloy the hungry edge of appetite
By bare imagination years to
Or wallow naked in December snow
By thinking on fantastic summer's heat?
O, no! the apprehension of the good
Gives but the greater feeling to the worse:
Fell sorrow's tooth doth never rankle more
Than when it slits, but lanceth not the sore.
Gaunt. Come, come, my son, I'll bring thee on thy way:
Had I thy youth and cause, I would not stay.
Boling. Then England's ground, farewell; sweet soil, adieu!
My mother, and my nurse, that bears me yet!
Where'er I wander, boast of this I can,
Though banish'd, yet a trueborn Englishman.

SCENE IV.—The court.

Enter the King, with Bagot and Green at one door;
and the Duke of Aumerle at another.
K. Rich. We did observe. Cousin Aumerle,
How far brought you high Hereford on his way?
Aum. I brought high Hereford, if you call him so,
But to the next highway, and there I left him.
K. Rich. And say, what store of parting tears were shed?
[wind.
Aum. Faith, none for me; except the northeast
Which then blew bitterly against our faces,
Awaked the sleeping rheum, and so by chance
Did grace our hollow parting with a tear.
K. Rich. What said our cousin when you parted with him?
Aum. 'Farewell!'
And, for my heart disdained that my tongue
Should so profane the word, that taught me craft
To counterfeit oppression of such grief
That words seemed buried in my sorrow's grave.
Marry, would the word 'farewell' have length'nod
And added years to his short banishment, [hours
He should have had a volume of farewells;
But since it would not, he had none of me.
K. Rich. He is our cousin, cousin; but 'tis doubt,
When time shall call him home from banishment,
Whether our kinman come to see his friends.
Ourself and Bushy, Bagot here and Green
Observe his courtship to the common people;
How he did seem to dive into their hearts
With humble and familiar courtesy,
What reverence he did throw away on slaves,
Wooing poor craftsmen with the craft of smiles
And patient underbearing of his fortune,
As 'twere to banish their affects with him.
Off goes his bonnet to an oyster-wench;
A brace of draymen bid God speed him well
And had the tribute of his supple knee,
With 'Thanks, my countrymen, my loving friends;'
As were our England in reversion his,
And he our subjects' next degree in hope.
Green. Well, he is gone; and with him go these thoughts.
Now for the rebels which stand out in Ireland,
Expedient manage must be made, my liege,
Ere further leisure yield them further means
For their advantage and your highness' loss.
K. Rich. We will ourselves in person to this war;
And, for our coffer's, with too great a court
Look, and liberal progress, appearing it
To lie that way thou go'st, not whence thou comest;
Suppose the singing birds musicians,
[strewed,
The grass whereon thou'rt cast the presence
The flowers fair ladies, and thy steps no more
Than a delightful measure or a dance;
For an act of grace.

[Finis.]
ACT II.

KING RICHARD II.

SCENE I.

They shall subscribe them for large sums of gold
And send them after to supply our wants;
For we will make for Ireland presently.

Enter Bushy.

Bushy, what news? [lord,
Bushy. Old John of Gaunt is grievous sick, my Suddenly taken; and hath sent post haste
To entreat your majesty to visit him.

K. Rich. Where lies he?
Bushy. At Ely House.
K. Rich. Now put it, God, in the physician's mind
To help him to his grave immediately!
The lining of his coffers shall make coats
To deck our soldiers for these Irish wars.
Come, gentle men, let's all go visit him:
Pray God we may make haste, and come too late!
All. Amen. [Exeunt.

ACT II.

SCENE I.— Ely House.

Enter John of Gaunt sick, with the Duke of York, &c.

Gaunt. Will the king come, that I may breathe my York. Vex not yourself, nor strive not with your Gaunt. O, but I doubt that way of dying men

Enforce attention like deep harmony; [vain,
Where words are scarce, they are seldom spent in
For they breathe truth that breathe their words in pain.
He that no more must say is listen'd more Than they whom youth and ease have taught to glose:
More are men's ends mark'd than their lives before:
The setting sun, and music at the close,
As the last taste of sweets, is sweetest last,
Was in remembrance more than things long past;
Though Richard my life's counsel would not hear,
My death's sad tale may yet undeaf his ear.
York. No; it is stopp'd with other flattering sounds,
As praises, of whose taste the wise are fond,
Lascivious metres, 'to whose venom sound
The open ear of youth doth always listen;
Report of fashions in proud Italy,
Whose manners still our tardy apish nation
Limps after in base imitation.
Where doth the world thrust forth a vanity —
So it be new, there's no respect how vile —
That is as wide a place as I'd have had,
Then all too late comes counsel to be heard,
Which doth mutiny with wit's regard.
Direct not him whose way himself will choose: [lose.
'Tis breath thou lack'st, and that breath wilt thou

Gaunt. Methinks I am a prophet new inspired
And this sepulchre in stibborn Jersey
His rash fierce blaze of riot cannot last,
For violent fires soon burn out themselves;
Small showers last long, but sudden storms are short;
He tires betimes that spurs too fast betimes;
With eager feeding food doth choke the feeder:
Light vanity, insatiate corrompt,
Consuming means, soon preys upon itself.
This royal throne of kings, this scepter'd isle,
This earth of majesty, this seat of Mars,
This other Eden, demi-paradise,
This fortress built by Nature for herself
Against infection and the hand of war,
This happy breed of men, this little world,
This precious stone set in the silver sea,
Which serves it in the office of a wall
Or as a moat defensive to a house,
Against the envy of less happier lands, [land,
This blessed plot, this earth, this realm, this Eng-
This nurse, this teeming womb of royal kings,
Fear'd by their breed and famous by their birth,
Renowned for their deeds as far from home,
For Christian service and true chivalry,
As is the sepulchre in stibborn Jersey
Of the world's ransum, blessed Mary's son,

RICHARD. This land of such dear souls, this dear dear land,
Dear for her reputation through the world,
Is now leas'd out, I die presuming it,
Like to a tenement or pelting farm:
England, bound in with the triumphant sea.
Whose rocky shore beats back the envious siege
Of watery Neptune, is now bound in with shame,
With inky blots and rotten parchment bonds:
God's subjects, England, for all that we went to conquer others,
Methought I saw a shameful conquest of itself.
Ah, would the scoundrel vanish with my life,
How happy then were my ensuing death!

Enter King Richard and Queen, Aumerle, Bushy,
Green, Bagot, Ross, and Willoughby.
York. The king is come; deal mildly with his youth;
For young hot colts being raged do rage the more.
Queen. How fares our noble uncle, Lancaster?
K. Rich. What comfort, man? how is 't with aged Gaunt?
Gaunt. O, how that name befits my composition!
Old Gaunt indeed, and gaunt in being old:
Within me grief hath kept a tedious fast;
And who abstains from meat that is not gaunt?
For sleeping England long time have I watch'd i Watching breeds leanness, leanness is all gaunt:
The pleasure that some fathers feed upon,
Is my strict fast; I mean, my children's looks;
And therein fasting, hast thou made me gaunt,
Gaunt am I for the grave, gaunt as a grave,
Whose hollow womb inherits nought but bones.
K. Rich. Can sick men play so nicely with their names?
Gaunt. No, misery makes sport to mock itself:
Since thou dost seek to kill my name in me,
I mock my name, great king, to flatter thee. [live?
K. Rich. Should dying men flatter with those that Gaunt. No, men living flatter those that
K. Rich. Thou, now a-dying, say'st thou flatterest me.
Gaunt. O, no! thou diest, though I the sicker be.
K. Rich. I am in health, I breathe, and see thee ill.
Gaunt. Now he that made me knows I see thee ill;
Ill in myself to see, and in thee seeing ill.
Thy death-bed is no lesser than thy land
Wherein thou liest in reputation sick;
And thou, too careless patient as thou art,
Commit'st thy appointed body to the cure
Of those physicians that first wounded thee:
A thousand flatterers sit within thy crown,
Whose compass is no bigger than thy head;
And yet, incaged in so small a verge,
The waste is no whiter lesser than thy land.
O, had thy grandsire with a prophet's eye
Seen how his son's son should destroy his sons,
From forth thy reach he would have laid thy shame,
Dethoping thee before thou wert possess'd,
Which art possess'd now to depose thyself,
Why, cousin, wert thou regent of the world,
It were a shame to let this land by lease;
But for thy world enjoying but this land,
Is it not more than shame to shame it so?
Landlord of England art thou now, not king;
Thy state of law is bondsclave to the law;
And thou—
K. Rich. A lunatic lean-witted fool,
Presuming on an auge’s privilege,
Darest with thy frozen admonition
Make pale our cheek, chasing the royal blood
With fury from his native residence.
Now, by my seat’s right royal majesty,
Wert thou not brother to great Edward’s son,
This thing that runs not the descent of thy head
Should run thy head from thy unrevenered shoulders.

Gawat. O, spare me not, my brother Edward’s son,
For that I was his father Edward’s son;
That blood already, like the pelican,
Hast thou ta’st out and drunkenly caroused;
My brother Gloucester, plain well-earning soul,
Whom fair befall in heaven ‘mongst happy souls!
May be a precedent and witness good
That thou respect’st not spilling Edward’s blood:
Join with the present sickness that I have;
And thy unkindness be like crooked age,
To crop at once a too long wither’d flower.
Live in thy shame, but die not shame with thee:
These words hereafter thy tormentors be!
Convey to my bed, then to my grave:
Love they to live that love and honour have.

[Exit, borne off by his Attendants.]

K. Rich. And let them die that age and sullen have;
For both hast thou, and both become the grave.
York. I do beseech your majesty, imprint his words
To wayward sickness and age in him:
He loves you, on my life, and holds you dear
As Harry Duke of Hereford, were he here.
K. Rich. Right, you say true: as Hereford’s love,
As theirs, so mine; and all be as it is.

[Enter Northumberland.]

North. My liege, old Gaunt commends him to your K. Rich. What says he?

North. Nay, nothing; all is said:
His tongue is now a stringless instrument;
Words, life, and all, old Lancaster hath spent.

York. Be York the next that must be bankrupt
Though ends it ends in a moral woe.

K. Rich. The ripest fruit first falls, and so doth
His time is spent, our pilgrimage must be.
So much for that. Now for our Irish wars:
We must supplant those rough rug-headed kerns,
Which live like venom where no venom else
But only they have privilege;
And for these great affairs do ask some charge,
Towards our assistance we do seize to us
The plate, coin, revenues and moveables,
Whereof our uncle Gaunt did stand possess’d.
York. How long shall I be patient? ah, how long
Shall tender duty make me suffer wrong?
Not Gloucester’s death, nor Hereford’s banishment,
Nor Gaunt’s rebukes, nor England’s private wrongs,
Nor the prevention of poor Bolingbroke
About his marriage, nor my own disgrace,
Have ever made me sour my patient cheek,
Or bend one wrinkle on my sovereign’s face.
I am the last of noble Edward’s sons,
Of whom thy father, Prince of Wales, was first:
In war was never lion raged more fierce,
In peace was never gentle lamb more mild,
Than was that young and princely gentleman.
His face was not the favorer of fortune,
Accomplish’d with the number of thy hours;
But when he frown’d, it was against the French
And not against his friends; his noble hand
Did win what he did spend and spent not that
Which his triumphant father’s hand had won;
His hands were guilty of no kindred blood,
But bloody with the enemies of his kin.

[Enter]

O Richard! York is too far gone with grief,
Or else he never would compare between.
K. Rich. Why, uncle, what’s the matter?

York. O my liege,
Pardon me, if you please; if not, I, pleased
Not to be pardon’d, am content withal.
Seek you to seize and gripe into your hands
The royalties and rights of banish’d Hereford?
Is not Gaunt dead, and doth not Hereford live?
Was not Gaunt just, and is not Harry true?
Did not the one deserve to have an heir?
Is not his heir a well-deserving son?
Take Hereford’s rights away, and take from Time
His charters and his customary rights;
Let not to-morrow then ensue to-day;
Be not thyself; for how art thou a king
But by fair sequence and succession?
Now, afore God — God forbid I say true! —
If you do wrongfully seize Hereford’s rights,
Call in the letters-apatent that he hath
By his attorneys-general to sue
His lively, and deny his offer’d homage.
You pluck a thousand dangers on your head,
You lose a thousand well-disposed hearts
And prick my tender patience to those thoughts
Which honour and allegiance cannot think.
K. Rich. Think what you will, we seize into our hands
His plate, his goods, his money and his lands.
York. I’ll not be by the while: my liege, farewell:
What will ensue hereof, there’s none can tell;
But by bad courses may be understood
That their events can never fall out good.

[Exit.

K. Rich. Go, Bushy, to the Earl of Wiltshire
Bid him repair to us to Ely House
To see this business. To-morrow next
We will for Ireland; and it is time, I trow:
And we create, in absence of ourself,
Our uncle York lord governor of England;
For he is just and always loved us well.
Come on, our queen: to-morrow must we part;
Be merry, for our time of stay is short.

[Flourish. Enter King, Queen, Aumerle,
Bushy, Green, and Bagot.]

North. Well, lords, the Duke of Lancaster is dead.
Ross. And living too; for now his son is duke.
Willo. Barely in title, not in revenue.
North. Richly in both, if justice had her right.
Ross. My heart is great; but it must break with silence.
Ere’t be disburden’d with a liberal tongue.
North. Nay, speak thy mind; and let him ne’er speak more
That speaks thy words again to do thee harm!
Willo. Tends that thou wouldst speak to the Duke of Hereford.

If it be so, out with it boldly, man;
Quick is mine ear to hear of good towards him.
Ross. No good at all that I can do for him;
Unless you call it good to pity him,
Bereft and gelded of his patrimony.

North. Now, afore God, ’tis shame such wrongs
In him, a royal prince, and many more
Of noble blood in this declining land.
The king is not himself, but basely led
By flatterers; and what they will inform,
Merely in hate, ’gainst any of us all,
That will the king severely prosecute
Cost us, or cost them all our lives and heirs.
Ross. The commons hath he pill’d with grievous taxes,
And quite lost their hearts: the nobles hath he
For ancient quarrels, and quite lost their hearts.
Willo. And daily new exactions are devised,
As blanks, benevolences, and I wot not what:
But what, o’ God’s name, doth become of this?

301
North. Wars have not wasted it, for warr'd he hath not.
But basely yielded upon promise
That which his noble ancestors achieved with blows:
More hath he spent in peace than they in wars.
Ross. The Earl of Wiltshire hath the realm in
Wil. The king's grown bankrupt, like a broken North. Reproach and dissolution hang out over him.
Ross. He hath not money for these Irish wars,
His burthenous taxations notwithstanding,
but by the robbing of the banished duke.
North. His noble kinsman: most degenerate king!
But, lords, we hear this fearful tempest sing,
Yet seek no shelter to avoid the storm;
We see the wind sit sore upon our sails,
And yet we strike not, but securely perish.
Ross. We see the very wreck that we must suffer:
And unavaoided is the danger now,
For suffering so the causes of our wreck. [death
North. Not so; even through the hollow eyes of
I spy life peering: but I dare not call upon that does,
How we the tidings of our comfort is.
Wil. Nay, let us share thy thoughts, as thou dost ours.
Ross. Be confident to speak, Northumberland:
We three are but thyself; and, speaking so,
The very thoughts of us, therefore, be bold.
North. Then thus: I have from Port le Bane, a
In Brittany, received intelligence [day
That Harry Duke of Hereford, Rainold Lord Cobham,

That late broke from the Duke of Exeter,
His brother, Archbishop late of Canterbury,
Sir Thomas Erpingham, Sir John Ramston,
Sir John Norbery, Sir Robert Waterton and Francis Quoint.
All these well furnish'd by the Duke of Bretagne
With eight tall ships, three thousand men of war,
Are making hither with all due expedience
And shortly mean to touch our northern shore:
Perhaps they had ere this, but that they stay
The first departing of the king for Ireland.
If they shall off with yoke, Imp out our drooping country's broken wing,
Redem from broking dawn the blemish'd crown,
Wipe off the dust that hides our sceptre's gilt,
And make high majesty look like itself,
Away with me in post to Ravenspurgh;
But if thou faint, as fearing to do so,
Stay and be secret, and myself will go. [that fear.
Ross. To horse, to horse! urge doubts to them
Wil. Hold out my horse, and I will first be there.
[Exeunt.

SCENE II. — The palace.

Enter Queen, Bushy, and Bagot.

Bushy. Madam, your majesty is too much sad:
You promised, when you parted with the king,
To lay aside life-loving heaviness
And entertain a cheerful disposition.
Queen. To please the king I did; to please my,
I cannot do it; yet I know no cause [self
Why I should welcome such a guest as grief,
Save hilding farewell to so sweet a guest.
As my sweet Richard: yet again, methinks,
Some unborn sorrow, ripe in fortune's womb,
Is coming towards me, and my inward soul
With nothing trembles: at some thing it grieves,
More than with parting from my lord the king.
Bushy. He is come: an substance of a grief hath twenty shadows,
Which shows like grief itself, but is not so;
For sorrow's eye, glazed with blinding tears,
Divides one thing entire to many objects;
Like perspectives, which rightly gazed upon
Show nothing but confusion, eyed awry
Distinguish form: so your sweet majesty,
Looking awry upon your lord's departure,
And shapes of grief, more than himself, to wall;
Which, look'd on as it is, is sought but shadows
Of what it is not. Then, three-gracious queen,
More than your lord's departure weep not: more's
Or if it be, 't is with false sorrow's eye, [not seen;
Which for things true weeps things imaginary.
Queen. Indeed, it may be so, but inward soul
Persuades me it is otherwise: how'er it be,
I cannot but be sad; so heavy sad
As, though on thinking on no thought I think,
Makes me with heavy nothing faint and shrink.
Bushy. 'Tis nothing but conceit, my gracious lady.
Queen. 'T is nothing less: conceit is still derived
From some forefather grief; mine is not so,
For nothing hath begot my something grief;
Or something hath the nothing that I grieve:
'T is in revenging that I do possess;
But what it is, that is not yet known: what
I cannot name; 't is nameless woe, I writ.

Enter Green.

Green. God save your majesty! and well met, gentlemen;
I hope the king is not yet shipp'd for Ireland. [is;
Queen. Why hopest thou so? 't is better hope he
For his designs crave haste, his haste good hope:
Then wherefore dost thou hope he is not shipp'd?
Green. This he, our hope, might have retired his power,
And driven into despair an enemy's hope,
Who strongly hath set footing in this land;
The banish'd Bolingbroke repeals himself,
And with uplifted arms is safe arrived
At Ravenspurgh.
Queen. Now God in heaven forbid!
Green. Ah, madam, 't is too true: and that is worse, [Percy,
The Lord Northumberland, his son young Henry
The Lords of Ross, Beaumont, and Willoughby,
With all the powerful friends, are ded to him.
Bushy. Why have you not proclaim'd Northumberland
And all the rest revolted faction traitors? [cester
Green. We have: whereupon the Earl of Wor-
Hath broke his staff, resign'd his stewardship,
And all the household servants fled with him.
To Bolingbroke.
Queen. So, Green, thou art the midwife to my
And Bolingbroke my sorrow's dismal heir;
Now hath my soul brought forth her prodigy,
And I, a gasping new-deliver'd mother,
Have woe to woe, sorrow to sorrow join'd.
Bushy. Despair not, madam.
Queen. Who shall hinder me? I will despair, and be at enmity,
With cozening hope: he is a fatterer,
A parasite, a keeper back of death,
Who gently would dissolve the bands of life,
Which false hope lingers in extremity.

Enter York.

Green. Here comes the Duke of York.
Queen. With signs of war about his aged neck:
O, full of careful business are his looks!
Uncle, for God's sake, speak comfortable words.
York. Should I do so, I should belie my thoughts:
Comfort 's in heaven: and we are on the earth,
Where nothing lives but crosses, cares and grief.
Your husband, he is gone to save York,
Whilst others come to make him lose at home:
Here am I left to underprop his land,
Who, weak with age, cannot support myself;
Now comes the sick hour that his surfeited
Now shall he try his friends that flatter'd him.

Enter a Servant.

Serv. My lord, your son was gone before I came.
York. He was? Why, so! go all which way it may. [cold]
The nobles they are fled, the commons they are
And will, I fear, revolt on Hereford's side.
Sirrah, get thee to Flashy, to my sister Gloucester;
Bid her send me presently a thousand pound:
Hold, take my ring.
Serv. My lord, I had forgot to tell your lordship,
To-day, as I came by, I called there;
But I shall grieve you to report the rest.
York. What is 't, knave?
Serv. An hour before I came, the duchess died.
York. God for his mercy! what a tide of woes
Comes rushing on this woeful land at once!
I know not what to do: I would to God,
So my untruth had not provoked him to it,
The king had cut off my head with my brother's.
What, are there no posts dispatch'd for Ireland?
How shall we do for money for these wars? [me.
Come, sister,—cousin, I would say,—pray, pardon
Go, fellow, get these home, provide some carts
And bring away the armour that is there.

Gentlemen, will you go muster men?
If I know how or which way to order these affairs
Thus thrust disorderly into my hands,
Never believe me. Both are my kinsmen:
The one is my sovereign, whom both my oath
And duty bids defend; the other again
Is my kinsman, whom the king hath wrong'd,
Whom conscience and my kindred bids to right.
Well, somewhat we must do. Come, cousin, I'll Dispose of you.
Gentlemen, go, muster up your men,
And meet me presently at Berkeley.
I should to Flashy too;
But time will not permit: all is uneven,
And every thing is left as it was say'd.
[Exit York and Queen.

Bushy. The wind sits fair for news to go to Ireland,
But none returns. For us to levy power
Proportionable to the enemy
Is all impossible.
Green. But, I think, our nearness to the king in love
Is near the fault of those love not the king.
Bagot. And that's the wavering commons: for their love
Lies in their purses, and whoso empties them
By so much fills their hearts with deadly hate.

Bushy. Wherein the king stands generally condemn'd.
Bagot. If judgment lie in them, then so do we,
Because we ever have been near the king. [castle
Green. Well, I will for refuge straight to Bristol
The Earl of Wiltshire is already there.
Bushy. Thither will I with you; for little office
The hateful commons will perform for us,
Except like curs to tear us all to pieces.
Will you go along with us?
Bagot. No; I will to Ireland to his majesty.
Farewell: if heart's presages be not vain,
We there shall part that ne'er shall meet again.
Bushy. That's as York strives to beat back Bolingbroke.

Green. Alas, poor duke! the task he undertakes
Is numbering sands and drinking oceans dry:
Where one on his side fights, thousands will fly.
Farewell at once, for once, for all, and ever.
Bushy. Well, we may meet again.

Bagot. I fear me, never. [Exit.
Which, till my infant fortune comes to years,
Stands for my bounty. But who comes here?

Enter Berkeley.

Berke. It is my Lord of Berkeley, as I guess.

Boiling. My Lord, my answer is — to Lancaster;
And I am come to seek that name in England;
And I must find that title in your tongue,
Before I can reply to ought you say.

Berke. Mistake me not, my lord; ’tis not my meaning
To raze one title of your honour out:
To you, my lord, I come, what lord you will,
From the most gracious regent of this land,
The Duke of York, to know what pricks you on
To take advantage of the absent time
And fright our native peace with self-born arms.

Enter York, attended.

Boiling. I shall not need transport my words by Here comes his grace in person. [you;
My noble uncle! [Kneels.

York. Show me thy humble heart, and not thy Whose duty is deceivable and false. [kneel,
Boiling. My gracious uncle—
Grace me no grace, nor uncle me no uncle:
I am no traitor’s uncle; and that word ’grace’
In an ungracious mouth is but profane.
Why have those banish’d and forbidden legs
Dared once to touch a dust of England’s ground?
But then more ‘why’? why have they dared to march
So many miles upon her peaceful bosom,
Frighting her pale-faced villages with war
And ostentation of despiséd arms?
Canst thou because the anointed king is hence?
Why, foolish boy, the king is left behind,
And in my loyal bosom lies his power.
Were I but now the lord of such hot youth
As when brave Gaunt, thy father, and myself
Rescued the Black Prince, that young Mars of men,
From forth the ranks of many thousand French,
O, then how quickly should this arm of mine,
Now prisoner to the palsy, chastise thee
And minister correction to thy fault!
Boiling. My gracious uncle, let me know my fault:
On what condition stands it and wherein?
York. Even in condition of the worst degree,
In gross rebellion and detested treason:
Thou art a banish’d man, and here art come
Before the expiration of thy time,
In braving arms against thy sovereign.
Boiling. As I was banish’d, I was banish’d here.
But as I come, I come for Lancaster.
And, noble uncle, I beseech your grace
Look on my wrongs with an indifferent eye:
You are my father, for methinks in you
I see old Gaunt alive; O, then, my father,
Will you permit that I shall stand condemn’d
A wandering vagabond; my rights and royalties
Pluck’d from my arms perforce and given away
To upstart unthrifts? Wherefore was I born?
If that my cousin king be King of England,
It must be granted I am Duke of Lancaster.
You have a son, Anmerle, my noble cousin;
Had you first died, and he been thus trod down,
He should have found his uncle Gaunt a father,
To rouse his wrongs and chase them to the bay.
I am denied to sue my livery here,
And yet my letters-patents give me leave:

My father’s goods are all distrain’d and sold,
And these and all are all amiss employ’d.
What would you have me do? I am a subject,
And I challenge at law; attorneys are denied me;
And therefore personally I lay my claim
To my inheritance of free descent.
York. The noble duke hath been too much abused.
Boiling. It stands your grace upon to do him right.
York. Base men by his endowments are made great.

York. My lords of England, let me tell you this:
I have had feeling of my cousin’s wrongs
And laboured all I could to do him right;
But in this kind to come, in bravmg arms,
Be my own cause, and in this way,
To find out right with wrong, it may not be;
And you that do avert him in this kind
Cherish rebellion and are rebels all.
York. The noble duke hath sworn his coming is
But for his own; and for the right of that
We all have strongly sworn to give him aid;
And let him ne’er see joy that breaks that oath!
York. Well, well, I see the issue of these arms:
I cannot meddle, I must needs confess,
Because my power is weak and all ill left:
But if I could, by Him that gave me life,
I would attach you all and make you stoope
Unto the sovereign mercy of the king;
But since I cannot, be it known to you
I do remain as neuter. So, fare you well;
Unless you please to enter in the castle
And there repose you for this night.

Boiling. An offer, uncle, that we will accept:
But we must win your grace to go with us
To Bristol castle, which they say is held
By Bushy, Bagot and their complices,
The caterpillars of the commonwealth,
Which I have sworn to wind and pluck away.
York. It may be I will go with you: but yet I’ll pause:
For I am loath to break our country’s laws:
Nor friends nor foes, to me welcome you are:
Things past redress are now with me past care.

SCENE IV.—A camp in Wales.

Enter Salisbury and a Welsh Captain.

Cap. My Lord of Salisbury, we have stay’d ten
And hardly, save for our counsellor, [days,
And yet we hear no tidings from the king;
Therefore we will disperse ourselves: farewell.
Sal. Stay yet another day, thou trusty Welshman:
The king reposeth all his confidence in thee.
Cap. I’st thought the king is dead; we will not stay.
The bay-trees in our country are all wither’d
And meteor fright the fixed stars of heaven:
The pale-faced moon looks bloody on the earth
And lean-look’d prophets whisper fearful change;
Rich men look sad and ruffians dance and leap,
The one in fear to lose what they enjoy,
The other to enjoy by rage and war:
These signs forerun the death or fall of kings.
Farewell: our countrymen are gone and fled,
As well assured Richard their king is dead. [Exit.
Sal. Ah, Richard, with the eyes of heavy mind
I see thy glory like a shooting star
Fall to the base earth from the firmament.
Thy sun sets weeping in the lowly west,
Witnessing storms to come, woe and unrest:
Thy friends are fled to wait upon thy foes,
And crossly to thy good all fortune goes. [Exit.

ACT II.

KING RICHARD II.

SCENE IV.
ACT III.

SCENE I.—Bristol. Before the castle.

Enter Bolingbroke, York, Northumberland, Ross, Percy, Willoughby, with Bushy and Green, pris-

Boling. Bring forth these men.

Bushy and Green, I will not vex your souls—
Since presently your souls must part your bodies—
With too much urging your peremptory hews,
For 'tis too charitable yet, to wash your blood
From off my hands, here in the view of men
I will unfold some causes of your deaths.
You have mislaid a prince, a royal king,
A happy gentleman in blood and lineaments,
By you unhappied and disfigured clean:
You have in manner with your sinful hours
Made a divorce betwixt his queen and him,
Broke the possession of a royal bed
And stain'd the beauty of a fair queen's cheeks
With tears drawn from her eyes by your foul wrongs.
Myself, a prince by fortune of my birth,
Near to the king in blood, and near in love
Till you did make him misinterpret me,
Have stoop'd my neck under your injuries,
And sigh'd my English breath in foreign clouds,
Eating the bitter bread of banishment;
Whilst you have fed upon my signories,
Dispark'd my parks and fell'd my forest woods,
From my own windows torn my household coat,
Razed out my imprese, leaving me no sign,
Save men's opinions and my living blood,
To show the world I am a gentleman.
This and much more, much more than twice all this,
Condemns you to the death. See them deliver'd over
To execution and the hand of death.

Bushy. More welcome is the stroke of death to me
Than Bolingbroke to England. Lords, farewell.

Green. My comfort is that heaven will take our
And plac'se the injures with the pain of hell. [sobs Boling. My Lord Northumberland, see them dis-patch'd.

[Exeunt Northumberland and others, with the prisoners.

Uncle, you say the queen is at your house;
For God's sake, fairly let her be entreated:
Tell her I send to her my kind commands.
Take special care my greetings be deliver'd.
York. A gentleman of mine I have dispatch'd
With letters of your love to her at large.

Boling. Thanks, gentle uncle. Come, lords, away,
To fight with Glendower and his complices:
Awhile to work, and after holiday.

[Exeunt.

SCENE II.—The coast of Wales. A castle in view.

Drums: flourishment and colours. Enter King Richard, the Bishop of Carlisle, Aumerle, and Soldiers.

K. Rich. Barkloughly castle call they this at hand?
Ann. Yea, my lord. How brooks your grace the
After your late tossing on the breaking seas? [air
K. Rich. Needs must I like it well: I weep for
To stand upon my kingdom once again. Joy
Dear earth, I do salute thee with my hand,
Though rebels wound thee with their horses' hoofs:
As a long-parted mother with her child
Plays fondly with her tears and smiles in meeting,
So, weeping, smiling, greet I thee, my earth,
And do thee favours with my royal hands.
Feed not thy people, my dear earth, nor
Nor with thy sweets comfort his ravenous sense;
But let thy spiders, that suck up thy venom,
And heavy-gaited toads lie in their way,
Doing annoyance to the treacherous feet
Which with usurping steps do trample thee

Yield stinging nettles to mine enemies;
And when they from thy bosom pluck a flower,
Guard it, I pray thee, with a lurking adder
Whose double tongue may with mortal touch
Throw death upon thy sovereign's enemies.
Mock not my senseless conjunction, lords:
This earth shall have a feeling and these stones
Prove armed soldiers, ere her native king
Shall faller in foul rebellion's arms. [king
Cur. Fear not, my lord: that power that made you
Hath power to keep you king in spite of all.
The means that heaven yields must be embraced,
And not neglected; else, if heaven would,
And we will not, heaven's offer we refuse.
The proper'd means of safety and redress.
Ann. He means, my lord, that we are too remiss;
Whilst Bolingbroke, through our security,
Grows strong and great in substance and in power.
K. Rich. Discomfortable cousin! I know'st not
That when the searching eye of heaven is hid,
Behind the globe, that but the lower world,
Then thieves and robbers range abroad unseen
In murders and in outrage, boldly here;
But when from under this terrestrial ball
He fires the proud tops of the eastern pines
And darts his light through every guilty hole,
Then murders and treasons rise in lusks,
The cloak of night beingpluck'd from off their Stand bare and naked, trembling at themselves?
So when this thief, this traitor, Bolingbroke,
Who all this while hath revel'd in the night
Whilst we were wandering with the antipodes,
Shall see us rising in our throne, the east,
His treasons will sit blushing in his face;
Not able to endure the sight of day,
But self-affrighted tremble at his sin.
Not all the water in the rough rude sea
Can wash the balm off from an anointed king;
The breath of worldly men cannot depose
The deputy elected by the Lord:
For every man that Bolingbroke hath press'd
To lift shrewd steel against our golden crown,
God for his Richard hath in heavenly pay
A glorious angel: then, if angels fight, [right.
Weak men must fall; for heaven still guards the Enter Salisbury.

Welcome, my lord: how far off lies your power?
Sol. Nor near nor farther off, my gracious lord,
Than this weak arm: discomfort guides my tongue
And bids me speak of nothing but despair.
One day too late, I fear me, noble lord,
Hath clouded all thy happy days on earth:
O, call back yesterday, bid time return,
And thou shalt have twelve thousand lighting men!
To-day, to-day, unhappy day, too late,
O'erthrows thy joys, friends, fortune and thy state:
For all the Welshmen, burning their dear dead,
Are gone to Bolingbroke, dispersed and fled.
Ann. Comfort, my liege: why looks your grace so pale?

K. Rich. But now the blood of twenty thousand
Did triumph in my face, and they are fled;
And, till so much blood thither come again,
Have I not reason to look pale and dead?
All souls that will be safe fly from my side,
For time hath set a blot upon my pride.
Ann. Comfort, my liege; remember who you are.

K. Rich. In, arm, arm, my name! a puny subject strikes
At thy great glory. Look not to the ground,
Ye favourites of a king: are we not high?
High be our thoughts: I know my uncle York Hath power enough to serve our turn. But who comes here?

Enter Scroop.

Scroop. More health and happiness betide my liege Than can my care-tuned tongue deliver him! K. Rich. Mine ear is open and my heart prepared: The worst is worldly loss thou canst unfold. Say, is my kingdom lost? why, 't was my care; And what loss is it to be rid of care? Strives Bolingbroke, who is he that makes us? Greater he shall not be: if he serve God, We'll serve Him too and be his fellow so: Revolt our subjects? that we cannot mend; They break their faith to God as well as us: Cry woe, destruction, ruin and decay: The worst is death, and death will have his day.

Scroop. Glad am I that your highness is so arm'd To bear the tidings of calamity. Like an unseasonable stormy day, Which makes the silver rivers drown their shores, As if all the world were all dissolved in tears, So high above his limits swells the rage Of Bolingbroke, covering your fearful land With hard bright steel and hearts harder than steel. White-beards have arm'd their thin and hairless scalps Against his majesty: boys, with women's voices, Strive to speak big and clap their female joints In stiff unwieldy arms against thy crown: Thy very headsmen learn to bend their bows Of double-fatal yew against thy state: Yea, distaff-women manage rusty bills Against thy seat; both young and old rebel, And all goes worse than I have power to tell. [ill.

K. Rich. Too well, too well thou tell'st a tale so Where is the Earl of Wiltshire? where is Bagot? What is become of Bushy? where is Green? That they have let the dangerous enemy Measure our clothes with so much peaceful steps? If we prevail, their heads shall pay for it: I warrant they have made peace with Bolingbroke.

Scroop. Peace have they made with him indeed, my lord! [Exeunt. K. Rich. O villains, vipers, damn'd without re-Dogs, easily won to fawn on any man! [heart! Snakes, in my heart-blood warm'd, that sting my Three Judases, each one thrice worse than Judas! Would they make peace? terrible hell make war Upon their spotted souls for this offence? Scroop, chary love, I see, changing his property, Turns to the sorrest and most deadly hate: Again uncurse their souls; their peace is made With heads, and not with hands: those whom you curse Have felt the worst of death's destroying wound And lie all low, graved in the hollow ground. Aum. Is Bushy, Green, and the Earl of Wiltshire dead? Scroop. Ay, all of them at Bristol lost their heads. Aum. Where is the duke my father with his power? [speak: K. Rich. No matter where; of comfort no man Let's talk of graves, of worms and epitaphs; Make dust our paper and with rainy eyes Write sorrow on the bosom of the earth, Let's choose executors and talk of wills; And yet not so, for what can we bequeath Save our deposed bodies to the ground? Our lands, our lives and all are Bolingbroke's, And nothing can we call our own but death And that small model of the barren earth Which serves as paste and cover to our bones. For God, my liege, let us waste our ground. And tell sad stories of the death of kings: How some have been deposed; some slain in war; Some haunted by the ghosts they have deposed; Some poison'd by their wives; some sleeping kill'd; All murder'd: for within the hollow crown That rounds the mortal temples of a king Keeps Death his court and there the antic sits, Seating his father and great pomp, allowing Him a breath, a little scene, To monarchize, be fear'd and kill with looks, Infusing him with self and vain conceit, As if this flesh which walls about our life Were brass impregnable, and humour'd thus Comes at the last and with it what we are: Boreas through his castle wall, and farewell king! Cover your heads and mock not flesh and blood With solemn reverence: throw away respect, Tradition, form and ceremonious duty, For you have but mistook me all this while: I live with bread like you, feel want, Taste grief, need friends; subjected thus, How can you say to me, I am a king? Car. My lord, wise men ne'er sit and wall their But presently prevent the ways to wall. [woes, To fear the foe, since fear oppresseth strength, Gives in your weakness strength unto your foes, And so your follies fight against yourself. Fear, and be slain; no worse can come to fight: And fight and die is death destroying death: Where fearing dying pays death servile breath. Aum. My father hath a pow'r at his disposal, And learn to make a body of a limb. K. Rich. Thou chidesst me well: proud Bolingbroke, I come To change blows with thee for our day of doom. This ague fit of fear is over-blown; An easy task it is to win out thy power. Say, Scroop, where lies our uncle with his power? Speak sweetly, man, although thy looks be sour.

Scroop. Men judge by the complexion of the sky The state and inclination of the day: So may you by my dull and heavy eye. My tongue hath but a heavier tale to say. I play the torturer, by small and small To lengthen out the worst that must be spoken: Your uncle York is joined with Bolingbroke, And all your northern castles yielded up, And all your southern gentlemen in arms Upon his party.

K. Rich. Thou hast said enough.

Beshrew thee, cousin, which didst lead me forth [To Aumerle. Of that way I was in to despair. What say you now? what comfort have we now? By heaven, I'll hate him everlastingly That bids me be of comfort any more. Go to Flint castle: there I'll pine away; A king, we're slave, shall kingly we obey. That power I have, discharge; and let them go To car the land that hath some hope to grow, For I have none: let no man speak again To alter this, for counsel is but vain. Aum. My liege, one word. K. Rich. He does me double wrong That wounds me with the lacerities of his tongue. Discharge my followers: let them hence away, From Richard's night to Bolingbroke's fair day. [Exeunt.

SCENE III. -- Wales. Before Flint Castle.

Enter, with drum and colours, Bolingbroke, York, Northumberland, Attendants, and forces.

Boling. So that by this intelligence we learn The Welshmen are dispersed, and Salisbury Is gone to meet the king, who lately landed With some few private friends upon this coast. North. The news is very fair and good, my lord: Richard not far from hence hath hid his head.
York. It would be seen the Lord Northumberland
To say, 'King Richard, I have, I have the heavy day
When such a sacred king should hide his head.
North. Your grace mistakes; only to be brief,
Left I his title out.
York. The time hath been,
Would you have been so brief with him, he would
Have been so brief with you, to shorten you.
For taking so the head, your whole head's length.
Boling. Mistake not, uncle, further than you should.
York. Take not, good cousin, further than you
Lest you mistake the heavens are o'er our heads.
Boling. I know not yet, or oppose not myself
Against their will. But who comes here?

Enter Percy.
Welcome, Harry: what, will not this castle yield?
Percy. The castle royalty is man's, my lord,
Against thy entrance.
Boling. Royally!
Why, it contains no king?
Percy.
Yes, my good lord,
It doth contain a king; King Richard lies
Within the limits of thy limes and stone:
And as thou art the Earl of Salisbury,
Sir Stephen Scroop, besides a clergyman.
Of holy reverence; who, I cannot learn.
North. O, believe it is the Bishop of Carlisle.
Boling. Noble lords,
Go to the rude ribs of that ancient castle;
Through brazen trumpet send the breath of parley
Into his ruin'd ears, and thus deliver:
Henry Bolingbroke
On both his knees doth kiss King Richard's hand
And sends allegiance and true faith of heart
To his most royal person, hither come:
Every one at his knee to lay his arms in power,
Provided that my banishment repel'd
And lands restored again be freely granted:
If not, I'll use the advantage of my power
And lay the summer's dust with showers of blood
Rash'd from the wounds of slaughter'd Englishmen
The which, how far off from the mind of Bolingbroke
It is, such crimson tempest should bedrench
The fresh green lap of fair King Richard's land,
My stooping duty tenderly shall show.
Go, signify as much, while here we march
Upon the grassy carpet of this plain.
Let Messer Percy without the noise of threatening drum,
That from this castle's tatter'd battlements
Our fair appointments may be well perceived.
Metthinks King Richard and myself should meet
With no less terror than the elements
Of fire and water, when their thundering shock
At meeting tears the cloudy checks of heaven.
Be he the fire, I'll be the yielding water:
The rage be his, whilst on the earth I rain
My waters; on the earth, and not on him.
March on, and mark King Richard how he looks.

Parsely without, and answer within. Then a flourish. Enter on the walls; King Richard, the Bishop of Carlisle, Aumerle, Scroop, and Salisbury.

See, see, King Richard doth himself appear,
As doth the blushing discontented sun
From out the fiery portal of the east.
When every pistil of the duteous flowers are bent
To dim his glory and to stain the track
Of his bright passage to the occident.
York. Yet looks he like a king: behold, his eye,
As bright as is the eagle's, lightens forth
Could his obeisance: slack, slack, for woe,
That any harm should stain so fair a show! [stood
K. Rich. We are amazed; and thus long have we
To watch the fearful bending of thy knee. [To North.
Because we thought ourself thy lawf ul king:
And if we be, how dare thy joints forget
To pay their dues? ally to our presence?
If we be not, show us the league of God
That hath dismiss'd us from our stewardship;
For well we know, no hand of blood and bone
Can grip the sacred handle of our sceptre,
Unless he be profane, steal, or usurp.
And though you think that all, as you have done,
Have torn their souls by turning them from us,
And we are barren and bereft of friends;
Yet know, my master, God omnipotent,
Is mustering in his clouds on our behalf
Armies of pestilence; and they shall strike
Your children yet unborn, and I oppose not myself
That lift your vassal hands against my head
And threat the glory of my precious crown.
Tell Bolingbroke—for yond metthinks he stands—
That every stride he makes upon my land
Is dangerous treason: he is come to open
The purple testament of bleeding war;
But ere the crown he looks for live in peace,
Ten thousand bloody crowns of mothers' sons
Shall ill become the flower of England's face,
Change the complexion of her maid-pale peace
To scarlet indignation and bedew
Her pastures' grass with faithful English blood.
North. The king of heaven forbid our lord the king
Should so with civil and uncivil arms
Be rush'd upon! Thy thrice noble cousin
Harry Bolingbroke doth humbly kiss thy hand;
And by the honourable tomb he swears;
That stands upon your royal grandsire's bones,
And by the royalties of both your bloods,
Currents that spring from one most gracious head,
And by the buried hand of warlike Gaunt,
And by the worth and honour of himself
Comprising all that may be sworn or said,
His coming within her line of further scope
Than for his lineal royalties and to beg
Enfranchisement immediate on his knees:
Which on thy royal party granted once,
His glittering arms he will commend to rust,
His barb'd steeds to stables, and his heart
To faithful service of your majesty.
This swears he, as he is a prince, is just;
And, as I am a gentleman, I credit him. [turns
To Aumerle.
K. Rich. Northumberland, say thus the king re-
His noble cousin is right welcome hither;
And all the number of his fair demands
Shall be accomplish'd with more than devotion:
With all the gracious utterance thou hast
Speak to his gentle hearing kind commends.
We do debate ourselves, cousin, do we not,
To Aumerle.
To look so poorly and to speak so fair?
Shall we call back Northumberland, and send Defiance to the traitor, and so die?
Aum. No, good my lord; let's fight with gentle Till time lend friends and friends their helpful words.
K. Rich. O God, O God! that e'er this tongue of
That laid the sentence of dread banishment
On you proud man, should take it off again
With words of sooth! O that—I were as great
As is my grief, or lesser than my name!
Or that I could forget what I have been,
Or not remember what I must be now? [beat,
That's better! I'll give thee scope to
Since foes have scope to beat both thee and me.
Aum. Northumberland comes back from Boling-broke. [submit
K. Rich. What must the king do now? must he
The king shall have it. must he be deposed?
The king shall be contented: must he lose
The name of king? o' God's name, let it go:
I'll give my jewels for a set of beads,
My generous palace for a hermitage,
ACT III.

KING RICHARD II.

SCENE IV.

My gay apparel for an almsman’s gown,
My figured gobleets for a dish of wood,
My sceptre for a palmer’s walking-staff,
My subjects for a pair of carved saints
And my large kingdom for a little grave,
A little grave, an obscure grave;
Or I’ll be buried in the king’s highway,
Some way of common trade, where subjects’ feet
May hourly trample on their sovereign’s head;
For on my heart they tread now whilst I live;
And buried once, why not upon my head?
Aumerle, thou weep’st, my tender-hearted cousin!
We’ll make foul weather with despaired tears;
Our sighs and they shall lodge the summer corn,
And make them fruitful in this revolting land.
Or shall we play the wantons with our woes,
And make some pretty match with shedding tears?
As thus, to drop them still upon one place,
Till they have fretted us a pair of graves.

Within the earth; and, therein laid,—there lies
Two kinsmen dead their graves with weeping eyes.
Would not this ill do well? Well, well, I see
I talk but idly, and you laugh at me.
Most mighty prince, my Lord Northumberland,
What says King Bolingbroke? will his majesty
Give word now leave to live till Richard die?
You make a leg, and Bolingbroke says ay.

North. My lord, in the base court he doth attend
To speak with you; may it please you to come down.

K. Rich. Down, down I come; like glistening
Flaxman,
Waxing he the manage of unruly jades. [base
In the base court? Base court, where kings grow
To come at traitors’ calls and do them grace.
In the base court? Come down? Down, court!
Down, king!
For night’s owls shriek where mounting larks should sing.
[Exit from above.

Boling. What says his majesty?

North. Sorrow and grief of heart
Makes him speak fondly, like a frantic man:
Yet he is come.

Enter King Richard and his Attendants below.

Boling. Stand all apart,
And show fair duty to his majesty.

My gracious lord,— [He kneels down.
K. Rich. Fair cousin, you delase your princely
To make the base earth proud with kissing it:
Me rather had my heart might feel your love
Than my unpleased eye see your courtesy.
Up, cousin, up; your heart is up, I know,
Thus high at least, although your knees be low.

Boling. My gracious lord, I come but for mine own.
K. Rich. Your own is yours, and I am yours,

Boling. So far be mine, my most redoubted lord,
As my true service shall deserve your love. [have,
K. Rich. Well you deserve; they well deserve to
That know the strongest and surest way to get.
Uncle, give me your hands: nay, dry your eyes;
Tears show their love, but want their remedies.
Cousin, I am too young to be your father,
Though you are old enough to be my heir.
What you would have, I’ll give, and willing too;
For do we must what force will have us do.
Set on towards London, cousin, is it so?
Boling. Yea, my good lord.
K. Rich. Then I must not say no.
[Flourish. Exit.

Enter the Queen and two Ladies.

Queen. What sport shall we devise here in this gar-
To drive away the heavy thought of care? [den,
Lady. Madam, we’ll play at bowls.
Queen. ‘T will make me think the world is full of
And that my fortune runs against the bias.
Lady. Madam, we’ll dance.
Queen. My legs can keep no measure in delight,
When my poor heart no measure keeps in grief:
Therefore, no dancing, girl; some other sport.
Lady. Madam, we’ll tell tales.
Queen. Of sorrow or of joy? Of either, madam.
Queen. Of neither, girl:
For if of joy, being altogether wanting,
I doth remember me the more of sorrow;
Or if of grief, being altogether had,
It adds more sorrow to my want of joy:
For what I have I need not to repeat;
And what I want it boots not to complain.
Lady. Madam, I’ll sing.
Queen. ’T is well that thou hast cause;
But that thou shouldst please me better, wouldst thou weep.
[good.
Lady. I could weep, madam, would it do you
Queen. And I could sing, would weeping do me
And never borrow any tear of thee.
[good,
Enter a Gardener, and two Servants.
But stay, here come the gardeners:
Let’s step into the shadow of these trees,
My wretchedness unto a row of pins,
They’ll talk of state; for every one doth so
Against a change: woe is for them with woe.
[Queen and Ladies retire.

Gard. Go, bind thou up yon dangling apricocks,
Which, like unruly children, make their sire
Stoop with oppression of their prodigal weight:
Give some suppurgtance to the bending twigs.
Go thou, and, like an ancient headshrinker,
Cut off the heads of too fast growing sprays,
That look too lofty in our commonwealth:
All must be even in our government.
You thus employ’d, I will go root away
The noisome weeds, which without profit snick
The soil’s fertility from wholesome flowers.

Serv. Why should we in the compass of a pale
Keep law and form and due proportion,
Showering, as in a model, our firm estate,
When our sea-walled garden, the whole land,
Is full of frowardness, her face is up,
Her fruit-trees all unpruned, her hedges ruined,
Her knots disorder’d and her wholesome herbs
Swarming with caterpillars?

Gard. Hold thy peace:
He that hath suffer’d this disorder’d spring
Hath now himself met with the fall of leaf:
The reeds which his broad-spreading leaves did shelter,
That seem’d in eating him to hold him up,
Are pluck’d up root and all by Bolingbroke,
I mean the Earl of Wiltshire, Bushy, Green.

Serv. What, are they deadomer?

Gard. They are; and Bolingbroke
Hath seized the wasteful king. O, what pity is it
That he had not so trimm’d and dress’d his land
As we this garden! We at time of year
Do wound the bark, the skin of our fruit-trees,
Lest, being cut through natural veins and blood,
With too much riches it confound itself:
Had he done so to great and growing men,
They might have lived to bear and he to taste
Their fruits of duty: superfluous branches
We lop away, that bearing boughs may live:
Had he done so, himself had borne the crown,
Which waste of idle hours hath quite thrown down.

Serv. What, think you then the king shall be depos’d?

Gard. Depress’d he is already, and deposed
’T is doubt he will; letters came last night
ACT IV. KING RICHARD II.

SCENE I.—Westminster Hall.

Enter, as to the Parliament, Bolingbroke, Aumerle, Northumberland, Percy, Fitzwater, Surrey, the Bishop of Carlisle, the Abbot of Westminster, and another Lord, Herald, Officers, and Bagot.

Boling. Call forth Bagot.

Now, Bagot, freely speak thy mind; What though this know of noble Gloucester's death, Who wrought it with the king, and who perform'd The bloody office of his timeless end.

Bagot. Then set before my face the Lord Aumerle. Boling. Cousin, stand forth, and look upon that tongue

Bagot. My Lord Aumerle, I know your daring Scorns to unsay what once it hath deliver'd. In that dead time when Gloucester's death was plotted, I heard you say, 'tis not my arm of length, That reacheth from the westmost English court As far as Calais, to mine uncle's head; Amongst much other talk, that very time, I heard you say that you had rather refuse The offer of an hundred thousand crowns Than Bolingbroke's return to England; Adding withal, how blest this land would be In this your cousin's death. Aum. Princes and noble lords, What answer shall I make to this base man? Shall I so much dishonour my fair stars, On equal terms to give him chastisement? Either I must, or have mine honour sfoil'd With the attendant of his slanderous lips. There is my gage, the manual seal of death, That marks thee out for hell: I say, thou liest, And will maintain what thou hast said is false In thy heart-blood, though being all too base To stain the temper of my knighthly sword. Boling. Bagot, forbear: thou shouldest not take it up. Aum. Excepting one, I would he were the best In all this presence that hath moved me so. Fitz. If that thy valour stand on sympathy, There is my gage, Aumerle, in gage to thine: By the same token, thy cousin's head stand'st, I heard thee say, and vainly thou spakest it. That thou wert cause of noble Gloucester's death. If thou deny'st it twenty times, thou liest; And I will turn thy falsehood to thy heart, Where it was forged, with my rapier's point. [day. Aum. Thou dar'st not, coward, live to see that And with that odds he weighs King Richard down. Post you to London, and you will find it so; I speak no more than every one doth know. Queen. Nimble mischance, that art so light of foot, Doth not thy embassage belong to me, And am I last that know'st it? O, thou think'st To serve me last, that I may longest keep Thy sorrow in my breast. Come, ladies, go, To meet at London London's king in woe. What, was I born to this, that my sad look Should grace the triumph of great Bolingbroke? Gardener, for telling me these news of woe. Pray God the plants thou gat'st may never grow. [Exeunt Queen and Ladies. Boling. Poor queen! so that thy state might be no worse, I would my skill were subject to thy curse. Here did she fall a tear; here in this place I'll set a bank of rue, sour herb of grace: Rue, even for ruth, here shortly shall be seen, In the remembrance of a weeping queen. [Exeunt.

SCENE II.

Fitz. Now, by my soul, I would it were this hour. Aum. Fitzwater, thou art damn'd to hell for this. Percy. Aumerle, thou liest; his honour is as true In this appeal as thou art all unjust; And that thou art so, there I throw my gage, To prove it on thee to the extremest point Of mortal breathing: seize it, if thou darest. Aum. An I do not, may my hands rot off And never brandish more revengeful steel Over the glittering helmet of my foe! Another Lord. I task the earth to the like, forsworn Aumerle; And spurn thee on with full as many lies As may be hollow'd in thy treacherous ear From sun to sun: there is my honour's pawn; Engage it to the trial, if thou darest. Aum. Who sets me else? by heaven, I'll throw at all: I have a thousand spirits in one breast, To answer twenty thousand such as you. Surrey. My Lord Fitzwater, I do remember well The very time Aumerle and you did talk. Fitz. 'Tis very true: you were in presence then; And you can witness with me this is true. Surrey. As false, by heaven, as heaven itself is. Fitz. Surrey, thou liest. [true. Surrey. Dishonourable boy! That lie shall lie so heavy on my sword, That it shall render vengeance and revenge Till thou the lie-giver and that lie do lie In earth as quiet as thy father's skull: In proof whereof, there is my honour's pawn; Engage it to the trial, if thou darest. Fitz. How fondly dost thou spur a forward horse! If I dare eat, or drink, or breathe, or live, I dare meet Surrey in a wilderness, And spit upon him, whilst I say he lies, And lies, and lies: there is my lord's faith, To lie thee to my strong invective. As I intend to thrive in this new world, Aumerle is guilty of my true appeal: Besides, I heard the banish'd Norfolk say That thou, Aumerle, didst send two of thy men To execute the noble duke at Calais. Aum. Some honest Christian trust me with a gage, That Norfolk lies: here do I throw down this, If he may be repeal'd, to try his honour. Boling. These differences shall all rest under gage, Till Norfolk he repeal'd: repeal'd he shall be, And, though mine enemy, restored again.
To all his lands and signories: when he's returned,
Against Aumerle we will enforce his trial.

Car. That honourable day shall ne'er be seen.
Many a time hath banish'd Norfolk fought
For Christ in his glorious Christian field,
Streamimg the ensign of the Christian cross
Against black jacks, Turks, and Saracens;
And toil'd with works of war, retired himself
To Italy; and there at Venice gave
His body to that pleasant country's earth,
And hallowed unto his Catholic Christ,
Under whose colours he had fought so long.

Boling. Why, bishop, is Norfolk dead?
Car. As surely as I live, my lord.

Boling. Sweet peace conduct his sweet soul to the bosom.

Of good old Abraham! Lords appellant,
Your differences shall all rest under gage
Till we assign you to your days of trial.

Enter York, attended.
York. Great Duke of Lancaster, I come to thee
From plume-pluck'd Richard; who with willing soul
Adopts thee heir, and his high sceptre yields
To the possession of thy royal hand;
Ascend his throne, descending now from him;
And long live Henry, fourth of that name!

Boling. Now, as I thought, I'll ascend the regal
Car. Marry, God forbid!

Worst in this royal presence may I speak,
Yet best beseeching me to speak the truth.
Would God that any in this noble presence
Were the appointed judge
Of noble Richard! then true nobles would Learn him forbearance from so foul a wrong.
What subject can give sentence on his king?
And who sits here that is not Richard's subject?

Thebes are not judged but they are by to hear,
Although apparent guilt be seen in them;
And shall the figure of God's majesty,
His captain, steward, deputy-elect,
Anointed, crowned, planted many years,
Be judged by subject and inferior breath,
And lie himself not present? O, forbind it, God,
That in a Christian climate souls relish
Should show so heinous, black, obscene a deed!
I speak to subjects, and a subject speaks,
Stirr'd up by God, thus boldly for his king,
My Lord of Hereford here, whom ye call king,
Is a foul traitor to proud Hereford's king:
And if you crown him, let me prophesy:
The blood of English shall manure the ground,
And future ages groan for this foul act;
Peace shall go sleep with Turks and infidels,
And in this seat of peace tumultuous wars
Saul'll kin with kin and kind with kind confound;
Disorder, horror, fear and mutiny
Shall here inhabit, and this land be call'd
The field of Golgotha and dead men's skulls.
O, if you raise this house against this house,
It will the woefullest division prove
That ever fell upon this earth.
Prevent it, resist it, let it not be so,
Lost child, child's children, cry against you ' woe!

North. Well have you argued, sir; and, for your
Of capital treason we arrest you here.

York. My Lord of Westminster, be it your charge
To guard this little people and our State.
May it please you, lords, to grant the commons' suit.

Boling. Fetch him forth Richard, that in common
He may surrender; so we shall proceed

Without suspicion.

York. I will be his conduct.

Boling. Lords, you that here are under our arrest,
Procur your sureties for your days of answer.
Little are we beholding to your love,
And little look'd for at your helping hands.

Re-enter York, with Richard, and Officers bearing the regalia.

K. Rich. Alack, why am I sent for to a king,
Before I have shook off the regal thoughts
Wherewith I reign'd? I hardly yet have learn'd
To insinuate, flatter, bow, and bend my limbs;
Give sorrow leave awhile to tutor me
To this submission. Yet I well remember
The favour of these men not mine?
Did they not sometime cry, ' all hail!' to me?
So Judas did to Christ: but he, in twelve, [none.
Found truth in all but one; I, in twelve thousand,
God save the king! Will no man say amen?
Am I both priest and clerk? well then, amen.
God save the king! although I be not he:
And yet, amen, if heaven do think him me.
To do what service am I sent for lither?
York. To do that office of thine own good will
Which tired majesty did make thee offer,
The resignation of thy state and crown
To Henry Bolingbroke.

K. Rich. Give me the crown. Here, cousin, seize Here cousin; [the crown;
On this side my hand, and on that side yours.
Now is this golden crown like a deep well
That owes two buckets, filling one another,
The empty bucket ever daub'd with gold:
The other down, unseem and full of water:
That bucket down and full of tears am I,
Drinking my griefs, whilst you mount up on high.

Boling. I thought you had been willing to resign.
K. Rich. My crown I am; but still my griefs are
You may my glories and my state dispose. [mine.
But not my griefs; still am I king of those. [crown.
Boling. Part of your cares you give me with your
K. Rich. Your cares set up do not pluck my cares
My care is loss of care, by old care done; [down.
Our carrying of care, by new care won:
The cares I give I have, though given away;
They tend the crown, yet still with me they stay.

Boling. Are you contented to resign the crown?
K. Rich. Ay, no; no, ay; for I must nothing be;
Therefore no no, for I resign to thee.

York. How now! Keith, how now Keith, I will undo myself:
I give this heavy weight from off my head
And this unwieldy sceptre from my hand,
The pride of kingly sway from out my heart;
With mine own tears I wash away my balm,
With mine own hands I give away my crown,
Kith mingle, liegemen!
With mine own breath release all duty's rites:
All pomp and majesty I do forswear;
My manors, rents, revenues I forgo;
My acts, decrees, and statutes I deny:
God pardon all oaths that are broke to me!
God keep all vows unbrok'd that swear to thee!
Make me, that nothing have, with nothing grieved,
And thou with all pleased, that hast all achieved!
Long mayst thou live in Richard's seat to sit,
And soon lie Richard in an earthy pit!
God save the king! unking'd Richard says,
And send him many years of sunshine days!
What more remains?

North. No more, but that you read
These accusations and these grievous crimes
Committed by your person and your followers
Against the state and my most constant.
That, by confessing them, the souls of men
May deem that you are worthyly depos'd.

K. Rich. Must I do so? and must I ravel out
My weaved-up folly? Gentle Northumberland,
If thy offences were upon record,
Would it not shame thee then to be a troop
To read a lecture of them? If thou wouldest,
There shouldst thou find one heinous article,
Containing the deposing of a king.
ACT V.

KING RICHARD II.

SCENE I.

London. A street leading to the Tower.

Enter Queen and Ladies.

Queen. This way the king will come; this is the way to Julius Caesar’s ill-erected tower, to whose fint bosom my condemned lord is doom’d a prisoner by proud Bolingbroke: here let us rest, if this rebellious earth have any resting for her true king’s queen.

Enter Richard and Guard.

But soft, but see; or rather do not see, my fair rose wither: yet look up, behold, that you in pity may dissolve to dew, and wash him fresh again with true-love tears.

Was this the face that faced so many follies, and was at last out-faced by Bolingbroke? A brittle glory shineth in this face; as brittle as the glory is the face; [Dashes the glass against the ground. For there it is, crack’d in a hundred shivers, Mark, silent king, the moral of this sport, How soon my sorrow hath destroy’d my face. Boling. The shadow of your sorrow hath destroy’d the shadow of your face.

Boling. Name it, fair cousin. K. Rich. ‘Fair cousin?’ I am greater than a king: For when I was a king, my flatterers Were then but subjects; being now a subject, I have a king here to my flatterer. Being so great, I have no need to beg. Boling. Yet ask. K. Rich. And shall I have? Boling. You shall. K. Rich. Then give me leave to go. Boling. Whither? [sighs. K. Rich. Whither you will, so I was from your Tower. K. Rich. O, good I convey? conveyers are you all, That rise thus nimbly by a true king’s full. [Exeunt King Richard, some Lords, and a Guard. Boling. On Wednesday next we solemnly set down our coronation: lords, prepare yourselves. [Exeunt all except the Bishop of Carlisle, the Abbot of Westminster, and Aumerle. Abbot. A woeful pageant have we here beheld. Car. The woe’s to come; the children yet unborn Shall feel this day as sharp to them as torn. Aum. You holy clergymen, is there no plot To rid the realm of this pernicious blot? Abbot. My lord, Before I freely speak my mind herein, You shall not only take the sacrament To bury mine intents, but also to effect Whatever I shall happen to devise. I see your brows are full of discontent. Your hearts of sorrow and your eyes of tears: Come home with me to supper; and I’ll lay A plot shall show us all a merry day. [Exeunt.

Ah, thou, the model where old Troy did stand, Thou map of honour, thou King Richard’s tomb, And not King Richard; thou most beauteous inn, Why should hard-favour’d flint be lodged in thee, When triumph is become an alehouse guest? so. K. Rich. Join not with grief, fair woman, do not To make my end too sudden: learn, good soul, To think our former state a happy dream; From which awaked, the truth of what we are Shows us but this: I am still another, sweet, To grim Necessity, and he and I Will keep a league till death. Hie thee to France And cloister thee in some religious house: Our holy lives must win a new world’s crown, Which our profane hours here have stricken down.
KING RICHARD II.

ACT V.

Queen. What, is my Richard both in shape and mind transform'd and weaken'd? hath Bolingbroke deposed the throne? the time intellect hath he been in thy heart? the lion dyed, and the king of beasts is dead. And wounds the earth, if nothing else, with rage to be o'erpowers; and wilt thou, pupil-like, take thy correction mildly, kiss the rod, and fawn on rage with base humility, which art a lion and a king of beasts? K. Rich. A king of beasts, indeed; if augur but I had been still a happy king of men. [Exeunt.

SCENE II.—The Duke of York's palace.

Enter York and his Duchess.

Duch. My lord, you told me you would tell the rest, when weeping made you break the story off, of our two cousins coming into London. York. Where did I leave? Duch. At that sad stop, my lord, where rude misgovern'd hands from windows' tops threw dust and rubbish on King Richard's head.

York. Then, as I said, the duke, great Bolingbroke, mounted upon a hot and fiery steed, which his aspiring rider seem'd to know, with slow but stately pace kept on his course, whilst all tongues cried 'God save thee, Bolingbroke!' You would have thought the very windows spake, so many greedy looks of young and old through casements darted their desiring eyes upon his visage, and that all the walls with painted imagery had said at once 'Jesus preserve thee! welcome, Bolingbroke!' Whilst he, from the one side to the other turning, bareheaded, lower than his proud sized neck, bespoke them thus: 'I thank you, countrymen: and thus still doing, thus he pass'd along. Duch. Alack, poor Richard! where rode he the whilst?

York. As in a theatre, the eyes of men, after a well-graced actor leaves the stage, are idly bent on him that enters next, thinking his prattle to be tedious; even so, or with much more contempt, men's eyes did scowl on gentle Richard; no man cried 'God save him!' No joyful tongue gave him his welcome home: but dust was thrown upon his sacred head; which with such gentle sorrow he shook off, his face still combating with tears and smiles, the badges of his grief and patience, that had now stood, under some extraneous purpose, steel'd the hearts of men, they must perform have melted and barbarism itself have pitied him. But heaven hath a hand in these events, to whose high will we bound our calm contents. To Bolingbroke are we sworn subjects now, whose state and honour I for aye allow. Duch. Here comes my son Aumerle.

York. Aumerle that was; but that is lost for being Richard's friend, and madam, you must call him Rutland now: I am in parliament pledge for his truth and lasting fealty to the new made king.

Enter Aumerle.

Duch. Welcome, my son; who are the violets now that strew the green lap of the new come spring? Amur. Madam, I know not, nor I greatly care not. God knows I had, as lie had none as one. [Exeunt. York. Well, bear you well in this new spring of life, ye cropp'd before you come to prime. What news from Oxford? hold those justs and triumphs. Amur. For ought I know, my lord, they do. York. You will be there, I know. Amur. If God prevent not, I purpose so. Bosom. York. What seest that, that hangs without thy ear, look'st thou pale? let me see the writing.
Enter Bolingbroke, Percy, and other Lords.

Boling. Can no man tell me of my unthriftiness? It is full three months since I did see him last: If any plague hang over us, 'tis he. I would to God, my lords, he might be found: Inquire at London, 'mongst the taverns there, For there, they say, he daily doth frequent, With unrestrained looses and impieties. Even such, they say, as stand in narrow lanes, And beat our watch, and rob our passengers, Which he, young wanton and effeminate boy, Takes on the point of honour to support So dissolve a crew. [prince, Percy. My lord, some two days since I saw the And told him of those triumphs held at Oxford. Boling. What and said the gallant? Percy. His answer was, he would unto the stews, And from the common 'st creature pluck a glove, And wear it as a favour: and with that He would unhorse the lustiest challenger. [both Boling. As dissolve as desperate; yet through I see some sparks of better hope, which elder years May happily bring forth. But who comes here?

Enter Aumerle.

Aum. Where is the king? [looks Boling. What means our cousin, that he stares so And wildly? [majesty, Aum. God save your grace! I do beseech your To have some conference with your grace alone. Boling. Withdraw yourselves, and leave us here alone. [Exit Percy and Lords. What is the matter with our cousin now? Aum. For ever may my knees grow to the earth, My tongue cleave to my roof within my mouth, Unless a pardon ere I rise or speak. Boling. Intended or committed was this fault? If on the first, how heinous e'er it be, To win thy after-love I pardon thee. [key, Aum. Then give me leave that I may turn the That no man enter till my tale be done. Boling. Have thy desire. York. [Within] My liege, beware: look to thyself; Thou hast but twenty minutes more to live. Boling. Villain, I'll make thee safe. [Drawing. Aum. Stay thy revengeful hand; thou hast no cause to fear. [king: York. [Within] Open the door, secure, fool-hardy Shall I for love speak treason to thy face? Open the door, or I will break it open.

Enter York.

Boling. What is the matter, uncle? speak; Recover breath; tell us how near is danger, That we may arm us to encounter it. [know York. Peruse this writing here, and thou shalt The treason that my haste forbids me show. Aum. Remember, as thou read'st, thy promise I do repent me; read not my name there; [pass'd: My heart is not confederate with my hand. York. It was, villain, ere thy hand did set it down. I tore it from the traitor's bosom, king; Fear, and not love, begets his penitence: Forget to pity him, lest thy pity prove A serpent that will sting thee to the heart. Boling. O heinous, strong and bold conspiracy! O loyal father of a treacherous son! Thou sheddest manacled blood on mountains, From whence this stream through muddy passages Hath held his current and debiled himself! Thy overflow of good converts to bad, And thy abundant goodness shall excuse This deadly blot in thy digressing son, Shall his virtue be his vice's bawd; And he shall spend mine honour with his shame,
KING RICHARD. II.

SCENE V.

As thriftless sons their scraping fathers' gold.
Mine honour lives when his dishonour dies,
Or my sham'd life in his dishonour lies:
Thou kill'st me in his life; giving him breath,
The traitor lives, the true man's put to death.

Duch. [Within] What ho, my liege! for God's sake, let me in.

Boling. What shrill-voiced supplicant makes this eager cry?

Duck. A king, and thy aunt, great king; 'tis I.

Speak with me, pity me, open the door:
A beggar begs that never begg'd before.

Boling. Our scene is alter'd from a serious thing,
And now changed to 'The Beggar and the King.'

My dangerous cousin, let your mother in:
I know she is come to pray for your foul sin.

York. If thou do pardon, whosoever pray,
More sins for this forgiveness prosper may.

This fester'd joint cut off, the rest rest sound;
This let alone will all the rest confound.

Enter Duchess.

Duch. O king, believe not this hard-hearted man!
Love loving not itself none other can.

York. Thou fraticulous woman, what dost thou make Shall thy old dogs once more a traitor rear?

Boling. Sweet York, be patient. Hear not, gentle liege.

Duch. Rise up, good aunt.

WAY. Not yet, I thee beseech,
For ever will I walk upon my knees,
And never see day that the happy sees,
Till thou give place, till thou bid me rise,
By pardoning Rutland, my transgressing boy.

Aum. Unto my mother's prayers I bend my knee.
York. Against them both my true joints bended
I'll must thee thrive, if thou grant any grace! [be.
Duch. Plead's he in earnest? look upon his face;
His eyes do drop no tears, his prayers are in jest;
His words come from his mouth, ours from our breast;
He prays but faintly and would be denied;
We pray with heart and soul and all beside:
His weary joints would gladly rise, I know;
Our knees shall kneel till to the ground they grow;
His prayers are full of false hypocrisy;
Ours of true zeal and deep integrity.
Our prayers do out-pray his; then let them have
That mercy which true prayer ought to have.

Duch. Good aunt, and now.

Duch. Nay, do not say, 'stand up,'
Say 'pardon' first, and afterwards 'stand up,'
An if I were thy nurse, thy tongue to teach,
'Pardon' should be the first word of thy speech.
I never long'd to hear a word till now;
Say 'pardon,' king; let pity teach thee bow;
The word is short, but not so short as sweet;
No word like 'pardon' for kings' mouths so meet.

York. Speak it in French, king; say, 'pardon me, milord.

Duch. Dost thou teach pardon pardon to destroy?
Ah, my fair husband, my hard-hearted lord,
That set'st the word itself against the word!
Speak 'pardon' as 'tis current in our land;
The chopping French we do not understand.
Thine eyes begin to speak; set thy tongue there;
Or in thy piteous heart plant thou thine ear;
That hearing how our cruel prayers do pierce,
Pity may move thee 'pardon' to rehearse.

Duch. Good aunt, stand up.

Duch. I do not sue to stand.
Pardon is all the suit I have in hand.

Duch. 'Pardon' him, as mad shall pardon me.

Duch. O happy vantage of a knelling knee!
Yet am I sick for fear: speak it again;
Twice saying 'pardon' doth not pardon twain.
But makes one pardon strong.

Boling. With all my heart
I pardon him.

Duch. A god on earth thou art. [abbot,

Duch. But for our trusty brother-in-law and the
With all the rest of that consorted crew.
Destruction straight shall dog them at the heels.
Good uncle, help to order several powers
To Oxford, or where'er these traitors are:
They shall not live within this world, I swear,
To fill their lives with sorrow and with woe.
Uncle, farewell: and, cousin too, adieu:
Your mother well hath pray'd, and prove you true.

SCENE IV. — The same.

Enter Exton and Servant.

Exton. Didst thou not mark the king, what words he spake,
'Have I no friend will rid me of this living fear?'
Was it not so?

Ser. These were his very words.

Exton. 'Have I no friend?' quoth he: he spake it
And urged it twelve times, did he not?
[twice, Ser. He did.

Exton. And speaking it, he, wistfull look'd on me;
As who should say, 'I would thou were the man
That would divorce this terror from my heart:'
Meing the king at Pomfret. Come, let's go:
I am the king's friend, and will rid his foe. [Exeunt.

SCENE V. — Pomfret castle.

Enter King Richard.

K. Rich. I have been studyng how I may compare
This prison where I live unto the world:
And for because the world is populous
And here is not a creature but myself,
I cannot do it; yet I'll hammer it out.
My brain I'll prove the female to my soul,
My soul the father; and these two beget
A generation of still-breeding thoughts,
And these same thoughts people this little world,
In honour of the people of this world,
For no thought is contented. The better sort,
As thoughts of things divine, are internexit
With scruples and do set the word itself
Against the word:
As thus, 'Come, little ones,' and then again,
It is as hard come as for a camel
To thread the postern of a small needle's eye.'
Thoughts tending to ambition, they do plot
Unlikely wonders; how these vain weak nails
May tear a passage through the flinty ribs
Of this hard world, my ragged prison walls,
And, for they cannot, die in their own pride.
Thoughts tending to content flatter themselves
That they are not the first of fortune's slaves,
Nor shall not be the last: like silly beggars
Who sitting in the stocks refuse their shame,
That many have and others must sit there;
And in this thought they find a kind of ease,
Bearing their own misfortunes on the back
Of such as have before endured the like.
Thus play I in one person many people,
And none contented; sometimes am I king;
Then treasons make me wish myself a beggar,
And so I am: then crushing penury
Persuades me I was better when a king;
Then am I king'd again: and by and by
Think that I am unking'd by Bolingbroke,
And straight ask nothing: but whate'er I be,
Bolt or let nor men nor destiny:
With nothing shall be pleased, till he be eased
Ha, ha! keep time: how sour sweet music is,
When time is broke and no proportion kept!

314
ACT V.  KINo RicHoRD II.  SCENE VI.

So is it in the music of men's lives.
And here have I the dauntlessness of ear
To check time broke in a disorder'd string;
But for the concord of my state and time
Hath a man ever seen me?* I think not.
I wasted time, and now doth time waste me;
For now hath time made me his numbering clock:
My thoughts are minutes; and with sighs they jar
Their watches on unto mine eyes, the outward
Whereto my finger, like a dial's point, [watch,
Is pointing, and in my brain they make time, from tears.
Now sir, the sound that tells what hour it is
Are clannous groans, which strike upon my heart,
Which is the bell: so sighs and tears and groans
Show minutes, times, and hours: but my time
Runs posting on in Bolingbroke's proud joy.
While I stand fooling here, his Jack o' the clock.
This music made me; let it sound no more;
For though it have holp madmen to their wits,
In me it seems it will make wise men mad.
Yet blessing on his heart that gives it me!
For 'tis a sign of love; and love to Richard
Is a strange brooch in this all-lamenting world.

Enter a Groom of the Stable.

Groom. Hail, royal prince!
K. Rich. Thanks, noble peer;
The most of us is ten groats too near.
What art thou? and how comest thou hither,
Where no man never comes but that sad dog
That brings me food to make misfortune live?
Groom. I was a poor groomsman of thy stable, king,
When thou wert king; who, travelling towards
With much ado at length have gotten leave [York,
To look upon my sometime royal master's face.
O, how it yearn'd my heart when I beheld
In London streets, that coronation-day,
When Bolingbroke rode on ram Barbary,
That horse that thou so often hast bestrid,
That horse that I so carefully have dress'd;
K. Rich. Rode he on Barbary? Tell me, gentle
How went he under him?
Groom. So proudly as if he disdain'd the ground.
K. Rich. So proud that Bolingbroke was on his back!
That rode him eat bread from my royal hand:
This hand hath made him proud with clapping him.
Would he not stumble? would he not fall down,
Since pride must have a fall, and break the neck
Of that proud man that did usurp his back?
Forgiveness, horse! why do I rail on thee,
Since thou, created to be awed by man,
Wash'd, and fill another room in hell.
And yet I bear a burthen like an ass,
Spurr'd, gall'd and tired by jaunting Bolingbroke.

Enter Keeper, with a dish.

Keep. Fellow, give place; here is no longer stay.
K. Rich. If thou love me, 'tis time thou gavest me.
Groom. What my tongue dares not, that my heart shall say. [Exit.  Groom.

Keep. My lord, will't please you to fall to?
K. Rich. Taste of it, as thou art wont to do.
Keep. My lord, I dare not: Sir Pierce of Exton, who late came from the king, commands the contrary.
K. Rich. The devil take Henry of Lancaster and Patience is stale, and I am weary of it. [Thee! [Beats the keeper.

Keep. Help, help, help!

Enter Exton and Servants, armed.

K. Rich. How now! what means death in this rude assault?
Villain, thy own hand yields thy death's instrument.
[Snatching an axe from a Servant and killing him.
Gasps, and falls another in hell.
[He kills another. Then Exton strikes him down.
That hand shall burn in never-quenching fire
That stagger'd thus my person. Exton, thy fierce hand [land.
Hath with the king's blood stain'd the king's own
Mount, mount, my soul! thy seat is up on high;
Whilst my gross flesh sinks downward, here to die.

Exton. As full of valour as of royal blood:
Both have I spill'd; O would the deed be good!
For now the devil, that told me I did well,
Says that this deed is chronicled in hell.
This deed king to the living Surely the hear;
Take hence the rest, and give them burial here.

SCENE VI.—Windsor castle.

Flourish. Enter Bolingbroke, York, with other Lords, and Attendants.

Boling. Kind uncle York, the latest news we hear
Is that the rebels have consumed with fire
Our town of Cheester in Gloucestershire;
But whether they be taken or slain we hear not.

Enter Northumberland.

Welcome, my lord: what is the news?
North. First, to thy sacred state wish I all hap.
The next news is, I have to London sent [piness.
The heads of Oxford, Salisbury, Blunt, and Kent:
The manner of their taking may appear
At large discourse in this paper here.
Boling. We thank thee, gentle Percy, for thy pains;
And to thy worth will add right worthy gains.

Enter Fitzwater.

Fitz. My lord, I have from Oxford sent to London
The heads of Brocas and Sir Bennet Scely,
Two of the dangerous consorted traitors
That sought at Oxford thy dire overthrow.
Boling. Thy pains, Fitzwater, shall not be forgot;
Right noble is thy merit, well I wot.

Enter Percy, and the Bishop of Carlisle.

Percy. The grand conspirator, Abbot of Westminder,
With clog of conscience and sour melancholy
Hath yielded up his body to the grave;
But here is Carlisle living, to abide
 Thy king's doom and sentence of his pride.
Boling. Carlisle, this is your doom:
Choose out some secret place, some reverend room,
More than thou hast, and with it joy thy life;
So as thou livest in peace, die free from strife;
For though mine enemy thou hast ever been,
High sparks of honour in thee have I seen.

Enter Exton, with persons bearing a coffin.

Exton. Great king, within this coffin I present
Thy buried fear: herein all breathless lies
The mightiest of thy greatest enemies,
Richard of Bordeaux, by me hither brought.
Boling. Exton, I thank thee not; for thou hast
A deed of slander with thy fatal hand
Wrought upon my head and all this famous land.

Exton. From your own mouth, my lord, did I this Boling. They love not poison that do prison need,
Nor do I thee: though I did wish him dead,
I hate the murderer, love him murdered.
The guilt of conscience take thou for thy labour,
But neither my good word nor princely favour:
With Cain go wander through shades of night,
And never by thy head day nor light.
Lords, I protest, my soul is full of woe,
That blood should sprinkle me to make me grow.
Come, mourn with me for that I do lament,
And put on sullen black incontinence:
I'll make a voyage to the Holy Land,
To wash this blood off from my guilty hand:
March sadly after; grace my mournings here;
In weeping after this untimely bier. [Exeunt.

Mistress Quickly, hostess of a tavern in Eastcheap.

SCENE — England.

ACT I.

SCENE I.—London. The palace.

Enter King Henry, Lord John of Lancaster, the Earl of Westmoreland, Sir Walter Blunt, and others.

King. So shaken as we are, so wan with care,
Find we a time for friended peace to pant,
And breathe short-winded accents of new broils
To be commenced in straits afar remote.
No more the thirsty shame of this soil
Shall daub her lips with her own children's blood;
No more shall trenching war channel her fields,
Nor bruise her flowerets with the armed hoofs
Of hostile paces: those opposed eyes,
Which, like the meteors of a troubled heaven,
All of one nature, of one substance bred,
Did lately meet in the intestine shock
And furious close of civil butchery
Shall now, in mutual well-becoming ranks,
March all one way and be no more opposed
Against acquaintance, kindred and allies:
The edge of war, like an ill-shathed knife,
No more shall cut his master. Therefore, friends,
As far as to the sepulchre of Christ,
Whose soldier now, under whose blessed cross
We are impressed and engaged to fight.
Fortune, with a power of English shall we levy;
Whose arms were moulded in their mothers' womb
To chase those pagans in those holy fields
Over whose acres walk'd those blessed feet
Which fourteen hundred years ago were nail'd
For our advantage on the bitter cross.
But this our purpose now is twelve month old,
And bootless 'tis to tell you we will go:
Therefore we meet not now. Then let me hear
Of you, my gentle cousen Westmoreland,
What yesternight our council did decree
In forwarding this dear expedition.
West. My liege, this haste was hot in question,
And many limits of the charge set down
But yesternight: when all athwart there came

A post from Wales loaden with heavy news;
Whose worst was, that the noble Mortimer,
Leading the men of Herefordshire to fight
Against the irregular and wild Glendower,
Was by the rude hands of that Welshman taken,
A thousand of his people butchered;
Upon whose dead corpse there was such misuse,
Such beastly shameless transformation,
By those Welshwomen done as may not be Without much shame retold or spoken of.

King. It seems then that the tidings of this broil
Brake off our business for the Holy Land. [lord;
West. This match'd with other did, my gracious
For more uneven and unwelcome news
Came from the north and thus it did import:
On Holy-rood day, the gallant Hotspur there,
Young Harry Percy and brave Archibald,
That ever-valiant and approved Scot,
At Holmedon met,
Where they did spend a sad and bloody hour;
As by discharge of their artillery,
And shape of likelihood, the news was told;
For he that brought them, in the very heat
And pride of their contention did take horse,
Uncertain of the issue any way.

King. Here is a dear, a true industrious friend,
Sir Walter Blunt, new lighted from his horse,
Stain'd with the variation of each soil
Betwixt that Holmedon and this seat of ours;
And he hath brought us smooth and welcome news.
The Earl of Douglas is discomfited:
Ten thousand bold Scots, two and twenty knights,
Balk'd in their own blood did Sir Walter see
On Holmedon's plains. Of prisoners, Hotspur took Mordake the Earl of Fife, and eldest son
To beaten Douglas; and the Earl of Athol,
Of Murray, Angus, and Menteith:
And is not this an honourable spoil?
A gallant prize? Ha, cousin, is it not?
West. In faith,
It is a conquest for a prince to boast of.

316
King. Yea, there thou makest me sad and makest
In envy that my Lord Northumberland [me sin
Should be the father to so blest a son,
A son who is the theme of honour's tongue;
Amongst a grove, the very straightest plant;
Who is sweet Fortune's minion and her pride:
Whose praise of him, See riot and dishonour stain the brow
Of my young Harry. O that it could be proved
That some night-tripping fairy had exchanged
In cradle-clothes our children where they lay,
And call'd mine Percy, his Plantagenet;
Then is my steel Harry, and he mine. [Exeunt.
But let him from my thoughts. What think you,
Of this young Percy's pride? the prisoners,
Which he in this adventure hath surprised,
To his own use he keeps; and sends me word,
I shall have none but Mordake Earl of Fife. [ter, West. This is his uncle's teaching; this is Wores;
Malevolent to you in all aspects;
Which makes him prune himself, and bristle up
The crest of youth against your dignity.
King. But I have sent for him to answer this;
And for this cause awhile we must neglect
Our heroes' griefs of Jerusalem.
Cousin, on Wednesday next our council we
Will hold at Windsor; so inform the lords:
But come yourself with speed to us again;
For more is to be said and to be done
Than out of anger can be uttered.
West. I will, my liege. [Exeunt.

SCENE II.—London. An apartment of the Prince's.
Enter Prince of Wales and Falstaff.

Fal. Now, Hal, what time of day is it, lad?
Prince. Thou art so fat-witted, with drinking of old sack and unbuttoning thee after supper
and sleeping upon benches after noon, that thou hast forgotten to demand that truly which thou wouldest truly know. What a devil hast thou to do with the time of the day? Unless hours were cups of sack and minutes capons and clocks the tongues of bawds
and dials the signs of leaping-houses and the blessed sun himself a fair hot wench in flame-coloured taffets,
I see no reason why thou shouldest be so superfluous to demand the time of the day.

Fal. Indeed, I do some near me now, Hal; for we that take purses go by the number of the seven stars,
and not by Phœbus, he, 'that wandering knight so fair.' And, I prithee, sweet wags, when thou art king, as God save thy grace,—majesty I should say,
for grace thou wilt have none,—

Prince. What, none?

Fal. No, by my troth, not so much as will serve to be prologue to an egg and butter.

Prince. Well, how then? come, roundly, roundly.

Fal. Marry, then, sweet wags, when thou art king, let not us that are squires of the night's body be called the thieves of the day's beauty; let us be Diana's foresters, gentlemen of the shade, minions of the moon; and let men say we be men of good government, being governed, as the sea is, by our noble and chaste mistress the moon, under whose countenance we steal.

Prince. Thou speakest well, and it holds well, too;
for the fortune of us that are the moon's men doth
ebb and flow like the sea, being governed, as the sea is, by the moon. As, for proof, now: a purse of gold most resolutely snatched on Monday night and most insolently spent on Tuesday morning; got with sweetly purpose to Jerusalem, the praise of him,
See riot and dishonour stain the brow
Of my young Harry. O that it could be proved
That some night-tripping fairy had exchanged
In cradle-clothes our children where they lay,
And call'd mine Percy, his Plantagenet;
Then is my steel Harry, and he mine. [Exeunt.
But let him from my thoughts. What think you,
Of this young Percy's pride? the prisoners,
Which he in this adventure hath surprised,
To his own use he keeps; and sends me word,
I shall have none but Mordake Earl of Fife. [ter, West. This is his uncle's teaching; this is Wores;
Malevolent to you in all aspects;
Which makes him prune himself, and bristle up
The crest of youth against your dignity.
King. But I have sent for him to answer this;
And for this cause awhile we must neglect
Our heroes' griefs of Jerusalem.
Cousin, on Wednesday next our council we
Will hold at Windsor; so inform the lords:
But come yourself with speed to us again;
For more is to be said and to be done
Than out of anger can be uttered.
West. I will, my liege. [Exeunt.

SCENE II.—London. An apartment of the Prince's.
Enter Prince of Wales and Falstaff.

Fal. Now, Hal, what time of day is it, lad?
Prince. Thou art so fat-witted, with drinking of old sack and unbuttoning thee after supper
and sleeping upon benches after noon, that thou hast
forgotten to demand that truly which thou wouldest truly know. What a devil hast thou to do with the time of the day? Unless hours were cups of sack
and minutes capons and clocks the tongues of bawds
and dials the signs of leaping-houses and the blessed
sun himself a fair hot wench in flame-coloured taffets,
I see no reason why thou shouldest be so superfluous to demand the time of the day.

Fal. Indeed, I do some near me now, Hal; for we that take purses go by the number of the seven stars,
and not by Phœbus, he, 'that wandering knight so fair.' And, I prithee, sweet wags, when thou art
king, as God save thy grace,—majesty I should say,
for grace thou wilt have none,—

Prince. What, none?

Fal. No, by my troth, not so much as will serve to be prologue to an egg and butter.

Prince. Well, how then? come, roundly, roundly.

Fal. Marry, then, sweet wags, when thou art king, let not us that are squires of the night's body be called the thieves of the day's beauty; let us be Diana's foresters, gentlemen of the shade, minions of the moon; and let men say we be men of good government, being governed, as the sea is, by our noble and chaste mistress the moon, under whose countenance we steal.

Prince. Thou speakest well, and it holds well, too;
for the fortune of us that are the moon's men doth
ebb and flow like the sea, being governed, as the sea is, by the moon. As, for proof, now: a purse of gold most resolutely snatched on Monday night and most insolently spent on Tuesday morning; got with sweetly purpose to Jerusalem, the praise of him,
See riot and dishonour stain the brow
Of my young Harry. O that it could be proved
That some night-tripping fairy had exchanged
In cradle-clothes our children where they lay,
And call'd mine Percy, his Plantagenet;
Then is my steel Harry, and he mine. [Exeunt.
But let him from my thoughts. What think you,
Of this young Percy's pride? the prisoners,
Which he in this adventure hath surprised,
To his own use he keeps; and sends me word,
I shall have none but Mordake Earl of Fife. [ter, West. This is his uncle's teaching; this is Wores;

sweetly purpose to Jerusalem, the praise of him,
th' soul, that thou soldest him on Good-Friday last for a cup of Madeira and a cold capon's leg?

Prince. Sir John stands to his word, the devil shall have his bargain: for he was never yet a breaker of proverbs: he will give the devil his due.

Poins. The art thou dunned for keeping thy word with the devil.

Prince. Else he had been dunned for cozening the devil.

Poins. But, my lads, my lads, to-morrow morning, by four o'clock early in the朝, there are parties going to Canterbury with rich offerings, and traders riding to London with fat purses: I have vizards for you all; you have horses for yourselves: Gadshill lies to-night in Rochester: I have bespeake supper to-morrow night in Eastcheap: we may do it as secure as sleep. If you will go, I will stuff your purses full of crowns; if you will not, tarry at home and be hanged.

Fal. Heur ye, Yeward; if I tarry at home and go not, I'll hang you for going.

Poins. You will, chaps?

Fal. Well, who will make one?

Fal. There 's neither honesty, mankind, nor good fellowship in thee, nor thou canst not of the blood royal, if thou darest not stand for ten shillings.

Prince. Well then, once in my days I 'll be a bad-

Fal. Well, that 'tis said [easp.

Prince. Well, come what will, I 'll tarry at home.

Fal. By the Lord, I 'll be a traitor then, when thou

Prince. I care not. [art king.

Poins. Sir John, I prithee, leave the prince and my lord,—

Prince. Hath any of you drawn such reasons for this adventure that he shall go.

Fal. Well, God give thee the spirit of persuasion and him the ears of profiting, that what thou speak' est may move and what he hears may be believed, that the true prince may, for recreation sake, prove a false thief; for the poor abuses of what we want com-tenance. Farewell: you shall find me in Eastcheap.

Prince. Farewell, thou latter spring! farewell, All-hallows summer! [Exit Falstaff.

Poins. Now, my good sweet honey lord, ride with us to-morrow: I have a jest to execute that I cannot manage alone. Falstaff, Bardolph, Peto, and Gadshill shall rob those men that we have already waylaid; yourself and I will not be there; and when they have the booty, if you and I do not rob them, cut this head off from my shoulders. [forth?

Poins. How shall we put with them in setting?

Prince. Yea, but 'tis like that they will know us by our horses, by our habits and by every other appointment, to be ourselves.

Poins. Tut! our horses they shall not see; I 'll tie them in the wood; our vizards we will change after we leave them: and, sirrah, I have cases of buckram for the nonce, to immsark our noted outwits, to gar-mants. [for us.

Prince. Yea, but I doubt they will be too hard

Poins. Well, for two of them, I know them to be as true-bred cawards as ever turned back: and for the third, if he fight longer than he sees reason, I 'll furnish arms. The virtue of this jest will be, the incomprehensible lies that this same fat rogue will tell us when we meet at supper: how thirty, at least, he fought with; what wards, what blows, what ex-

'Freudisms he endured; and in the reproof of this lies the Prince. Well, I 'll go with thee: provide us all things necessary and meet me to-morrow night in Eastcheap; there I 'll sup. Farewell.}

Poins. Farewell, my lord. [Exit.

Prince. I know you all, and will awhile uphold

The unyoked humour of your idleness:
Yet herein will I imitate the sun,
Who doth permit the bale contagious clouds
To smoother up his beauty from the world,
That, when he please again to be himself,
Being wanted, he may be more wonder'd at,
By breaking through the foul and ugly mists
Of vapours that did seem to strangle him.
If all the year were playing fit for play,
To sport would be as tedious as to work;
But when they seldom come, they wish'd for come,
And nothing piouser but rare accidents.
So, when this loose behaviour I throw off
And pay the debt I never promised on
By how much better than my word I am,
By so much shall I falsify men's hopes;
And like bright metal on a sullen ground,
My reformation, glittering o'er my fault,
Shall show more goodly and attract more eyes
Than that which hath no foil to set it off.
I 'll so offend, to make offence a skill:
Redeeming time when men think least I will. [Exit.

SCENE III.---London. The palace.

Enter the King, Northumberland, Worcester, Hotspur, Sir Walter Blunt, with others.

King. My blood hath been too cold and temperate,

Unapt to stir at these indignities,
And you have found me: for accordingly
You tread upon my patience: but be sure
I will from henceforth rather hate myself,
Mighty and to be feared, than my condition:
Which hath been smooth as oil, soft as young down,
And therefore lost that title of respect
Which the proud soul ne'er pays but to the proud.
Wor. Our house, my sovereign liege, little deserves
The honour and greatnesse here intended on it;
And that same greatness too which our own hands
Have help to make so portly.

North. My lord,—

King. Worcester, get thee gone; for I do see
Danger and disobedience in thine eye:
Sir, your presence here is ill-timed and peremptory,
And majesty never yet endure
The moody frontier of a servant brow.
You have good leave to leave us: when we need
Your use and counsel, we shall send for you.

[Exit Wor.

You were about to speak. [To North.

North. Yea, my good lord.

Those prisoners in your highness' name demanded,
Which Harry Percy here at Holmedon took,
Were, as he says, not with such strength denied
As is deliver'd to your majesty:
Either envy, therefore, or misprison
Is guilty of this fault and not my son.
Hot. My liege, I did deny no prisoners.
But I remember, when the fight was done,
When I was dry with rage and extreme toil,
The breathless and faintness too much upon my sword,
Came there a certain lord, neat, and trimly dress'd,
Fresh as a bridegroom; and his chin new reap'd
Show'd like a stubble-land at harvest-home;
He was perfumed like a milliner:
And 'twixt his finger and his thumb he held
A pouncet-box, which ever this he had,
He gave his nose and took 't away again;
Who therewith angry, when it next came there,
Took it in snuff: and still he smiled and talk'd,
And as the soldiers bore dead bodies by,
He call'd them untainted knaves, unmanly,
To bring a slovenly unhandsome corpse
Betwixt the wind and his nobility.
With many holiday and lady terms
He question'd me; amongst the rest, demanded My prisoners in your majesty's behalf. I then, all smarling with my wounds being cold, To be with thee; but thou art not of that sort. Out of my grief and my impatience, Answer'd negligently I know not what, He should, or he should not; for he made me mad To see him shine so brisk and smell so sweet And talk so like a waiting-gentlewoman Of guns and drums and wounds;—God save the mark!— And telling me the sovereign's thing on earth Was paracelsi for an inward bruise; And that it was great pity, so it was, This maugre my heart, I dismiss'd him And out of the bowels of the harmless earth, Which many a good tall fellow had destroy'd So cowardly; and but for these vile guns, He would himself have been a soldier. This laid unjointed that of his, my lord, I answer'd indirectly, as I said; And I beseech you, let not his report Come current for an accusation Betwixt my love and your high majesty. Blunt. The circumstance consider'd, good my lord, Whate'er Lord Harry Percy then had said To such a one, as he himself confound'd At such a time, with all the rest retold, May reasonably die and never rise To do him wrong or any way impeach What then he said, so he musy it now. King. Why, yet he doth deny his prisoners, But with proviso and exception. That we at our own charge shall ransom straight His brother-in-law, the foolish Mortimer; Who, on my soul, hath wilfully betray'd The lives of those that he did lead to light Against that great magician, damn'd Glendower, Whose heart and soul were burn'd in the Earl of March Hath lately married. Shall our coffers, then, Be emptied to redeem a traitor home? Shall we buy treason? and indent with fears, When they have lost and forfeited themselves? No, on the barren mountains let him starve; For I shall never hold that man my friend Whose tongue shall ask me for one penny cost To ransom home revoluted Mortimer. Hot. Revoluted Mortimer! He never did fall off, my sovereign liege, But by the chance of war: to prove that true He never did stand on warlike ground; Those mouthed wounds, which valiantly he took, When on the gentle Severn's sedgy bank, In single opposition, hand to hand, He did confound the best part of an hour In changing hardiment with great Glendower: Three times they breathed and three times did they Upon agreement, of swift Severn's flood; [drink, Who then, affrighted with their bloody looks, Ran fearfully among the tumbling reeds, And hid his crisp head in the hollow bank Bloodstain'd with these valiant combatants. Never did bitter and rotten policy To so pester'd with a populous Colour her working with such deadly wounds; Nor never could the noble Mortimer Receive so many, and all willingly: Then let not him be slander'd with revolt. [him; King. Thou dost belie him, Percy, thou dost belie He never did encounter with Glendower: I tell thee, He durst as well have met the devil alone As Owen Glendower for an enemy. Art thou not ashamed? But, sirrah, henceforth Let me not hear you speak of Mortimer: Send back such as pretend not to your means, Or you shall hear in such a kind from me As will displease you. My Lord Northumberland, We license your departure with your son. Send us your prisoners, or you will hear of it. Hot. An if the deed be done, as I conceive King Henry, Blunt, and train. Re-enter Worcester. Hot. Speak of Mortimer! Zounds, I will speak of him; and let my soul Want mercy, if I do not join with him: Yes, on his head be guilt! Tis my own veins, And shed my dear blood drop by drop in the dust, But I will lift the down-trod Mortimer As high in the air as this unhumble king, As this ingrate and canker'd Bolingbroke. [mad. North. Brother, the king hath made your nephew Wor. Who struck this heat up after I was gone? Hot. He will, forsooth, have all my prisoners; And when I urged the ransom once again Of my wife's brother, then he cheek look'd pale, And on my face he turn'd an eye of death, Trembling even at the name of Mortimer. Wor. I do not blame him, nor shall he be proclaim'd By Richard that dead is the next of blood? North. He was; I heard the proclamation: And then it was when the unhappy king,— Whose wrongs in us God pardon!—did set forth Upon his Irish expedition; From whence he intermitted did return To be deposed and shortly murdered. [month Wor. And for whose death we in the world's wide Live scandaliz'd and fouly spoken of. Hot. But, soft, I pray you; did King Richard then Proclaim my brother Edmund Mortimer Heir to the crown? North. He did; myself did hear it. Hot. Nay, then I cannot blame his cousin king, That wish'd him on the barren mountains starve, But shall it be, that you, that set the crown Upon the head of this forgetful man And for his sake wear the detested blot Of murderous subordination, shall it be, That you a world of curses undergo, Being the agents, or base second means, The cords, the ladder, or the hangman rather? O, pardon me that I descend so low, To show the line and the persons first That wherein you range under this subtle king; Shall it for shame be spoken in these days, Or fill up chronicles in time to come, That men of your nobility and power Did gage them both in an unjust behalf, As both of you — God pardon it! — have done, To put down Richard, that sweet lovely rose, And plant this thorn, this canker, Bolingbroke? And shall it in more shame be further spoken, That you are fool'd, discarded and shock'd off By him for whom these shame's ye underwent? No; yet time serves wherein you may redeem Your banish'd honours and restore yourselves Into the good thoughts of the world again, Revenge the jeering and disdain'd contempt Of this proud king, who studies day and night To answer all the debt he owes to you Even with the bloody payment of your deaths: Therefore, I say,— Wor. Peace, cousin, say no more: And now I will unclasp a secret book, And to your quick-conceiving discontents I'll read you matter deep and dangerous, As full of persons and events of that time, As to o'er-walk a current roaring loud On the unsteadfast footing of a spear.
ACT II. FIRST PART OF KING HENRY IV. SCENE I.

Hot. If he fall in, good night! or sink or swim: Send danger from the east unto the west, So honour cross it from the north to south, And let them grapple: O, the blood more stirs To rouse a lion than to start a hare! North. Imagination of some great exploit Drives him beyond the bounds of patience. Hot. By heaven, methinks it were an easy leap, To pluck those things from the pale-faced moon, Or dive into the bottom of the deep, Where fathom-line could never touch the ground, And pluck up drowned honour by the locks; So he that doth redeem her thence might wear Without corvail all her dourk, and But out upon this half-faced fellowship! Wor. He apprehends a world of figures here, But not the form of what he should attend. Good cousin, give me weight for a while. Hot. I cry you mercy. Wor. Those are your prisoners.— They are noble Scots. Hot. I'll keep them all; By God, he shall not have a Scot of them; No, if a Scot would save his soul, he shall not: I'll keep them, by this hand. You start away And lend no ear unto my purposes. Those prisoners you shall keep. Hot. Nay, I will; that's flat: He said he would not ransom Mortimer; Forbid my tongue to speak of Mortimer; But I will find him when he lies asleep, And in his car I'll hollo 'Mortimer!' Nay, I'll have a starving shall be taught to speak Nothing but 'Mortimer,' and give it him, To keep his anger still in motion. Wor. Hear you, cousin; a word. Hot. All studies here I solemnly defy, Save how to gall and pinch this Bolingbroke: And that same sword-and- buckler Prince of Wales, But that I think his father loves him not And would be glad he met with some mischance, I would have him poisoned with a pot of ale. Wor. Farewell, Kinsman: I'll talk to you When you are better temper'd to attend. Fool. North. Why, what a wapstung and impatient Art thou to break into this woman's mood, Tying the beam to no forgone but thy own! Hot. Why, look you, I am whipp'd and scourged with rods, Nettled and stung with pimaries, when I hear Of this vile politician, Bolingbroke. In Richard's time, what do you call the place?— A plague upon it, it is in Gloucestershire; 'T was where the madcap duke his uncle kept, His uncle York; where I first bow'd my knee Unto this king of smiles, this Bolingbroke,— 'Sblood!— When you and he came back from Ravenspurgh.

North. At Berkley castle. Hot. You say true; Why, what a carefree deal of courtesy This fawning greyhound then did proffer me! Look, 'when his infant fortune came to age,' And 'gentle Harry Percy,' and 'kind cousin;' O, the devil take such cozeners! God forgive me! Good uncle, tell your tale; I have done. Wor. Nay, if you have not, so it again; We will stay your leisure. Hot. I have done, faith. Wor. Then once more to your Scottish prisoners. Deliver them up without their ransom straight, And make the Douglas' son your only mean For powers in Scotland; which, for divers reasons Which I shall send you written, be assured, Will easily be granted. You, my lord, To Northumberland. Your son in Scotland being thus employ'd, Shall secretly into the bosom creep Of that same noble prelate, well beloved, The archbishop. Hot. Of York, is it not? Wor. True; who bears hard His brother's death at Bristol, the Lord Scroop. I speak not in estimation, As what I think might be, but what I know Is ruminated, plotted and set down, And only stays but to behold the face Of that occasion that shall bring it on. Hot. I smell it: upon my life, it will do well. North. Before the game is afoot, thou still let's slip. Hot. Why, it cannot choose but be a noble plot: And then the power of Scotland and of York, To join with Mortimer, ha? Wor. And so they shall. Hot. In faith, it is exceedingly well aim'd. Wor. And 'tis no little reason bids us speed, To save our heads by raising of a head; For, bear ourselves as even as we can, The king will always think him in our debt, And think we think ourselves unsatisfied, Till he hath found a time to pay us home! And see already how he doth begin To make us strangers to his looks of love. Hot. He does, he does: we'll be revenged on him. Wor. Cousin, farewell: no further go in this Than I by letters shall direct your course. When time is ripe, which will be suddenly, I'll steal to Glendower and Lord Mortimer: Where you and Douglas and our powers at once, As I will fashion it, shall happily meet, To bear our fortunes in our own strong arms, Which now we hold at much uncertainty. North. Farewell, good brother: we shall thrive, I trust. Hot. Uncle, adieu: O, let the hours be short Till fields and blows and groans applaud our sport! [Exeunt.

ACT II.

SCENE I.—Rochester. An inn yard.

Enter a Carrier with a lantern in his hand.

First Car. Heigh-ho! an it be not four by the day, I'll be hanged: Charles' wain is over the new chimney, and yet our horse not packed. What, ostler! Ost. [Within] Anon, anon. First Car. I pritchee, Tom, beat Cut's saddle, put a few flocks in the point; poor jade, is wrung in the withers out of all cess.

Enter another Carrier.

Sec. Car. Peas and beans are as dank here as a dog, and that is the next way to give poor jades the plague, this house is turned upside down since Robin Ostler died. First Car. Poor fellow, never joyed since the price of oats rose; it was the death of him. Sec. Car. I think this be the most villanous house in all London road for fleas; I am sting like a tench. First Car. Like a tench! by the mass, there is ne'er a king christen could be better bit than I have been since the first cock.

Sec. Car. The commonwealth shall allow us ne'er a jordan, and then we leak in your chimney; and your chamber-lie breeds deal as a loach.

First Car. What, ostler! come away and be hanged! come away.

Sec. Car. I have a gallon of bacon and two rases of ginger, to be delivered as far as Charingscross.

First Car. God's body! the turkeys in my pannier are quite starved. What, ostler! A plague on thee! hast thou never an eye in thy head? canst not hear? An' it were not as good deed as drink, to break the pate on thee, I am a very villain. Come, be hanged! hast no faith in thee?

Enter Gadshill.

Gads. Good morrow, carriers. What's o'clock?

First Car. I think it be two o'clock.

Gads. I prithee, lend me thy lantern, to see my gelding in the stable.

First Car. Nay, by God soft! I know a trick worth two of that, i' faith.

Gads. I pray thee, lend me thine.

Sec. Car. Ay, when? canst tell? Lend me thy lantern, boy, I'll be hanged first.

Gads. Sirrah carrier, what time do you mean to come to London?

Sec. Car. Time enough to go to bed with a candle, I warrant thee. Come, neighbour Mugs, we'll call up the gentlemen: they will along with company, for they have great charge.

[Execut Carriers.

Gads. What, ho! chamberlain!

Cham. [Within] At hand, quoth pick-purse.

Gads. That's even as fair as—at hand, quoth the chamberlain; for thou variest no more from picking of purses than giving direction doth from labouring; thou layest the plot how.

Enter Chamberlain.

Cham. Good morrow, Master Gadshill. It holds current that I told you yeusternight: there's a franklin in the wild of Kent hath brought three hundred marks with him in gold: I heard him tell it to one of his company last night at supper; a kind of auditor; one that hath abundance of charge too, God knows what. They are up already, and call for eggs and butter: they will away presently.

Gads. Sirrah, if they meet not with Saint Nicholas' elixirs, I give thee these two hundred marks in marks.

Cham. No, I'll none of it: I pray thee keep that for the hangman; for I know thou worshippest Saint Nicholas as truly as a man of falsehood may.

Gads. What talkest thou to me of the hangman? if I hang, I'll make a fat pair of gallows; for if I hang, old Sir Joan hangs with me, and thou knowest he is no starveling. Tut! there are other Trojans that thou dreamest not of, the which for sport sake are content to do the profession some grace; that would, if matters should be looked into, for their own credit sake, make all whole. I am joined with no foot-lawyer, nor any long-staff sixpenny strikers, none of these mad mustachio purple-hued malt-worms; but with nobility and tranquillity, burgomasters and great onyers, such as can hold in, such as will strike sooner than speak, and speak sooner than drink, and drink sooner than pray: and yet such, I pray continually to their saint, the commonwealth; or rather, not pray to her, but pray on her, for they ride up and down on her and make her their boots.

Cham. What, the commonwealth their boots? will she hold out water in foul way?

Gads. She will, she will; justice hath ligour'd her. We steal as in a castle, cock-sure; we have the receipt of fern-seed, we walk invisible.

Cham. Nay, by my faith, I think you are more beholding to the night than to fern-seed for your walking invisible.

Gads. Give me thy hand: thou shalt have a share in our purchase, as I am a true man.

Cham. Nay, rather let me have it, as you are a false thief.

Gads. Go to; 'homo' is a common name to all men. Bid the ostler bring my gelding out of the stable. Farewell, you muddy knave.

[Execut.

SCENE II.—The highway, near Gadshill.

Enter Prince Henry and Poins.

Poins. Come, shelter, shelter: I have removed Falstaff's horse, and he frets like a guammed velvet.

Prince. Stand close.

Enter Falstaff.

Fal. Poins! Poins! and be hanged! Poins!

Prince. Peace, ye fat-kidneyed rascal! what a brawling dost thou keep!

Fal. Where's Poins, Hal?

Prince. He is walked up to the top of the hill: I'll go seek him.

Fal. I am assured to rob in that thief's company: the rascal hath removed my horse, and tied him I know not where. If I travel but four foot by the squier further afoot, I shall break my wind. Well, I doubt not but to die a fair death for all this, if I escape hanging for killing that rogue. I have forsworn his company hourly any time this two and twenty years, and yet I am bewitched with the rogue's company. If the rascal have not given me medicines to make me love him, I'll be hanged; it could not be else; I have drunk medicines. Poins! Hal! a plague upon you both! Bardolph! Peto! I'll starve ere I'll rob a foot further. An 't were not as good a deal as drink, to turn true man and to leave these rogues, I am the veriest varlet that ever chewed with a tooth. Eight yards of uneven ground is threescore and ten miles afoot with me; and the stony-hearted villains know it well enough: a plague upon it when thieves cannot be true one to another! [They whistle.] Whew! A plague upon you all! Give me my horse, you rogues; give me my horse, and be hanged!

Prince. Peace, ye fat-guts! lie down; lay thine ear close to the ground and list if thou canst hear the tread of travellers.

Fal. Have I any levers to lift me up again, being down? 'Sblood, I'll not hear mine own flesh so far afoot again for all the coin in thy father's exchequer. What a plague mean ye to colt me thus?

Prince. Thou liest; thou art not colted, thou art uncolted.

Fal. I prithee, good Prince Hal, help me to my horse, good king's son.

Prince. Out, ye rogue! shall I be your ostler?

Fal. Go, hang thyself in thine own heir-apparent garters! If I be ta'en, I'll peach for this. An I have not ballads made on you all and sung to filthy tunes, let a cup of sack be my poison: when a jest is so forward, and afoot too! I hate it.

Enter Gadshill, Bardolph, and Peto with him.

Gads. Stand.

Fal. So I do, against my will.

Poins. O, 'tis our setter: I know his voice. Bardolph, what news?

Bard. Case ye, case ye; on with your vizards; there's money of the king's coming down the hill; 'tis going to the king's exchequer.

Fal. You lie, ye rogue; 'tis going to the king's tavern.

Gads. There's enough to make us all.

Fal. To be hanged.

ACT II.
FIRST PART OF KING HENRY IV.
SCENE III.

Prince. Sirs, you four shall front them in the narrow lane; Ned Poins and I will walk lower: if they 'scape from your encounter, then they light on us. Fal. How many be there of them? Gads. Some eight or ten. Fal. 'Zounds, will they not rob us? Prince. What, a coward, Sir John Paunch? Fal. Indeed, I am not John of Gaunt, your grandfather; but you, I say unto you, are a shallow cowardly hind, and you lie. What a lack-brain is this! By the Lord, our plot is a good plot as ever was laid; our friends true and constant; a good plot, good friends, and full of expectation; an excellent plot, very good friends! What a frisky-spirited rogue is this! Why, my lord of York commands the plot and the general course of the action. 'Zounds, an I were now by this rascal, I could brain him with his lady's fan. Is there not my father, my uncle and myself; lord Edmund Mortimer, my lord of York? O, God! How far is there not besides the Douglas? have I not all their letters to meet me in arms by the ninth of the next month; and are they not some of them set forward already? What a pagan rascal is this! an infidel! Ha! you shall see now in so verily of fear and cold heart, will he to that king and lay open all our proceedings. O, I could divide myself and go to buffets, moving such a dish of skin milk with so honourable an action! Hang him! let him tell the king: we are prepared. I will set forward to-night.

Enter the Travellers.

First Trav. Come, neighbour: the boy shall lead our horses down the hill; we'll walk afoot awhile, and ease our legs.

Travellers. Jesus bless us!

Fal. Strike; down with them; cut the villains' throats: ah! whoreson caterpillars! bacon-fed knaves! they hate us youth: down with them: fleece them.

Poins. O, we are undone, both we and ours for ever!

Fal. Hang ye, gorbelled knaves, are ye undone? No, ye fat chuffs; I would your store were here! On, bacons, on! What, ye knaves! young men must live. You are grandjorars, are ye? we'll jure ye, faith.

[Here they rob them and bind them. Exeunt.

Re-enter Prince Henry and Poins.

Prince. The thieves have bound the true men. Now could thou and I rob the thieves and go merly to London, it would be argument for a week, laughter for a month and a good jest for ever.

Poins. Stand close; I hear them coming.

Enter the Thieves again.

Fal. Come, my masters, let us share, and then to horse before day. An the Prince and Poins be not two arrant cowards, there's no equity stirring; there's no more valour in that Poins than in a Prince. Your money! [wild-duck.

Poins. Villains!

[As they are sharing, the Prince and Poins set upon them; they all run away; and Falstaff, after a blow or two, runs away too, leaving the booty behind them.]

The thieves are all scatter'd and possess'd with fear so strongly that they dare not meet each other; Each takes his fellow for an officer. Away, good Ned. Falstaff sweats to death, And lards the lean earth as he walks along: Were't not for laughing, I should pity him.

Poins. Now, the rogue roars! [Exeunt.

SCENE III.—Warkworth castle.

Enter Hotspur, solus, reading a letter.

Hot. 'But, for mine own part, my lord, I could be well contented to be there, in respect of the love I bear your house.' He could be contented: why is he not, then? In respect of the love he bears our house: he shows in this, he loves his own barn better than he loves our house. Let me see some more. 'The purpose you undertake is dangerous; —why, that's certain: 'tis dangerous to take a cold, to sleep, to drink, to tell yours, my lord, your fool, out of this nettle, danger, we pluck this flower, safety. 'The purpose you undertake is dangerous; the friends you have named uncertain; the time itself unsorted; and your whole plot too light for the counterpoise of so great an opposition. Say you so, my lord? I say unto you, you are a shallow cowardly hind, and you lie. What a lack-brain is this! By the Lord, our plot is a good plot as ever was laid; our friends true and constant; a good plot, good friends, and full of expectation; an excellent plot, very good friends! What a frisky-spirited rogue is this! Why, my lord of York commands the plot and the general course of the action. 'Zounds, an I were now by this rascal, I could brain him with his lady's fan. Is there not my father, my uncle and myself; lord Edmund Mortimer, my lord of York? O, God! How far is there not besides the Douglas? have I not all their letters to meet me in arms by the ninth of the next month; and are they not some of them set forward already? What a pagan rascal is this! an infidel! Ha! you shall see now in so verily of fear and cold heart, will he to that king and lay open all our proceedings. O, I could divide myself and go to buffets, moving such a dish of skin milk with so honourable an action! Hang him! let him tell the king: we are prepared. I will set forward to-night.

Enter Lady Percy.

Hot. How now, Kate! I must leave you within these two hours.

Lady. O, my good lord, why are you thus alone? For what offence have I this fortnight been A banish'd woman from my Harry's bed? Tell me, sweet lord, what's that takes from thee Thy stomach, pleasure and thy golden sleep? Why dost thou bend thine eyes upon the earth, And start so often when thou sittest alone? Why hast thou lost the fresh blood in thy cheeks; and given thy treasures and thy right hand To thick-eyed musing and cursed melancholy? In thy faint slumbers I by thee have watch'd, And heard thee murmur tales of iron wars; Speak terms of manage to thy bounding steed: O! Courage! to the field! And thou hast talk'd Of sal卑ues, of victories, of trophies, of tents, Of pallasadoes, frontiers, parapets, Of basilikis, of cannon, culverin, Of prisoners' ransom and of soldiers slain, And all the currents of a heathy head. Thy spirit within thee hath been so at war And thus hath so bestir'd thee in thy sleep, That beads of sweat have stood upon thy brow, Like bubbles in a late-disturbed stream; And in thy face strange motions have appear'd, Such as we see when men restrain their breath On some great sudden hest. O, what portents are these? Some heavy business hath my lord in hand, And I must know it, else he loves me not. Hot. What, ho? Enter Servant.

Serv. Is Gilliams with the packet gone? Hot. He is, my lord, an hour ago. [sheriff? Hot. If hath Butler brought those horses from the Serv. One horse, my lord, he brought even now. Hot. What horse? a roan, a crop-car, is it not? Serv. It is, my lord. Hot. That roan shall be my throne. Well, I will bring him straight: O esperance! Bid Butler lead him forth into the park. [Exit Servant.

Lady. But hear you, my lord.

Hot. What say'st thou, my lady?
ACT II.
FIRST PART OF KING HENRY IV.
SCENE IV.

Lady. What is it carries you away?
Hot. Why, my horse, my love, my horse.

[Enter Prince and Poins.

Prince. Ned, prithee, come out of that fat room, and lend me thy hand to laugh a little.

Poins. Where hast been, Hal?
Prince. With three or four loggerheads amongst three or four score hodgesheads. I have sounded the very base-string of humility. Sirrah, I am sworn brother to a leasch of drawers; and can call them all by their christen names, as Tom, Dick, and Francis. They take it already upon their salvation, that though I be but Prince of Wales, yet I am the king of courtesy; and tell me flatly I am no proud Jack, like Falstaff, but a Corinthian, a lad of mettle, a good boy, by the Lord, so they call me, and when I am king of England. I shall command all the good lads in Eastcheap. They call drinking deep, dyeing scarlet; and when you breathe in your waterings, they cry 'hem!' and bid you play it off. To conclude, I am so good a proficient in one quarter of an hour, that I can drink with any tinker in his own bottle; and, the poor beggars that never quote other English in his life than 'Eight shillings and sixpence,' and 'You are welcome,' with this shrill addition, 'Anon,' anon, sir! Score a pint of bastard in the Half-moon,' or so. But, Ned, to drive away the time till Falstaff come, I prithee, do thou stand in some by-room, while I question my puny dwarf to what end he gave me the sugar, and do thou never leave calling 'Francis,' that his tale to me may be nothing but 'Anon.' Step aside, and I'll show thee a Poins. Francis! [precedent.

Prince. Thou art perfect.
Poins. Francis!

[Exit Poins.

Enter Francis.

Franc. Anon, anon, sir. Look down into the Pomgarnet, Ralph.
Prince. Come hither, Francis.
Franc. O Lord!
Prince. How long hast thou to serve, Francis?
Fros. Forsooth, five years, and as much as to—Poins. [Whitken] Francis!
Franc. Anon, anon, sir.
Prince. Five years! by 'r lady, a long lease for the clinking of pewter. But, Francis, dost thou be so valiant as to play the coward with thy indenture and show it a fair pair of heels and run from it?
Franc. O Lord, sir, I'll be sworn upon all the books in England, I could find in my heart.
Poins. [Whitken] Francis!
Franc. Anon, anon.
Prince. Anon, Francis? No, Francis; but to-morrow, Francis, or Francis, o' Thursday; or indeed, Francis, when thou wilt. But, Francis!
Franc. My lord?
Prince. Wilt thou rob this leathern jerkin, crystal-button, not-pated, agatering, Duke-stocking, caddis-garter, smooth-tongue, Spanish-pouch,— Franc. O Lord, sir, who do you mean?
Prince. Why, then, your brown bastard is your only drink; for look you, Francis, your white canvas doublet will sully: in Barbary, sir, it cannot come to Franc. What, sir?
Poins. [Whitken] Francis!
Prince. Away, you rogue! dost thou not hear them call? [Here they both call him; the drawer stands amazed, not knowing which way to go.

[Enter Vinter.

Vint. What, what, standest thou still, and hearest such a calling? Look to the guests within. [Exit Fran.
Prince. My lord, old Sir John, with half-a-dozen more, are at the door: shall I let them in?
Prince. Let them alone awhile, and then open the door. [Exit Vinter.] Poins!

Re-enter Poins.

Poins. Anon, anon, sir.
Prince. Sirrah, Falstaff and the rest of the thieves are at the door: shall we be merry?
Poins. As merry as cricketers, my lad. But bark ye, what cunning match have you made with this jest of the drawer? come, what's the issue?
Prince. I am now of all humours that have showed themselves humours since the old days of Goodman Adam to the pupil age of this present twelve o'clock at midnight.

Re-enter Francis.

Franc. What's o'clock, Francis?
Franc. Anon, anon, sir.

[Exit.
Prince. That ever this fellow should have fewer words than a parrot, and yet the son of a woman! His industry up-stairs and down-stairs; his eloquence the parcel of a reckoning. I am not yet of Percy's mind, the Hotspur of the north; he that kills me some six or seven dozen of Scots at a breakfast, washes his hands, and says to his wife 'If I were three times dead, I should start again.' 'O my sweet Harry,' says she, 'how many lusty thou killed to-day?' 'Give my roan horse a drench,' says he; and answers 'Some fourteen,' an hour after; 'a triffe, a tribe.' I prithee, call in Falstaff: I'll play Percy, and that damned brawn shall play Dame Mother Tolter: 'Here!' says the drunkard. Call in ruts, call in tallow.

Enter Falstaff, Gaddesby, Bardolph, and Peto;
Francis following with wine.

Pois. Welcome, Jack: where hast thou been?
Fal. A plague of all cowards! I say, and a vengeance too! marry, and amen! Give me a cup of sack, boy. Ere I lead this life long, I'll sew neither stocks and mend them and foot them too. A plague of all cowards! Give me a cup of sack, rogue. Is this the manner in which to speak? [He drinks.]

Prince. Didst thou never see Titian kiss a dish of butter? pitiful-hearted Titan, that melted at the sweet tale of the sun's! if thou didst, then behold that compound.

Fal. You rogue, here's lime in this sack too: there is nothing but rognery to be found in villainous men: yet a coward is worse than a cup of sack with lime in it. A villainous coward! Go thy ways, old Jack; die when thou wilt, if manhood, good manhood, be not forgot upon the face of the earth, then am I a shotter, erring. There live not three gods men, behogged in England; and one of them is fat and grows old: God help the while! a bad world, I say. I would I were a weaver; I could sing psalms or anything. A plague of all cowards, I say still.

Prince. How now, wool-sack! what mutton you taste?
Fal. A king's son! If I do not beat thee out of thy kingdom with a dagger of lath, and drive all thy subjects afore thee like a flock of wild-geese, I'll never wear hair on my face more. You Prince of Wales! Why, what, whoreson round man, what's the matter?

Fal. Are not you a coward? answer me to that; and Peto there?
Pois. Zounds, ye fat paunch, an ye call me a coward, why, I'll strike thee.

Fal. I call thee coward! I'll see thee damned ere I call thee coward; but I would give a thousand pound I could run as fast as thou caust. You are straight enough in the shoulders, you care not who sees your back: call you that backing of your friends? A plague upon such backing! give me then that will face me. Give me a cup of sack: I am a rogue, if I drink to-day.

Prince. O villain! thy lips are scarce wiped since thou drunkest last.

Fal. All's one for that. [He drinks.] A plague of all cowards, I still say it.

Prince. What's the matter?

Fal. What's the matter? there be four of us here have taken a thousand pound this day morning.

Prince. Where is it, Jack? where is it?
Fal. Where is it! taken from us it is: a hundred upon a hundred for it.

Prince. What, a hundred, man?
Fal. I am a rogue, if I were not at half-sword with a dozen of them two hours together. I have 'scape by miracle. I am eight times thrust through the doubled, four through the hose: my buckler cut through and through: my sword hacked like a hand-saw—ecce signum! I never dealt better since I was a man: all would not do. A plague of all cowards! Let them speak: if they speak more or less than truth, they are villains and the sons of dark-

Prince. Speak, sirs; how was it?

Gads. We four set upon some dozen—
Fal. Sixteen at least, my lord.
Gads. And bound them, and I saw them bound.

Peto. No, no, they were not bound.

Fal. You rogue, they were bound, every man of them; or I am a Jew else, an Ebrew Jew.

Gads. As we were sharing, some six or seven fresh men set upon us—[Other.]

Fal. And understood the rest, and then came in the Prince. What, fought you with them all?

Fal. All! I know not what you call all; but if I fought not with fifty of them, I am a bunch of radish: if there were not two or three and fifty upon poor old Jack, than I am no two-legged creature.

Prince. Pray God you have not murdered some of them.

Fal. Nay, that's past praying for: I have peppered two of them; two I am sure I have paid, two rogues in buckram suits. I tell thee what, Hal, if I tell thee a lie, let me see my horse. Thou knowest my new ward; here I lay, and thus I bore my point. Four rogues in buckram let drive at me—

Prince. What, four? thou saidst but two even now.

Fal. Four, Hal; I told thee four.

Pois. Ay, ay, he said four.
